As to Greece Mr. Cox in his "Tales of Ancient Greece" bears especial witness to this, in an introduction which Prof. Max Müller admires and approves. I will quote a short paragraph: "The mythology of the Greeks exhibits the impressions made by a vast range of phenomena, although the climatic conditions of the Hellenic land would necessarily bring into prominence the career of the sun in his daily journey through the heaven rather than the interchange of summer and winter. That nothing more would be needed for the growth of legends capable of being expanded into any number of epic poems, the history of Greek epical literature abundantly proves; and we have only to see now that the most intricate myths have earlier forms in which the physical meaning of the phrases employed is no longer a matter of doubt." And you do not doubt it. It is difficult for me to persuade myself that you are not striving to create a laugh at my expense in my undertaking to seriously refute the comparisons you have adduced, especially when I consider that you know that the conjugal infidelities, etc., with which the Olympian gods and goddesses are so gravely charged are merely poetical personifications of the love of the sun for the dawn, the affection of the earth for the summer, the transient continuance of the dew, the embrace of the clouds, the capriciousness of the wind, etc., etc.

I have briefly traced the origin of the Vedic legends, and the Veda, according to Max Muller, is the source of Zoroastrian mythology. Of Zoroaster he says, "He is merely a wise man, a prophet favored by God and admitted into God's immediate presence, but all this on his own showing only and without any supernatural credentials except some few miracles recorded of him in books of doubtful authority" (Chips, vol. i, p. 171). As to his being a savior or his doctrines at all teaching a salvation similar to the Christian gospel, no one with any familiarity with the religion would, unless he possessed an utter disregard for truth, affirm. The following is a quotation from the Parsee Catechism, quoted at more length in the work just referred to:

"There is no savior. In the other world you shall receive the return according to your actions. Your savior is your deeds and God himself. He is the pardoner and giver. If you repent your sins and reform, and if the Great Judge consider you worthy of pardon and would be merciful to you, He alone can and will save you."

Alas! "by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified," and except a substitute be formed, no one can be saved. Men can shut their eyes to the sun and cry there is no light; they can resist proof, can disbelieve truth, but oh, the awful blindness of those who reject the only savior, the crucified and risen son of God, and dare stand before a just and holy God against whom they have sinned with the dreadful accusations of their own sins against them, and, more damning than all, the wilful and perverse rejection of the offered mercy of God. At that time no quibble of pretended learning or science will avail; no confident assertion of self-righteousness will save; no glib-tongue will dare to blaspheme its maker; men will see themselves as they are; hell will be a reality, and, like the man in the parable, without a wedding garment, they will be speechless.

But I must hurry. If further proof were wanting of the total dissimilarity between Christianity and every other religion, the reception it has met with by them would supply it. It has ever been, as it is now, rejected, scoffed, and written against, has ever been denounced as antagonistic to the popular faith, and yet you would have us close our eyes to facts, forget history, and believe that Christianity originated in those religions whose beliefs and rites it condemns as utterly abominable, and further, that a handful of Jews, who, of all people, were the most bigoted and had scarcely any dealings with any other nations, were so acquainted with the myths and religions of all other countries, that leaving out the vile, lascivious rites, the unreasonable doctrines, false morality, etc., of them all, they constructed the most perfect and heart-satisfying religion that ever existed from the fragments. It is strange if this is so that the plagiarism has not been discovered before. But I have not space to elaborate this part of the argument. I shall crave room though to quote the judgment of two ancient heathens as to the originality of the scriptural religion. If you still insist on your assertion you do it contrary to all common sense, reason, and history.

The satirist Lucian says of the Christians: "They still worship that great man who was crucified in Palestine, because it was he by whom the initiation into these new mysteries was introduced into human life. . . Their first law-giver has persuaded them to believe that as soon as they have broken loose from the prevailing customs and despised the gods of Greece, reverencing instead of these their crucified leader and living after his laws, they stand to each other in the relation of brethren. Thus they are led to despise everything alike, to consider everything else as profane."

The second quotation shall be from the fifth book of the history of Tacitus, and is bitter enough to be received by an Infidel. Writing of the Jews he says: "Their vile institutes became prevalent only through an excess of depravity. Every worthless character despising the religion of his forefathers contributed his share to the common stock. Hence the Jewish republic gradually increased, and their obstinate fidelity to each other, united with domestic good offices to themselves and hostile hatred toward all the rest of mankind, had a similar tendency to advance their prosperity. Separated in their banquets, severed in their beds, this race, though most detestably prone to lust, carefully abstained from all commerce with foreign women. Among themselves, however, no abomination is counted unlawful. The first lessons which they learn are to contemn the gods, to renounce their native country, to hold equally cheap both parent and children and brothers. Yet they anxiously study the increase of their numbers, and on that account deem it impious to put any one of their offspring to death. In short, their law-giver Moses, that he might more effectually bind the nation to himself, gave them rites wholly new and altogether contrary to the rest of mankind."

If the reader will take the pains to compare the complete scriptural revelation of God with the different sources from which you have alleged Christianity sprang; if he will take the conceptions of the different pagan nations, the polytheism, pantheism, Atheism, zoolatry, hero-worship, etc., which cast their dark shadow over the intellects of even the greatest minds, and compare them with the pure, spiritual doctrines of the old and New Testaments, he cannot escape from the conviction of Tacitus, that the teachings of Moses were "wholly new and altogether contrary to the rest of mankind," and will agree with Lucian that the truths of Christ were "new mysteries introduced into human life." And this conviction will grow more irresistible when he considers that the only comparisons which Infidels have now to oppose to Christianity are those which a former race of skeptics would have blushed to have produced; and the highest reason now is to believe that a spiritual conception of a Personal Cause who exists apart from the universe which he created, and which is under his control and providence, is similar to a belief in the personification of the different forces of nature, the sun, moon, stars, etc., and was evolved from the latter, and that the incarnation of the Son of God is a feeble imitation of the numerous offspring and half bestial, half human progeny of the wine and lust-inflamed amours of gods of human form, human infirmities, and human passions.

This brings me tardily enough perhaps to the list of doctrines, rites, festivals, etc., which you allege were copied by Christianity from heathendom. As some of them have no place in Christianity I will point out some misconceptions, make some admissions, and call for some proofs. I should like some proofs for the assertions numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 22, 23, 24, 30, 35. When I say proofs I mean an intelligent statement of what was believed, in what heathen books it is contained and upon whose authority it is asserted. The ipse dixit, though, of obscure and valueless authorities, like Kersey Graves, for instance, are not worth wasting space to quote and only show the poverty of support to the assertion.

Now as to some admissions, and I make some of them with unfeigned regret, that Christendom is so low and degraded. Your 5th allegation is true. I do not know whether what you say about the 25th of December being the birthday of several gods, etc., is actually so; if it is it only shows how Christendom has departed from scripture; but I know this, that its celebration, the evergreen tree, copied from the ancient Druids, the lighted taper, the giving of presents, etc., are heathenish in their origin. But it is one of those corruptions for which Christendom will be spewed out of the Lord's mouth at his coming, for thousands who celebrate the day to commemorate the birth with a hypocritical though festive joys of one whom they hate and would dread to meet.

No. 6 has no weight one way or the other. No. 9 we will discuss in our next thesis. In Nos. 10 and 11 if you substitute philosopher or teacher for "savior" I will admit it. I do not see the weight though of this objection since it was the universal custom of the time and is about equivalent to insisting that Prof. Tyndall borrowed his teachings from Mr. Spurgeon because he sometimes lectures on a platform. No. 13 shows more acquaintance with the ancient creed falsely called the "Apostles'," than the Bible. Scripture never asserts that Christ after his crucifixion descended into hell, but intimates the reverse. This is a dissimilarity then, not a likeness. No. 19 amounts to very little. Scripture is against the use of a material representation of the cross, still it would not be uninteresting to have you prove your assertion. No. 25 I do not care to dispute. No. 26 I willingly admit, as also No. 27, which is an antichristian corruption which the Scripture abhors. Nos. 33, 36, 37, and 38 are directly against the Scriptures, and I as utterly reject them as you do.

I will deny, however, No. 21. You cannot prove that "logos" was copied from Plato by the evangelist John. I admit that Plato used the word before John, but I deny that John copied it from him. There can be no more proof one way or the other than what I have just admitted or denied.

As to the others which I have not particularly enumerated, I allow that they were imperfectly taught before the time of Moses. I believe though that their weight of proof is on my side, because they prove the universal consciousness that there is a Great Personal Cause, that man is a fallen creature, that he needs a savior, that he is responsible and will be judged for his actions, etc., etc. I believe, too, as to the reason of this consciousness, that it is implanted by God in human nature, and secondly that it arises from transactions in the Garden of Eden, and afterward more fully revealed by the communication of God with Noah and his sons, and by them taught to their descendants in the different lands they settled, and so spread over the whole earth. Of course you can sneer and ridicule, but all you can prove against this is your own disbelief.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Book Notice.

WHY DON'T GOD KILL THE DEVIL? is the pertinent query which forms the title of a book of 52 pages by Mr. Babcock, and is dedicated to the School Board of St. Johns, Mich. Whether it is intended for use as a text-book in the schools of that place we cannot say, but we hope not, for we agree that "the public school should attend to the things of this world and let the churches attend to the things of the next." The book is illustrated with pictures of devils of various sizes, one of whom is in the pulpit cursing the rest. The writer wonders why Satan was created, in the first place, but since he was created why didn't his creator end him, as he might, and save the world an endless amount of evil and suffering? This is a bright little book and ought to be very popular. Published by D. M. Bennett, 141 8th street, New York city.—Winsted Press.

FRECKLES are not so bad. It is said that one girl does not object to seeing them on another girl's face.

The Citizen and his Claim to Education.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The writing out of my treatis on the above-named subject, as announced in No. 19 of THE TRUTH SEEKER, has been greatly interfered with, partly by correspondence more or less intimately connected therewith, and taxing upon my time and working power—limited as they are by my high age, wavering health, and the daily duties of a teacher—and partly by other incidents, of which the somewhat late appearance of the call for the Brussels Congress stands foremost. This matter forms, methinks, too conspicuous a sign of the times in Europe to be overlooked by any earnest Liberal—or, as I might prefer to say, upright citizen of the United States. Under this impression, I felt myself compelled to modify the plan of my work, and lay aside an introduction comprising—when completed—a review of the history of the National Liberal League: its aims and means, its oratorical achievements, its discussions in the press—especially in THE TRUTH SEEKER, which is so eminently interesting, and useful just—by those voices of concord and discord, contention and conciliation, in regard to vital questions like those on marriage laws (Clara Neymann, Elmina D. Slenker, etc.), Spiritualism (Charles Herbold, E. A. Chapman, W. F. Jamieson, Elmina D. Slenker), Socialism (Mrs. Dr. Lawrence, Charles Sotheran, Robert Gunther), and our yet inveiled status as a political party (A. Allen Noe, Edmond Gastineau, etc.). Besides this, my original plan experienced another alteration, respecting the order in which the subject proper—consisting of two parts—was to come out. That one which—after the introductory review—should hav appeared first, treating upon the moral truths of the Declaration of Independence as the very beacon light for all mankind, has been retained, for the purpose of adapting it to an address that, with other treatises coming from our side, should be delivered by our representativs to the Brussels Congress, which has on its program the coincident question of "Morality Independent of Religious Tenets." The other part, however, treating upon the educational amendment to the United States Constitution, has now become the first to be brought—as heretofore done—before the members of the National Liberal League, in order to enable them to take the subject—in view of our own next Congress—into early consideration. I hereby cannot suppress a conviction, which I think will be shared by every earnest citizen in our League, namely, that each member should hav ample time for considering all important topics which are to be decided in the next annual Congress, that, lasting perhaps not longer than one or two days, offers but a space of time apparently inadequate for realizing much important work, unless the participants are well prepared.

The subject-matter having been introduced, as above stated, in No. 19 of THE TRUTH SEEKER, offers the following three theses, of which the third one, in combination with the subjoined resolution of the National Liberal League, takes the lead:

1. Our public school system cannot come up to its avowed end, of educating the young up to the station of American citizenship, unless the ground in which this is rooted becomes the foundation of the school, and thus the leading thought of all popular or national education, whereby

2. It emerges out of the narrow limits of a single nationality, and freed from all laws shielding but particular interests, it enters the unmeasured realm of the interests of all humanity, protected there through the eternal law, which, in the creativ act of July 4, 1776, calling this grand commonwealth into being, was recognized to be its only possible foundation. And therefore

3. The Constitution of the United States of America should be so amended as to guarantee the youth of the land an education in the spirit of the Declaration of Independence and the preamble to the Constitution itself.

The resolution of the National Liberal League of September 13th last, proposing an educational amendment to the Constitution, declares:

"Universal education the basis of universal suffrage in this secular republic, to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment to the United States Constitution, requiring every state to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education."

As to the preliminary question, why I propose—in the third thesis—an amendment containing but the same substance, on which the National League has already passed its resolution, that, by referring to suffrage, appears to be of a more stringent character, I hav to state that when I wrote out the thesis, said resolution was not at hand—it first coming under my eyes again in THE TRUTH SEEKER of June 5th, in which it is reprinted—else I, of course, would hav referred to it, and offered my thesis as a supplement.

In retrieving this now, I propose to move in the next Congress of the National Liberal League that the above resolution be amended so as to read—after the words "and to permit"—"no child within its limits to grow up without an education faithfully conformed to the spirit of the Declaration of Independence and the preamble to the Constitution of the United States.

The reasons for so scoping the projected amendment are these:

1. We cannot afford to leave the standard of "a good elementary education" to the mere arbitrament of the schoolboard. Perhaps none of them would admit that the elementary education of those under their care was not a good one, notwithstanding the unanimity of all competent persons in demanding and striving for a thorough revision of our educational system, and especially in regard to the effete methods of practicing the several branches of the so-called elementary education. But granted even, for a moment, the sufficiency of that praxis—and its expediency is gladly accepted by all who are opposed to a higher standard of popular education—does then a good elementary education in the common conception of this term, cover the whole ground of education? Does it embrace those elements of ethics, so plainly, so inseparably, constituting the lawful character of United States citizenship, for which evidently our young are to be trained by the very means of our schools? Or can this end be secured alone by "thoroughly secularizing the school system," as justly required by our last year's resolution? That is to say, will genuin morality go by itself into the school and replace there the tenets of any supernatural creed at the moment when every vestige of them shall hav been cleared out? We, and every sensible man, every faithful citizen with us, will, to these questions, answer with an emphatic No! Because we know too well the difficulty of removing old customs out of their beaten paths, and that they cannot be overcome by merely decreeing that a certain work shall be a "good" one, but by demonstrating the end of the work and the means of securing its becoming a good one. And also do we know that long seated prejudices cannot be extinguished by mere contradiction or negation, but rather by pronouncing the sound judgment resting on the invincible authority of truth.

No prudent husbandman will fail to plant his seed in the ground right after having cleared the weeds from the latter, counting thereby much less on a rich harvest for the first time than on the weeds' total eradication, which follows by itself the proper culture of the plant. And has not our League taken exactly the same standpoint by its constitution—that imperishable monument of the centennial year—which declares the object of "total separation of church and state being to the end that equal rights in religion, genuin morality in politics, and freedom, virtue, and brotherhood in all human life may be established, protected, and perpetuated?" And further, "that the liberty of the citizen and the most precious interests of civilization alike require that all the political and educational institutions of the nation . . . should be more faithfully conformed to the spirit of its fundamental law;" which "dedicates this country exclusivly to the natural rights of man," tending "to universal brotherhood on the ground of a common humanity." This being the essence of genuin morality—the very genius which led us a hundred and four years ago into political existence, it has to become the soul of the school system throughout the land in order to insure the conformity of our political institutions to the fundamental law faithfully and perpetually.

And whereas in that system, and therein alone, an elementary education can become a good one, because of its embracing therein the principal elements of truly human—that is moral—conduct as the basis of American citizenship and universal suffrage; and whereas, in order to promote that system, the promulgation of an amendment to the United States Constitution is deemed necessary, said amendment should be so explicit in its demands that misconstruction or evasion may as far as possible be prohibited. Overt opposition to the national authority is certainly out of question, but not so the unwillingness of acting in the spirit of the fundamental law, which will manifest itself wherever it can find room enough for doing so. Such room, however, may be at least narrowed down to a minimum by plainly demanding, as above stated, that our children shall be educated according to the dictates of the Declaration of Independence, and its offspring, the preamble to the Constitution of the United States. For,

2. When teacher and law are thus brought face to face, there can be no doubt that the former is necessitated either to thoroughly study the latter, and to show his ability to faithfully work in its spirit, or to giv up a station—the most important of human vocations—for which he is unfit.

All pretexts for quarreling with the public school on the ground of its deficiency in moral instruction drop down in themselvs at the moment when the genius of American citizenship takes permanent abode in the schoolroom, revealing himself to the young as their infallible guide to virtue and happiness. JULIUS REICHHELM.

112 Garden st., Hoboken, N. J., June, 1880.

Since the forgoing was written, the three theses above set forth hav, in the form below, been adopted by the Teachers' Association, an association of eleven years' standing, which, in its constitution, states its principal object to be "the education of true, liberal American citizens." It requires of all teachers and students at the Teachers' Seminary, in Milwaukee, Wis.—an institution of its own—"faithful adherence to the principles of the Declaration of Independence," and "spotless conduct of life," and precludes all instruction in religious tenets and all religious exercises. At its annual convention, held at Newark, N. J., on July 28–30th last, it

1. Resolved, Our public schools cannot do justice to the task of educating our children to be true citizens of our community without making the fundamental ideas on which this community is based the chief aim of public instruction.

2. Resolved, The American school in adopting this view puts itself on the basis of perpetual effort toward the perfection of humanity, and is protected in this effort by the act which, on July 4, 1776, created our glorious Union.

3. Resolved. That an amendment to the Constitution of the United States should provide that the children of this country shall be educated in accordance with the spirit of the Declaration of Independence.

4. Resolved, The establishment of a general plan for popular education upon that basis would eminently promote the great object of the constitutional amendment, as laid down in the foregoing thesis (3).

Referring to these resolutions, and especially to the fourth, I intend, at our next Congress, to be held in Chicago on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of next month, to lay the same before the National Liberal League and move that a committee be appointed which shall take care of the matter of establishing a general educational plan. J. R.

August 20, 1880.

(Continued from page 565.)

made a bishopric in 680; conquered by the Danes in 886; retaken from them in the reign of Edmund the Ironside in 1016. Roman remains, coins, tesselated pavements, stone walls, etc., of former times have been found there. Cardinal Woolsey, while being conveyed a prisoner to London by the Duke of Northumberland, was there seized with sickness and died in 1530. It has played its full part in the momentous history of England. In the reign of Henry V. a parliament was held there which enacted a law whereby the burning of heretics was authorized. Its cathedral and numerous churches are now doing service in the same cause, though, fortunately, owing to the increase of civilization, the burning of heretics is not as fashionable as it formerly was.

It stands in the center of the county of Leicestershire, which is as beautiful a county as the sun shines upon. Its teeming fields are a pleasure to look upon. While riding through this country we had as fellow-travelers some laboring men in the rural districts. I tried to learn as much from them as I could, but found we had been reared in different parts of the world and did not speak our language precisely the same, which prevented our understanding each other quite as well as might be desired. After getting their remarks for the second time, and not then succeeding in understanding them, I said, "O yes, I presume so; I had about the same opinion all along," or something of the kind. I was led to regret that people who had been born and reared in this country should be unable to speak the English language better. What a fine thing it would be for some of them to live for twenty years in America and learn to speak the English language properly!

At Bedford, fifty miles from London, our male companions left us, the females and children before mentioned taking their places. They were hardly as sociable as I desired, but being of a very modest turn I did not like to obtrude myself upon their attention. Some little conversation, however, was kept up.

Bedford is situated on the river Ouse, near an ancient ford, from which the name of Bed-ford originated, meaning town on the ford. It had its share in the troubles in the time of the early Britons, Saxons, and Danes; it was frequently attacked by the latter in the tenth century, and was burnt by them in 1010. The various dukes of Bedford which England has owned had this or its vicinity for their home. It is also a most beautiful country, and I can hardly describe with what pleasure I looked upon the gently undulating surface, the slight hills and valleys all teeming with luxuriance and beauty.

We passed in view of some of the halls of the nobility, where Lord This and Earl That used to live and others still have succeeded them, but I took quite as much interest in viewing the homes of the poor and laboring classes. I wish the latter were more comfortable, and more replete with the improvements and comforts of the age.

I cannot speak too highly of the excellent character of the railways in England. The road-beds are solid, the rails are good, and the cars run evenly. The embankments and excavations are much smoother and more finished than in America; in places where excavations were made walls are built up on either side to hold the earth from sliding down, and the sides and embankments are grassed over. I saw men mowing very fair grass from the sides of the excavated places where the railway passes through. The depots are of brick, neat and commodious. They do not use the word "cars;" they say "coaches." I cannot help wishing, however, that England would send to America for missionaries to teach them how to get up cars, how to run them, and how to use the check system for baggage. They would be largely the gainers. With us a single conductor will run successfully a train of a dozen cars; here they have no conductor, but at every station there are from two or three to a half a dozen men in uniform to attend to locking travelers in their small compartments, etc., and the baggage is never checked, as in our country. When a passenger arrives at a station, as soon as he can be set at liberty by the door being unlocked, he has to run and look up his baggage, but he has no check by which to claim it.

The speed made on the roads is very good. I think we traveled faster than I ever rode on cars before. It is over two hundred miles from Liverpool to London, and we were not quite six hours in making it. One train comes in five hours. One custom seems odd—the trains all take the left hand track, instead of the right hand, as with us, and it is the same with the carriages in the street. John Bull is a left-handed old cove.

A little before 5 P. M. we rolled into a capacious depot, and soon chartered a cab to take us to Parson's private hotel on Great Russell street, directly opposite the British Museum. Bro. Rawson had stopped here before, and liking the place his inclinations led him here again. It is very comfortable and quiet. We have rooms, take our breakfast and tea here, and get our dinners or lunch where we choose. After taking a bath and something to eat we started out to see a little of London, the city of over 4,000,000 people, the largest city in the world.

We called first on the venerable Edward Truelove, Liberal publisher and bookseller in High Holborn street, who was sent to prison four months for selling Robert Dale Owen's "Moral Physiology." He had gone out into the country, but we had a few minutes' conversation with his daughter, who was in attendance at the store. I next took an omnibus for Islington, in the northern part of the city, to ascertain if my friend Dr. T. S. Andrews, of Kipton, Ohio, was now in London. I found his relatives here, but learned that he was in Norwich, in the northeast part of England. On inquiring my way to Islington, I was told to go to The Angel, and then go up a certain street to a certain other street, etc., etc. I supposed The Angel meant an angel, and I was looking for the figure of an imposing seraph, probably of the female sex, ready perhaps to take me up to the celestial regions, but, to my dismay, I found only a "gin-mill," kept by a man by the name of Angell. I did not gather to that angel worth a cent. I spent the balance of the evening in looking around to see the fashions, manners, and customs of this great town. But my letter is long enough. There is a great deal to be seen here, and I want to tell you considerable about this place, but will not tire you entirely out now, and will renew the subject again soon. We will stay here three or four days more, then go to Paris, Brussels, and other places on the continent, and then return here and finish up this town.

In the mean time, good-bye, D. M. B.

State Rights and the League.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Now let us look a little after Mr. Bush's "Bourbons." He alleges that the Democrats are "Bourbons," that is, stupid retrogrades who can never learn nor forget anything, and this he alleges as to

1. State rights,
2. Politics,
3. Religion.

In regard to state rights he argues in his letter in your last issue that the Platform of the National Liberal League "cuts up by the roots the dogma of state rights."

In this matter I think that Mr. Bush is entirely mistaken, and the reader will be able to judge after comparing the League Platform with the Constitution. Mr. Bush cites the League Platform correctly thus:

1 Total separation of church and state, to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

2. National protection for national citizens in their equal political, civil, industrial, and religious rights, irrespectiv of race or sex; to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

3. Universal education the basis of universal suffrage in this secular republic; to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every state to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

Now standing on this platform let us look at the Constitution and see what "rights" the states and people hav. By amendments 9 and 10 we learn that they hav all the "rights" and "powers" that hav not been delegated to the United States, or prohibited to the states by the Constitution itself. That is, a few of the most important and general powers of government are delegated to the United States, and prohibited to the states. But the states and the people, (who must execute these rights and powers through the states) hav all other rights and powers whatsoever!

It is plain, then, that both the general government and the states hav "rights" and "powers" and are each supreme and independent as to them in their respectiv provinces under the Constitution. They together make the nation.

As to the great body of civil, criminal, and political law by which society is conducted and preserved, the states hav rights various, indispensable, and unlimited. The United States hav nothing to do with them. As to all dealings with foreign nations, war, and general administration the United States are made supreme and therefore sovereign. The people owe allegiance to both governments in their separate provinces and the U. S. Supreme Court is the arbiter until overruled by the people in their political action, or by amendments to the Constitution.

Now that these constitutional and legitimate rights and powers of the states are "cut up by the roots" by the Liberal League platform is simply preposterous. It might just as well be said that they were all "cut up" by the 13th and 15th amendments which guarantee to colored citizens their equal rights as citizens and voters in every state of the United States. Indeed, all that the platform of the League contemplates as far as the general government is concerned is to hav Liberals emancipated and protected in their civil rights as well as colored people. In order to do this the Liberal who cannot believe in God and is liable to be stripped of his rights and property—who might be roasted, like Servetus, in Vermont—must hav the protection of the general government just as his colored brother must hav it in Texas. Just examin the platform above printed and see how true this is.

That is, the second plank of the platform means protection in equal civil rights. To secure this protection it will be seen that the first plank is indispensable, for no Liberal can hav equal rights if either the state or general government violates them by excluding him from office or roasting him or robbing him to support churches, etc. To secure this protection it will be seen that the third plank is necessary, for how can superstition be kept out of politics and the Liberal hav his rights except in a well ordered state of intelligent fellow-citizens? Therefore, universal education is the necessary basis of a universal suffrage which shall be safe to all. But in order that this education should not interfere with state rights it is provided that this education shall be given by the states, but that the general government shall hav the right to require it of every state. The general government is not to go into the general education business in the states, as President Hayes recommended in his late speech, but is to hav the power to make the states do it—for example, by lessening their representation if they fail to do it or by any other practical means.

How are the rights of the states cut up root and branch by giving and securing to Liberals, equal rights in the states, as has been done in case of freedmen? Certainly those who hav been emancipated from theology should hav the same chance as those emancipated from slavery. But in nearly every state of the Union they are discriminated against in some underhand way by the union of church and state. For instance, they are deprived of the right to hold office, to vote, be a witness or juror, or to hav property without paying church taxes, etc.

We hav protected the Freedmen; now, says the League, let us take in the Liberals and make the amendments broad so as to secure the safety of both. State rights will then remain on a securer basis than ever, for they will rest upon equal, impartial, intelligent citizens—the substance of a true state, Men who "know their rights and dare maintain them."

But Mr. Bush says that a proposed 16th Amendment, called the Blaine Amendment, looking somewhat towards these ends, was proposed by Mr. Blaine, and was passed by the House, but was voted down by the Democrats in the Senate in 1876. The facts are that this amendment, in my judgment very insufficient, was reported favorably and was passed by a Democratic House almost unanimously (only 7 nays), and was referred to a Republican committee in the Republican Senate, and there slaughtered by unnecessary verbiage and additions permitting the Bible to be read in schools, etc., so that no sensible Liberal or Democrat would ever vote for it. As soon as these changes became known, Mr. Abbot, then President of the Liberal League, and indeed every Liberal who understood the matter, joined in urging its defeat. Then the Republicans all voted for it, and the Democrats very properly against it. As reported from the Senate Committee it was objectionable to everybody who had originally favored the proposition. It is enough to say that no amendment covering the platform of the League has as yet been passed upon by Congress, but when it is proposed the action of the Democrats in this very matter referred to by Mr. Bush is the best evidence that they will grant protection and equality to Liberals. They expressly said in their report of the Judiciary Committee that "while there may be a difference of opinion as to the necessity of such a constitutional amendment, all agree that the underlying principles are right and in accordanee with the spirit of the age" (Congress. Record, 1876, p. 5189).

It is enough to answer Mr. Bush to say that in the very instance cited the "state-rights" Democrats by their committee, and a House in which they had a large majority took up and passed a proposed amendment introduced by their opponent, Mr. Blaine, and did it almost unanimously, the 7 nays being about equally divided between the Republicans and Democrats, and that this very amendment was smothered to death by verbiage in a Republican Senate, under the hand of Senator Edmunds of Vermont, so that no intelligent Liberal wanted it passed. That a few Democrats objected to the transformed amendment on the ground of state rights was reasonable enough when we look into the details of this verbiage with which it was loaded up. In neither shape, however, was it ever a proper amendment to secure the objects of the League.

There can be no denial of the fact, then, that "state rights" do exist under the Constitution, and can only end with it. The Liberal League platform does not and cannot cut them up, but roots them deeper than ever in universal justice and education.

Does Mr. Bush propose to abolish these "rights" and "powers" reserved to, and exercised by, the several states, and to merge them into the general government? Certainly not! What, then, does he mean? Simply nothing—unless it be an appeal to sectional prejudice, or the ignorance that confounds constitutional state rights with secession or "state sovereignity," claimed to be above the Constitution, and which is another way of saying secession and rebellion. Such appeals, it seems to me, he should be above making. He should leave that to those whose living depends upon flaunting the "bloody shirt" before the ignorant and the prejudiced. Is it right and is it good policy to mislead and "fire the Northern heart" by such and similar misrepresentations? This will be answered in my next on Bourbon politics.

As to the Democrats (not the secessionists) from Jefferson, Madison, and Jackson down, they hav held the true position as to "state rights," never better stated than in Jefferson's Inaugural, and which can never be too deeply impressed upon the head and heart of every American:

"The preservation of the general government in its whole constitutional vigor, as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad."

"The support of the state governments in all their rights as the most competent administrators of our domestic concerns, and the surest bulwarks against anti-Republican tendencies."

"Equal and exact justice to all men, of whatever state or persuasion, religious or political."

This is the position of the Democracy of old—and now, and it is mine. T. B. WAKEMAN.

New York, Aug. 27, 1880.

The Excursion Train to the Chicago Congress.

The excursion train to the Chicago Congress from New York city is train No. 3 on the Erie Railroad, and leaves New York city Sep. 13th, at 7 o'clock P.M. The same train leaves Salamanca Sep. 14th, at 12 o'clock M. It will arrive at Chicago about 9 o'clock Sep. 15th. Low rates of passage can be procured at any station on this route where this train stops. For particulars inquire of H. L. GREEN.

Salamanca, N. Y.

Northern Wisconsin Spiritual Conference.

We hav the pleasure of announcing that we hav secured as speaker for our next quarterly meeting, to be held in Omro, Wis., September 17th, 18th, and 19th, 1880, Cephas B. Lynn, of Boston, one of the finest orators in America. Other speakers invited to participate. Good vocal and instrumental music. Officers will be elected for ensuing year. Let all be present the first day of meeting. Please notify the secretary of your intentions to be present, that provision may be made by the Omro friends to entertain all free, as far as possible. Fare at Northwestern House, per day, $1.

WM. M. LOCKWOOD, Pres.

Omro, Wis, Aug. 27, 1880. CORA B. PHILLIPS, Sec.

INGERSOLL IN CANADA. A reply to Wendling, Archbishop Lynch, "Bystander," and others. By Allen Pringle. Price 10 cents.

This is a reply to the attacks upon Col. Ingersoll by the gentlemen named, which were made upon him after his lecturing tour in Canada. Although, as the author says, Col. Ingersoll is amply able to defend himself, should he deem it necessary, this little work of fifty-six pages is not out of place. Mr. Pringle is a widely-read scholar, and presents his answers in the shape of an argument against Christianity, which is conclusiv. He has followed the example of the Tract Society and illuminated the covers of the work with extracts from the sayings of the most eminent writers, which are much more sensible than the scriptural quotations which adorn the works and walls of Chistianity. The work is written, Mr. Pringle says, more for quasi-Liberals than for advanced Materialists, but we do not think it would hurt even them to read it. As a "campaign document," we commend this to all Liberals. Let them circulate it extensivly, and we will guarantee that good will follow.

[From the Winsted Press.]

"The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times."

The second volume of D M. Bennett's "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times" is now out, and is a worthy companion of the first. It is a book of 957 pages, handsomely bound, and containing an engraving of its author in prison garb. The object of this work, as stated in the preface, is "to giv to the public the best information to be had on the subject of the gods and religions which men hav believed in in all ages of the world." The book is largely a compilation from the writings of those who hav made the subject a special study, and was the work of Mr. Bennett while in prison under unjust punishment for sending through the mails a pamphlet by E. H. Heywood, of Princeton, Mass., entitled "Cupid's Yokes," the price of which pamphlet is fifteen cents. Like all history, this religio-historical work of Bennett's is a compendium of events, in which the poor, ignorant masses of humanity are continual victims of poverty, persecution, and horrible injustice. The amazing fortitude of the people, their patient endurance of pain and privation, and their marvelous sincerity of belief in the most outrageous falsehoods and absurdities are nowhere so strikingly revealed as in books like this. We get a glimpse of the ignorance and wretchedness of the common people of other days and the intolerance and cruelty of their religious masters, and wonder that men could hav endured the horrors of existence with imaginary fiends clutching at their souls on the one hand and worse than fiends tormenting their bodies on the other. It can be no ordinary book of which James Parton would write as he has to its author of this one. Mr. Parton says:

It strikes me dumb with wonder. How you could hav executed such a task, in such unpropitious circumstances, in the space of eleven months, passes my understanding. I should hav wanted twenty-five years for it, and then should not hav been half as interesting as you hav made it. Your work is one long exhibition of the weakness and cowardice of man, and shows how, in every age and in all climes, he has been cheated and plundered through his fears. What fools we hav been and what fools we are! Your example, I hope, will make many men not afraid to touch the idol and help level it with the dust. But when the idol is overthrown, the great problem of human happiness will remain. Never forget that.

Volume second of the "Gods" opens with a review of primitiv religion, including fetichism, polytheism and mythology, and phallism. This is followed by the religion of the Hindoos, including Brahmanish and Buddhism. The balance of the table of contents relates to the religion of Persia, of the Chaldeans, of China, of Thibet, of Egypt, of Assyria, of the Phœnicians, of Greece, of the Romans, of the Teutons, of the Druids, of Judaism, of Mohammedanism, and lastly of Christianity. As each of these systems is treated at length the unusual size of the volume is explained, but nothing has been put in that could well hav been left out, and the interested reader will not complain that the book is too large.

The Modern Spirit.

BY V. DE P.

To the conservativ religionist the "modern spirit" is synonymous with evil. It

"Is a monster of so frightful mien
That, to be hated, needs but to be seen,"

It recognizes no authority but reason. It considers nothing sacred but truth, and holds nothing true except that which, by observation and experience, has been proved to appear under all circumstances the same. It is an examiner of motivs, and is not satisfied by effects or external appearances. Looking forward to universal happiness, it scorns to consider aught that conduces but to present contentment.

As to the origin of the modern spirit, there is no time, however ancient, but that bears testimony of its manifestation. Wherever there hav been men anxious to know aught of the purpose of their being, or where superstition has raised itself to dictate and say what was holy and what evil, and what forms were subservient to the propitiation of God and to the discomfiture of evil powers, or where it has been said that thought should run only in certain defined directions, there hav we seen the modern spirit rise with iconoclastic hand.

Such is the more usual conception of the modern spirit. The general mind sees it only as a rebellious manifestation against old and, especially, "sacred" objects and institutions. To the unprejudiced and thoughtful it appears as the champion of truth and right. It is a champion of truth because it is tolerant, and of right through principle, or rather law. It sees and declares that all things in their ultimate development rectify themselvs and become right. It givs its followers but one truth as a rule of conduct—"Action and reaction are equal and in opposit directions." From this all other rules are derived, and by this all actions must be judged. From this simple truth we draw the declarativ commandments:

"Every excess causes a defect, every defect an excess."

"For everything we gain we miss something; for everything we lose we gain something else."

The natural reaction of evil is unhappiness, and evil is aught that in its development produces misery. We pay for our crimes in misery; the sunshine of our laughter is followed by the shadow of tears. Each wrong furnishes an addition to the necessary balance of pain that accompanies our pleasure. Truly it behooves us to do good; and yet it has been said that the modern spirit offered no inducement for right action, no punishment for evil.

These truths hav a most benign influence on the individual. They compel him to carefully scrutinize all the circumstances of his life, and cause him to set a just estimate on his own powers. The individual man is led to see that his powers hav definit causes; that his whole life is filled with the harmony of law and order, which he can direct in so far as he is able to grasp the mainsprings of his power and look backward to the unpropitious elements that hav been his hereditary inheritance. These things cause a man to see himself but as an atom in that strange compound called humanity, the characteristics and uses of which in relation to the universe are still so vague and uncertain because of its insignificance.

Toward religion the modern spirit bears no equivocal relation. It can not be accused of bigotry in its espousal of any. It is not sectarian. This is because it is the outgrowth of no particular religion, but a general rebound from the trivial and mean in all departments of thought and action. The modern spirit seeks and honors the best parts in all religions. It sees that all religions are a part of humanity and substantially the same, having the same aim and holding power by the same means. The modern spirit does not seek to destroy any religion. It does not wish to annihilate from their position in the literary world the conceptions, dreams, ideas, or doctrins of the Christian theology. It only desires to show with all candor and gentleness that these ideas are no more worthy of belief or confidence, no more divine, than the ideas of pagan theology as transcribed by the philosophers. It wishes to demonstrate that the whole Bible—the history of Moses, the psalms of David, and the drama of Job—so far as divinity is concerned, is no better than similar subjects by Zenophon, Homer, and Thucydides. The writings of Christian theology hav indeed added to our esthetic natures; they hav been important factors in our intellectual growth; they are, no doubt, the outgrowth of honest conviction, and are—so far as they are such, and no farther—worthy of respect. Time, however, is an argument more subtle than any in metaphysics. It destroys so gradually and yet so surely that men can but stand aside in awe, powerless to save. Time has said the Christian theology of the past has served its purpose. This verdict cannot be gainsaid. The only alternativ left is to cast aside the old habiliments of thought, and send them to the junk shop of the past, where they may lie in the dust of forgetfulness only to be occasionally disturbed by some intellectual antiquarian.

Toward practical life the modern spirit directs a most beneficial influence. It teaches that mind and matter are indissolubly united, that inner consciousness is dependent upon outer circumstances and influences. This causes it to be seen that the discoveries of science not only affect life indirectly through making the means of living different, but also directly by giving us a more thorough knowledge of its powers. The arts being the application of the principles of science, and tending to the promotion of the corporal, become honorable, because while making the means of life easier and better they tend to make thought purer and nobler. Verily the modern spirit must needs be strenuously combated.

What the ultimate outgrowth of the modern spirit shall be, no man would be rash enough, from present data, to formulate an opinion. On it depend all the inventions and discoveries that adorn and ameliorate the present; on it does the next cycle of progress rest. It holds in its thought the religion of the future. It has already given birth to the components of its philosophy. Science blesses it as a guardian influence, and art sees in it a tolerant patron. Thought under its patronage wanders unconstrainedly over the fields of investigation and fearlessly exposes to view its discovered treasures; while faith, in smiling simplicity, fearlessly regards it as a friend. Everywhere there are seen through the new impulse given to all the springs of action indications of its beneficent power.

[From the New York Times.]

The Norwich Blue Laws.

The spirit of the old Connecticut "Blue laws" survives in Dr. Leonard W. Bacon, Mayor Osgood, and "twenty-four other prominent citizens" of the city of Norwich. Historians profess to hav disproved the existence of any special code under the name of the "Blue Laws," but they hav evidently been deceived. If, in the year 1880, the citizens of Norwich are forbidden to seek recreation and health by a quiet sail on the Sound of a Sunday afternoon, we may with measurable certainty infer a state of public opinion in the New Haven Colony two hundred years ago which would hav made it a grave offense for a man to kiss his wife or spank his child on the Sabbath. Dr. Bacon, a New England pioneer of the seventeenth century, transported by some caprice of nature into a day and generation with which he is not in sympathy, raises a discordant note of protest against a practice which seems to him a desecration of the Sabbath. A year ago this present month he made an unsuccessful attempt to stop the Sunday excursions of the steamer Ella from Norwich to Watch Hill. A week ago to-day he returned to the attack in his morning sermon, delivered before a union meeting of the three principal churches of Norwich. The pastors of two of these churches were absent on their summer vacations. It is not improbable that they were at Watch Hill enjoying the health-giving surf and the invigorating sea breezes. Dr. Bacon denounced the owners of the steamer Ella "in the most scathing terms," we are told, "not only for violating the sanctity of Sunday in a flagrant manner, but also for aggravating their alleged offense by carrying women of known bad character, tolerating the sale of liquor on board, and thus promoting gross debauchery in connection with these pleasure trips, besides having bands of music to add to the secularization of the day."

The pious Doctor did not content himself with denunciations. He drew up a petition to the managers of the Ella, and invited signatures. A brother pastor declined to sign the paper, declaring his lack of sympathy with its terms. A member of Dr. Bacon's church remonstrated with him, and informed him that another petition "of a more temperate and less offensiv character" was to be put in circulation. The clergyman recalled his petition, therefore, and the guardianship of the holiness of the Sabbath in Norwich was transferred to other hands. Another petition, or letter, signed by Mayor Osgood and "twenty-four other prominent citizens," was presented to the manager of the steamboat by the Mayor himself, "who, in a brief informal interview, expressed the sentiments of the best people of the community, and obtained a ready promise to abandon the Sunday excursion for the rest of the season."

Who are "the best people of the community" in this Connecticut city? Do they dwell in close, small-windowed houses in the crowded quarter, where the streets are narrow and not over clean, where the blazing sun by day and the stifling heat by night torture grown men and women and burn the life out of the little babies? We cannot believe that the "best people of the community" inhabit such a quarter. Surely the poor man who works from sunrise to sundown on six days in the week would not petition against the privilege of a delightful trip up the Sound with his wife and children on the only day he could call his own. These poor folk know that the heat and foul air of the city are fatal to infant life, and they love their babies as fondly as chough they were "the best people of the community." They know, too, that a trip on the Sound is cheaper than a funeral. Was it clerks and shop-girls who signed the petition—young men and women who hav no home but a hall bedroom in which they all but suffocate these hot nights? This cannot be, for they would look forward to Sunday, with its breezy sail to Watch Hill, as the bright day of their lives. As the signers of the petition could not hav been working men, clerks, or shop-girls, we are forced to conclude that they are the rich people who own and liv in spacious mansions on the Hill and along the shaded avenues. It is obvious that they would care nothing about the Ella and her trips to Watch Hill. Their houses are roomy and comfortable. They get pure and grateful breezes at home; or, if they feel the need of sea air, they can go out on the Sound in their own or their friends' private yachts, or they can pack their numerous and large trunks full of costly clothes and go to Newport, Narragansett Pier, Block Island, or some other fashionable resort. They are the "best people of the community," and with light hearts and pious souls they sign away the liberties of the poor, vulgar, ignoble herd.

This outburst of austere and sour-faced Puritanism is not a pleasant spectacle to contemplate. Mayor Osgood and the twenty-four "best people of the community" probably blame Dr. Bacon for the violence of his language, but flatter themselvs that they hav done a praiseworthy action. The censure of just-thinking men will fall more heavily upon them than upon him. He overreached himself through too much zeal, but his method was straightforward. They went to work with a smooth-tongued, oily persuasivness, and, being deacons, pillars of the church, rich men—in short, the "best people of the community"—they made the proprietors of the Ella feel that they were really malefactors. If these most excellent people disapproved of Sunday excursions, they reasoned, the Lord must disapprove of them too. Mayor Osgood and his twenty-four fellow-pietists must base their objections to Sunday excursions to Watch Hill on precisely the same ground as Dr. Bacon—that is, that they violate the sanctity of the Sabbath, that women of bad character are taken on the boats, and that liquor is sold. But the people who go on the excursions must be somewhere, the bad women must be somewhere, and the liquor will be sold somewhere. It is the experience of this city, and it is the opinion of every man whose Calvinism does not get the better of his judgment, that the Sabbath is much better kept by an excursion to the sea-side than by an idle day in the city. The public peace and the morals of the community in New York gain to an immeasurable extent by the Sunday trips to Coney Island, Rockaway, and Glen Island. Do the "best people" of Norwich believe that their city will be more holy and righteous now that the Ella will be moored to her dock on future Sunday afternoons? They hav set up one law for the rich and another for the poor. They declare that all who do not think and act as they do are godless and wicked. They can go to Watch Hill on week days, so they stay at home on Sundays, and declare that everybody else must do the same. Will they build a pillory in Norwich, cut off the ears of unbelievers, and burn witches?

The Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League.

To the Auxiliaries and Members of the National Liberal League,
GREETING:

The Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League will be held at the West End Opera House, 431 W. Madison st., in the city of Chicago, Ill., on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next. All charter and life members of the National Liberal League, the President and Secretary of each local auxiliary and three delegates from the same are entitled to seats and votes in the Congress, and al annual members of the National League are entitled to seats, but not to votes.

As a President of the United States is to be elected this year, it is important that every one of the now two hundred auxiliaries shall be represented, and that a republic, every citizen of which professes that the state should be independent of the church, and the church of the state, shall no longer stultify itself by subsidizing ecclesiastical corporations in exempting their property from taxation, supporting religious instruction in schools, robbing the people of their time by Sunday laws, paying salaries for religious services, and exacting religious oaths as security for truth and fidelity to civil obligations.

If the National League has any voice, now is the time to hav it heard. The Constitution under which we liv consecrates the rights of speech and opinion and has no punishing power except for accurately-defined and proven crime; and the depositaries of this punishing power, national and state, hav their well-defined provinces and limits as servants of the people and protectors against all personal violence and fanatical persecution. The great question of the day is whether these bulwarks of individual liberty shall be swept away by the greed of power truckling to bigotry and superstition, or the voice and votes of a free and enlightened people shall teach political partisans that the whole is always greater than any part in the administration of our republic.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 9, 1880. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Pres.

Michigan Grove-Meeting.

The Liberalists and Freethinkers of Michigan and northern Indiana will hold their annual grove-meeting at Schoolcraft, Mich., Sunday, Sep. 12, 1880, in Island Grove. Col. R. G. Ingersoll and Prof. O. A. Phelps, will positivly be present and address the meeting. James Parton is also expected. This will be the largest meeting ever held under Liberal auspices. Railroads will run trains to this meeting at very low excursion rates. Arrangements hav been made to receive twenty thousand people. ALBERT BURSON, Managing Sec.

D. M. BENNETT's letters from Europe will be issued in book form.

Fair Play.

Not long ago one of the best of women said to me, "I tell you, Bro. Lynn, T. C. Leland is a captain." This was just after reading one of his short, practical, and pungent articles wherein he placed before the vision of F. E. Abbot the Eighth Demand of Liberalism. I was quite as well pleased as the lady referred to, and instead of giving the author the title of captain, it seemed more befitting to call him a major-general.

In spite of these well-merited compliments, we are not going to accept all the author says as law and gospel, and do not think him a good representativ of the Liberal idea or spirit in his late article, "Good for Greens." We agree with him regarding the farce of a Liberal party as inaugurated at Cincinnati, and the part played in that performance by R. G. Ingersoll, in connection with his voluntary offering (not allowed) at the Chicago Republican Convention. Ingersoll's love for the Republican party is on a par with T. C. Leland's for the Democracy, all right and proper, doubtless, if they think so. As representativ Liberals they will not object if others of less ability, though equally honest, take exception to their conclusions.

Friend Leland tells us that Bro. Walker is sadly disappointed with the action of the Greenback Convention, with its "farce of prayer and a religious bigot at the head of the ticket." I was present at that same Convention, and by committee work missed hearing that peculiar prayer. After learning of its character and the manner of its reception, my absence caused me some regret.

Among the members of the Convention, THE TRUTH SEEKER had a large number of its activ friends, and the Convention treated the women more generously than any political body had ever treated them before. As a whole, it was generous to a fault in going outside of its legitimate work. It is a political organization established for currency reform, and the principles of equity between the producers of wealth and the owners of capital, and also the regulation and control of all corporations within such limits that, while it does not seek to infringe on their right of franchise, will guard the people against all corporate infringements of their rights.

It seems to me that Liberalism is getting pretty low when it gets into spasms over a simple prayer at a political meeting or an invocation at a Spiritual meeting. Speaking for myself, I wish it were otherwise, and I confess there are times when for a second I feel annoyed with these things, and yet the sense of shame that follows assures me that I can preach better than practice.

What do Liberals want? What do they expect? A beer-drinking Liberal should not expect a total abstinence society to justify his use of lager. A teetotal Liberal would not expect this same beer-user to accept his platform. Could not both parties be liberal enough to allow all the freedom they claimed, and yet treat each other courteously?

A man is not necessarily a bigot because, like Mr. Weaver, he is a Methodist. Mr. Clark, the Methodist minister who spoke so kindly of Ingersoll, was a more perfect Liberal than most of those of my acquaintance, by personal reputation or otherwise. Whenever a person manifests any degree of irritation or petulance because representativ men of any party whose principles he admires, does not happen to belong to his particular phase of intellectual, religious, or scientific thought, whether he knows it or not, he has the unmistakable signs of bigotry that are much worse in a professing Liberal than any one else.

I hav about come to the conclusion that bigotry is about as general as "total depravity," and that Liberals hav the distemper very general, even if it is in a milder form. I venture the assertion that that farce of a prayer suited nine-tenths of the members of that convention; and only think what good liberal souls the other one-tenth must hav had to feel so exercised at having their pet notions and feelings so outraged. Liberals said to me, "You ought to hav heard it. We said Amen to it with a vim."

We take exception to the charge of bigotry against Mr. Weaver, because we esteem it unjust, untrue, and unfair. His being a Methodist does not make him a bigot. On this point I go back on my experience and the principles of justice and equity. Mere intellectual conclusions regarding science, morals, or religions, do not make possessors bigots or Liberals. Sometimes those entertaining the broadest views and possessing the most scientific research are the most ready to find fault with others because they see not as they do, while minds the most childlike, the most credulous, are entirely free from this despotic and cruel arrogance. Belief is not bigotry; intolerance of the opinions of others, and arrogant claims for your own is the trouble.

When we heard J. B. Weaver was a Methodist we were pleased, for it would be the cause of more gratulation in the party than were he a follower of Ingersoll, and I was quite willing to forego the present gratification of a Liberal Spiritualist in having the larger number gratified. He represents principles we deem essential for the well-being of the government. He has proved his ability and integrity in this respect. We consider very important the "bread-and-butter question;" it is first for the toiling, laboring community. When well fed we may reach them then with Liberal ideas and scientific truth.

We accept the platform as the best possible under the circumstances, and I am quite sure that there were more TRUTH SEEKER readers who cheerfully ratified it than were found in the Republican and Democratic conventions. We fail to see where the Democratic platform at all compares with the National Greenback-Labor platform, so far as the interests of the producing classes are concerned; and while I thus see, there is no danger of my grumbling over the phraseology when the spirit is all right.

We are entirely sick of the present political mismanagement; it is time the Republican party was out of power. And as the Cincinnati Times-Star, a Republican daily, says in speaking of the two platforms: "What material question remains, then, upon which a direct national issue can be gained? In all sincerity it might be said that so far as the actual substance is concerned, the Democrats and Republicans might swap platforms and candidates, and proceed in the campaign with entire consistency."

It is because such are the facts that we oppose both the old parties. They are in league with the national bankers, the bondholders, land and railroad corporations, that work injury to producers and consumers. They seek to control the finances of the nation; fund, instead of pay, the national debt; farm out the public lands to great landlords, and giv entire control to railroad corporations, who pool their earnings in order to charge what they please for freight and passengers. We urge the correction of these evils. We are conscious that J. B. Weaver is well worthy our support, and even if the "crowd is meager," we shall make one without any fear of the bigotry of Mr. Weaver or getting into a fever over the prayer of the Iowa Methodist preacher. Bigotry is very unpalatable, narrowness is distasteful, and while some Liberalists will vote the Republican ticket, others the Democratic, and some not at all, it is equally sure that a goodly percentage will vote for Weaver and Chambers, despite the fear and charge of bigotry from those who profess to be our teachers. GEO. LYNN.

Michigan Liberalists and Spiritualists.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Thinking that many of your readers would be interested to hear of the progress of Liberal thought in southwestern Michigan, I send you a dim outline of one of the best Spiritual gatherings ever held in that portion of the state. It was the annual convention of the Spiritualists and Liberalists of VanBuren and adjoining counties, held on Saturday and Sunday, Aug. 7 and 8, 1880, in the apple-orchard grove of Robert Nesbitt. Some who came on Saturday brought their tents and other paraphernalia for camp life, and the faces of all gave evidence that they had met for a good social time, as well as earnest work. At 3 o'clock P. M. the convention was called to order by the President, L. S. Burdick, when Mrs. E. C. Woodruff, of South Haven spoke one hour on "The Moral Order of the Universe."

Adjourned till half past six, when Dr. A. B. Spinney of Detroit spoke on "Intuition and Science as Educators from the Primitiv." At an early hour on Sunday morning the people from the surrounding country began to gather at the gate, and it was not long before eight or nine hundred had assembled in the beautiful shade of an old farm orchard. Convention was called to order at half past nine, devoting one hour to conference, when Mrs. Woodruff occupied the morning session, subject, "What are your Basic Ideas?—The dignity and supremacy of the human mind."

At two o'clock the convention elected officers as follows: President, L. S. Burdick, of Texas; Vice-President, Mrs. Elvira Chidester, of Bangor; Secretary, E. L. Warner, of Paw Paw; Treasurer, Mrs. Roxina A. Sheffer, of South Haven. Dr. Spinney then spoke from the interrogatory, "Will you hav Rationalism or Superstition?" It would be futil to attempt to giv a faint outline of the flights of oratory and showers of inspiration that came from the lips of the speakers at each session, and I can only say to those who are conversant with them that the associations present conspired with the mystic forces wafted thither by celestial oxygen, to place them in the most receptiv condition as instruments to be acted upon by the subtil elements in the realm of the invisible. A choir was selected from the audience that rendered fine vocal music, and an amateur brass band did themselvs much credit in rendering instrumental music, which was appreciated by all present.

And when I come to speak of the hospitality of Mr. Nesbitt and his amiable wife, and their three daughters, my pen falters, and the definition of a Webster fades into oblivion, for one must be a recipient thereof to fully comprehend the significance of the term, and I can only say that they opened their spacious house and barns and the contents of them to over one hundred guests who lodged on the premises on Saturday night, and took breakfast at their table on Sunday morning. My pen can pay Mr. Nesbitt no better tribute than to say that he is a man of strong convictions, and will dare all he has for the right, taking his life in his hands and risking everything for his family and friends. He was one of the pioneers of Van Buren county, purchasing a large tract of densely wooded forest, several hundred acres of which he has made to "bud and blossom as the rose," still owning quite a tract of the primeval forest in its primitiv condition, heavily wooded with valuable timber. A national flag was floating from a pole about thirty feet high, which was suggestiv of the mental liberty for which we are so earnestly contending. The name of the association is informal, and it has had an existence since 1868, passing through the alternate lights and shades incident to the progress of Freethought during that period, and it has been maintained only by the persistent efforts of a few determined workers, some of whom hav removed from the county, while many hav passed to the other life, whose memory still livs, and their works do follow them.

The first organization of the "Van Buren County Circle," so called, was by the personal efforts of S. F. Breed, now in California, at the time when Col. D. M. Fox was organizing the state, and each county had an organization auxiliary to the state association.

Owing to the lack of a financial basis, and the fact that a few became overworked, the county societies became disorganized, and the best workers from adjoining counties sought a union with us, until now we hav the strongest band of harmonious workers in the state. The contributions for the support of this society hav been voluntary, and the struggle has been intense to keep the vital spark from entirely dying out, but we advertised well, and took an admission fee of ten cents at the gate on Sunday, and find the society has a balance on hand of $69.44, thus placing us above the terror of financial failure for the present.

The convention adjourned about four o'clock, and every one went away happy, their faces denoting that no one was any more afraid of an angry God or ugly devil than when they came there. E. L. WARNER, Sec.

Paw Paw, Mich., Aug. 13, 1880.

A Letter from Oregon.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: As it is a real impossibility to make the most distant allusion to the depravity of the Christian church and her "white necktie and black gown wearers" through the columns of our Oregon press, I hav to take refuge in your independent Liberal paper. Open words and open doors, the demands of civilization and culture, cannot be found among the press of Oregon for the present. The Oregon Staats Zeitung, a German journal, edited by Dr. J. Folkmann, makes in this respect the only exception, while our English papers are altogether under the control of the clergy—those usurpers of the Christian name, who teach a counter religion, made up of the deliria of crazy imaginations, as foreign to Christianity as is that of Mohammed or Brigham Young.

Since the unity of the Supreme Being was ousted by the force of the sword of the civil government, wielded at the will of fanatic priests, that creed dug the first shovel-full for its own burial. The sooner they get their tomb finished, the sooner the glorious age will dawn upon us.

> "From the lips of truth one mighty breath
> Shall, like a whirlwind, scatter in its breeze
> The whole dark pile of human mockeries."

As long as such sentiments as the Bible produces on the minds of our Christian flock find currency, and are esteemed as the ne plus ultra of moral worth, our morality will remain, as hitherto, a system of organized hypocrisy, an unblushing caricature of all that is virtuous, noble, generous, and faithful. The Christians ought to blush when they look at the simple excellences of people who can afford to be moral without the spurs of heaven or hell. It would be time for those braying asses, the Christian clergy, to cease fulminating from their pulpits their atrocious calumnies against such men as Thomas Paine, Bob Ingersoll, D. M Bennett, and thousands of others, who were and are yet the pride of candid manhood, because the Infidel's position is substantiated by having shown the reductio ad absurdum to which the reasoning of the theologian infallibly tends. No compacter body of liars and hypocrits than the Christian clergy ever existed. Jesus himself deceived his disciples, by telling them he would not go to the Passover, and yet he went there before they did. Namby Pamby Peter, and the greatest fraud of all the frauds, Paul, played the hypocrit. The last named was even punished for it by one of his returns to Jesusalem by his senior usurper. All the Christian Fathers of the early Christian period, especially the composers of the New Testament, before and during the reign of that monster emperor, Constantine—the blood-thirstiest hyena that ever sat on a throne—recommended lying in behalf of God and his word. Their Almighty Jehovah had to be upheld by lies, and Jesus was by Constantine's sword placed in a line with old Jehovah. If God, when he, according to the Bible, dabbed up man, had clapped a bell or clicker within him, which would giv the alarm whenever he told a lie, he would hav avoided much crime in the world, because none of those temple orators could hav been understood by their auditors, on account of the constant bell-ringing within them. And as we read Luke xv—"I say unto you that joy shall be in heaven over one sinner that repenteth" etc.—I recommend to the clergy the words of Peter Pindar,

"Repent then, all ye rogues;
Ye'll be forgiven.
And giv the saints a holiday
In heaven."

Every one of them, from Comstock down to the most ignorant mouthpiece of the Bible in the backwoods of our Coast Range, ought to take these words to heart. In our Coast Range, the Philomath Crucible, a United Brethren sheet, figures as the most celebrated family literature. The Rev. Mr. Becker, the present trumpet of that cheesy sheet, met with a total failure in editing the Sacramento Telescope, and came to seek his bread and butter—totally depending on the perspiration of our mountaineers—in our midst. One of the first commandments of this new editorial light reads, "A little more sleep, a little more slumber, a little more folding of the hands," etc. Simultaneously, in the same article, he holloes: "Wake up! wake up! Every activ hand to work to double the subscriptions of the Crucible." Every candid reader will understand his whining and holloing thus: Stay lazy, dreamy, sleepy; we want you poor. The poor are easy to bend. But should you make a dollar or two, use it for the support of us—seventy thousand mouthpieces depending on the charity of the people of the United States.

This is the true spirit of our Christian holy men. John Wesley said: "You who hav two hundred dollars a year, and spend but one, do you giv God the other hundred? If not, you rob him of just as much. Oh, bring all! You cannot bring too much. Leave nothing behind you," etc.

In the same number of the Crucible Mr. Boeker said, "The subordination of the woman to man, in fact and as in form, is universal and unchanging for the last eighteen hundred years; and as long as the Bible stands we fear no change." Ought not every true woman punish a wanton parson who dares utter such degrading words to women, with outspoken contempt?

What candid man could deny that woman is far superior to man in morals? Therefore woman must be made to stand side by side with man, his equal and his peer in everything.

True morality is physiological instead of theological. Giv woman, as the superior moral being, a political status equal with man, enfranchise her, and we will soon hav such reforms inaugurated as the world needs. But alas! men like Becker and his associate, Prof. Walker, who even deny that our government guarantees equal rights, both civil and religious, to all the people, and sneer at the Constitution, which states, "Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or the free exercise thereof," can not be expected to allow woman the same natural and inalienable rights, and the same common interest, as men. Nay, our clergy want women to remain subordinate, so they may use them for their playthings in a hundred different ways and manners. Prof. Walker has given proof how artfully he can metamorphose his lady students into dolls. A few months ago the National Police Gazette, of New York, had an illustration of Walker teaching his female students kissology. Walker, however, managed, I presume with the help of Comstock's law, to prevent the appearance of that number of the Gazette in Corvallis and Philomath, and only one copy found its way from Roseburg to Benton county seat.

The Bible says God has foreordained whatever comes to pass. Then God has foreordained that I should not believe in the Bible, and that I should write this letter to THE TRUTH SEEKER.

Under the shelter of my banner, which bears the inscription, Si populus vult decipi decipiatur, I remain, Yours fraternally, E. W. FITZNER.

Various Things.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE.—SUNDAY CONCERTS IN SOUTH PARK, CHICAGO.—SUNDAY NIGHT THEATERS.—REV. JOHNSON ON DESECRATION OF THE PARK.—A PROTEST.—"PUCK" AND THE CAMP-MEETING.

T. C. Leland wields the pen of a ready writer and says many timely, good things. He comprehends the aim and power of the National Liberal League—may its members increase, its power to combat intolerance be intensified, until it shall, in truth, become an "organization which shall emancipate the masses of mankind from all the remaining slaveries!" Chief among these slaveries may be enumerated those springing from priestly or churchal rule. The late clamor for God in the Constitution; exemption from taxation of church property and ecclesiastical schools; odious Sunday laws which deprive people of their time and debar their pursuit of happiness; chaplaincies supported by the people; the judiciary oath as now administered; reading of Scriptures and prayer forced on secular schools; employment of Christian teachers and refusal of schools to any known to be Infidel; the spirit of ostracism rampant in a churchal community against an honest, intelligent unbeliever; slanderous, false attacks from the pulpit upon Thomas Paine; the standard of morality prescribed by Christianity—these and the like are the prevalent wrongs which it is the mission of the National Liberal League and like organizations to eradicate, and to rear above their ruins a grand brotherhood, the fruitage of which shall be love, worship of humanity, which shall secure to each and all the fullest, broadest freedom, and sweep forever away that spirit of ostracism which would proscribe those who dare to think and proclaim their convictions.

In the 14th issue of the Commonwealth, a Topeka, Kansas, paper, is found "A Protest," disclaiming against excursion trains running on Sunday, and calling on the Christian people to discountenance such excursions. This protest is signed by some sixteen clergymen of different evangelical denominations. What a presumptiv interference and insult this to the majority of city people, who prefer to spend the day of rest and relaxation from duties in some delightful grove—nature's fair temple—where man can hold communion with tree and bud, with vine and flower, and streams and tuneful birds, and for the time become oblivious of oppressiv cares—freedom from intense mental application!

These self-appointed guardians who presume to dictate where people shall go, what they shall think, talk, and do, are intolerable; they need to be informed that this is a land of freedom. Down with these oligarchists!

The Chicago Times of the 2d inst. contains a long article apropos, headed, "Blest with rest.—Tens of thousands of people spend a day in God's first temples," etc. The writer breasts the progressiv tide in which "old things are done away," particularly the New England Puritanical Sabbath. It seems that in the 16th century the early morning hours of the Sabbath were devoted to mass, the remainder of the day to merry-making, that Luther and Calvin were not sanguin as to Sabbath observance as was Edwards, who made of the Sabbath a "very solemn day for adults and a very tedious one to children." The writer alluded to the opening of theaters on Sundays, which has horrified the evangelical clergy. In conclusion he says: "Whatever may be the merits or demerits of Sunday theaters, there hav been fewer Sunday night's rows here since theaters were opened Sunday nights than there were before." The Sunday theaters appear to draw from the saloons and not from the churches.

Speaking of the great crowd of people who throng Randolph, Clark, Madison, and State streets, the writer says: "There is nothing in the appearance of the city 'down town' on Sundays to suggest holiness, prayer, fasting, or any of the orthodox observances of the Sabbath of olden time; the city has on its holiday garb, and the citizens are similarly attired. It is a day given up by nine-tenths of the people to rational and material rest and enjoyment, and not to worship, humiliation, and unnatural repression and self-torture elsewhere practiced."

Outside of New York city and San Francisco no other American city is more cosmopolitan in its character than Chicago. The writer well remarks, "It would be the rankest folly to attempt to prescribe rules for the observance of the Sabbath and expect people to liv up to them."

Notwithstanding this cosmopolitism, the Rev. David Johnson preached a late sermon on "Desecration of the Park," because, forsooth, the commissioners of South Park hav arranged to giv the people free Sunday concerts; they are also planning for a large shelter, sufficient in size to accommodate 5,000, the pavilion to be built of wood and hav a smooth floor for dancing. These park attractions make wrathful the holy ones, for they materially affect the purse. The salary of the clergy depends upon their "drawing" capacity, and if people prefer to "pay the fiddler," who are to furnish the "yellow-legged spring chickens" and the broadcloth? Who would not prefer an excursion, a ramble in a delightful park or grove, to listen to sweet-toned music which renders the soul worshipful, and witness the mazy dance, to sitting bolt upright in church and listening to the old, old story of believe or be damned?

The cosmopolitan Sabbath of our great cities obtains not in country hamlets, neither is it of individual application in large cities. Let an individual dare to abide by his own convictions as to how the Sabbath may be devoted, and if in the exercise of the same, prescribed rules are disregarded, a whole church will unitedly oppose the success of his business, or if a politician, they will cast a solid vote against him. This is practical freedom with a vengeance!

In the St. Louis Globe-Democrat of the 15th inst. appears "The Intolerance of Unbelief." Puck is now the target for religionists, because, forsooth, his cartoon of the Marvin camp-meeting is not travestied to suit orthodox esthetics. Wonder if any "obscenity" is scented in Puck? The writer of this "Intolerance" article consoles himself by the unctuous reflection that "the Infidelity but a short time ago so rampant in this country has not profited by its excesses." Wonder if he refers to the Christian incarceration of D. M. Bennett? If so, we beg to demur at his inferences, for no act of Liberals or Christians within the last decade so advanced the cause of Freethought and Infidelity as did the imprisonment of the hero D. M. Bennett. Why, he didn't crush worth a cent! Look at the mammoth work, "Gods of Ancient and Modern Times," containing about 2,000 pages, collected, compiled, written, and one volume even issued from the press during his year of imprisonment! Why, his incarceration was the grandest strike for freedom's cause that the world has witnessed for years. A prisoner one year, an honored, loved, revered delegate to the World's Convention the next. Ah! Hamlet's ghost will not avaunt. Eternal truth, though crushed to earth and bound in chains, will rise triumphant yet.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 20, 1880. GRACE L. PARKHURST.

"Our Heavenly Father."

AN EXAMPLE OF HIS "LOVING KINDNESS AND TENDER MERCIES"

BY M. BABCOCK.

This world has a population of some fifteen hundred millions of inhabitants, who are said to be the children of a heavenly father. Not one of them has ever seen their heavenly father, nor can they of their own knowledge truthfully declare him to hav an existence except in their imagination.

This invisible being is called God. And we are told that he possesses unlimited power, that he knows and sees all things, past, present, and the future. and that he loves his children and would like to see them happy.

We will now present a case for the consideration of such as are continually prating about God's goodness and watchful care over his children.

But a few days since the steamer Seawanhaka was burned, and some seventy persons, "God's children," were either consumed in the flames or drowned in their attempts to escape. There were innocent babes and helpless little children struggling in the water and crying for help. But where was God and the evidence of his love and power?

Now, I want to say right here that there is not a whisky-seller nor a wild Indian in the world who would not hav saved those poor, pitiable creatures if he had been able to do it. But according to the Bible, God, who could blow a hole through the Red Sea that the children of Israel might escape by crossing over on dry land, was there and able to hav performed the same trick by blowing a hole through the water and enabling his children to escape on dry land. Why didn't he do it?

Do you, my orthodox friends, say the day of miracles is past? Who told you so? Then why do you every day ask God to perform a miracle by asking him for daily bread and to heal the sick and do a thousand things that could only be done by a miracle? If God wished to establish a reputation for goodness and love, we must insist that he makes a mistake in not helping a fellow when he needs help. In the case above alluded to, the prayers of mothers and children might just as well hav been addressed to a horse as to the Christians' God. Even the prayer of an old minister of the gospel was of no use. It was a sad, sad case, the case of Dr. Diller. "The circumstances connected with the death of this venerable clergyman were peculiarly sad. He was nearly seventy years old and feeble. He stood with his devoted daughter, Lillie, at the bow of the Seawanhaka, hemmed in on one side by the spreading flames. Miss Diller clung to her father and succeeded in fastening a life-preserver about his body. But he was afraid to move, though the flames were consuming everything near them. His daughter pleaded with him to trust himself to the water; she prayed men who were near by to save him; she tried with her own strength to help her father over the guard-rail. But he appeared dazed and hardly conscious of her efforts to save him, and without power to move, His daughter clung to him as long as she could. The flames had already burned her face and shoulders, and when she was still unable to save her father, she kissed him, said 'Good-bye,' and jumped into the water. The old man, paralyzed, stood where he was as the flames surrounded him and he was hid from view. His body was found unrecognizable save by a set of artificial teeth. His devoted daughter lies in a precarious condition in the hospital on Randall's Island. Dr. Diller was born in Lancaster, Pa. His first clerical duty was performed in Brooklyn as assistant rector to Dominie Johnson at St. John's church. He removed to Middlebury, Vt., but afterward returned to Brooklyn and took charge of St. Luke's. He leaves a wife, four daughters, and a son. Miss Lillie Diller, who was with him on the Seawanhaka, was his eldest daughter, and was 45 years of age. For 39 years, ending in June of last year, Dr. Diller had been the activ rector of St. Luke's parish. Owing to declining health the congregation of St. Luke's decided on the 1st of January to make him their pastor emeritus, calling Rev. Dr. George Vandewater to the activ work, and giving Dr. Diller a salary and the rectory to reside in for the rest of his life."

Now it seems a little tough that this old man who had worked for God so long in trying to save sinners from the fires in another world should himself hav to roast in this world.

We are told that God could hav saved this helpless old man if he would. But no; by his refusal he seems to hav said: Well done, thou good and faithful servant; thou hast worked well for me in this world, and as a reward I'll save you from fire in the next world, but I'll not save you from fire in this world. I so love my children that I can't bear to see a good man suffer in the next world, but I can look on with the utmost indifference and see him writhe and roast in torment in this world; and although I could save him just as easily as the raising of my little finger, I won't do it.

Splendid! His "loving kindness," how great! And if this good old man at the last moment shall hav lost his faith in God, theology says that God will tell his angel to shove him into hell and let the roasting be continued. His forty years of working for God will count for nothing. When he dies he "must believe or he shall be damned," Now I hav no respect for any God, book, or religion that will damn a man on account of his honest opinions and under such circumstances.

But a week later we get the news of the daughter's death also. She had stayed by her old father too long, trying to giv him comfort and aid him to escape, before she would desert him and save herself by taking to the water. She was so badly burnt that although rescued from the water she died soon after.

Now if she died an unbeliever, theology says she must be cast into hell, and if her father was so fortunate as to reach heaven he can look down into hell and see the daughter who sacrificed her own life in trying to save his, without diminishing his happiness. And if this is true, heaven must hav brutalized the father; and I pronounce such a religion unsuited to the wants of the civilization of the nineteenth century.

Letters from Friends.

BARKERS, N. Y., Aug. 10, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I received the first volume of your book, but I am not satisfied. What's the matter? Well, the book is well worth the $5.00 and ought to net you that amount for every copy sold, and to ask me to allow you to pay a dollar or more out of that for postage is an outrage which I feel just like resenting. And now, sir, to be even with you, I inclose to you $2.00 more to help you on your trip to Europe, or in any way that suits you.

You did not publish the piece I sent, inclosing the $5 00. Perhaps it was too lengthy or unsound. Still I take issue with you on the materiality of sensation, thought, mind, etc., and regard them as phenomenal or functional, and not as entities at all. Sensation and thought are one and inseparable, except that sensation may commence in a nerve and a thought in the brain; and with living nerve and brain-action given, we hav feeling, sensation, consciousness, thought, mind, all one, all physical nonentities, and nowhere to be found outside of sentient brain-action. Take away that action and see how much you will hav left.

You say "thought is matter because it takes matter to produce it, and all that matter is or does is material." Now, a sentient action of the brain involves sensation, and you say truly that "where there is sensation there is thought," and you might also hav said, where there is sentient brain-action there is sensation, for they are one and inseparable. The living action is in the material brain, and that action involves sensation, consciousness, thought. Stop that action and all the thought (material or otherwise) which you hav been stowing up in your "material" mind will vanish in an instant—mind and all; and if the motion or action of matter is also material, then you hav the argument. If not, not.

I hav much more to say on this subject, especially in regard to the materiality of sound, but I don't know as you would publish it if I should say it. So, wishing you success and a joyful trip to Europe, I remain, Yours as ever, F. N. ALBRIGHT, M.D.

REPLY.—Thanks to our friend for his appreciation and his generosity. We beg his pardon for not publishing his former communication; it accidently got mislaid or covered with others as many do. It was not because it was regarded as unsound. According to our view our friend is sound, and there is not very much difference between us, save perhaps in the meaning of terms. We think whatever is produced by matter is material, even if it may not properly be called matter itself. Every motion, every movement of a muscle, every perception of the eye, every thought or movement of the brain is of this character. We hardly intend to say "thought is matter," though we regard it as material. It is a form of matter in motion, and undoubtedly necessitates a certain expenditure of food or vital force, the same as the action of a muscle or any organ of the body. It seems hardly proper to call the action of an organ matter though it is strictly material and requires matter to produce. Whatever pertains to matter may properly be termed material.

What our friend says about sensation, nerve action, etc., seems quite reasonable. We trust he will let us hear from him again.—ED. T. S.

---

BERLIN HIGHTS, OHIO, July 20, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav a question to ask which, yon will please answer through THE TRUTH SEEKER and settle a dispute which has arisen with our postmaster of this place and myself, as to the extent of power delegated to one man, Anthony Comstock. Can he, under the plea, "hunting for obscenity," open a sealed private letter, or letters to be delivered to whomsoever through the United States mails under any circumstances whatever?

N. B.—Our postmaster says Comstock's jurisdiction only extends to printed papers and those only, positivly, and he knows so; we hav left it to you as umpire, so we will patiently wait. All hail to truth! M. M. FISH.

REPLY.—Comstock has no right or authority to open sealed letters or packages, though it is charged that he has done so. It is most certain that he has caused the arrest and prosecution of persons for mailing matter in sealed envelopes. Dr. E. B. Foote was prosecuted, convicted, and fined heavily for mailing perfectly legitimate information in a sealed envelope.

Comstock's legal province is over second and third-class matter. Assistant-Postmaster Pearson in the New York post-office informed us that Comstock, as special mail agent, has the right to enter that post-office or any other and examin any second or third-class mail-matter he chooses, and throw out such as he chooses. Your postmaster is mainly right, second and third-class matter being printed papers, books, pamphlets, etc. At all events, Comstock's power is too great for any one person to possess, and amounts to a censorship too irksome for Americans to submit to—too much of a system of espionage to be popular in a free country. The law authorizing it has been in existence quite long enough, and should be condemned and repealed without another year's delay.—ED. T. S.

---

BRODHEAD, WIS.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: There are now four tickets for the offices of President and Vice-President in the field, and as none will be presented by the Liberals of the country, as was hoped by many, I suggest that you publish at an early day in THE TRUTH SEEKER the religious convictions or opinions held by both candidates of each and every nomination made.

I am puzzled and sorry to see so many of our leading and professed Liberals talk and act indifferently and unconcerned as to the religious opinions those men hold who may be called to fill the offices, as though there was no danger that serious consequences may result therefrom, when in truth and fact the real principles of freedom and liberty are anchored at the very foundation of a nation's religious belief.

I hope you will make some effort to find out the real and honest opinions of all the candidates upon this subject, and publish the same in due time to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Yours, E. P. HASSINGER.

REPLY.—We hav no special opportunities for learning the religious views and prejudices of the presidential candidates. The information we hav is that Garfield is a Campbellite, or Christian, and that he preached some in early life. Friends write us that he has become Liberalized, and may be regarded as a Liberal sort of Christian. Weaver is noted as a very pious type of Methodist, and is called one of the bluest of the blue, being ultra-religious. Hancock can hardly be called a religious man. It is a disputed matter whether he belongs to any church, though he sometimes attends the Episcopal church with his wife, to which she belongs. We hav not learned whether Dow has any religion or not.

But, after all, it is not what the religion of the several candidates is, nor what their personal views are upon any subject. The matter must be looked at is the tendency of parties, and what we hav to expect of them if they are placed in power. The tendencies of the Republicans hav been very clearly shown in affiliating with the church, the Y. M. C. A., and in trampling upon the most vital principles of American liberty. For this, we think, they deserve condemnation and removal from power for at least four years. Those who think differently will of course continue to vote for them to retain power for another quarter of a century. As for us, we wish to see a change.—ED. T. S.

---

MAPLETON, IOWA., Aug. 15, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: The wide exchange and conflict of opinion from the entertaining writers contributing to each number of your valuable paper are features at once commending it to the favorable consideration of all who possess sufficient impartiality to be willing to investigate and giv a fair hearing to both sides of any given subject. It is a feature of great value, that while free to express your own convictions and ideas you should be equally free and willing to allow your opponent on any subject to express and maintain his or her ideas and opinions without abridgment or denial.

The assumption and presumption of many of our Christian professors and writers is truly astonishing. For instance, in just glancing over a single page of Mr. Mair's argument with D. M. Bennett, without litting to read, I see in one column the assumption or supposition that a human body was, once upon a time, created by (a miracle of) God, in a virgin's womb, for the most exalted purpose, and then a little further on he assumes to inform a sinful world that the human body so formed was not human. No, not even so much as half human. He insists that we shall not call it demi, or half God, because "scripture does not teach it." Then why did God use the human virgin at all? The scriptures teach that he could and did create people before a virgin was known, and if one was wanted without a bit of human composition about it, isn't it a trifle strange to the ordinary mind that he should giv up the old process of creating the work of his hands in an entirely original way, and then after adopting the human, or, at the very least, one-half of the human plan for such creation, turn around and deny the whole thing?—and inform us, through this wonderful Christian system that Mr. Mair is defending, that the mother of the child is not the child's mother? But this is but one sample, and I think a fair one, of the whole system of assumption, presumption, mental degradation, and fraud upon common sense known as modern Christianity. And when you get them cornered they are just honest enough to flippantly inform you that "theologians do not hold so," and then go on as usual praying to the virgin's child, who never had a human mother or (hardly ev . .) a human father either.

Now, Mr. Editor, while I wish in all candor to respect the right of these people to believe, or profess to believe, thus and so, yet, sir, when one of them presumes to tell me that "it is a gross perversion of scripture to suppose that there was any physical action in the begetting of the human body of Jesus Christ," and then goes on to the further extent of terming all thought upon the grand sources of human life as "abominable," I feel very much like answering the gentleman that I consider him exceedingly silly if he supposes we will giv up and deny known facts for that which we can neither know nor find out.

That is a noble, manly letter of Peter Soule in your issue of July 31st. While deprecating too much heated discussion among the good brothers, he does not fail to know where the enemy to our cause and liberties is intrenched.

Yours, B.

---

DUXBURY, TEXAS, Aug. 20, 1880.

MR EDITOR: We, the undersigned, believing in a fair representation, do regret that Elmina Drake Slenker, preeminently a representativ woman of American Liberal thought, is not a delegate to the Brussels Congress.

ROSENKRANS & HITCHCOCK.

---

WESTFIELD, N. Y., Aug. 20, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: It should be evident to all who are capable of doing their own thinking that it is useless to try and agree on the solution of any problem until a law is first agreed on, by which that solution is to be effected. In mathematics we hav a law on which all agree—a law that never fails when correctly applied. Why this law is left for metaphysics, a law that has always failed, and is leading our republic with rapid strides to sure and certain destruction, is a problem that needs solution. Are the citizens of this republic so completely under the influence of a degrading superstition that they cannot see the precipice on which they are standing? Are the scenes of blood and carnage that blot the pages of past history to be repeated in the not distant future? Will the leaders of thought never outgrow the superstition or stupidity, call it which you please, that a few centuries ago made our little world the center of the universe, flat and stationary, and now makes it the creation of a supreme invisible being? Will not experience, bought in the blood of untold millions, teach us that worlds, as a whole, are subject to the same organic law as their constituted parts, and are alike subject to birth, growth, decay, and transition? That all worlds that exist to-day are offsprings of worlds that hav preceded them, as we are of parents that hav preceded us, instead of being the creation and subjects of a being that is supreme, over and independent of them? If all higher numbers are combinations of lower ones, and could not exist independent of them, why are not all higher conditions of being subject to the same law? If, like ourselvs, every grade of being tangible to our senses exist in forms evolved from central germs, and those germs the product of sexual unions in any case, why not in all? Are not organic laws universal in their application? With worlds as a whole subject to the same laws of production and reproduction as ourselvs, the problem of existence is divested of much of its mystery, and in a fair way of solution with worlds, the creation of a being that is independent of them, the problem is complicated beyond the power of solution, and of this fact, the history of our world givs ample evidence. Hoping that more able pens than mine will giv the subject a thorough airing, I remain, J. TINNEY.

---

SAN JOSE, CAL., Aug. 1, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: Although at the eleventh hour I now forward my five dollars toward the Brussels trip, and although our good Bro. Bennett is gone, it will come handy when he returns. I would like it if I could send five dollars to that indefatigable worker, H. L. Green, five to our good sister Elmina, five to Sarah B. Chase, and five to our Bro. Underwood, even if he did call us "rag tag," for he is a noble worker; and how glad I am that he and Bennett are reconciled and their differences settled! Now work together, you noble fellows, and move forward the car of truth.

Right here I would ask, What means all this rumpus about politics? Are you going to drag all of us Liberals into a regular row over the presidential candidates? I blame not only Bennett, but Wakeman, Green, Leland, and others for this bone of contention. Do you think, gentlemen, to electioneer old Republicans to "jump from the frying-pan into the fire?" Shall we vote the old pro-slavery ticket, copperhead ticket, solid South ticket, Hancock ticket with men who rejoiced over every victory gained by the rebels over our boys in blue? For heaven's sake, don't ask me to leave a party who saved our country and government and join a party who did all they could to destroy both! It is an insult to my understanding. All vote as you please till the National Liberal League starts candidates of our own.

The letter of D. R. Sparks, of Alton, Ill., has the right ring to it. Read his protest, and take his advice, but don't destroy the good TRUTH SEEKER by making it an arena for political squabbling.

D. R. Burt's letter speaks my mind about the mean moral assassin, J. Holland. But I close now after this much ventilation, wishing well to the cause of Freethought.

SAMOS PARSONS.

---

BAXTER SPRINGS, KAN., Aug. 16, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I should hav sent this inclosed order for two dollars long ago, for it was not because I had it not, but rather through neglect. Nor was it because I lacked appreciation of your paper, for I really think it the best paper in the world. I rather like its course in almost every respect, particularly on religion and politics.

I hav acted with the Republican party till I hav become worn out and disgusted with its corruptions, and I see but little hope of a reformation. Ho, for Gen. Hancock for a change! although that change may only be from the fire to the frying-pan. When Chase, Stevens, Sumner, Trumbull, Greeley, all, and more than these honorable statesmen, forsook the party after Grant's first administration, it is high time we were getting our eyes open for a change. I would like to express my approbation more at length of your great paper's course, but enough for the present.

Very truly yours, J. D. MCCLURE.

---

NEW BLOOMFIELD, MO., Aug. 9, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: With pleasure I acknowledge the receipt of the "Truth Seeker Tracts." They were read with pleasure and gave me more light toward the truth than a ton of American Sunday-School Union tracts would. For fifteen years I hav been hunting for the truth. I tried the Bible, and Sunday-school papers, and religious journals, but they only mystified and proscribed reason, and I think it is a poor way to find truth by proscribing reason. At last a friend of mine handed me a copy of your paper and a few tracts, which were read with a pleasure that cannot well be described. I think I hav now found the road to truth. I send herewith twenty-five cents for a few copies of the paper commencing with July 10th, as far as it will go. Will remit again as soon as possible. Since I hav lost faith in old theology I hav to depend upon my own exertion for means of support for myself and family instead of prayer. So I do not always hav an over plus of the needful, but as I get it I shall devote a portion of it to the interest of enlightenment by sending for tracts, and as soon as I can spare the money I will send for the "Gods and Religions."

Yours most truly, A. W. DYER.

---

MAPLETON, IOWA, Aug. 16, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I can't help thinking the management of THE TRUTH SEEKER is on the right track, for if we all join we may strike back at the last foe who ruthlessly struck at our rights with such force, perchance, as to be felt by the stalwart crew who propose to giv us a still stronger government, if we are so unwise as to let them succeed. For the right, D. W. BUTTS.

---

BOSTON, MASS., Aug. 16, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hail with joy the advent of the honored and heroic editor's visit to Europe. The old world has learned to smile upon such heroes. Voltaire, Paine, and Bradlaugh hav done a great service in the Old World. Bennett will rank with such saviors. I inclose my mite. Ingersoll's card exposing literary thieves sent fifteen copies published by Baldwin to the fire. I did not like the portraits; they seemed to me bad, and now I pronounce them false copies of a good man. What a passion the world has to falsify, lie, and steal! Martin Luthers and Ingersolls are all too scarce, but still they get the world along a little despite the priestly incubus, which would "climb up some other way." Public sentiment is being molded, and what is working in the minds of the young is prophetic. Truth will stand when Bibles and steeple-houses are known only in history as monuments of superstition.

Sister Slenker is among the saviors, whether Christian or Infidel. Christians fight and destroy life; let us Infidels continue to pursue peace and save life. The inclosed money is for the tour of D. M. Bennett to Europe. THE TRUTH SEEKER will liv, and those who oppose it had better engage a heavenly lodging with Jeff. Davis and his rebel race.

Remembering the test is works, JOS. L. SPINNER.

---

CHAMPLIN, MINN., Aug. 18, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav been interested in the discussion of the political question that has occupied considerable space in your paper of late. It reveals the fact that the editor and some prominent contributors of the paper hav not outgrown the old parties.

Pray, gentlemen, do not waste too many words in discussing the question whether the Republican or Democratic nominees shall hav your suffrage. For do you not see that the only essential difference between the parties is that the one is in and the other out? Is anything plainer than that the contest between them is simply a struggle for the spoils and emoluments of office? And do you not know that with either party in power legislativ reform is out of the question? Mr. Bennett acknowledges that there is a deep underlying principle in the Greenback movement, but stands aloof from it because present success is impossible. I am older than he, and I remember, if he does not, when the Abolitionists put up James G. Birney as their candidate for the presidency. There was no possible show for Mr. Birney to be elected. The most sanguin never dreamed of his getting one electoral vote. But there was a deep underlying principle there; that principle was carried to the ballot-box and everywhere else, and the whole world knows the result.

For thirty years I hav been as deeply interested in woman suffrage as is Mr. Bennett in Liberalism. If it were possible for a sudden turn of the political wheel to put the Greenback party in power, it is not likely their first work would be to take up and adopt either his hobby or mine. But by the progressiv principle of the new party controling the government the foundation would be laid for every reform that could be effected by legislation.

Here in the northwest the Spiritualists and Liberals take to the Greenback party like ducks to water. This is the rule, and the exceptions are very rare, so far as my knowledge extends. And the zeal and self-sacrifice with which they work for it shows that their convictions are too deep to be easily moved. If the party elsewhere is composed of the same material as that which enters into it here, no reform will suffer at its hands. Where all sides hav a hearing, as they do in your paper, it is to be hoped the wisest counsels will prevail. Yours for the right and the true,

ABBIE J. SPALDING.

---

MAPLETON, IOWA, Aug. 9, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav been not a little amused to see the "fire fly," in some quarters, since the manly avowal of Mr. Bennett and other prominent Liberals of their intention in the present campaign to fight their known foes (the church leaders of the Republican party) even to the extent of voting the Democratic ticket for the defeat of the "stalwarts." The political smoke is getting dense, and I think some errors are getting into print, as is nearly always the case when men are full of prejudice. For instance, in your issue of July 24th one brother, D. R. Sparks, Alton, Ill., refers to the Democratic party as the "most bitter enemies of Liberalism." I think the fellow who hit me last is my most bitter enemy, and if a man, or set of men, or church, Young Men's Christian Association, or party, will undertake to arrest and put me in the penitentiary for nothing, and then refuse the prayer of a monster petition by my fellow-citizens, and keep me there in violation of the Constitution and laws of my country, I propose to oppose, defeat, and destroy the power of such a dangerous enemy, so far as I can, as the first and foremost duty of my political life. This much is plain and appears to me to show unmistakably the present duty of all clear-headed Liberals. What the Catholics will, or may, or would do if they had the power is not to determin my course in this campaign. Let us slay the front foe first, and the others in turn. But the good brother further says, "There is neither sense nor logic in this, and we will not go, believing as we do, that there are more liberty-loving men in the Republican ranks than there are in the Democratic." I think Bro. Sparks mistaken in this statement also. D. W. BUTTS.

---

RENOSHA CO., WIS., Aug. 14, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Inclosed you will find eight dollars, three for the paper, and five for the "Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times." I want to see the work written by you while in a Christian bastile. I should suppose that after the heat of combat was over, every one connected with that miserable farce of a trial of yours would be so ashamed of themselvs that they would want to hide their heads from the sight of sensible men. "Truly the mountain labored and brought forth a mouse." It was a trying ordeal for you, but what hav they gained? Nothing but the utter contempt of all honest and fair-minded men and women. The cloud of superstition hangs like a pall over the most of the human race. Even President Hayes could not rise above it and do what he must hav known to be a righteous and just act—grant you an unconditional pardon. The cohorts of superstition raised the cry of "Crucify him!" and the President dared not resist the cry. So you had to suffer to the end that the Christians' hate might be satiated.

I remember a parallel case to yours that took place in the early days of the antislavery movement. Charles F. Torry, being moved by a spirit of true humanity, aided a colored man to obtain what was his natural right—his freedom. He was arrested under the Fugitive Slave law, had a farce of a trial in a slave state, was convicted, and thrown into a prison. This imprisonment proved to be more than he could endure. Consumption set in, and it was plain to be seen that death was approaching. His friends—and they were many—by this time made a desperate effort by petition and letters to induce President Polk to pardon poor Torry. But no. The hate of slavery demanded his sacrifice, and President Polk failed to sign a paper that would hav placed his name in history as a humanitarian high on the roll of honor. Slavery beclouded the vision of President Polk as the myths and mysticisms of Christianity hav beclouded the vision of President Hayes.

But slavery is gone, and only leaves its sting behind—but it is gone. The myths are as sure to go as that slavery is gone; and the time is not far distant when the last man will be imprisoned for opinions on morals or theology.

Free discussion and free investigation are the two-edged swords that will rend the veil of superstition and let in the pure and lovely light of freedom. Let it come! is the prayer of all good and well-developed men.

I wish to congratulate THE TRUTH SEEKER in outliving the jealousies and hate it has encountered since it first saw the light at Paris, Illinois. May its shadow never grow less! A. D. CORNWELL.

---

HARRISONVILLE, MO., Aug. 14, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I hav contemplated writing for a long time, and hav neglected to do so. I hav watched with lively interest the progress of your paper since its first issue. I never fail to ask for it at news depots in every town I visit; sometimes I get it, and sometimes asking for it nearly paralyzes the boss of the establishment and all the clerks.

The League that once flourished here is now defunct. No one remembers when the last meeting was held. The churches, by operating through the female element, hav succeeded in making cowards of the once aggressiv Liberals. The wealthiest and most influential citizens of this community are Infidels, but inactiv and reticent. They are Liberal in all that the term implies, but hav no desire to hav it known. They subscribe liberally to pay a lecturer when one comes along, but object to their names being enrolled. Few of them attend church in person, but all send their money. That is about the condition of Liberalism in Cass county, Missouri.

I lectured to appreciativ audiences in several towns during my travels, and became acquainted with a number of your earnest supporters and friends. Lecturing was an experiment with me, and my success a surprise. This season I will push forward with advantages I never before enjoyed, with the high hope of accomplishing all I aspire to.

May you liv long to enjoy the liberty (belonging to every person) to speak and write your thoughts upon any and every subject in which you feel interested! I hope it may be the lot of those who endeavored to kick you when you were prostrate to suffer twice what you suffered. They certainly failed to injure you in the estimation of the Liberals throughout the country.

Your opinion on the political situation and duty of Liberals I hav carefully read and considered. If you lived in this state you would not advocate nor hope for the success of the Democratic party. You know what it is to be persecuted for opinion's sake. There is but one difference between the North and the South on that subject. The one persecutes Infidels, the other Republicans. There is no use denying this fact. Experience teaches severe truths. What we need is an outside, distinctiv, aggressiv political element composed of intelligent men and women who think more of Liberalism than politics, but willing to concentrate their force and apply it where it will be instrumental in producing something beneficial to Liberals as such. It seems to me this should be the first and principal object in organization. An organization can accomplish nothing if it disorganizes just at the time an opportunity is offered to act. As all changes in national affairs are brought about by political parties, the Liberals should be a united party, independent of all other parties, but willing to act as a wing to any that will accede to some, if not all, of their demands. In short, Liberalism should be to political parties what individual Liberals are to communities, whose votes are cast irrespectiv of politics, but where they will do most to promote the interests of all.

It is impossible for me to entertain other than a feeling of contempt for the Republican party, though an ardent admirer of many of its prominent members.

How Col. Ingersoll, with his splendid courage and independence, can continue to work with and support a party that refused him the nomination for the governorship of Illinois, forced him to decline an opportunity to succeed Bayard Taylor as minister to Berlin, and whose President gave him a direct slap in the face (in commemoration of his services in 1876) when he presented a petition containing the names of two hundred thousand petitioners asking for the pardon of an innocent and honest man convicted for exercising a constitutional right, is something I cannot understand. M. FILLMORE GREEN.

---

OPEN REPLY TO G. W. CHAPMAN.

LOCUST VALLEY, N. Y., Aug. 24 1880.

G. W. CHAPMAN, Dear Sir: In THE TRUTH SEEKER of August 21st you ask my further explanation of a first cause, as treated in my paper on "Equal Eternity of Mind and Matter," in the same journal of July 24th.

My basis of reasoning is the view that the universe is compounded of intelligent and non-intelligent materials; the former as the controling factor for all the coherent acts of the latter in nature; and when such cosmic mind-matter is individualized in organisms they become invested with finite minds as the controling factors for the coherent acts of their bodies.

Finite minds exist, which many claim to be the mere functions of gross brain matter; then it might as well be the function of some more subtil matter. I accordingly claim—it seems to me more logically—that all finite minds are the function of subtle cosmic mind-matter individualized by attraction of sensitiv nerve organizations (in proportion to such sensitivness), and is, therefore, only in temporary association with such organizations when their death allows such minds to coanect with other bodies elsewhere. Such subtil cosmic mind-matter has all the functions of mind, and, in its cosmic entirety, constitutes the universal infinit mind, whose will-force givs laws of action to all unintelligent matter, which is its metaphorical body for all expressions and impressions, as our bodies are to our minds. Such cosmic mind-force, being material, acts mechanically, and which I designate as the Great First—i. e., primal or ultimate—Cause, or origin of the coherent actions of all unthinking universal matter in the production of all phenomena for an intelligent purpose, as our minds coherently control the unthinking actions of our bodies for intelligent purposes. Without such co-operating, intelligent control, neither universal unthinking matter nor our unthinking bodies could, by possibility, act for a purpose with their wondrous accomplishments everywhere exhibited in nature and art, otherwise all matter must be intelligent—which we know it is not—to act thus coherently.

In further elucidation of causes in nature, the First—i e, primal or ultimate—Cause must be an intelligent invention or impress originating a force by will-power, to which succeed an indefinit number of secondary causes, as the effect of the First Cause becomes a cause to a succeeding effect, ad infinitum, to the end of producing all phenomena for an intelligent purpose, using his metaphorical body of unintelligent matter as the unthinking materials.

Science can trace in nature cause back of cause, as attraction and repulsion to electric action, that to heat, to friction, and preceding motion, as the motion of nebulæ; but here science ends its search for antecedent physical causes unless it has recourse to my theory of the primal inventiv impress or force of a material intelligence, just as our minds invent and impress by will force, and thus set in motion other matter, as the primal cause of a desired machine or other artificial accomplishments. All such chain of subsequent secondary causes or forces, to execute our behests, are thus made to perform the work for our intelligent purposes, using our bodies and other unthinking matter for such ends, the primal or inventiv force being the adequate cause for all the working secondary causes and their effects.

Here is portrayed a necessary intelligent author for all acts of unintelligent matter in the production of every coherent phenomena, clearly proved to every intelligent mind from finite analogy as the logical deductions from known mental acts here given, which do not admit of any other explanation or conclusion than that of an Intelligent Great First Cause for all phenomena in nature.

There is no conceivable form or personality to our minds but there is an individuality; so there is no conceivable form or personality to God's mind but an infinite individuality. All minds, being material (for reasons given in my books and papers), are traceable for their origin to intelligent subtil cosmic matter as the Great Function and prime mover of all unintelligent matter in the universe. Dreams prove the separate entity of finite minds, as the organization, including the sense-nerves, are then dormant and so unimpressiv. Hence such entities, when freed from present organizations, are equally capable of connecting with other organizations elsewhere; and as such minds are herein proved to be material forces, so, like all other material forces, are indestructible. Hence all minds are as immortal as is cosmic mind-matter, and all other matter; the latter being unintelligent, and so unthinking, must be purposeless and of itself incapable of executing existing coherent things.

Herein I hope your question and its necessary connections are fully answered to your comprehension and approval of the only understandable explanation of the character and association of mind with other matter. I hope soon to hav my second paper, "Subtil Materiality of Mind and its Individualized Development," appear in THE TRUTH SEEKER, as promised by its kind and truly Liberal editor.

Yours truly, CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

---

PRESCOTT, IOWA., Aug 11, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I want to giv you my idea of politics for Liberals. We can never join one of the old parties for the reason that we are divided among all of the old parties. Republicans can never support a Democratic nominee on account of their belief that the Democratic party is accountable for the late Rebellion, and that they still cherish the principles for which they fought. And after all of the political strife of the past and the strong feeling which it has created, some think we can join one of the old parties. That can never be. We may harmonize Republican, Democratic, and Greenback Liberals by standing them on a purely distinct Liberal platform, but you can never induce a Liberal who has been a Republican to vote the Democratic ticket, or a Democrat to vote for any Republican nominee, and we will apply the same to any other one of the parties. Whenever we try to join one of the old parties then falls through what should hav been the Liberal party. "A house divided against itself cannot stand." And to try to coalesce with any one of the old parties is to divide the Liberal house.

Tee Cee Lee givs us the right logic on the subject, that is, we should build up the Liberal party. It is growing with a steady and sure growth, and it will grow faster if we work with a will. We can make it a great power at the end of another four years. While the Liberal party is growing, and before we see fit to try to make our power felt, each one of us should vote for our individual choice of the old parties. And we need hav no fear, when we do organize, construct our platform, and make our nominations, but what all Liberals will vote as they should. And remember that when we try to affiliate with one of the old parties we disrupt and destroy the power of the Liberal element.

Yours truly, ELMER CLARKE.

---

SOME POLITICS.

NORDHOFF, CAL., Aug. 15, 1880,

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: It is a long time since I had my say in your friendly columns, so here I go with a Shakspere start:

> Black spirits, white spirits, red spirits, and gray;
> Mingle, mingle, mingle, you that mingle may.

The political cauldron seems boiling all around. Let us make the campaign a holiday, and agree to disagree, shout good Lord, good devil, or stick to the Liberal pledges, nominate our principles, set our candidate on them, and force the incubation by open, honest appliances, else like Christians swear to be hypocrites and adopt their rules of faith, set the other parties to fighting, and then steal the spoils. The fact is, Liberals need never expect any favors or concessions from any priest party, unless they enforce them. The Protestants, as a body, seem not only willing but determined to cut their own throats, and the Catholics are trying to help them. The former wish God, Bible and Christ in the Constitution, and the latter say Amen! and wish a pope in the Presidential chair, both working like beavers to destroy the Constitution because it upholds truth, justice, humanity, and liberty to all. Now, if the majority are determined to go to hell, and nothing else will satisfy them, perhaps the better policy would be to bear a hand and hasten on the inevitable revolution and confiscation, and out of the debris commence anew, hoping for the better in the coming generation.

When we review the past, we find that the priests hav ever been a deadly upas in all good governments, eating up, with bleached hands, the substance of the poor and riding their skeletons to hell by moonlight. Giv us, then, a government without a priest or any other coming member of a secret organization; one that is open, free, just, and true; but such is an Utopia of the age, and ever will be so long as educated ignorance rules the roost. Both the great parties are in for the spoils, and consider the government crib legal plunder, and the laboring classes are serfs and slaves, while they hav buried the blind goddess of justice, with her scales, where she must await the resurrection of a just people.

My last vote was for Lincoln. Sixteen years then hav I waited for a candidate with principles and integrity worthy of my confidence. Indeed, I never expect to vote again, though I may still look on the strife like the woman on her husband and the bear.

Talk about reforming the old parties when there is nothing left of either worth the trouble! They are both living lies, and in open rebellion against truth, justice, and humanity. No, there is not enough of righteousness in both to save even a small Sodom, much less a national one like ours, and I often wonder if the Christians hav not mistaken the devil for the Lord in their prayer, "Thy kingdom come," and forgotten that children must suffer for their physical and political sins. Both parties are spoiled in material and make-up, and their best members must all be thoroughly born again of truth, in justice, and humanity before they can even enter the tail end of the true. The talk about political honesty and reform in a set of government thieves, kept in place by fraud, a monied aristocracy, and the priesthood, that holds honesty at a discount, truth at a distance, humanity in prison, and justice in the dust, is only worthy of old Blaky himself. As well might we try to turn a Roman Catholic hell into a reformatory, and old Deacon Edward's infant asylum into an ice house. I advise no one; I hav no ax but truth to grind at seventy-two.

ABRAM BRONSON.

---

THE PHYSIOLOGIST can be found at Hornellsville for sale by Mr. H. J. Thomas.

TO CHANGE dark hair to sandy, go into the surf after a storm.

The Holy Loom.

BY ALHAZA.

Weave, maiden, weave, our chief has gone;
His bark flew swiftly o'er the sea.
Let fall thy threads of richest dye,
Weave out the scene his eye may see.

Weave out, weave out, the cold, white cliffs,
The wreathing mist of Albion's isle,
Where furious Knox oppressed a queen
And chilled poor Mary Stewart's smile.

And did his coward bloody wrath
For his own priestly brethren burn.
Oh, sadly weave that gory spot.
In the land of Bruce and Bannockburn!

Weave out, weave out, a fearful shade,
Where darkly rises London's Tower,
Where rack and screw and flaying-knife
Display religion's awful power.

Or Spain, where burning, cruel blades
Surround and gash the martyr's form;
Or Antwerp's rain of murderous fire,
Thou canst not weave that bloody storm.

O heavenly chime of darkest tower!
O richest gloom of sacred fold!
Where a false symbol cheats the eye,
A dark-brown bird with breast of gold.

Then, hasten, pilgrim, on the wave,
And bring that dove of peace with thee.
There human hearts are not all seared,
And many a burning thought is free.

---

AN Elizabeth girl had her corset torn off by a stroke of lightning and was uninjured, but the young man who called to borrow a book had his right arm shattered, and a piece of corset steel blown into his liver. He said he didn't know that she was loaded.

---

"BILL, spell cat, rat, hat with only one letter for each word." "It can't be did!" "Can't, eh! Just look here—c 80 cat, r 80 rat, h 80 hat."

---

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

| | |
|---|---|
| Thomas Paine. | F. E. Abbot, |
| Paine's Bust. | Frothingham, |
| Paine's Monument. | Wendell Phillips. |
| Voltaire. | Emerson, |
| Rousseau, | Garrison, |
| Humboldt, | Henry Bergh, |
| Goethe, | Peter Cooper, |
| Schiller, | D. R. Burt, |
| Aug. Comte. | S. P. Andrews, |
| Heine, | Walt Whitman, |
| Alex. Pope. | Froude, |
| John Milton. | Max Muller, |
| Goldsmith, | Warren Chase, |
| Shelley. | Jas. Parton, |
| Byron. | Wm. Denton, |
| Burns, | Dr. Slade, |
| Washington, | A. J. Davis, |
| Franklin. | Foster, |
| Jefferson. | J. M. Peebles, |
| John Adams. | Frances Wright. |
| J. Q. Adams. | E. V. Wilson, |
| Madison. | G. L. Henderson, |
| Jackson. | Prof. Fiske, |
| Lincoln, | Fred Douglas, |
| Lincoln's Monument. | N. P. Banks, |
| Gerrit Smith, | P. V. Nasby, |
| Henry C. Wright. | Beecher, |
| J. S. Mill, | Tilton, |
| Sumner, | Moulton, |
| Edgar A. Poe. | G. W. Curtis, |
| Greeley, | Th. Nast, |
| Castellar, | J. G. Bennett, |
| Tennyson. | Chas. A. Dana, |
| Darwin | Phoebe Carey, |
| Tyndall, | Alice Carey, |
| H. Spencer, | Elizabeth C. Stanton, |
| Huxley, | Susan B. Anthony. |
| Proctor, | Lucy Stone, |
| Draper, | Julia Ward Howe, |
| Bradlaugh, | Chas. Cheney, |
| Holyoake, | Paulina Davis, |
| Ingersoll. | Mary F. Davis, |
| Underwood. | Emma H. Britten |
| Mendum, | Lizzie Fowler, |
| Seaver, | Mrs. Slenker, |
| L. Colby, | Susan H. Wixon. |
| Dr. Hare, | D. M. Bennett. |
| Judge J. W. Edwards. | W. S. Bell. |
| Lizzie Doten. | J. C. Bundy. |
| Mrs. J. Conant. | S. S. Jones. |
| Dr. Mary E. Walker (full figure). | Asa K. Butts, |
| | W. F. Jamieson. |
| Geo. Francis Train. | Kersey Graves. |
| H. L. Green. | |

---

LECTURES OF

R. G. INGERSOLL.

THE PEOPLE'S EDITION.

Paper Covers.

Vol. I. "The Gods, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thos. Paine," "Individuality," "Heretics and Heresies." Price, 50 cents.

Vol. II. "The Ghosts, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Declaration of Independence," "Farming in Illinois," "Speech at Cincinnati," "The Past Rises Before Me Like a Dream." Price 50 cents.

Both volumes bound in one, price, $1.00.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll, by Sarony, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

Imperial, or large size..... 40 cents.
Photo, or card size..... 20 cents.
Life-size lithograph, 21x27..... 50 cents.

Postage paid.

Either of the above Volumes handsomely bound in cloth, $1.25.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

---

WANTED.

A healthy, activ Bath Woman, and to do dining-room work in Dr. Lyon's boarding-house and Hygeian Home. Address,
J. S. LYON, M.D.
1t36 Box 247, Springfield, Mo.

---

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

---

SUPERSTITION;

THE RELIGION OF

"Believe or be Damned."

OPEN LETTER TO THE

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL BOARD.

BY

M. BABCOCK.

This book contains an inspired PHOTOGRAPH of the GOD that's being worshiped at the expense of the district in our public schools; the God that "overshadowed" Mary; the God that's wanted in the Constitution; the gentleman that owns some three billion dollars' worth of untaxed church property; the "so-help-me" God that makes a lie the truth in court; the God that governors besought to stop the yellow fever, which he didn't do. The picture is worth the price of the book. Price, 25 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, New York.

---

LADIES!!

"SALEM, OR., July 17, 1880.
"S. H. PRESTON, Dear Sir: Please send me by express, C. O. D., to Portland, Or., $100,00 (one hundred dollars) worth of that "Comstock" Syringe. I mean business.
"DR. MARY SOLANDER."

Only sixteen had been sold when

COMSTOCK

set out to suppress it. Now orders come as above. Grand jurymen buy it for their wives. It is SIMPLE, SAFE, INFALLIBLY RELIABLE, necessary to HEALTH and personal purity, and is pronounced by patients and physicians to be the greatest

GODSEND TO THE SEX

gotten up in this generation. Sent securely boxed, with private instructions for special use. Confidential terms to agents. Price $5 00; improved, $10,00. Address SAM. H. PRESTON.
ti32 209 West 34th st., New York.

---

"SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES"

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This volume is printed on toned paper, in clear, bold type, and handsomely bound in muslin, containing 275 pages, 12mo. Price, $1.25.

This book contains the principal points that Mr. Ingersoll has made against the Pentateuch in all his lectures on that subject. The pamphlets that hav been surreptitiously issued are incorrect, filled with mistakes, and consist of only about fourteen or fifteen pages, while there are two hundred and seventy-five pages in the book just issued. The book is unanswerable in its facts and logic, inimitable in its style, and filled with wit, satire, eloquence, and pathos.

---

Busts of R. G. Ingersoll,

By the celebrated sculptor, CLARK MILLS,

Cabinet size, price $2,50.
Small Busts, on Pedestal (mantel ornament), price $1.25. Neatly packed and boxed ready for shipment. Every admirer of this great Apostle of Liberty should hav at least one.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll.

By SARONY, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

| | |
|---|---|
| Imperial or large size | 40 cents |
| Photo or card size | 20 " |
| Life-size Lithograph, 21x27 | 50 " |

Postage paid,
D. M. BENNETT.
141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

---

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. . . $1.00.

---

THE

Anonymous Hypothesis OF Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by
D. M. BENNETT. 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

---

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.
D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., N.Y

---

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address
DR. J. M. MOSELEY,
13'27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

---

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth: price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

---

AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

---

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrins, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

---

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familiar tunes. Designed for Liberal Leagues and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00; twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3,00. Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.
141 Eighth street, New York.

---

Correspondence.

A gentleman, "Positivist," desires correspondence with a lady of a genial disposition, having literary, vocal, and instrumental musical accomplishments. Brunet preferred, and object matrimony. Address FAVORITE,
8t34 TRUTH SEEKER office.

---

MODERN THINKERS:

What They Think and Why.

By V. B. Denslow, LL.D.,

With an Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The work contains critical essays upon Emanuel Swedenborg, and the origin of the Christian ideas of heaven, hell, and virtue; Adam Smith, founder of the school of Economists; Jeremy Bentham, the apostle of law reform and of utilitarianism in morals; Thomas Paine and his relations to the Declaration of Independence and democracy in America; Charles Fourier, the philosopher of passional harmony and co-operativ association; Herbert Spencer, a review of his theories of evolution and of morals; Earnst Haeckel, the demonstrator of the doctrin of evolution; Auguste Comte, founder of the Positive philosophy and pontiff of the "Religion of Humanity;" and an essay on the authorship of Junius as a sequel to the critique on Thomas Paine.

This volume consists of 384 pp., 12 mo, and is illustrated by portraits of each of the eight great thinkers, and opens with an introduction from the pen of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

Cloth, $1.50. Sold at this office.

---

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19, 1880.

I wish to notify the public that a Mr. Baldwin, of Chicago, also Rhodes & McClure, of the same place, are publishing pamphlet editions of my lectures. All the lectures published by them are grossly inaccurate—filled with mistakes, horribly printed, and outrageously unjust to me. These men are simple literary thieves and pirates, and are obtaining money from the public under false pretenses. I take this course to warn the public that these publications are fraudulent. The only correct copies of my lectures are published by C. P. Farrell. All others are published by people who are willing to steal from me and defraud the public vender. These wretches hav published one lecture under four titles, and several others under two or three.

3m31 R. G. INGERSOLL.

---

All of C. P. Farrell's editions of Col. Ingersoll's works, and none others, are sold at this office. D. M. BENNETT.

---

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructiv work. In cloth, $3 per vol. the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4 50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

---

UPPLYSNINGENS TIDEHVART

(AGE OF ENLIGHTENMENT).

A SWEDISH WEEKLY,

Devoted to the culture of Freethought, to the investigation of the religious systems of our times, and to the discussion of religious and social questions in general.

The only Swedish religio-philosophical publication in America.

TERMS PER YEAR . . . . $2.00

Exchange is desired with any other papers in any language.

ERICKSON & OLSON,
Grove City, Meeker Co., Minn.

---

For sale, in the Swedish language:

A BETTER RELIGION.

BY FRANZ HERMAN WISTRAND,
Editor of the Truth Teller,
Lake Constance, Buffalo Post-Office,
Wright Co. Minnesota.

Published by ERICKSON & OLSON,
Grove City, Minn.

---

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER.

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

NEWBURYPORT MASS., Sept. 23, 1878.

To Miss Anna Knoop, Dear Madam:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

JAMES PARTON.

Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

---

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot, and Power Presses. Die work of all kinds. Perforating Dies a specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N. Y
tJan81,

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. By COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 35 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp, $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATEBS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2.00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo. 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 63 pages; price, 25 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 180 pages. Price, only 25 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Forms for Organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-Laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected, for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Over 580 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents, in cloth.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A New Scripture from an antique manuscript (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL, in conjunction with A. HOOK, Esq. Very amusing. Price, 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Freethinkers' Convention, held at Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878. A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. George W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, and several other persons. Price, cloth, $1.25.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound Volumes I., II., III., IV., and V. These volumes, containing over 520 pages each, are made up of over one hundred Truth Seeker Tracts, with some additional kinds. They embrace a variety of subjects by different authors, written in a terse, trenchant, and spicy style. They are offered at the extremely low price of 60 cents per volume in paper covers, and $1.00 in cloth; or 50 cents each in paper, and 75 cents each in cloth if the whole set is taken.

Sepher Toldoth Jeschu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First English translation of the ancient Jewish story of Jesus, who was born at Bethlehem about the year 106 B. C., being the son of a betrothed maiden named Miriam (Mary) by Joseph Pandera. How and why the Romans changed "Kepha" to "Petros." Startling evidence that Paul flourished before the middle of the first century B. C., contemporary with the aforesaid Kepha. Price, 20 cents.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, curate of a Romish church in France in the eighteenth century, whose views upon theology were not published until after his death, and are now for the first time presented in English. Very radical and able. Price, 25 cents.

Influence of Christianity Upon Civilization. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Revised edition. One of the most able treatises upon the subject ever written. Price, 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Revised edition. In this treatise the two systems are fairly and ably examined from a historical standpoint. Price, 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in the Place of Christianity. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Price, paper, 10 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus; His Character and Doctrine. A chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief." By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Price, cloth, 60 cents; paper, 35 cents.

Resurrection of Jesus. By W. S. BELL. Revised and enlarged edition. Price, 25 cents.

Religion not History. An able examination of the morals and theology of the teachings of the New Testament. By W. F. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of University College, London. From the London edition. Price, 25 cents.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker," and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED, of Moravia, N. Y. Proposition discussed: "Jesus Christ is not only divine, but is the Lord God, creator of heaven and earth." Teed affirming: Bennett denying. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Blakeman's Two Hundred Poetical Riddles. (For children and youth.) Embracing a great variety of subjects. This work is new and interesting, and affords a great amount of amusement in the family circle, as well as in gatherings of children and older people. Price, 20 cents.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR. Delivered at Steinway Hall, New York, in the winter of 1875-76. 1. Growth of Worlds; 2. Life and Death of Worlds; 3. Other Worlds than Ours; 4. Other Suns than Ours; 5. The Great Mysteries of the Universe; 6. Religion and Astronomy. 65 pp. Paper, 20 cents

Beyond the Veil. A Spiritualistic work, said to be dictated by the spirit of PASCHAL BEVERLY RANDOLPH, aided by Emmanuel Swedenborg and others, through the mediumship of Mrs. Frances H. McDougall and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. It gives minute and interesting descriptions of life in the spirit world—its location, intermediate state, landscape, habitation, food, clothing, industrial interests, etc. It contains a steel engraving of P. B. Randolph. A neat volume. Price, $1.50.

Gems of Thought.

EVERY miud is unwilliogly deprived of truth. —Plato.

SUCCESS and virtue do not necessarily go together.—Dr. Johnson.

I AM in that place in which it is demanded of me to speak the truth; and the truth I will speak, impugn whom it liste.—John Knox.

LET who will be angry—of an impious silence will not I be found guilty, who am conscious that I am "debtor to the truth," howsoever unworthy.—Luther.

THE reformer's chief business always is to destroy falsehood, to drag down the temple of imposture where idols hold the place of the Almighty.—Froude.

THE Jesuits appear to hav discovered the precise point to which intellectual culture can be carried without risk to intellectual emancipation.—Macaulay.

ONE man's "down" may be another man's "up," and if truth lies at the bottom of a well, as the old proverb says it does, the truth-lover will go where truth is, if it takes him "down" to the infernal regions.

THE church is always trying to get other people to reform. It might not be a bad idea to reform itself a little, by way of example. It is still clinging to one or two things which were useful once, but which are not useful now, neither are they ornamental.—Mark Twain's Tramp Abroad.

NOTHING shall warp me from the belief that every man is a lover of truth. There is no pure lie, no pure malignity in nature. The entertainment of the proposition of depravity is the last profligacy and profanation. Could it be received into the common belief, suicide would unpeople the planet.—Emerson.

PLUTARCH says that when Cicero, as a young man, visited the Oracle at Delphi, the advice given him was to make his own genius, not the opinions of others, the guide of his life; and Niebuha thinks that, if so, this is one of the answers which might induce us to believe in the actual inspiration of the priestess.—T. W. Higginson.

CATHOLICISM was at one time the friend of education—of an education sufficient to make a Catholic out of a barbarian. Protestantism was also the friend of education—of an education sufficient to make a Protestant out of a Catholic. But now, it having been demonstrated that real education will make Freethinkers, Catholics and Protestants both are the enemies of true learning.—Ingersoll.

SWEDENBORG did one thing for which I feel almost grateful. He gave an account of having met John Calvin in hell. Nothing connected with the supernatural could be more perfectly natural than this. The only thing detracting from the value of this report is that if there is a hell, we know, without visiting the place, that John Calvin must be there.—Ingersoll.

I KNEW of a woman who worked three years in acotton factory under an overseer who asked her to be his wife. They were poor, and after their marriage for three more years toiled in the same way. "Did it make any difference in your happiness," I asked her, "between the first three years and the last?" "All the difference there is between a cotton factory and the kingdom of heaven," she answered.—John C. Kimball.

THE couples which hav no family, or which cannot provide for the children they hav, in as far as justice requires, do well to separate rather than continue to liv in perpetual warfare. The consequences which follow ill-assorted unions are much more serious to the parties, to their children, and to society at large than such as attend on divorce. Were the sexes what they ought to be, there would indeed be no occasion for divorce. The conjugal union would then terminate only with life.—Spurzheim.

WHILE thinking cannot be done without a certain degree of leisure, it is still a variety of hard work; and the best of it is done, not by priests, for they are so taken up with worship that they hav no time for work, but by the working classes themselvs, whose activ and aggressiv thinking has compelled the priesthood to do what little thinking they hav done in self-defense. In saying that the least inventiv, original, and progressiv class of men hav always been the priests, we only charge them with fidelity to their calling.—Denslow's Modern Thinkers.

AND there were doubters and skeptics, too, in that old time just as there are now, and generally these unbelievers were then as now—the philosophers the scientists, and the rulers. Protagoras was banished from all the territories of the Athenians, and his books were burned as infamous and impious because he said in the beginning of one of them: "Whether the gods do or do not exist, is a question which I know not whether I ought to affirm or deny, for our understandings are too much clouded, and the life of men is too short, for the solution of so nice and difficult a point."—Elmina D Slenker.

THE question of card-playing is fully considered in Goethe's "Autobiography," and the conclusion is that, instead of avoiding games, young people should try to acquire skill in them. "Time is infinitly long, and each day a vessel into which a great deal may be poured if we will actually fill it up." Dr. Johnson laid down broadly that there are few days without hours when time hangs heavy upon hand, and told Boswell, "I am sorry I hav not learned to play at cards. It is very useful in life; it generates kindness and consolidates society." Burke expressed the same regret.—Hayward's Goethe.

Odds and Ends.

A PHOTOGRAPHER lately took the portrait of a lady so admirably that the husband preferred it to the original.

A FAMILY of young ladies who reside at 126th street, so often entertain their company on the front steps that they hav gained the title of the step-sisters.

SMITHERS believes in unlucky numbers. For instance, he says, it's unlucky to hav thirteen persons at the table when there is only dinner enough for ten.

"HAV you got the rent ready at last?" "No, sir; mother's gone out washing, and forgot to put it out for you." "Did she tell you she'd forgotten?" "Yes, sir."

AN English gentleman was coming out of a shoe store on Monday morning with a little boy, when meeting a friend he explained, "I've just been inside to hav my h'Ed measured for a pair of shoes."

THEY were at a dinner party, and he remarked that he supposed she was fond of ethnology. She said she was, but she was not very well, and the doctor had told her not to eat anything for desert but oranges.

ROBINSON (after a long whist bout at the club), "It's awfully late, Brown. What will you say to your wife?" Brown (in a whisper): "Oh, I sha'nt say much, you know. "Good morning, dear, or something of that sort. She'll say the rest."

FARO is a game of considerable antiquity, it appears, for we read in the Bible, Isaiah xxiv. 16, that "the treacherous dealers hav dealt treacherously." And the average dealer has not much improved since the time when the prophet played.

QUITE a number of darkies, young and old, were fishing down on Kunn's wharf recently, when a boy of about twelve fell off and would hav met a watery grave had it not been for the energy and presence of mind of old uncle Moses. After the boy was safely landed a bystander took occasion to praise old Moses for the heroism he had displayed. "Is the boy your son?" asked the sympathetic spectator. "No, boss, but ee mout jess as well a been. He had all de bait in his pocket."

PARTED LOVERS.—They were very fond of each other, and had been engaged; but they quarreled, and were too proud to make it up.

He called a few days ago at her father's house, to see the old gentleman on business, of course. She was at the door.

Said he, "Ah, Miss Blank, I believe; is your father in?"

"No, sir," she replied; "pa is not in at present. Did you wish to see him personally?"

"Yes," was the bluff response, feeling that she was yielding, "on very particular personal business," and he turned proudly to go away.

"I beg your pardon," she called after him, as he struck the lower step, "but who shall I say called?"

He never smiled again.

IT is said that once, during the high water at Prairie du Chien, the Dousman House was full of guests, the water was up to the second story, and they could not get away. Williams, the proprietor, made the guests catch fish for their board. There was a fish-pole out of every window, and Williams had a corner on fish-bait. He had a place where he could dig worms, and no one knew where it was but himself. It was said to be a touching sight to see him go around to the different rooms with an old oyster-can, and sell angle-worms to the traveling men. The guests finally struck on buying worms. They opened the windows and let the fish into the rooms, and then chased them under the beds, and caught them in he washbowls. One traveling man says Williams is awfully heartless. A mud-turtle came along and roosted on the second-story window-sill, and Williams pushed him off into the water because he hadn't any baggage and wouldn't pay in advance. Some of these stories against Williams are told by Col. Johnson at the eating-house here, who is down on Williams on account of some game played at Hot Springs; we believ they call it a "John Por." Williams says he turned the mud-turtle away because he thought it was one of Johnson's bed-bugs.

"Las' nite, as de ole woman an me sot on de back steps to cool our feet," began brother Gardner, "Uncle Febus cum rushin' in wid his hat in his hand, and his eyes as big as dollars. Uncle Febus am a Republikin, and some Demercrat had got at him an' made him believe dat Garfeel used to saw niggers in two at so much per head. De ole man's garden patch am all chocked up wid weeds, an' he's purty hard up for clothes, but he couldn't put his hand to work until he found out if dat story was true. He hadn't been gone away an hour before ole Daddy Smith cum whoopin' in by de alley gate lookin' as wild as if a b'ar was arter him. He am a Demerkrat, an' some Republikin had got at him an' made him almos' believe dat Gineral Hancock would sell all de cullud folkses into slavery if he war 'lected President. Ole Daddy lost half a day on a cash job to trot aroun' wid such a fool-story on his tongue; an' he needs money if anybody does. It makes me discouraged when I see what fools some niggahs be. What's de reason dat Daddy Smith, Uncle Febus, an' ebery odder daddy an' uncle 'mong de cullud tribe can't sot on de fence an' let de white folks fight dis out? It ain't our muss, we can't gain nor lose a single shillin', no matter who am President. I tell ye agin, an' I'm gwine to keep on tellin' ye dat de cullud man who goes into polytics am de white man's fool. He may count one in a torchlight procession, but he will also count one in de crowd befo' de poormaster nex' winter. Polytics hain't in us. We hain't got de meanness to stan' up an' promis' an' lie an' cheyt, an' deceive. Our skulls am too thick an' our tongues dean' move fast 'nuff."

Truth Seeker Tracts

| No. | Revised List. | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. " | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 2 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft. | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. | 3 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. " | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. " | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 2 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | 2 |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. | 2 |
| 32. | The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 3 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 2 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 2 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. | 3 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite. " | 3 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 3 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 3 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 3 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood. | 8 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 3 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 5 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. " | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus. D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 2 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 3 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 3 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 80. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 5 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 1 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 2 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 5 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London. | 2 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 10 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 2 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 3 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 2 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 92. | The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 5 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 1 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 5 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 10 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 2 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota. | 5 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 102. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 1 |
| 103. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 2 |
| 104. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 10 |
| 105. | Decadence of Christianity. Capphro. | 2 |
| 106. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 107. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 108. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 2 |
| 110. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 1 |
| 111. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 112. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 2 |
| 113. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 114. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 1 |
| 115. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 2 |
| 116. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 117. | Constantine the Great. Preston | 3 |
| 118. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 5 |
| 119. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 3 |
| 120. | The New age. Bell | 10 |
| 121. | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 2 |
| 122. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 10 |
| 123. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 124. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 125. | German Liberalism. Clara Neymann | 2 |
| 126. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 10 |
| 127. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 5 |
| 129. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 2 |
| 130. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 5 |
| 131. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 3 |
| 132. | My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson | 1 |
| 133. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | 5 |
| 134. | Talks with the Evangelists | 5 |
| 135. | Is there a Future Life? | 3 |
| 136. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett | 5 |
| 137. | Christian Love. C. L. James | 5 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper | 2 |
| 139. | Massacre of St. Bartholemew. Preston | 5 |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | 2 |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142. | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 145. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | 3 |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D., | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off, on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

ELMINA AS EDITOR.

THE PHYSIOLOGIST

FOR SEPTEMBER NOW READY.

SARAH B. CHASE, A.M., M.D., Editor.
ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, Associate Editor.

CONTENTS

for present number include the following articles:

Fewer Children and Better.—S. H. Preston.
The True Religion.—George W. Chainey.
Marriage—Prevention of Conception.—S. P. Putnam.
Some Wrongs of Society.—Mrs. F. C. Burnes M.D.
Enlightened Parentage.—Editor.
Scientific Starvation (all about Tanner's fast).

$1.50 per annum. Sample copies 15 cts.

Address, S. H. PRESTON, Business Manager, 209 W. 34th st., N. Y.

tf37

Mrs. Besant's Tracts.

Prices Reduced.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion, | 5 |
| The Fruits of Christianity. | 5 |
| Constructiv Rationalism, | 5 |
| On Eternal Torture, | 5 |
| On Prayer. | 5 |
| The True Basis of Morality, | 5 |
| The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought, | 5 |
| Is the Bible Indictable? | 5 |

ALSO

| | |
|---|---|
| The Law of Population; Its Consequences and its Bearings Upon Human Conduct and Morals, | 40 |
| Marriage; As it Was, As it Is, and As it Should Be, | 40 |

The last two contain a fine steel-plate engraving of Mrs. Besant.

There is no clearer, better writer in the English language.

IN ADDITION.

| | |
|---|---|
| The Church and Education, On the Religious Education of Children, | 5 |
| Government, An Essay. By Charles Moran. | 10 |

Sold at this office.

A New and Important Work, entitled

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.

BY F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.,

Graduate of the Hygeio-Therapeutic College and the New York Phrenological Institute.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. As a chart it will be found fuller and more complete than any other work of its size on this subject. It contains in addition to the "Table of Developments," one of "Adaptation to Different Pursuits," and one of "Conjugal Adaptation." These tables being perfectly easy to understand, are calculated to render the work at once both interesting and useful. The work contains also full and clear descriptions of the temperaments, the nutritive functions, health, etc., and all the faculties and powers of the mind in seven different degrees of development, along with excellent rules for health and self-improvement. Its explanation of the principles of phrenology, etc., and its other important remarks will be found well adapted to the needs of students and others who may desire to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology with as little outlay of time and labor as possible. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N Y.

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. . . $1.00

THE TRUTH SEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 7. No. 37. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, September 11, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

A SYNAGOG at Jackson, Mich., is to be cleared of debt by means of a ball and lottery.

A LARGE number of Jewish negroes hav been found in Africa, near the boundary of Barbary.

THE Rev. Samuel Wilson of Onarga, Ill., intending to visit a Methodist conference, got down his revolver and began to polish it for the occasion. It was accidentally discharged and he was killed.

THE Superintendent has forbidden religious services in the poorhouse of LaSalle county, Ill. He says that two-thirds of the inmates are insane, and the rest hav "as much religion already as is good for them."

BISHOP CHATARD, of Indianapolis has given the Hibernians, who recently danced at a picnic in direct disobedience of his pastoral, the alternativ of being disfellowshiped or of expelling its wayward members.

THE Catholic Telegraph, of Cincinnati, says that, according to Scripture, man was made but little lower than the angels, but priests are higher than angels, for they hav power to forgiv sin, which the angels hav not.

"IN what condition was the patriarch Job at the end of his life?" asked a Brooklyn Sunday-school teacher of a quiet-looking boy at the foot of the class. "Dead," answered the quiet-looking boy. From this answer no appeal was taken.

DANIEL SHEFFIN, the sexton of St. Cecilia's church, of this city, charges the pastor, Rev. Wm. P Flannelly, with having openly slandered him before the congregation, and thereby injured him in his character and business to the extent of $2,000, to recover which sum he has brought a suit in the Marine Court.

MR. LELAND of New York lectures this evening in the Christian church of this city. Mr. Leland is a Freethinker, and this is the first instance in the history of the Liberal movement that an orthodox church has been opened to an Infidel. Revs. Lane and McConnell will be there, and we predict an interesting occasion. —Marshall own (Iowa) Times.

AT Springfield, Mass., the Rev. Father McDermott told his congregation that, though it was wrong, they could send their children to the public schools, but he warned them against saying that the public schools were better than the Catholic parochial school. If any did so claim, he said he would read their names in church, show from the school rolls the stupidity of their children, and "make them wretched."

ON seeing last Sunday a horseman herding cattle we inquired in whose employ he was and found that he was working for one of the most prominent members of the Methodist church of Concordia. Perhaps it isn't our "put in," but we would just like to know how this good and pious Methodist can reconcile with his duty to God and man his course in sending this young man's soul to hell while he is saving—or trying to save—his own?—Cloud Co. Blade.

A MAN under the assumed name of Helix has started a new sect in New York. He calls them "Solid Backs." He says he calls them that because he expects to suffer persecution and has a pretty solid back. The Bowery, the wickedest place in New York, is the scene of his operations. The heathen rage, the small boys dance around and yell during prayer, and pandemonium wouldn't be much worse than the din Helix and his audience raise. The "Solid Backs" are few and the opposition numerous, but Helix says he will hold on.

THE English correspondent of the Churchman has the most dismal forebodings in regard to the effects of the Burials bill when it becomes a law. He says: "All protection to the church in its churches as well as church-yards is gone forever. This is, of course, the beginning of disestablishment, and with the Established Church will go old England. The peerage and crown will go next; India and the colonies after that." Well, let them go. England would be better off without a state church, and the Crown don't amount to much except to draw immense sums of money from the people to support royal libertines like the Prince of Wales.

THE Rev. Dr. Williamson, of the First Methodist church of Chicago, found that his congregation were relaxing their belief in a hell of literal fire. He therefore preached last Sunday on the subject, making the following points: 1. That if those scriptures that relate with such apparent clearness to the fact of an endless hell are meaningless, no other part of the Bible can be depended upon; 2. That unless men dying in sin are doomed to awful and endless suffering, the humiliation of Pilate's court, the agony in the garden, and the final, bitter expiation on Calvary must be regarded as means utterly disproportioned to the end to be accomplished; 3. That, if Bible language was written to be read, and if, like all other serious speech, it mean anything, so plain and so repeated are its statements on this subject there can be no doubt that an awful and eternal reality of punishment for unpardoned sinners exists in the universe of God; 4. That hell is a definit locality: 5. That the torture of hell is by literal and endless fire.

A DISTINGUISHED follower of Mars, a favorit comedian, and a well-known ex-reporter composed the happy trio seated in a cosy room, enjoying themselves with fragrant Havanas and strong lemonades. An hour or two thus passed pleasantly by, when a fourth one entered upon the scene, a knight of the razor, and one who has no equal in Montana in knowledge of the dead languages. His memory is marvelous, but being a German, with a poor pronunciation of our language, his translations would not be accepted as the pure quill by a college professor. To test his knowledge, the reporter gave him a few Latin sentences, which were correctly translated. The son of Mars essayed to catch him napping on the Greek, but without avail; while our jolly Thespian friend bombarded him with Hebrew. The last sentence he gave were the dying words of the Savior. This is the translation as given by the tonsorial artist and scholar: "Mein Gott! mine Gott! why in h—ll you leave me left for, anyhow?"

THE Rev. Mr. Handford of the Bond street church of Toronto, Ontario, is another fallen shepherd, Mrs. Gorham, of his church, accuses him of having seduced her and then cast her off. Having been cruelly thrust aside by Handford after ministering to his selfish and lustful wishes, and being a woman of determination, she has now come forward and put her story in writing, which she has duly sworn to in the presence of two witnesses. In the document she says: "I first met Mr. Handford about two years ago at my brother's. He first visited our house Tuesday, August 20, 1878, and from that on for about a year was a very frequent visitor, and we often visited his house. I often walked with him in the fields and woods. On August 8, 1878, before he commenced to visit at our house, he seduced me, in his own house, in his study. After that he frequently had criminal connection with me at various places." Yet this reverend wretch is still preaching the gospel to an admiring congregation. In a recent sermon he held up David as his beau ideal of a man, and judging from Mrs. Gorham's confession, we must say we think him sincere.

A BALTIMORE clairvoyant gives the following description of the North Pole: "The pole is situated on an island, having a gradual rise from the water's edge to about the middle of it. On some parts of it appear only bare rocks; on other parts it has an abundant vegetation. About half of it, the east side, is covered with fruit trees. In some parts they grow in dense thickets, in some they grow not so close together, and hav grass thickly interspread among them. The fruit consists of oranges, lemons, bananas, cocoanut, and other tropical fruits. This part of the pole is inhabited by beetles, white and black ants, grasshoppers, and many other kinds of insects, all unusually large; also by many different species of the monkey tribe. On the west side of the island the vegetation is not so dense. It has many tropical fruits, but the trees are small. Among the natural products are the gooseberry, blackberry, grape, currant, raspberry, and mandrake But it differs from the east side in having no monkeys, and in having vast numbers of birds of every size and plumage. Among them are the ostrich, swan, goose, duck, quail, robin, and humming bird. On both sides are many small streams."

FOR the last two years a well-to-do manufacturer named Issajeff, residing at No. 281 of the Ligovka, St. Petersburg, has enjoyed among his friends and acquaintances the reputation of being a prophet sent from heaven for the especial purpose of announcing the exact date of the Redeemer's final reappearance upon earth preparatory to the last judgment and general winding-up of mundane affairs. Ever since his gifts of prescience first obtained recognition, Issajeff—English Isaiah—has been so profuse of prophecy that his vaticinations, carefully taken down and collected by his admirers, already fill four large quarto volumes, recently dedicated by him to the venerable Metropolitan Isidor, who has submitted them to the inspection of M. Janischeff, Director of the Ecclesiastical Academy. But until a fortnight ago Issajeff had maintained a discreet silence with respect to the great event, the foretelling of which he alleged to be his peculiar mission. One day, however, he informed his followers that the end of all things had been fixed for the 15th ult., and proceeded to prove his own faith in that vaticination by selling his manufactory, houses, etc., and distributing the produce of their sale among the poor. His example was strictly followed by his disciples, who, in accordance with his special instructions stripped to their shirts early on the morning of the 15th, and in that uncommonly light marching order waited patiently all day long for the sounding of the last trumpet. As nothing of the sort came to pass, Issajeff's impoverished flock has renounced its belief in that prophet's predictions, all but nine unchangedly faithful sheep, who still regard him as divinely-inspired, and to whom he continues to foretell future events as freely as ever.—London Telegraph.

THE N. Y. World wants to know why a Freethinker should find it necessary to meet with his kind. This is in reference to the late Convention at Hornellsville. Now, really we never thought of that. Sure enough, why should he? The World imagines that he can think free in his private apartments and that there is no common object for Freethinkers to attain by assembling together. Of course! But then, why do Christians meet together? Can't they pray in their apartments in private, and won't such prayers penetrate the steel plate with which deity is supposed to hav armored his heart just as well as the prayers of a multitude impelled by a varied selection of stentorian "Amens!" And since in the scheme of salvation every sinner must stand upon his own merits of faith and sanctity, why congregations, and conventions, and popular sermons, and public psalm singing? It may be said, in reply, that the church has a mission to spread the gospel; but if that gospel, which demands implicit belief in its manifold absurdities as the price of a reserved seat in Paradise, is a false gospel and a libel upon the creator, hav not the Freethinkers a more righteous mission to hold its pretensions up to public scorn? It is natural for men who think in the same channel, whether upon politics, religion, business, or social subjects, to meet together and exchange courtesies and opinions. And that is why both Christians and Freethinkers meet. This caviling over the word "Freethinker," in which the orthodox are now indulging, comes with a bad grace from people who invented it as an epithet of derision and condemnation. Once we were told that a Freethinker is an individual who asserts the damnable doctrin that men should use their reason in considering religious claims—a rationalist; but now that unbelievers in the faith scheme hav accepted the epithet as a title to be proud of, the religious press (including the World, of course) coolly proceeds to tear the title to pieces and show that everybody is a Freethinker, because thoughts cannot be restrained—nature makes them free. The fact probably is that the late Convention, which promises to centralize and giv wide-spread expression to common sense views about religion, is a nightmare to the leaders of orthodoxy. Infidelity, so called, is no longer to be an individual sin; it is taking shape, organizing and preparing to be aggressiv. It will make the world better. And when we look about, and see the wickedness which thrives under the cloak of religion, we cannot but hail the rapidly approaching time when men will devote their time and energy to the improvement of this world and leave the next to take care of itself.—Truth.

Events of the Week.

GEN. ROBERTS has defeated the Afghanistans.

A TELEPHONE convention was held at Niagara last week.

THE steamer San Salvador is reported lost in the Carribean Sea.

MORE Sioux Indians hav surrendered themselvs to the United States authorities.

GEN. GRANT is coming to New York to preside at a Republican campaign meeting.

THE naval demonstration, to scare Turkey, it is understood will begin on the 15th inst.

RILEY won the three-mile professional boat race at Geneva, N. Y., on the 3d. Time 21:25.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., has been visited by a destructiv fire. H. L. Green's office was burned out.

THE Democratic factions of this city hav further coalesced and now present a united front to their opponents.

FIVE horses and fifteen men started at noon Sunday in the test race of 156 hours, "go as you please," at Chicago.

A FULL RIGGED ship, junk shaped, is said to hav been found in a cavern in Colorado, far away from any water.

BUCK, the Texas cadet, who shot a schoolmate at the preparatory school last summer, has been admitted to West Point.

THREE colored men were recently empaneled on a jury in Kentucky—the first time such an event ever happened in that state.

A MAN was hurled to the ground from the elevated railroad last Saturday, by a train striking him. He was severely injured.

FIFTEEN passengers were rescued from drowning by a thirteen-year-old boy on the Morris Canal at Jersey City last week.

ON a recent journey of the Czar the line of railroad was guarded by forty thousand troops. Happy Czar! Must enjoy the confidence of his people.

JUDGE RIX of San Francisco decides that the anti-Chinese ordinances recently passed by the board of supervisors of that city are unconstitutional.

WHILE testing a pontoon bridge over the river Ebro in Spain on the 2d, ninety-seven men were drowned by the giving way of the structure.

A REPORT that the Jeannette, sent to explore the North Pole, is lost is denied by the New York Herald, whose proprietor fitted out the expedition.

IT has been so hot in this city and Brooklyn for the last few days that the Boards of Education of both cities hav extended the holidays, refusing to allow the children to study. Sensible boards.

A HURRICANE visited Kingston, Jamaica, Aug. 18th, which lasted six hours. Every vessel in the harbor was sunk or driven ashore and wrecked. Many houses were blown down and some lives are reported lost.

A SEVERE shock of earthquake occurred at Valpariso, Chili, on July 21st. The floods in the province of Coquimbo are the greatest experienced for thirty years. Seventy persons were swept away and drowned in one night.

THE steamship City of Vera Cruz, plying between here and Havana, was caught in a cyclone off the coast of Florida on the 29 h ult. Seven of the crew and four of the passengers were washed ashore. All the rest, about thirty seamen and eighteen passengers, were drowned. The Vera Cruz was owned by F. Alexandre & Sons, of this city, and was insured in fourteen companies.

THE London Daily Telegraph reports that a preliminary treaty of peace has been signed at Lima, and the following are its principal articles: Peru surrenders the monitors Mancocapac and Atahualpa, razes the fortifications of Callao, surrenders all the artillery of Callao, engages to not augment her navy for thirty years, and will reimburse to Chili the cost of the war. Chili engages to pay half of the exterior debt of Peru.

Persecutions of Unbelievers and Freethinkers.

BY D. M. BENNETT.

[The following is Mr. Bennett's speech at the Brussels Congress. In looking over the MSS. left by him, we find it in rough draft, and thinking that our readers would like to see it, take the liberty of laying it before them.]

Ever since Flavius Valerius Aurelius, better known as Constantine, after murdering his father-in-law, his brother-in-law, his nephew, his son, and his wife, made his grand coup d'etat, and pretended to see a heavenly vision and to be converted, Paul-like, to Christianity, thus becoming the first fighting, murdering Christian emperor, the church has been persistent in her persecutions toward all who dared dispute her power or deny the truth and infallibility of her teachings. As her power has increased, her enemity has increased also to all who would not bow in submission to her commands. Those who were free enough to think and act as their own consciences dictated hav been made to feel her most cruel tortures and to encounter the most agonizing deaths her ingenuity enabled her to inflict. This church, which was under the necessity of looking to pagan nations for her creeds, dogmas, rites, sacraments, ceremonies, and paraphernalia and gewgawry of worship, exhibited originality and invention enough to get up the most infernal tortures, machines, and appliances for causing the most excruciating pains for all who dared be free enough to do their own thinking on any point of faith.

As Ingersoll forcibly says: "In the name of God every possible crime has been committed—every conceivable outrage has been perpetrated. Brave men, tender and loving women, beautiful girls, and prattling babes hav been exterminated in the name of Jesus Christ. For more than fifty generations the church has carried the black flag. Her vengeance has been measured only by her power. During all these years of infamy no heretic has been forgiven. With the heart of a fiend she has hated; with the clutch of avarice she has grasped; with the jaws of a dragon she has devoured; pitiless as famin, merciless as fire, with the conscience of a serpent, such is the history of the church of God. . . . Every nerve in the human body capable of pain has been sought out and touched by the church. Toleration has increased only when and where the power of the church has diminished. From Augustine until now the spirit of the Christian has remained the same. There has been the same intolerance, the same undying hatred of all who think for themselvs, and the same determination to crush out of the human brain all knowledge inconsistent with an ignorant creed.

"Men and women hav been burnt for thinking there was but one God; that there was none; that the Holy Ghost is younger than God; that God was somewhat older than his son; for insisting that good works will save a man without faith; that faith will do without good works; for declaring that a sweet babe will not be burned eternally because its parents failed to hav its head wet by a priest; for speaking of God as though he had a nose; for denying that Christ was his own father; for contending that three persons, rightly added together, make more than one; for believing in purgatory; for denying the reality of hell; for pretending that priests can forgiv sins; for preaching that God is an essence; for denying that witches rode through the air on sticks; for doubting the total depravity of the human heart; for laughing at irresistible grace, predestination, and particular redemption; for denying that good bread could be made of the body of a dead man; for pretending that the pope was not managing this world for God and in place of God; for disputing the efficacy of a vicarious atonement; for thinking that the Virgin Mary was born like other people; for thinking that a man's rib was hardly sufficient to make a good-sized woman; for denying that God used his finger for a pen; for asserting that prayers are not answered; that diseases are not sent to punish unbelief; for denying the authority of the Bible; for having a Bible in their possession; for attending mass and for refusing to attend; for wearing a surplice; for carrying a cross and for refusing; for being a Catholic and for being a Protestant; for being an Episcopalian, a Presbyterian, a Baptist, and for being a Quaker. In short, every virtue has been a crime, and every crime a virtue. The church has burnt honesty and rewarded hypocrisy.

"Protestants and Catholics vied with each other in the work of enslaving the human mind. For ages they were rivals in the infamous effort to rid the earth of honest people. They infested every country, every city, town, hamlet, and family. They appealed to the worst passions of the human heart. They sowed the seeds of discord and hatred in every land. Brother denounced brother, wives informed against their husbands; mothers accused their children; dungeons were crowded with the innocent; the flesh of the good and the true rotted in the clasp of chains; the flames devoured the heroic, and in the name of the most merciful God his children were exterminated with famin, sword, and fire. Over the wild waves of battle rose and fell the banner of Jesus Christ. For sixteen hundred years the robes of the church were red with innocent blood. The ingenuity of Christians was exhausted in devising punishment severe enough to be inflicted on other Christians who honestly and sincerely differed with them upon any point whatever. . . . For thousands of years a thinker was hunted down like an escaped convict. To him who had braved the church every door was shut, every knife was open. To shelter him from the wild storm, to giv him a crust of bread when dying, to put a cup of water to his cracked and bleeding lips, these were all crimes, not one of which the church ever did forgiv, and with the justice taught of her God, his helpless children were exterminated as scorpions and vipers.

"In 1208 the Inquisition was established. Seven years afterward the fourth council of the Lateran enjoined all kings and rulers to swear an oath that they would exterminate heretics from their dominions. The sword of the church was unsheathed, and the world was at the mercy of ignorant and infuriated priests, whose eyes feasted upon the agonies they inflicted. Acting, as they believed, or pretended to believe, under the command of God, stimulated by the hope of infinit reward in another world, hating heretics with every drop of their bestial blood, savage beyond description, merciless beyond conception, these infamous priests, in a kind of frenzied joy, leaped upon the helpless victims of their rage. They crushed their bones in iron boots, tore their quivering flesh with iron hooks and pincers, cut off their lips and eyelids, pulled out their nails, and into the bleeding quick thrust needles; tore out their tongues, extinguished their eyes, stretched them upon racks, flayed them alive, crucified them with their head downward, exposed them to wild beasts, burned them at the stake, mocked their cries and groans, ravished their wives, robbed their children, and then prayed God to finish the holy work in hell."

The word Freethinker is a relativ term. It means one who dares to think in opposition to what the church prescribes; one who holds that his mind and his thoughts are his own, and that he possesses the right to use them as nature dictates. It has been applied as a term of opprobrium to those who differed slightly from the prescribed formula, as well as to those who denied the false creed altogether. The terms Freethinker and heretic were often synonymous; both dared to disbelieve and dispute the dictum of popes, bishops, and priests, both dared to conform their belief to the dictates of reason and common sense.

In the middle of the twelfth century Peter Waldo, a worthy citizen of the town of Lyons in France, had the temerity to entertain certain views not exactly in harmony with the doctrins which the church prescribed. He expressed his disapproval of mixing holy oil in baptism; he held that prayers said over inanimate things were superstitious; that the flesh of animals might with propriety be eaten in Lent; that the clergy should be permitted to marry; that auricular confession was unnecessary; that confirmation was not a sacrament; that obedience to a corrupt and sensual pope was not required; that it was not right for one set of the clergy to be placed above the rest; that the worship of images is absurd and idolatrous; that the pretense that miracles had been performed was false; that fornication and public brothels should be condemned; that purgatory is without proof; that dead people, called saints, should not be prayed to; that extreme unction is not a sacrament; that masses, prayers, and indulgences are of no use to the dead. But for the moderate Freethought which he thus indulged in, himself and his followers were most cruelly persecuted. They were compelled to seek refuge in the mountains of Dauphiny, where men as savage and merciless as bloodhounds persistently hunted them down. For decades and centuries this bitter persecution was kept up against them. They were hunted down like wild beasts, and thrown into dungeons, the Inquisition, and most wretched places of confinement. Large numbers of them were tortured in the most heartless manner, and unknown hundreds of them were put to death in the most cruel modes that Christian ingenuity could devise. After hundreds of years of such persecution the remnant that was left fled to the valley of Piedmont for security, but only for a limited time were they allowed to enjoy it. They were again sought out by the minions of the church. Their homes were taken from them, their property was seized by bishops and priests, and they were compelled to flee to the mountain fastnesses for their lives. But here also the bloodhounds of Rome followed them and hunted them down. Great numbers were caught, thrown from precipices and dashed to pieces. The women and children crawled into caves and recesses of the rocks, but these Christian disciples would not let them thus escape. Piles of fagots were placed at the mouths of the caves and fired, the smoke and heat strangling them to death. Four hundred dead infants were picked up, many of whom had died in their mothers' arms, parent and child sharing the same fate. Over four thousand innocent, industrious people were thus put to death in this one holy fray at the command of God's vicegerent at Rome.

The persecutions carried on against the Albigenses, another peaceful people who dared to entertain certain opinions of their own, were prosecuted in the same cruel and inhuman manner. Because they presumed to do a little of their own thinking, and to adopt some views which the church did not approve, the pope of Rome, Innocent III, pronounced anathemas and issued his pronunciamentos against them, and he sent his angels of blood and dire persecution to exterminate them from the face of the earth. They were slaughtered in great numbers and with inconceivable cruelty. Nothing was to be heard on some occasions but the groans of men who lay weltering in their own blood, the lamentations of mothers, who, after being violated by their persecutors, had their children taken from their arms and dashed to pieces before their eyes. When this sort of carnage was being carried out in the town of Beziers a legate of the pope seemed to enjoy the bloody work with fiendish pleasure, for he frequently cried out to the men who were red with the blood of the slain, "Kill them! kill them all! kill every man, woman, and child! kill Roman Catholics as well as Albigenses, for when they are dead the Lord knows how to pick out his own!" Sixty thousand innocent persons were there murdered in cold blood.

A bloody monster, called Simon de Montfort, was specially commissioned by the pope to exterminate these harmless people, and most savagely did he execute the abominable task placed in his hands. This de Montfort was called the "avenger of the church," and his army of bloody murderers, which he drew from the various Christian nations of Europe, was termed the "Holy Army." He visited many towns and localities, spreading death and destruction wherever he went. He performed all conceivable enormities, and executed those unfortunate people in every imaginable way. He caused the brains of men, women, and children to be dashed out by hurling them from precipices; many were burnt to death, and great numbers of them were thrown into wells and heavy stones thrown upon them. The noses of many were cut off, their eyes gouged out, their bones broken in many cases, and their bodies mutilated in the most shocking manner. Farmers and laborers were slaughtered in the fields where they were at work, and the women were killed in their own homes after the brains of their little ones were dashed out before their eyes or their bodies slashed with knives. This bloody persecution was kept up by this incarnate fiend for over twenty years.

The Duke of Alva laid waste the Netherlands, and literally deluged that land with blood. Fifty thousand people, it is estimated, were there cruelly murdered in the name of religion.

But probably the massacre of St. Bartholomew in August 1572 was the most bloody and infamous of all the persecutions of a bloody church. In Paris alone 60,000 Huguenots were massacred in three days' time, and in all France not less than 100,000 were murdered in the name of Jesus and his religion. The Seine was literally filled with dead bodies, and the blood of men, women, and children absolutely flowed in streams. But that carnival of blood pleased Pope Gregory XIII. immensely. Rome rang with rejoicings. The guns of the Castle of Angelo gave forth a joyous salute. Bells sounded from every tower, and bonfires blazed in every street throughout all hours of the night. A te deum of thanks was chanted in the church of St. Louis, and the pope ordered a medal to be struck to commemorate the glorious Christian achievement.

The same persecuting spirit found its way in England and Scotland and Ireland, and was encouraged by first the Catholics and then by the Protestants as they chanced to be in power. In the short reign of "bloody Mary," in England, continuing less than six years, she signed the death warrants of nearly three hundred people. Conspicuous among them were John Rogers, Bishop Hooper, Bishop Latimer, Archbishop Cranmer, Bishop Ridley, and others. But fortunately death executed her own death warrant, and she went where she afflicted the people of the earth no more.

In the reign of her sister, Queen Elizabeth, the tables were turned; the Protestants came into power and then the Catholics were compelled to take their turn at suffering. She who was called "good Queen Bess" signed about the same number of death-warrants as did her bloodthirsty sister. The torture rack, the block, and the stake were brought into activ service, the most unjust and unequal legislation was enacted against Catholics. The penalty was death to make a new Catholic priest within the kingdom. It was death for a Catholic priest to come into the kingdom from abroad. It was death to harbor a Catholic priest coming from abroad. It was death to confess to such a priest. It was death for a priest to say mass. It was death for anyone to hear mass. It was death to deny, or not to swear if called on, that this woman was the head of the church of Christ, and so on to the end of the chapter.

The persecutions in Ireland, alternately from each branch of the church, were most terrible. Thousands of families were slaughtered within their own houses. In thousands of cases the brains of innocent children were dashed out before the eyes of their parents and then the parents made to meet a horrible death. Thousands were burnt, thousands were thrown into rivers and drowned, and great numbers were buried alive. Ripping open the bowels of women was a favorit source of amusement to those bloody-handed Christians. And most unjust and oppressiv laws were passed against adherents of the parent church.

It was much the same in Scotland, though the number, of the slain in that country were not so great as in Ireland.

It was the same in Germany; thousands were there put to death in the most cruel manner at the command of the church. It was the same in Spain and Portugal; here the holy Inquisition did its infernal work. Under the ministration alone of Inquisitor-General Torquemada it is estimated that 97,371 were executed in the various horrible modes which those Christian persecutors knew so well how to employ; 10,220 were burnt alive; 4,000 were killed in secret dungeons; besides as many as 100,000 were most cruelly tortured but whose lives were not absolutely taken, but who were left in a condition worse than death. Some of the successors of this church butcher were nearly as bad. The auto da fé was an appendage of the Inquisition, and in the aggregate many thousands of innocent people were by it burnt alive.

Under the name of witchcraft inconceivable enormities were committed and kept up by the church for hundreds of years and in nearly all the countries of Europe. Thousands upon thousands of unfortunate people were subjected to the most inhuman cruelties and deaths because somebody had charged them with being witches or bewitched. The horrors thus perpetrated can never be fully known.

The case of the unfortunate physician Michael Servetus, who was cruelly burnt to death by a slow fire of green wood by John Calvin in Genoa, October 27, 1553, is well remembered. His crime was indulging in a certain amount of free thought and free speech He said he did not believe Jesus was the eternal God, the creator of heaven and earth.

Giordano Bruno was an eminent Freethinker, scientist, and philosopher—just such a wise and good man as the church would not tolerate. For this, and this only, he was condemned and burnt at the stake in the year 1600, after languishing two years in the torture dungeons of Rome.

Lucilio Vanini was another eminent philosopher and Freethinker who felt to the utmost the cruel power of the church. Because he dared to be true to his own convictions he was denounced by "holy" Father Garnasse. He was brought to trial before the Inquisition, condemned to hav his tongue cut out and he burnt alive. This terrible sentence was carried into execution February 19, 1619, in the Place St. Etienne, Toulouse, and while he was still a young man.

The great astronomer and philosopher, Galileo, came near meeting the same cruel fate. His clear mind had readily embraced the truth brought to light by Copernicus—that the earth is a globe, turns daily on its axis, and annually makes a circuit round the sun, which is the center of the solar system. This is one of the grandest discoveries ever made, and Galileo's accurate mind and scientific investigations threw much additional light upon the subject, and he became thoroughly convinced that Copernicus was right. But the church seeing that the promulgation of that great truth must ultimately strike a death blow to the central superstition upon which it is established, undertook to crush it and its advocate by the cruelties and terrors of the Inquisition. Thus the inventor of the telescope was charged with being a heretic, and was, in his old age, summoned before the Inquisition in 1633. By the most cruel course of conduct the good old man, after months of cruel confinement, and at the threat of torture and death, to save his life, was compelled to abjure the truth that the earth moves round the sun. But as soon as he was released from his terror he reiterated the great truth that the earth moves.

In enlightened England, many men in later years who dared to exercise freedom of thought, and to publish and sell Freethought books, hav been subjected to cruel imprisonment. If the punishment of death was withheld, it was not because the spirit of persecution had left the church, or that her hatred toward heretics and Freethinkers had materially lessened, but because of the increase in intelligence and education and the advance civilization had made; not that the spirit of the church had changed, but that her power was grown less. Since heresy has somewhat ceased to be a crime punishable with death, blasphemy has been a favorit charge upon which to arraign Freethinkers.

Rev. S. Johnson was whipped from Newgate to Tyburn, London, and pilloried, for blasphemy, December 1, 1683.

Mr. Patmon was brought to trial for having a copy of Thomas Paine's works in his possession, July 15, 1789.

Thomas Paine was tried in London for writing the "Rights of Man," December 18, 1792. Mr. Phillips was sent to prison the next year for selling the same work.

Messrs. Holt, Payne & Waldron, Robinson Brothers, Pearl & Bilcher, were about the same time brought to trial and conviction for selling some of Paine's works.

Richard Carlisle was convicted of blasphemy November 16, 1819. Seven persons were convicted in the same year for selling the books he published—mostly Paine's works. Carlisle in the same year was convicted and sent to prison for selling Paine's "Age of Reason." Mrs. Jane Carlisle, while her husband was serving out his sentence in prison, was tried for the same offense in 1821. Then Miss Carlisle, sister to Richard, was tried for the same offense.

T. Davidson was convicted of blasphemy in 1850.

J. Watson was convicted for selling Palmer's "Principles" in 1823.

Robert Taylor, a learned Freethinker, was convicted and imprisoned for blasphemy in 1827. He was sent to prison twice.

Richard Carlisle was again sent to prison in 1831 for publishing the Prompter.

Charles Southwell was sent to prison for blasphemy in 1842.

George Jacob Holyoake was tried, convicted, and imprisoned on a charge of blasphemy in 1842. W. Finley was sent to prison on the same charge in the following year.

Matilda Roulfe was imprisoned for blasphemy in 1844.

Edward Truelove, an old bookseller nearly seventy years of age, was, as late as 1878, tried, convicted, and imprisoned for selling Robert Dale Owen's "Moral Physiology," a useful and unobjectionable work. But as he is a Freethinker, and as it is rather late in the day for arrests and trials for blasphemy the charge of obscenity was urged against him. On a similar charge and in the same year the Hon. Charles Bradlaugh and Mrs. Annie Besant were tried and convicted for selling Dr. Charles Knowlton's little work, entitled, "Fruits of Philosophy," a medical and physiological essay. They were sentenced to fine and imprisonment, but fortunately through a defect in the indictment the sentence was set aside and the ignominy and suffering of prison experience was spared them. Mrs. Besant's little daughter, six years of age, was cruelly taken from her, by one of the first courts of London, because she is an athelst.

In the free country to which I belong—the United States—we hav also something in the line of Christian persecution. Abner Kneeland, the founder of the Boston Investigator, was convicted and imprisoned in the city of Boston in the year 1838 for simply saying "he did not believe in the same kind of a God that the Universalists do."

E. B. Foote, Sen., M.D., of New York city, was arrested by Anthony Comstock, the activ agent of the sectarian society, professedly for the Suppression of Vice, but really for perpetuating vice. The Doctor's offense was sending in a sealed envelope by mail such physiological information as every physician is entitled to giv his patients. He was prosecuted under the false charge of obscenity, which both in Europe and America has become the pet charge upon which the church persecutes unbelievers. The Doctor was fined $3,500, the part of the sentence imposing imprisonment, at the urgent request of a large number of his personal friends, being withheld.

John A. Lant was arrested and prosecuted by the same Comstock and the same Vice Society. He was sent to prison for eighteen months at hard Labor, besides to pay a fine. He was the publisher of a weekly radical paper. The offense falsely urged against him was also obscenity.

E. H. Heywood, Massachusetts, also editor of a radical paper and author and publisher of several small works of a radical character, was arrested by the same officious agent of the Vice Society, upon the same charge and with the same result. He was sentenced to prison at hard labor for two years and a fine of two hundred dollars. The President, however, pardoned him out at the expiration of seven months, being fully satisfied that the pamphlet upon which he was convicted was not obscene.

I hav myself also been a victim of the same meddlesome Christian agent, and hav been persecuted by Christian agents. It will, perhaps, be excusable in me if I giv the details of this case.

I am the publisher of a weekly radical paper called THE TRUTH SEEKER, and quite a list of radical books, pamphlets, tracts, etc. I hav been sufficiently outspoken to stir up the ire of the clergy and leading Christians in our country, and they had long entertained the desire to silence me and destroy my business. The best way how to do it, was discussed in the meetings of the Young Men's Christian Association. This same dishonorable meddler, Comstock, of the Vice Society undertook the contract of destroying me. He called at my place, looked over my tracts and pamphlets to see what he could find upon which he could base his favorite charge of obscenity. He selected two tracts—an Open Letter to Jesus Christ, of a polemic character, and small scientific tract on the propagation of marsupials. These he deemed sufficient. They were ordered by him in a false name and they were sent to him by mail. In due time a warrant was taken out for my arrest and on Nov. 12, 1877, a United States marshall took me before a commissioner of the U. S. court. I was placed under $1,500 bail, which was given, otherwise I should hav been locked up in prison. A day was set for the examination, which was once or twice continued. The matter of the arrest being brought to the knowledge of the government at Washington, the case was ordered to be dismissed.

Comstock was offended that he was thus foiled and he was not long laying his plans for another arrest. Being a bookseller and having calls for Mr. Heywood's pamphlet, called "Cupid's Yokes," I kept it for sale—a semi-physiological essay on the relations of the sexes, much of the same character as the one upon which Mr. Bradlaugh and Mrs. Besant were arrested and convicted in London. I sold them as freely as any book, to all who called or sent for them. Comstock in another false name sent for one and duly received it, and in due time I was again arrested, an indictment was found against me by the grand jury of the U. S. court. My trial was set for March 1879, but was put off for one month, when it took place, before a Christian judge and jury and I was allowed to introduce no evidence to prove by authors, publishers, booksellers, writers, and literary men that the book was not obscene, my conviction was easy. My conviction was undoubtedly a foregone conclusion, I was found guilty. The case was appealed to a higher court, but the three Christian judges, one of whom was Judge C. L. Benedict before whom I was tried, refused me a second hearing. I was accordingly sentenced to imprisonment in the Albany Penitentiary for thirteen months at hard labor, and to pay a fine of $300, although there is not an obscene word in the book I sold and though thousands were sold openly before I was arrested, and thousands of them hav been sold since. I was at once taken to a city prison, and my friends made a great effort to secure my release. Petitions to the President were circulated in various parts of the country. These were signed by over 200,000 people and nearly 10,000 private letters were written to the President asking him to release me. Probably there were never petitions with so many names ever sent in to any president or ruler asking for any man's pardon, and never so many letters written for a similar purpose. But it all did no good. My Christian enemies were also equally activ. Counter-petitions, asking that I be not released flowed in from every direction. Bishops, preachers, churches, Sunday-schools, etc., etc., interested themselvs against me. My enemies were more numerous and powerful than my friends; they demanded that I be kept in prison and the president listened to them and treated my friends with disregard. I was consequently, after waiting in the New York prison nearly eight weeks, transferred, to the penitentiary at Albany, where I was set at work at shoemaking. Cell life was very irksome, and I easily felt the great injustice that had been done me in taking me from home, wife, friends, and business. But after all though the prison in which I was confined is called the most severe in the United States my sufferings were slight compared with what hundreds of thousands before me hav been compelled to endure.

It has been said by some of my friends that I was sentenced to prison to silence my pen for a year at least, but that they failed in their object, for I wrote far more than I would hav done had I remained at liberty, and I trust it is not a little damaging to the cause of superstition. I wrote a series of letters while in Ludlow-street jail, which made a volume of six hundred pages. After being removed to the Albany prison I wrote two octavo volumes of nearly a thousand pages each, on the "Gods and Religions of the World," probably the largest work ever written in prison. Friends are speaking highly of it. Four months hav passed by since I served out my sentence. Hundreds of copies of the work hav been sent over my own country, and all who hav read it speak of it in the kindest terms.

Let it be hoped that though my enemies intended that my days would be ended in prison, what I produced there will liv many years after I am dead; that the cause of Freethought and Rationalism will increase in all parts of the civilized world, and that the rule of priestcraft, intolerance, and religious oppression will be banished forever from the earth.

---

How can we expect a harvest of thought who hav not had a seed-time of character?

Sexual Intemperance.—No. 7.

"I believe every word you write on this subject," says one correspondent. "I believe every man who commits a rape upon a woman, be he her husband or any other person should be deprived of his power to do so in future by the surgeon's knife," writes another. "All sexual intercourse is a sin," says a third. "The sexual functions ought to be enjoyed and used as not abusing them, but people ought to be wise enough to govern the times of conceiving," is the verdict of the fourth. And each is right as viewed from his standpoint. And the man who takes the advantage of a woman's all-absorbing affection and love for him by asking her to submit to what she knows and he knows saps the foundations of life, vigor, strength, and joy, is but little better than than he who compels by brute force. And it is only by teaching real sexual physiology and temperance that this thing can be brought under subjection. Some few must sacrifice even harmless pleasures (if to them they are harmless) that others may be saved. Thousands might drink an occasional glass of pure wine, beer, or brandy with comparativly little injury to them, and a great amount of gustatory enjoyment, but if by sacrificing this pleasure, and joining a band of teetotalers one can influence hundreds of others, or even one real intemperate, to forsake his cups and become once more a man among men, is it not a grand and admirable self-sacrifice? Now if those noble women of "The Alpha," who are ridiculed and sneered at, who are called "interesting dames in their dotage," "cold, spiritless, dried-up spinsters, looking through the spectacles of impotency or withered age" can create a new era of thought and action that shall save wives and mothers from sickness, disease, and death, and cruel impositions; and husbands, sons, and fathers from being brutes and sensualists, filled with disease and lust; they can well afford to be slandered, maligned, and held up as objects of ridicule; and right here let me say that those I know personally of those Alphaites, are as fresh, sweet, lovable, and attractiv as any class of women I hav ever beheld, and are to be matched in intelligence by few of their sisters in the outside world. No, no, my readers, it will not answer to stifle this great question under a cloud of bantering ridicule. It must come to the front, and be met by fair and square arguments. Stand or fall on its own merits. We all know intemperance always grows out of temperate tippling, out of "enjoying" with the proviso of not overstepping the bonds of "moderation." But read the record and ask yourselvs if there must not be bounds set and adhered to if safety is expected. And in this question of sexuality there is but one possible boundary, and that is, the legitimate and natural use of the function—propagation of our kind! But while the few who see this, and for their own sakes, and for the hope of endowing their children with pure minds and setting a good example to others, liv out the real law of nature in all its fullness, we do not expect this to be done by the masses any more than we think it probable that the millions who daily overeat will abstain for health's sake when the tempting viands are before them, and appetite craves, and the taste enjoys. But we believe in disseminating facts and giving all a chance to slowly improve, and some few to accept in its entirety the system of sexual perfection.

Perhaps the correspondent who says "people ought to be wise enough to govern the times of conceiving," has given us the one point that will work most present good under present circumstances. The great need of some check to over-population is what is now agitating all philanthropists and thinkers who hav ever given the question any sober, earnest thought. Matthew Arnold, a good scholar and deep reasoner, a man of culture, of tenderness, and broad, wide charity and benevolent feeling, says:

"A man's children are not really sent any more than the pictures upon his wall, or the horses in his stable are sent; and to bring people into the world when one cannot afford to keep them and oneself decently and not too precariously, or to bring more of them into the world than one can afford to keep thus, is by no means an accomplishment of the divine will or a fulfilment of nature's simplest laws, but is just as wrong, just as contrary to reason, as for a man to hav horses, or carriages, or pictures when he cannot afford them, or to hav more of them than he can afford; and in the one case as in the other, the larger scale on which the violation of reason's law is practiced, and the longer it is persisted in, the greater must be the confusion and final trouble. . . . For every individual man, and for every society of men, the possession and multiplication of children, like the possession and multiplication of horses and pictures, is to be accounted good or bad, not in itself, but with reference to this object and the progress toward it. And as no man is to be excused in having horses or pictures, if his having them hinders his own or others' progress toward perfection and makes them lead a servil and ignoble life, so is no man to be excused for having children if his having them makes him or others lead this."

Plain thoughts of this kind are surely the spontaneous products of our consciousness, when it is allowed to play freely and disinterestedly upon the actual facts of our social condition. As Mr. Arnold is largely read by both Christian and Infidel, we may be excused from quoting him at length, but it is to be regretted that he gave us no glimpse of his idea how we were to best avoid having children and best to regulate the size of our families. Still we hav his verdict that it is wrong to bring any child into existence if its being hinders our own or others' progress toward perfection; and as to the means of prevention, we must let science and the will of the people decide upon them. Liberty of speech and free press, free mails and study, thought and agitation, will giv us the desired boon in their own good time.

"In all thy ways hast thou e'er done
The best thy hand can do?
If so, I'm sure thy crown is won,
Fadeless and pure and true."

Snowville, Va. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 11, 1880.

Letter from Europe.—No. 3.

LONDON, Aug. 18, 1880.

MY DEAR FRIENDS: I will tax your time to read something more of what I view in this great city. I find a great deal to be interested in, and only hope I may interest you a tithe as much in the description of it as I am in the seeing. But that is not to be expected. I write you in haste, almost taking the hours that should be devoted to sleep; for I am out every day till 9 P.M., or later, and return to my hotel as thoroughly wearied as one could desire to be. There must also be a great difference between seeing curiosities and reading dull descriptions of them.

I think I said near the close of my last letter that I went out into the district of Islington to find Dr. Andrews. I will say here that the city is divided into districts something like the wards of our cities, and the names of these districts are constantly used to indicate the locality. Thus our hotel is in Bloomsbury, the other districts being Finsbury, Southampton, Stepney, Bethnal, Old Ford, Bormondsey, Camberwell, Newington, Lambeth, Walwor, Kensington, Paddington, Pimlico, St. John's Wood, etc. As the streets are mostly short and irregular, not running straight for any distance, and hardly ever at right angles, this division seems necessary. The original city of London was small, comparatively, and the additions that were made retained the names by which they had been previously called. It is much more difficult to find one's way from one part to another than in New York or Philadelphia. The street corners are only occasionally marked, as with our cities, and to increase the difficulties some streets change their name every few blocks. And what seems strange is that of the thousands of people you may ask where certain streets are none can inform you. They know well the location of the districts named, but are in an English fog as regards many of the minor streets.

We started out on Sunday morning for the South Place Chapel to hear Moncure D. Conway. It was some three miles distant, and nobody could tell us where South Place was. We asked numerous persons to direct us, but they could not until we learned that it was in Finsbury, to which place any one could easily direct us. We hav now provided ourselves with maps, and find our way more readily.

While in Islington on Saturday, though I did not see Dr. Andrews, I succeeded in finding a good many other people. On my return I strolled through the market-places, and was much interested in observing the manners of the natives. Thousands were out, it being Saturday night, to buy their supplies for Sunday. The vegetables, meats, fruits, etc., are sold on the street, much as in our Vesey street near Washington Market. Every dealer had a stand or table whereon his goods, which he was trying his utmost to dispose of, were displayed to the best advantage. Almost everything in the way of fruit and vegetables sells by the pound. Apples are twopence a pound; plums, twopence to fourpence, according to quality; tomatoes, a penny per pound; potatoes, three pounds for twopence; onions, a penny a pound; three eggs for twopence halfpenny; roasts of beef from sixpence to ninepence; pork about the same; mutton some cheaper. The money, of course, seems odd to a stranger. A penny is two cents of our money; a shilling equals our quarter of a dollar, so twopence halfpenny is our five cents.

Our coin is passed with much difficulty here. We have to supply ourselves with the coin of the realm, and then we can get rid of it just as fast as we please. They have here a lively appreciation of money, and once paying does not always suffice. If you go into a restaurant for a meal you pay the price, but the waiter who serves you invariably expects his fee for attending to you; he has to be paid the same as the proprietor, and he demands it with the same authority. The sums thus picked up by them often amount to more than their wages. I was told of one waiter in a good restaurant who pays the proprietor two pounds, or ten dollars, per week for the chance of working there, his perquisites being ample to justify his doing so. Everybody is expected to pay the waiter at eating-houses, hotels, boarding-houses, and almost everywhere; even the conductors on the omnibuses expect an extra fee for themselves. I inquired of a man the way to a certain place, and he followed me and asked me what I was going to give him for telling me.

The marketers in Islington were very anxious to sell me their onions, tomatoes, cauliflowers, beans, and squashes, but I could not make it convenient to buy. Could I have done so I would gladly have bought them all out and let them go home. The vegetables looked fine. The onions were unusually large and fair; the potatoes looked well; the cauliflowers were magnificent; the squashes were good; the cucumbers were nearly a foot long, but were crooked and ill-shaped. They are not the same variety cultivated with us. In fruits the English are immensely behind us. I have not seen an apple fit to eat; the pears are indifferent, and not a peach nor a melon have I seen. When I think of the thousands of bushels of peaches now pouring into New York every day, with the hundreds of wagon loads of melons of all kinds, I cannot help commiserating the Londoners for their deprivations. The fruit-stands here are miserable institutions, and compare very poorly with ours. Plums are tolerably abundant at fourpence a pound, but they are rather small and flat in favor. I was so reckless as to buy two apples, and I am sure they would make any American pig squeal, they were so sour. The English beat the world in gooseberries, but they are not in season now, which I regret. I am told their winter apples are good in flavor, but their early fruit is certainly most inferior. The better and larger portions they receive come from France, also a large share of the eggs and butter sold in this market are produced in France. The English eggs, however, are freshest and command better prices. In my Saturday night stroll I saw what I never saw before—two female auctioneers. They were selling articles of female apparel, both new and second-hand. Women only were listening to them. However, being somewhat interested, I made one of the group for a short time; but as I did not see that I could make any use of skirts, polonaises, dresses, petticoats, etc., I did not bid nor accept any of the good offers made.

Let me just here say a word about the fashion of ladies' dresses here. They seem to use just as little of the material in making the skirt as possible—so much so I would think it would impede their freedom in walking. Our ladies have the "pullback" fashion, but the style here is not just like it, though perhaps the same result is reached. The skirts are very narrow, the body is closely fitted, and the underwear seems scant in quantity. The outline of the form is well displayed. The ladies walk in a very business-like way, with head erect, like a steer in a cornfield, and they take rather long steps, amounting sometimes almost to a stride. They undoubtedly get on the faster for it, and are good walkers.

The ladies here indulge in some habits that many American ladies would not be seen practicing. There are great numbers of drinking places, called public bars, which are in part attended by female bartenders, and ladies go in and take their brown stout, ale, gin, or Scotch whisky side by side with men, the same as they would make their purchases in a grocery or dry-goods store. It seems to be regarded here just as proper for a woman to go into a drinking place as a man. All the restaurants have liquors of all kinds, and ladies patronize them the same as gentlemen. It is also extremely common here in hotels, boarding-houses, and families to have from one to half a dozen kinds of liquors on the table at dinner, and for ladies as well as men to make use of them. Our hotel, however, is a temperance house of the strictest kind, and I have not seen a spoonful of wine or spirits here. It is very common to see respectable women going into the drinking-places, either with vessels or to take a "sniff," the same as men. This almost shocked me at first, but they certainly have the same right to drink that men have, and it, perhaps, is not improper that they should be equally open about it. I think far more liquor is drank here than with us. People have it in their families and take it with them when they travel, and even on short trips. I have seen a mother giving her child a taste of the bottle while waiting in the depot for the arrival of a train. This does not seem right, but still I see very little drunkenness here. All seem to use the article, though often in moderation. The drinking-houses are fitted up neatly, and are very orderly conducted. The bar occupies more than half of the room, and the places for customers are divided into three or four compartments surrounding the bar, so that a company occupying one compartment are not seen by those in another compartment. Boisterous talk and uproars in these places are not common here. If a man becomes disorderly he is taken in charge at once by the police. Law and order are in the ascendant, and the city is remarkably quiet for so large a place. But too much intoxicating liquor is drank, too much money is expended in that way. Long steps will have to be taken before total abstinence is the rule here. It will not be seen till another age.

It was a disappointment on Sunday morning not to be able to hear Mr. Conway. I listened to him in Cincinnati over twenty years ago, and I wished to hear him in London. I learn that he is on a tour to America. Instead of hearing a sermon we saw some of the sights of the town, among which was the city monument, build in the district which most suffered by the great fire over two hundred years ago. We also saw the exterior of the Royal Exchange, the Bank of England, and other banking institutions. Some of them are fine specimens of architecture.

A word as to the buildings of London. Many of the public edifices are very fine, but as a rule they seem low and of but few stories. As valuable as ground is here, it would seem the builders would be well justified in carrying the buildings higher. Three stories is the average height; some are four, and a few more. In capacious, fine-looking stores, our American cities are far ahead of London. The show-windows are gotten up in good style, but the rest of the stores is not strikingly attractive or large. There is nothing in London in the way of business houses that begins to compare with Broadway or with the better parts of Philadelphia, Chicago, and other American cities. The dwelling-houses here are decidedly inferior in appearance. They are usually three stories high, of brick, and built in the plainest possible style. One may ride for miles in many quarters of the city and not see a house with stone window-copings, caps, or a cornice of any kind. There is not one dwelling in a thousand that has anything else than a plain, square window, without the slightest ornamentation.

The color of the buildings is also peculiar. They seem brushed over with such a stain as half a pound of lampblack in a gallon of linseed oil would make; this gives the building a dark lead color, monotonous and uniform. But few buildings are painted with two or three coats; no red paints, but few yellow, and no brown stone fronts, as with us. I presume the lead color stain or wash I speak of is best adapted to this city, for from the humidity of the atmosphere, smoke, etc., the stone public buildings become of the same dark, dull color, bordering on black. In cheerfulness, brightness, highth, taste, and richness the dwellings in the better parts of New York, Philadelphia, and other American cities far excel those of London. There are fine residences in the West End, but the proportion is small when compared with the total number of buildings.

The streets and sidewalks are excellent. The streets especially are smoother than ours, some having the Ross pavement, some the wooden blocks, and some a kind of concrete. The stone blocks are the most used, and make a very smooth street. The carriages run much more quietly than ours. New York is a much noisier city than London.

There are no street railroads in London proper. In the outer districts there are a few, which are called tram-ways. The cars have seats on the top, and as many ride there as below. Omnibuses are very numerous, and lines run to all parts of the city. They also have a deck, and more ride on the top than inside. Iron ladders in front and rear afford the means of getting up and down. Ladies often ride on deck. The chance for sight-seeing is there far better than inside. There are also thousands of cabs and hansoms. I have seen their numbers as high as 12,000. Hansoms are two-wheeled carriages with a top. The driver's seat is behind and well elevated, so that his body is above the top. They carry two persons. They are on springs and ride easily. A large proportion of the travel in the city is by the Metropolitan Railway—the underground railroad. This makes a circuit on the north side of the Thames, of some twelve or fifteen miles or more, under the most populous parts of the city, and is decidedly a great institution. Trains of eight of ten cars pass every two or three minutes, and an immense amount of passenger and freight business is done on them. Depots are all along at regular distances, and are well-lighted by sunlight when it can be let in, and by gas if the sun cannot be made available. The ascent and descent to the depots are by stairways of commodious dimensions. The road is double track, of course, and the trains are constantly going in both directions. The cost of construction was enormous, being £1,000,000, or $5,000,000 per mile, but it is a great success. London could hardly get along without it. Our elevated roads in New York, are, however, much more cheerful. Riding in the earth is a gloomy mode of conveyance. The fares are not unreasonable. Third-class is about two or three cents a mile.

In addition to the underground railway are many miles of railway above ground, and generally occupying a circuit outside the first mentioned, though crossing the Thames on bridges at different places. The entire railway travel of London is indeed immense.

There are so many things of great interest to be seen that one hardly knows where to begin to look, and I scarcely know where to begin to write about them. Let me say that the city of London is about twelve miles across from east to west and from north to south, and is still growing. It has fully 4,000,000 of people. We think New York is a pretty good sized city, but it would require nearly four such cities to make one the size of London. The Thames, running irregularly from the west to east, divides it into two halves, but not equal in size. The northern side is the largest, and contains the most objects of interest. The river is spanned by six or eight bridges at a distance of half a mile or so from each other, resting on five to nine heavy pieces each, some of them being of very solid and rich stone work, and some round columns, looking like iron, probably eight feet in diameter. London bridge is the lowest down the river, and is the heaviest and strongest of all of them. It has five piers in the river, the spans being about 200 feet each. On the old London bridge were many large houses, but when the new bridge was constructed these were omitted. It is of gray granite, and is one of the firmest and grandest bridges in the world, though not nearly as long as many bridges. The Thames is a noble river, and is of immense value to London, both from a business and pleasure point of view. On a New Yorker's approaching it, his first impression will be that it is vastly inferior to the Hudson, between New York and Jersey City, and the East river between the Battery and Harlem. I judge it would require about twenty of such rivers as the Thames to make a river equal to the Hudson at New York. But the Thames is sufficient to bear to the great city of London the largest amount of shipping received by any one city in the world. None of the masted vessels or large steamers ascend above London bridge, but for over five miles below there are constantly an immense number of ships, barks, schooners, and steamers loading and unloading for and from all parts of the world. The heavy ships can only come in with the tide, which is very great at London, being twelve to fifteen feet, which I think is much more than with us. Why there should be such a difference I am not prepared to say. I think London is some fifty or sixty miles above the mouth of the Thames.

Not far from the river, among many distinguished buildings, St. Paul's Cathedral is prominent. It is the largest cathedral of the Protestant church. The interior is more plain than many Catholic cathedrals, but the decorations are extensive and consist of a remarkable amount of statuary and memorial tablets. Of these may be mentioned those of Howard the philanthropist, Turner the painter, Sir John Moore, Sir Christopher Wren, Benjamin West, and Sir Joshua Reynolds. In the crypt are the remains of the Duke of Wellington, and the pharaphernalia of his funeral, including the funeral-car made of captured cannon, and weighing many tons.

The tower of the cathedral is said to be three hundred and fifty feet in highth, and the body of the building is about four hundred feet in length. Mr. Rawson attended service there in the afternoon while I was seeing the beauties of nature at Kew Gardens, which interested me far more than anything Canon Lyddon, who presides at the cathedral, could possibly say. Mr. Rawson represented the speaking as being dull.

The approaches to the cathedral are noted. The thoroughfare immediately around it is known as St. Paul's churchyard. It was a burying-ground, but long after being filled with bodies the monuments and tombstones were removed and the earth leveled for practical use. Many of the bodies were doubtless removed. The longer side, a carriage way, is the Bow, the shorter, a foot passage, is the String. Between the churchyard and Newgate street is Paternoster Row, greatly distinguished for hundreds of years as the headquarters for publishers and the book trade. Here are the offices of Thomas Nelson & Son, and Blackwood's Magazine, and in this vicinity most of Shakspere's plays were originally published. Many of the old publishing houses have now removed from this very narrow street, and the place is not so noted for publishers as it once was. It is so narrow that horses and drays are seldom seen there, the larger portion of the goods being moved by hand-carts. In close vicinity to St. Paul's is the quiet little nook called the "Amen Corner," and not far away are the Old Bailey and Newgate, places for holding criminal courts immortalized by the pen of Charles Dickens. Many thousands of poor wretches have been convicted aud sentenced there. Going up Cheapside, one of the noted retail streets of London, is the great building known as the General Post-office; but great as it is, it does not equal ours in New York. Still further on towards the west is Fleet street, where are also a great number of publishers, and among them Charles Watts & Co., Freethought publishers, including the Secular Review, founded by George Jacob Holyoake, Fleet street, runs into the Strand, also noted for its publishing houses. Running from it is a narrow passage called Johnson's Court, where Samuel Johnson once lived and did much of his literary work. Continuing up Cheapside, the Royal Exchange is reached, and this is decidedly the business or monetary center of London. A great amount of travel, both by foot and in busses and carriages, passes constantly through this quarter.

The Bank of England covers eight acres of ground, and the other banking buildings in the vicinity must occupy as much more. The Bank of England is a fortress within itself, it having no windows. It is guarded constantly by national soldiers in red coats. At night forty or fifty are stationed there, many of them being on the roof. In case of an insurrection the Bank of England would naturally be one of the first places attacked. As there are many wagon loads of gold coin in its cellars and vaults it is guarded with the greatest care. The capital of the bank is $70,000,000, and it employs nearly a thousand clerks. In the vaults are piles of gold like iron in a large iron store. The gold is conveyed in kegs and sacks, and is loaded into wagons or drays by means of machinery. In one of the many rooms is a wonderful little machine which weighs 35,000 gold pieces per day and picks out every one which is deficient in weight.

In the Royal Exchange are some of the oldest insurance companies in the world, and among them "Lloyds," the great ship insurers, whose "List" is authority everywhere in shipping circles. Near the Exchange is a fine statue of George Peabody, the distinguished American merchant and millionaire. On the opposite of the open space is the Mansion House, the official residence of the Lord Mayor of London. At his princely entertainments the highest nobles of the land are wont to gather.

But I must pass over many noticeable features in this locality and return to my Sunday excursion up the Thames. Mr. Rawson, not feeling very well, and being somewhat familiar with the river scenes, returned to our boarding-house while I took a Thames river steamer at London Bridge up the river for Chelsea, a distance of four or five miles. These steamers are open and well supplied with seats, giving the passengers the best of opportunities of viewing all the objects of interest lining the banks of the river on either side. It is perhaps hardly proper to say banks of the river; walls would doubtless be more correct. The walls are massive, twenty feet in hight, and of hewn stone. On the north side this wall continues for a long distance, and is called the Embankment. It is a great place of resort. Many trees are growing there, and it is much like a long, narrow park. Thousands go there to watch other thousands constantly passing up and down the river, and among them boat club men in their swift rowboats. Here they are practicing and racing much of the time, especially on Sundays. Some great boat-races have taken place on the Thames. I saw many of these fancy rowboats, fully manned and indulging in their favorite sport.

The steamers pass under all the bridges, the pipes being low enough to allow it. They have landings at short distances, and people are coming on and getting off all the while. In ordinary cities which stand upon rivers the immediate vicinity of the river is the most undesirable part, but it is not so in London. The House of Parliament stands close to the river, as also does Westminster Abbey. The House of Parliament is many hundred feet in length, with wings at each end; it is of a peculiar kind of architecture, and abounds in external ornamentation and decorations carved in stone. It has a very ginger-bread appearance, but is very pretty. The main part, fronting on the river, has five minaretted towers, but the tallest towers are on the wings; they are square, massive, and ornamental. The taller one has a town clock and a chime of bells. There is much about this noted structure to admire.

We passed the obelisk, called Cleopatra's needle, brought from Egypt, which stands close by the side of the river. It is a square monolith, I should think somewhere about one hundred feet in highth and covered with Egyptian hieroglyphic inscriptions. Its great antiquity and the distance from which it was brought invests it with great interest. Upon arriving at Chelsea I found a steamer about to leave for Kew, where the noted botanical and floral gardens are located. This was a ride of nine miles more, taking us without the city. I can never describe with appropriate accuracy the beauties and wonders of the Kew Gardens. I judge that they comprise, including the grounds occupied by ornamental and deciduous trees, flowering beds, ornamental grounds, shrubbery, greenhouses, museums, etc., not less than two or three hundred acres. It is beautifully laid off in straight and serpentine walks, lovely beds of variegated flowers, plots of curious plants, far too numerous to mention, even had I it in my power to do so. The science of landscape gardening is there carried to its highest perfection. We New Yorkers think our Central Park possesses very attractive features, but it does not compare in exquisiteness and beauty with the Kew Gardens. The most lovely contrasts are produced in the numerous beds by plants of different colors. Many of them are on mounds, oblongs, parallelograms, serpentine beds, etc. A mass of scarlet flowering geraniums in the center, a treble row of flowers of another color, then perhaps a row of the deep crimson colored plant, Iresine, with a row again of the most curious, light-green, thick-leafed, and very clean-looking Eschevaria. The contrasts are beautiful and all the plants most interesting. Again, were large beds of Dahlias in all their magnificent varieties, and numerous other beautiful flowers and plants whose names I cannot give, embracing all colors, styles, and varieties, and all most tastefully arranged.

In the department of medicinal plants I found much to interest me. The assortment is most extensive, embracing, I judge, nearly all the herbs and plants used in medicine. I found many varieties which I knew, but more that were new to me. The artificial fountains or ponds where plants that grow in water can have their natural element were very interesting. Some of the pots containing such plants stood on ledges, allowing but part of their earth to be in water, while others were completely submerged in water, just according to the proportion of water they require.

The plants and flowers so far named are those which flourish in the open air; besides these are many large greenhouses, extensive and beautiful, where are found, in the highest degree of perfection all the rare and beautiful exotics imaginable. I would like to give something like a correct description of these several greenhouses, but I am not able to do so. I have visited the greenhouses connected with the extensive nurseries in Rochester, N. Y., and which are esteemed marvels of curiosity, but they pale into insignificance compared with those of the Kew Gardens. While passing through these magnificent structures of glass I could hardly help thinking how far the whole place transcended in loveliness any description I ever read of Paradise or the Christian heaven. I was completely charmed during the pleasant hours spent on that most interesting occasion. Let me try to giv a matter-of-fact description of some of the conservatories through which I passed.

The first is the Grecian Conservatory, or Archidious House, so called because it is mainly occupied with this family of plants, many of which are remarkable for their esculent properties, though sometimes combined with a powerful poison. The chocolate or cocoanut tree is found here in various stages and varieties, also the arrow root.

The Temple of the Sun is the name of one of the beautiful conservatories. It was designed by Sir William Chambers; it is of the corinthian order, having eight fluted columns, the frieze and other portions being richly decorated with lyres, laurel sprigs, and wreaths of flowers.

The Tropical Ferney is particularly interesting. It contains a varied and interesting collection of tropical and tree ferns, and nothing can exceed the varied beauty and elegance of their leaves or fronds. Among them are several species of the beautiful Adiantum, or Maiden-hair Fern; also the bird's nest fern of New Holland, in which the cockatoos lay their eggs. Conspicuous on entering may be observed the Great Stag's Horn fern (Platycerium grande), a native of Australia, where it grows on the trunks of trees. All the ferns in this house were very luxuriant, and many of them more than twenty feet in hight. It has to be kept very warm, and the doors are kept carefully closed, even on a warm day. The heat in there was almost oppressive, and is kept up by artificial means.

The next house is for ferns of more temperate climates. It contains a choice collection that do not require such a high state of heat.

Conservatory No. 4 is remarkable for the exquisite beauty and variety of foliage, and the gorgeous splendor, artistic combinations, and skilful contrast of colors of the various and costly plants which here blossom, garlanding, festooning, and adorning the crystal walls, roof, and center of this most beautiful and unique "Temple of Flora." I saw many magnificent fuchsias more than twenty-five feet in hight and in full flower. A more beautiful sight can hardly be imagined.

The Succulent House is a very large structure of glass in iron frames, erected in 1856, and is largely occupied with a great variety of aloe, agave, and cactus class of plants, which form three magnitudes, and the imposing appearance of their pyramids of flowers arrest the eye, and form a singular and characteristic feature of the tropical regions in which they are found. The cactus tribe is perhaps one of the most singular of all vegetable forms. It is almost exclusively American, and presents a most striking contrast to the vegetation of the tropics, and includes plants of the most different forms and magnitude, from gigantic masses of vegetable matter weighing more than a ton to species so small as to get between the toes of a dog. Some are vegetable fountains, others yield wood that is incorruptible. The plants of this large class are leafless, and the stem which is developed in the most varied and eccentric shapes, apparently to supply the place of foliage, presents a character little in accordance with the usual idea of plants. I noticed some of the slimmer varieties, ten to fifteen feet in

(Concluded on page 584.)

Discussion.

What Objections to Christianity?

MR. MAIR'S FIFTH LETTER.—CONTINUED.

I have not yet been able to take up your last letter. I will follow it paragraph by paragraph, although a great portion is entirely out of place and belongs to future propositions. You say, "We have the narratives, or what purport to be the narratives, of four persons who gave to the world all the facts, or what purport to be facts, relative to the reputed founder of Christianity. What then do we see?" We see in the first place that this is a false statement. Besides the gospels of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, we have also the independent testimony of Paul, and also as to the translation, crucifixion, and resurrection of Christ, the separate testimony of Peter. If you are thus careless in your deductions from things which you can see with your own eyes, we need not be surprised at greater blunders in things that are "spiritually discerned," and I might remark that the Christian has infallible testimony, above the testimony of men, in the witness of the Spirit of God with his spirit of the certainty "of those things which are most surely believed among us." You are right in believing that the conception of Christ (if true) "was the most remarkable event that ever took place in the world," but that the process of his conception needed to be described "carefully," "minutely," and "with the most exact particularity," I deny. It would not benefit you to know any thing more about it than what is revealed in the Bible, which was not at all written to satisfy human curiosity. You cannot reason out your own conception "minutely" and "with the most exact particularity," yet I presume that does not make you doubt your birth or existence, or make any change whatever in your calculations or actions.

You go on to say as to the miraculous conception of Christ, "Two of the narrators say not a word about it, and pay no more attention to it than if there was not a word of truth in it, or that it was not of the slightest consequence, whereas the other two allude to it in the most unsatisfactory manner and disagree widely with each other." I shall have to say that your charge of a wide disagreement between Matthew and Luke is false also unless you bring proof. Perhaps, though, your proof is this, "Matthew rests his version of the affair upon a dream which he asserts Joseph had, while Luke bases it upon a vison which he states Mary had." Well this is not true either. Matthew does not "rest" nor Luke "base" his version as alleged. The fact would have been just as true if neither Joseph nor Mary had had their dream and vision. The Evangelists state the fact of Christ being conceived by the virgin Mary without connection, by the power of the Holy Ghost, and Matthew relates in addition as explaining, not the conception of Christ but the conduct of Joseph, the dream which influenced him, and Luke relates the appearing of an angel to Mary announcing that she was to conceive by the power of the Spirit of God and that "the holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God," which appearance was not a vision. As to the "unreliable character" of his dream, that was for Joseph to determine, not you or me, and I certainly do not found my theory, system, or belief of the conception of Christ either upon Joseph's dream or Mary's "vision" as you call it. The several paragraphs seem to be an attempt to display searching criticism and profound analysis while in reality they are merely shallow sophistry. "Joseph" you say "does not tell us that he dreamed a dream, nor does Mary tell us that she had a vision." Well suppose they had, do you think it would have been any more proof? Then why use the quibble? You ask "what authority has Matthew for saying that sixty years or a hundred and sixty years before, Joseph had a dream? And what authority had Luke for saying that Mary a part of a century, or more than a century before had a vision, and that an angel spoke to her and told her what the Holy Ghost or the Highest was going to do to her?" If they had told you their authority would it have made their narrative any more credible to you? It would not have to me. If the gospels are not their words, but God's, I do not need any further authority if they are not God's words human authority is valueless. But, then, Luke really answers your question as to himself, "Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us even as they delivered them unto us, which from the beginning were eye-witnesses and ministers of the word, it seems good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first, to write."

You continue, "Neither of these worthies make the slightest pretension to having had a revelation in the matter, or that they wrote by inspiration," and you are more happy in your remark this time than heretofore. But is not this silence remarkable? If they had been enthusiasts they would certainly have blazoned forth, like Mohammed and Joseph Smith, for instance, marvelous tales of their inspiration and the revelations given them. They wrote, and millions of millions coming after them found the books they wrote to be divine, and so preserved them. And this is really the argument. If they had claimed to have been inspired, their claim of itself would be no proof. It could not be of any more value than the rest of their writings. If what they wrote is truth, those who are of the truth will recognize and receive it, and God will surely certify his own word. The would-be-witty assertion that "the incongruities and improbabilities of the story are quite as great as little Jack," the giant killer, is filched from Thomas Paine, but neither you nor he can support it.

Your third paragraph reads: "Matthew tells us how when Mary was espoused to Joseph and before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost, whereupon Joseph thought to put her away, and probably would have done so had he not dreamed the matter out," which, not to be too captious, I will admit as a summary of several verses of Matthew. You then go on: "There are several features of the story very far from being clear and intelligible, and some of them may be mentioned. We are not told who found Mary to be with child." What value would it be if we were? "We are not told how it was found to be of the Holy Ghost." What have we to do with this anyway? If Joseph did not believe the angel that might have been a question for him to have put, as it was of some concern to him, but to us not the slightest. For if God assures us that the fact was, I, for one, am not solicitous to pry further than is revealed; nor is it of the slightest moment how the angel knew. You follow on with a series of questions in a spirit of disgusting levity—which I may be excused from quoting—and conclude as follows: "The fact that somebody said two, three, or four generations after the event occurred that Joseph had a dream that satisfied him that the matter was all right is not wholly satisfactory to incredulous people like the Infidels of the present day [It would not be to me either, unless that "somebody" were God]. . . . There is not the slightest proof that a word of it is true, nor could the person who wrote it possibly know whether it was true." What you are asked to believe as to the dream is that Joseph in a vision saw an angel come to him and tell him certain things which he believed and which controlled his actions. As to whether the scriptural statement is true or not I may defer taking that up now. You have not shown that it is not, and your assertion that "the person who wrote it could not possibly know whether it was true," is a mere gratuitous assumption, and really it does not concern me whether he knew so much as whether I know.

Your illustration of the old man and a young wife I am willing to let go for what it is worth. Some of your conclusions though, while totally irrelevant, are correctly drawn, which is a pleasant thing to experience once in a while in reviewing them. I admit that "the laws of nature have not changed a particle in that time, eighteen hundred and eighty years. If it is impossible to-day for a female to be impregnated by a ghost, or without coming in contact with a person of the male sex, it was equally as impossible eighteen hundred and eighty years ago. If it could be done then it can now." I presume the word "ghost" is a flippant allusion to the Holy Ghost (as he is often named in our authorized version, which, in this instance, is not a happy translation of the Greek, I prefer Holy Spirit), by whose power the Virgin Mary conceived. The force of your objection would be, then, that if God cannot now cause a female to conceive without commerce with man, he could not do it eighteen centuries ago. I admit it, as I said. God is certainly no more limited in his power to-day than he was at the commencement of our era. But what is the weight of the objection?

Your next remark, taking it literally, is peculiar. "I insist," you write, "that we have no grounds, no right, to believe that something occurred eighteen hundred years ago which cannot take place to-day." The assassination of Julius Cæsar is popularly supposed to have occurred about that space of time ago—but no, "we have no grounds, no right, to believe it," because "it cannot take place to-day." Past histories have taught that Titus sacked Jerusalem eighteen hundred years ago, but the future historian, in the light of your brilliant discovery, will erase this tradition from his scientifically truthful page, "for," he will argue, "I insist that we have no grounds, no right, to believe it, because it cannot take place to-day." Oh, fie, Mr. Bennett! After insisting on this, you say, "but even if it did occur then, we have no proof of it whatever;" to which I demur; if the Bible is of divine origin, its statement is infallible proof. But "if Joseph dreamed it took place, that would by no means prove it." Of course it would not. Has anybody been trying to persuade you it would? I have never yet heard of even a Christian who was fool enough to believe that. The conclusion you conduct your reader to, though, is really your side of this discussion—"we have no authority that his dreams were reliable." If the Bible is the word of God, that is authority, is it not? It is extremely unfair for you thus so often to assume as proved and use as argument the points we are discussing.

Your next remark has equal weight with the one preceding the last. No one takes Joseph's dreams "as evidence in a matter of such immense consequence as the salvation of the world" except Infidels who wish to "forge a fault."

To the next paragraph I will not reply. The unfairness of smuggling it in here when it is mapped out for discussion in future theses must be manifest, and I can only excuse you on the supposition that a hurried departure and preparations for your voyage made you overlook the impropriety. The next one, too, falls under the same condemnation, but in one sentence you have shown such marvelous wisdom that I cannot pass it unnoticed. You say "when mention is made by the early Christian writers of a legend, called a gospel which was by Matthew, it was one written in Hebrew, while there is no proof that the one in the New Testament named after Matthew was ever known in Hebrew." Now, this is mere bastard learning, and I deny the assertion. I could state the truth of the case, but prefer to wait until the proper time. I hope you will be content to let my denial balance your affirmative and wait further remarks on this until then. Further evidence of your knowledge of the text of Matthew is shown in the following assertion: "It was in Greek, and could not have been written by Matthew, who was a Hebrew." Any Hebrew and Greek scholar would have assured you that our gospel of Matthew must have been written by a Hebrew on account of its numerous Hebraisms. And now, before I take up your strictures on Luke, let me lay before your readers the verses from Matthew which you have so exhaustively analyzed. Their simplicity and artless style must, it seems to me, attest the sincere belief of the person who wrote them to every candid reader, whether he believes them or not.

"The birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost. Then Joseph, her husband, being a just man, and not willing to make her a public example, was minded to put her away privily. But while he thought on these things, behold the angel of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying, Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife, for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for he shall save his people from their sins.

Now all this was done that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying:

> Behold, the virgin shall be with child,
> And shall bring forth a son,
> And they shall call his name Immanuel, which, being interpreted, is God with us.

Then Joseph being raised from sleep, did as the angel of the Lord had bidden him" (Matt. i, 18–24).

You open your criticism on the third gospel by saying: "You get no more proof from Luke than you do from Matthew. He only relates the account of the visions which he ascribes to Mary, and does not confirm the story about Joseph's dream. There is not the slightest proof that Luke attached any importance to the dream story. He does not notice it at all. If that dream established the manner of Mary's pregnancy, why did he not allude to it?" I have already shown that the dream did not establish "the manner of Mary's pregnancy" to anybody but Joseph. No Christian believes the miraculous conception of Christ because Joseph had that dream, and it is not related by Matthew with that aim. But I follow you further: "The fact that he did not [allude to it] proves conclusively that he either knew nothing about it, or did not consider it of the slightest value." Hum! as Mr. Paine says, your penetration borders on the marvelous. But ere we are entirely overcome by such overwhelmingly convincing logic, let us apply it to other cases. Josephus in his works gives an account of the Jewish sect called the Essenes, a sect of no inconsiderable number and importance, whose existence has never been called into question. Tacitus and Strabo, equally eminent historians, have particularly noticed the Jews in their histories and yet never utter a word about the Essenes. Will any one believe, on the strength of a negative argument founded on the silence of the latter historians, that no such sect ever existed? Or take this—Josephus mentions the Essenes in his "Wars of the Jews," but in his work against Apion where one would certainly look for some mention of them, he does not write a syllable about them. The inference is irresistible. "He either knew nothing about" them, "or he did not consider" the story of their existence "of the slightest value." Will you abide by your own logic? The objection is one that has often been made, and as often refuted. In noticing a similar quibble, Hartwell Horne writes: "In Xiphilon and Theodosius the two abbreviators of the historian Dion Cassius, may be observed the like agreement and disagreement, the one taking notice of many particulars which the other passes in silence, and both of them relating the chief and most remarkable events. And since from their both frequently making use of the very same words and expressions when they speak of the same thing, it is apparent that they both copied from the same original, so no person was ever absurd enough to imagine that the particulars mentioned by the one were not taken out of Dion Cassius, merely because they were omitted by the other. And still more absurd would it be to say (as some modern opposers of revelation have said of the Evangelists), that the facts related by Theodosius are contradicted by Xiphilion because the latter says nothing of them. But against the evangelists it seems all kinds of arguments may not only be employed but applauded. The case, however, of the sacred historians is exactly parallel to that of these abbreviations. The latter extracted the particulars related in their several abridgments, from the history of Dion Cassius, as the former drew the materials of their gospels from the life of Jesus Christ. . . . And why the fidelity of the four transcribers should be called in question for reasons which hold equally strong against the two abbreviators, we leave those to determine who lay such a weight upon the objection" (Horne's Introduction, vol. i, p. 577).

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

[From the Boston Investigator.]

Bigotry.—"Scribner's Monthly."

MR. EDITOR: A certain incorporated body of Christians in this country, professedly for the purification of society, employ at a high salary a man who was driven in disgrace from a police court in the city of Brooklyn, for having brought before it for punishment three poor women whom he had himself hired to commit a criminal indecency. This man was lauded in the highest terms by no less a journal than Scribner's Monthly, of last July, and his incredible boasts of Christian usefulness, in suppressing obscenity, were reported as indubitable facts! At the same time, a large public meeting in New York assembled to welcome from prison an Infidel editor, was reviled in the most loathsome terms, under the heading of "The Apotheosis of Dirt," and the basest motivs were attributed to all who attended or expressed any sympathy with a man who had been imprisoned for a year for an offense of which he was not guilty. Having been myself in attendance at that meeting, and seen on its platform some of the most honored of the early abolitionists of both sexes—friends of liberty who hav never yet abused it—I felt like offering a reply, and addressed a letter to the editor to know whether there would be any chance of its insertion. Here is the answer I got from him:

BONNIE CASTLE, ALEXANDRIA BAY, N. Y., July 5, 1880.

My Dear Sir: You hav been an editor yourself, and hav many times had your own sharp "say" about things that displeased you in the conduct of men and of public bodies. You are therefore capable of judging—no one better—how difficult it is for me to say that I will publish whatever you may send to me in reply to the article which displeases you. I shall be glad to get your proposed communication, and then to decide whether I am bound in candor and honor to publish it. I shall certainly do so if I feel convinced that I hav done any man or any cause injustice. You are an older man than I am, and I hope you will forgiv me for saying that while I hav always entertained a great deal of respect for you, I hav regarded Bennett as a very nasty man, and it was a great grief to me to see you personally in his company. Yours truly, J. G. HOLLAND.

Sorry as I was to hav occasioned Dr. Holland's grief, I concluded to send him the following communication, which, as his publisher had the kindness to send me the proof some time ago, I suppose will appear in his pages as soon as he can find room for it. As Thomas Paine, another "nasty man," has at last found a place of honor in Scribner's, I am not without hope that Mr. Bennett may hav honorable mention made of him in that journal in about one hundred years. Yours, etc., ELIZUR WRIGHT.

Boston, Aug. 20, 1880.

"THE APOTHEOSIS OF DIRT."

To the Editor of Scribner's Monthly: The appearance of my name under the above sensational heading in your issue of July, page 463, induces me to offer a remark or two to your readers, rather to set the facts right than to justify myself for the part I took in the meeting there referred to. That I did, in the words I there uttered, which I should not be ashamed to see in your or any other journal of civilization. I am very far from promoting the apotheosis of Mr. Bennett or any other man, having never yet found any man, either in life or history, sacred or profane, who did not fall far short of an easily imaginable perfection. But having read Mr. Bennett's writings with care, and pretty extensivly; having attended his trial, and candidly considered the attacks made upon him after his unjust conviction and imprisonment, and his replies to them, not to honor him, after all, as a brave, truthful, and nobly useful man, would be to dishonor myself.

It is not true that he was convicted of sending obscene matter through the mail, if the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States on the character of the matter he sent, is worthy of any respect. Now, whatever Mr. Bennett may hav in his life done, said, or thought, which was not embraced in the indictment against him, is no justification for his imprisonment. The less he was a saint, the more inexcusable was the jury for convicting him of that of which he was not guilty, and the more execrable the Judge for the rulings which upheld them in it. If there is in English or any other history a more palpable outrage on justice than that perpetrated by Judge Benedict in the trial of D. M. Bennett, I am sure I do not know where to find it. I felt deeply mortified by the whole proceeding, the law, and the Society which led to it, as well as the deplorable result. If we cannot repress clandestin literature without a clandestin law and a professional liar, we had better not attempt it. I believe the Rev. Sydney Smith was a tolerably clean as well as a very sensible man, and I heartily agree with what he wrote in the Edinburgh Review about as long ago as I was born. He said then, among other very important things:

"Though it were clear that individual informers are useful auxiliaries to the administration of the laws, it would by no means follow that these informers should be allowed to combine—to form themselvs into a body—to make a public purse, and to prosecute under a common name. An informer, whether he is paid by the week, like the agents of this Society—or by the crime, as in common cases—is, in general, a man of a very indifferent character. So much fraud and deception are necessary in carrying on his trade—it is so odious to his fellow subjects—that no man of respectability will ever undertake it. It is evidently impossible to make such a character otherwise than odious."

A good farmer, in radicating weeds, takes care not to destroy his corn, and does not set his barn on fire to exterminate the rats. It was perfectly plain to a vast number of people, not fanatically inclined, that the persecution of Bennett was nothing but the old Christian blunder of punishing where it is impossible to refute.

The discovery of personal delinquency not covered by the indictment, and indeed not indictable, was based to mitigate an adverse public sentiment. I do not envy the praise lavished by bigots and fanatics on those Liberals who were too timid or jealous either to stand by the victim or reprobate the judge. Inasmuch as Mr. Bennett acknowledged his fault in the matter, for which he was not punished, and had been forgiven by the only party liable to be injured, the publication of the objectionable letters written by him was a gross infraction of the very law which professes to protect the decencies of society, and stamp with hypocrisy the whole movement against him.

Let us see. Supposing Mr. Bennett was, as I think, unjustly convicted, so far as obscenity is charged on the matter he mailed, there is no doubt that he attacked Christianity with the utmost vigor and contempt, and you say, "The safety and purity of society rests, as it always has rested, with the believers in and professors of Christianity," as a reason why his punishment should be acquiesced in and accepted as righteous. This is pouring contempt on the law which no longer permits heretics to be burnt, and on Christianity which is obliged to resort to imprisonment on false charges to protect itself against an Infidel press. It surely is to be hoped that the great bulk of Christians do not intend or expect to repel the contemptuous assailants of Christianity by a contemptible indirection, which makes the law a laughing-stock. It would be better to resort to the old direct method which was applied to Giordano Bruno, effectually as to the man, though ineffectually as to his opinions. I presume there were not a few Christians present at the Bennett reception in Chickering Hall who sympathized as heartily with the indignation expressed at the unjust imprisonment as the Infidels did.

For a Christian journal to refer to that great meeting as an "apotheosis of dirt," was to make use of a most unfortunate figure of speech, a sort of rhetorical boomerang. Dirt is none the better for being really apotheosised, and there happens to be in the same book where Moses Stuart found a justification of slavery, a good deal of dirt, also. Even our "Freelovers," I think, would be ashamed of the doings of Saint Mordecai. Moreover, it reminds one how the "purity of society" has depended on a hole in a wall, with a priest on one side and a spell-bound female on the other. I shall not enter on the question, though I think it is an open one, whether society is as much indebted to Christianity as Christianity is to skepticism for its "purity."

I hav lived to be ashamed of having been used by Christians to propagate a set of dogmas which are essentially immoral, and if the "Freelovers" hav made use of me to deepen that degradation of woman which Christianity found her laboring under and attempted to perpetuate, I shall liv to be ashamed of that. But I do not think they hav intended to use me in that direction. If so, they hav mistaken their man as much as the Christians did.

Boston, July 12, 1880. ELIZUR WRIGHT.

To Friend "A. M.," or Authority on Modesty.

I am not at all surprised that the great majority of people think I am going beyond "proper bounds" when I attempt to show up the injuries caused by sexual intemperance, and the almost universal prevalence of this abomination. It is customary for the masses to oppose all reforms that they do not understand, and especially if these reforms seem to deprive them of long established rights or privileges. Now you men hav assumed the sole right to decide as to woman's sphere all along through the historical ages, and probably as far back as the actions of the race can be traced. You hav been self-constituted judges, "A. M's.," or authority on modesty, during the centuries, and what is the result? A world where lust is running rampant, where rape, prostitution, and enforced maternity are the rule, and virtue, continence, and purity the exception.

A man might ride rough shod over all the proprieties and still be received in the best society. He might father the children of his black slave-women, and yet hold the highest offices in the gift of the nation. He might marry the purest and most delicate and modest of women, and subject her to infinit tortures, and even when death was the result it was all done "decently," and under the sanction of the law. But if woman once steps aside from her "proper sphere," she is lost forever. She must not even mention the word "sexual" if she wants to retain a spark of "womanly delicacy." She may see her mother, sisters, and all her female friends sacrificed at the shrine of man's lust and power, and know that nine-tenths of all they endure is the result of ignorance in both sexes, and that the door of knowledge has been opened for her, but she must not invite one of these sufferers to enter therein, lest she "befoul" herself and all she touches.

But, after fighting the demon of rum, of slavery, and of theology all along the years when these were unpopular reforms, I do not fancy I shall be frightened off the track by a few epithets of condemnation. When friend "A. M." will prove that the work itself needs not to be done, or that I am teaching error instead of truth, then he may hav some ground for real complaint. "Experts of the other sex" hav had the field long enough to test their power or ability to deal with this matter, and now woman herself claims the privilege of attempting the work.

Mrs. Besant may hav lost a few over-prudish friends by her firm stand for the right of her sex to determin when she will be a mother and how often, but she has gained two friends from the soundly sensible for every one she has lost from the other class.

A man who is afraid to hav his daughters physiologically instructed is really not fit to be a father. My father was a Quaker preacher, and brought up his girls in the beautiful quiet, unobtrusiv modesty of that pure and undemonstrativ sect, yet he furnished us with all the works on sexual physiology he was able to procure, and if thy TRUTH SEEKER mutilator has as favorable a record to show of his daughters when they are forty or fifty years of age as is shown by these, he may be very glad indeed.

I do not deny that others are "far better qualified" to write upon this subject of sexual intemperance than I am, and I trust they will do their duty also in this. I do not doubt but there are better cooks, housekeepers, and gardeners than myself, but I shall nevertheless do my best at these things even if others better skilled do better work.

We hav very able writers upon sexual reform, and a few papers like the Alpha, Physiologist, and Le Claire Pilot, which treat very plainly upon these topics; and there is Dr. Foote's Health Monthly and Dr. Kinget's Health Journal, but THE TRUTH SEEKER reaches thousands who never see any of these publications, or the "numerous books and pamphlets" that they speak of, and it is for these that I write, hoping to sow a few seeds of truth, even though I may soil my hands by clearing the ground of noxious weeds and thorny thistles.

As to the "clumsy thee and thou," I confess them to be a little odd, yet our best poets use them, and is it not more correct to say thee to a single person than "you?" It is certainly more distinctiv. And we Quakers think it almost as disrespectful to say "you" to a parent as a pious devotee would feel it to be to address his fetich in the same manner. What would be thought of a man if, when making a public prayer in some of the churches, he should say "O you who number the stars and call unto each one through the celestial spaces, and they obey you. Universal power, we praise you, and to you we pray," etc., etc., would it not be deemed almost blasphemous? And is not man, who creates the gods, more worthy of respect than the works he has made? If it be an honor to call the gods thee and thou, is it not still more honorable to style man thus? No one would more gladly welcome a word that would supersede both thee and you as addressed to a single individual than myself, but in writing I find "thee" the more satisfactory of the two. I believe in all reforms, spelling reforms as well as sexual reforms, and shall try and giv my highest, truest, and best thought for each and all so long as I find an appreciativ reader or publisher.

"The star of the unconquered will
He rises in my breast,
Serene and resolute and still,
And calm and self-possessed.
Oh fear not in a world like this,
And thou shalt know ere long—
Know how sublime a thing it is
To suffer and be strong." —Longfellow.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Snowville, Va., Sept. 1, 1880.

THE September number of the North American Review contains seven articles. The first is the initial paper by M. Charnay on "The Ruins of Central America." This article is illustrated from photographs, which aid materially in the study of the text. An expedition under the auspices of the American and French governments, of which M. Charnay is in charge, is now operating in Central America, and the explorations are likely to create an interest more profound, and to be attended with more valuable archæological results, even than came from the researches of Champollion in Egypt. They promis a new chapter in American history that shall establish the origin of the remarkable race of which nothing but splendid ruins were left when Columbus discovered the new world. Following this article is one on "The Perpetuity of Chinese Institutions," from the pen of S. Wells Williams. The writer has been a resident in China for many years, and is thoroughly conversant with the language, institutions, and social conditions which he discusses. Gen. John W. Clampitt, the surviving member of Mrs. Surratt's counsel, writes upon "The Trial of Mrs. Surratt." The author sincerely believes that Mrs. Surratt was innocent of the crime for which she suffered death, and expresses himself feelingly. "The Personality of God" is treated by the metaphysical writer W. T. Harris. R. B. Forbes gives some valuable suggestions in reference to "Steamboat Disasters." The Rev. Edward Everett Hale follows with a paper upon "Insincerity in the Pulpit," that will hardly fail to draw some protests from his brother clergymen. The number closes with a review of several recent works on the brain and the nerves, by Dr. George M. Beard.

(Continued from page 580.)

hight. The agaves and aloes were far the largest and most splendid I ever saw.

The Victoria House, or Tropical Aquarium, contains tanks of mason work for the cultivation of the Victoria Regia and other rare tropical plants, all of which are beautiful. My attention was particularly attracted to numerous plants of Azallo. The stem is three feet in hight, at the top of which is a single leaf two feet in diameter, and is of a beautiful bright, clean, glossy green. The stem joins the leaf in the center, which is horizontal like a disk supported by a rod. The flower stalk is five feet in hight, and the flower resembles a little the tulip, only it is double and three times as large. It possesses great beauty.

In the Heath House is a fine collection of heaths from the Cape of Good Hope, as well as a miscellaneous collection of Australian and South African plants, many of which are of great beauty.

The Archideous House No. 2 is devoted to plants of this family, distinguished by their bright-green and succulent leaves and flowers of many colors and strange shapes, which in warm climates not only clothe the rocks, but cover the trunk and branches of trees, and give a distinct character to the scenery by the imitative forms as well as brilliant colors of their flowers. One cannot help being struck with the remarkably fine specimens of the pitcher plant, occupying one side of the apartment, especially the Rafflesia Anoldi, "the greatest prodigy," says Sir Thomas Raffles, who discovered it, "of the vegetable world." The one he saw measured a full yard across the flower, the nectary would hold twelve pints, and the weight was calculated to be fifteen pounds. The humble or sensitive plant also attracts much attention. It drops its leaves at a slight blow, as if pained by the injury or insult. The butterfly plant or moving plant is a curiosity. It keeps its smaller leaves almost entirely on the move. Here is the remarkable pitcher plant of Australia, which exhibits a stoup, cover, and twisted handle, as elaborately perfect as if constructed by art. Also the American or Venus' fly trap, whose leaves or petals instinctively close as soon as any insect has lighted upon them, and open not until the unfortunate insect is crushed to death.

In the Economic Plant House are a variety of specimens of plants, the production of which is turned to beneficial uses. Prominent is the bread-fruit tree of the Pacific Islands. The banana is a beautiful curiosity. It is twenty feet high, with leaves eight feet long and two feet wide in the center.

The Palm House contains, perhaps, the greatest curiosities of all. This great structure is chiefly composed of wrought-iron beams and glass, and consists of a rectangular central part, 137 1-2 feet in length and 100 feet wide, with projecting wings, each of which is 112 1-2 feet in length and 50 feet in width. The entire length is 363 feet. The hight of the central portion is more than sixty feet. On entering this house the visitor finds himself transported into a magnificent tropical forest, though each walk presents a different class of vegetation to the beholder. Here is a great variety of palms. A specimen of the wax palm is twenty feet high to the leaves, which are long and numerous. I also noticed the date palm, the fan palm with large, pendant leaves. A specimen of the white palm is more than fifty feet in hight and presents a majestic appearance in the greenhouse. I noticed a most singular plant or tree. Its trunk is one foot in diameter, but looks more herbaceous than woody. The leaves are ten feet long, spear-shaped, and leave the ends of the limbs in clusters of at least a hundred. The tree is fully forty feet in hight. I cannot, however, begin to describe the beauties and curiosities in this house; the task is beyond my ability. By climbing the circular iron staircase to the dome in the center and looking down upon this rare, strange, and beautiful growth, one is filled with awe and admiration. He cannot help thinking that dame Nature is decidedly a great institution.

Among the climbing plants in one of the greenhouses my attention was attracted to a most beautiful specimen of the Lahegeria. It had climbed fully thirty feet, and was profuse in a trumpet-shaped scarlet blossom two inches in length and lovely to the view.

Of the palms it is said "they are the loftiest and noblest of all vegetable forms. They have been characteristically called 'kings among the grasses,' and to them the prize of beauty has been assigned by the concurrent voices of all nations. Their tall, slender, ringed, and sometimes prickly stems, covered by elegant feathery or fan-shaped foliage, composed of a few gigantic leaves, cause them to differ in appearance from all other trees. Rearing its stem and expanding its broad and beautiful shade where there is nothing else to shade man from the burning rays of the tropical sun, the palm tree is hailed by the wanderer in the desert with more pleasure than he greets any other tree in any other situation. In South America one species throws out its magnificent shade over a trunk a hundred feet high. As they advance toward the temperate zone this family of plants diminishes in grandeur and beauty, and Humboldt says that those who have only traveled in the north of Africa and in Sicily cannot conceive how the palms should be the most imposing of all trees of the forest."

I should have said, also, that in the Palm House, besides all the noble forms of the gigantic palms and bananas, are the lofty bamboo, the huge foliage of the travelers' tree, the numerous fig trees, the great variety of the Zamia tribe, with bulky stems and feather-like leaves; the mango trees, bearing flower and fruit; the papyrus, the coffee, the Assam tea, the cinnamon, cassia, banyan tree, the pepul, the sycamore of scripture, etc. The wonders, however, are so near endless that I might as well stop in one place as another.

The New Victoria House is an unpretending, roomy, commodious greenhouse, in which are to be seen all kinds of lovely lilies that are rocked on the silvery streams of India, and that rest pleasantly on the calm creeks of America. Here, above all, is to be seen the wonderful plant of quiet taste found only in the lakes and wide rivers east of the Andes —the great water lilies—the Victoria Regia, called by the natives, yrupe, meaning, literally, water-platter, and perhaps well named, for each leaf, like an enormous green dish, spreads on the surface of the water large enough to support a child afloat. The leaves are deeply channeled on the under side and traversed with veins, beset with prickles, and their width fully six inches. The flower is of a lovely snow-white externally, and crimson within, and measures nearly a foot across.

In addition to the objects of interest already named, are four museums filled with numerous curiosities and interesting exhibitions. The first I entered contains specimens of all the curious ornamental and valuable woods and timber from all parts of the world. Many of them are in plank twenty feet long, three inches in thickness, and some of them of great width, carefully planed and varnished. I saw some ornamental woods seven or eight feet in width. This exhibition is a most interesting study. A large portion of the timbers are from the International Exhibition of 1862. Among them are timber from Australia, India, China, Persia, Thibet, Africa, Canada, etc. Some kinds of curious woods were cut crosswise in sections. There were many hundreds of the specimens deserving of particular attention, and several specimens of Welwitchies Mirabilis, one of the most extraordinary of vegetable productions. It is a dwarf tree, seldom rising more than a few inches above the ground, with a diameter often of several feet, and a single pair of leaves which spring from the trunk and flourish through a period which is estimated to reach one hundred years. I noticed most curious trees, apparently made up of small fibers and twigs, but which was a natural growth. They are wholly unlike anything I saw before. I will not, however, undertake to further describe the very curious woods and timbers and their products in this museum.

Museum No. 2 containing many rooms, is filled with specimens of dried fruits and seed, and, in short, all interesting vegetable products, particularly those that are useful to mankind in the arts, in medicine, and in domestic economy—substances which neither the living plant nor the horlus siccus can exhibit.

The other museums are filled with similar vegetable productions. Every kind of corn, every variety of acorn, all sorts of nuts and seed, all kinds of barks, leaves, and woods, are found there, with probably tens of thousands of vegetable curiosities, far too numerous to mention.

Among the curiosities of the grounds is a beautiful sailing lake covering several acres, and floating on which are many varieties of ducks and other water fowl. The Syou Vista, completed thirty years ago, looking west extends to the river nearly three-quarters of a mile, and has a broad gravel walk, bordered with deodars alternating with limes. To the left is a spacious lake with islands, containing four and a half acres, which communicates with the Thames. There is also a cedar vista leading off to the west.

The Chinese pagoda is very conspicuous. It is approached by a vista 2,800 feet in length, and bordered by a line of scarlet thorns alternating with lovely intergreens. The great pagoda is composed of ten stories, each of which is an imitation of the Chinese mode of roofing and finishing, with balconies. The pagoda is an octagon, and is one hundred and sixty-three feet in hight. The base is fifty feet in diameter. The staircase is in the center, and there is a landing on each story. In ascending the interest of the view is increased. From the top a very extensive view is obtained of the surrounding country for forty miles around, including many villages.

But I know you will excuse me from dwelling any longer upon the beauties of Kew Gardens. I could write a week and not exhaust the subject, but long before that I am sure I would weary you as greatly as I was that Sunday night when I returned by rail to the city and to my hotel, for I assure you I was as completely tired out as a person could possibly wish to be.

Right here is a good place to bring this letter to a close. Truly yours, D. M. Bennett.

Our Reasons.

Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 24, 1880.

The attitude of The Truth Seeker on the presidential canvass has led some evil-minded persons to circulate the story that The Truth Seeker has sold its influence to the Democratic party. As we do not believe this possible, we ask you to state fully your reason for sustaining Hancock in the canvass. R. R. Tourley,
John P. Phillips.

The above card is our apology, if apology be needed, for again editorially referring to politics. We had thought as long as we gave our many able political correspondents a full chance to discuss pro and con that we might be excused from saying any more than Mr. Bennett has already said. We can add little, perhaps nothing, to his very full reasons for deserting the Republican party, to which he has so long been loyal. But when anybody, no matter if it be but a mere Christian, accuses The Truth Seeker of being sold to any party we must rise to protest. The impartiality shown heretofore and which will continue to characterize the conduct of this paper ought to place it above such suspicion. If the paper was an "organ" of the Democracy, can any think that we would allow views to be given that, if they hav any influence, would lead in the very opposit direction? Does any Democratic paper allow all the Republicans who take the trouble to write free access to its columns? Would the New York World giv the Republican campaign committee a large share of its space to refute and defeat the principles and men it would like to see triumph? We opine not. But The Truth Seeker would, and although no member of the Republican committee has yet honored us with his views, their friends all over the country hav not been backward in doing so, and we hav been prompt to giv them room.

This paper is not an organ for any political party. But the editor has his opinions on all subjects which concern the welfare of the country, and deeming the Republican party false to its best interests, has said so. Able reasons for so thinking hav been given by Mr. Bennett, Mr. Wakeman, Mr. Leland, and others, but as every day brings forth something new, there may be some additional ones. Let us see.

In the first place, it becomes more and more apparent as the campaign progresses and the distinctiv principles of the parties and their candidates are known that the Republican party is the party from which the church expects to derive its emoluments and power. The interests of the church are not the interests of Liberalism. The church is the deadly and implacable foe of progress, reform, and liberty. It is through the Republican party the church expects to get God grafted into the Constitution, an unsightly excresence upon the tree our heretical forefathers planted and nourished with such jealous care. Nearly every minister in the country is working for Garfield's election, and every religious paper which has expressed a preference (and most of them are activly partizan) has declared for Garfield. Of course the interests of Liberals lie in exactly the opposit direction. It may be said that the Catholics are all the other way, but it must be borne in mind that on several things they are one with the Liberals. Of course it is from a different and wholly selfish motiv that they oppose Bible-reading in the schools, Sunday-laws, and other things which the Protestants are fighting hard to retain, but just so far as any sect asks for justice and equal rights the Liberals will agree with it. People are and with good reason, afraid of the Catholic church. But they hav exactly the same reason to fear the Protestants. In the times when the church ruled the state, and the priest was the confidant and adviser of the king, the Protestant church was as intolerant as its opponent. A Protestant fire is as hot as a Catholic flame, and as the Protestant church is the aggressiv wing in this country at the present time we feel it our duty to oppose them with all our might. When the Catholics become oppressiv we shall fight them particularly hard.

We oppose the Republican party because it has usurped power which was never given it by the Constitution.

Because it has allied itself with the Protestant church.

Because for the last four years Christians hav been all-powerful in the White House, influencing a Republican Executiv to refrain from performing an act which he himself admitted was just, thereby depriving an innocent man of his liberty.

Because this same Republican Executiv, at the demand of this same church, disregarded the petition of two hundred thousand true and loyal citizens of the United States.

Because nearly all the clergy support the Republican party.

Because the Republican party has for the last twelve years derived its power from the church.

Because the Methodist church has virtually run this government for twelve years.

Because the Republican Congress eight years ago enacted laws which are destructiv of freedom of thought and of the press.

Because a Republican President signed those laws.

Because Republican officials hav religiously carried them out without a word of protest.

Because these laws were enacted at the behest of the church.

Because the Republican party has aided the church in its persecution of Liberals by this enactment and execution of oppressiv and unconstitutional laws.

Because a Republican Senate was in favor of keeping the Bible in the public schools.

Because Garfield is the embodiment of this same Christian spirit. As Hayes has been the tool of the church, so will

Garfield be. He is a preacher of the Campbellite church, whose creed is as follows :

We believe in God the Father.

We believe that Jesus is the Christ, the son of the living God, and our only Savior. We regard the Divinity of Christ as the fundamental truth in the Christian system.

We believe in the Holy Spirit, both as to its agency in conversion and as an indweller in the heart of the Christian.

We accept both the Old and New Testament scriptures as the inspired word of God.

We believe in the future punishment of the wicked and the future reward of the righteous.

We believe the Deity is a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God.

We observe the institution of the Lord's Supper on every Lord's Day. To this table it is our practice neither to invite nor debar. We say it is the Lord's Supper for all the Lord's children.

We plead for the union of all God's people on the Bible, and the Bible alone.

The Bible is our only creed.

We maintain that all the ordinances of the gospel should be observed as they were in the days of the apostles.

Does any one want a man in the White House who will observe "the ordinances as they were in the days of the apostles?" It seems to us that the Christianity practiced by Mr. Hayes is sufficiently like the good old times when heretics were imprisoned and burnt, without getting back to any more primitiv times. Keeping a man in prison for a year for being an Infidel is good enough religion without burning him.

Because from long continuance in power the party has become non-progressiv, conservativ, and intolerant.

Because "in giving freedom to the slave it seems to hav exhausted its force in favor of liberty, and to hav developed into an organized political despotism." Since the war the party by its crusade against state rights and the endeavor to supplant local self-government in the south by military rule and to consolidate power in the general government has been moving steadily toward a despotic government.

Because, as a writer—Hon. E. W. Barber—aptly puts it:

"Already it has gone so far in its postal legislation as to undertake to regulate the morals of the people by law, and has sent men to the penitentiary who have committed no crime, unless it be a crime to discuss the marriage question in a foolish manner, and to send a printed copy of the discussion, in pamphlet form, through the mails—the printing of the same matter in a newspaper and sending it through the mails not being treated as a crime. All along the line the direction of Republican legislation, though in the name of God and liberty, is clearly towards centralization; and centralization and tyranny are synonymous terms. This tendency is not an unnatural one. It is rare indeed that a party used to the exercise of arbitrary power in war is the best one to govern a country in time of peace. In our own time we hav seen the thirty-six provinces that compose the German empire surrender their separate political existence, and under the captivating plea of German unity become consolidated into a single paternal government, and that government has already grown to be an almost unbearable military despotism. This is the inevitable result of all centralizations of power, as sure here as in Germany. The national enforcement acts, the national election laws, (which place elections partly under control of the hirelings of the party in power) the national educational schemes, the attempted national control of telegraphs, than which nothing could be used with more terrible effect by a party in power, and many other things which hav had their origin with the Republican party, as well as its general denunciation of the rights of the states and its ever acting silent forces are, it seems clear to me, movements that tend rapidly toward the estalishment of irresponsible power."

Because the corruptions of the party hav been great; they hav made all public service dishonorable in the minds of vast numbers of the people; they hav made our form of government seem less to be desired by thoughtful men, and they hav been so great that further continuance of the party in power would imply our unwillingness to rebuke them. The performances of its Robesons, Belknaps, Shepherds, and Babcocks, its freedmen's bank robberies its Credit Mobilier infamies and perjuries, its Sanborn contracts, its DeGolyer business whereby the streets of Washington were paved with rottenness; its whisky rings and Indian frauds hav all passed into history and are ineffaceable blots upon its record.

Because Garfield allows his religion to be dragged into the political arena and paraded for the delectation of the saints and as a bait to catch pious votes. The fact that Hancock swears while Garfield prays is used as an argument why all church members should vote for the borrower of $329—our "Christian brother in the Lord," as he was called at the Chautauqua camp-meeting.

Because Garfield opposes woman suffrage.

Because he believes in exempting churches from taxation for the same reason that he would exempt the property of a poor widow—because if not exempted the state would hav to support her. What business under our Constitution the state has supporting churches this brilliant preacher does not say. "If Gen. Garfield is elected," says the Church Union, "he will be the first President of the United States since Washington's time who has been or is a professing Christian and member of an evangelical church of Christ." And that is what is the matter. He is more of a Christian than Hayes, and it logically follows that he would go further to serve the "cause of Christ" than the vertebrateless individual who now occupies the White House and is by courtesy (8 to 7) called President. Query: If Hayes would let a man stay in prison thirteen months for being a heretic, how long would Garfield let him stay?

The foregoing are a few of the reasons why we oppose the Republican party, to which we may add the hardly disputed fact that the records of both the candidates are very far from snow-white. Garfield is at least $5,329 ahead of fair dealing, and Arthur was removed that "his office may be honestly administered." Taking all these things into consideration—the record and tendency of the party and the records and principles of the men—THE TRUTH SEEKER is convinced that the best interests of the country will be subserved by turning the government over to another party. The man who accuses it of receiving one cent, either directly or indirectly for supporting the Democrats, simply lies, and only shows the principles which govern him in his advocacy of men and parties.

The Marshalltown Convention.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: There's music here! The trouble began yesterday and will be continued to-day—yea, and into the holy Sabbath to-morrow.

To-day opened brightly after a preparatory rain of two days which laid the dust and cleared the air. Verily God is good to those who "ain't" afraid of him, who love him wisely but not too well. And he receives great consideration here for his divine favors.

The Convention opened with the usual forms—I need not detail them, Mr. Matthew Farrington was elected to preside, and Dr. S. Harris to act as Secretary. Mr. E. C. Walker was the busy bee who flitted everywhere, looked after details and gathered money all the day from every opening pocket, to pay expenses.

The morning session was one of routine organization and committee making; but the afternoon brought in more recruits and the ball opened in earnest. Forty-five minutes were devoted to five-minute speeches on any subject the speaker felt moved to bring up. Mr. Walker led off on the question, "What Shall Liberals do with Sunday?" and urged that we should hav Sunday-schools of our own, and keep our children away from those of the Christians. Mr. Leland said his own practice had been to let his children go to the Christian Sunday-schools when their mates invited them. Then when they came home question them as to what they had learned, and set them right as to any errors. In this way before long the little Infidels became inciters of doubt and revolt in the bosom of the church school itself. Another Liberal also said he had pursued a similar course and with good results. Other speakers made other suggestions and Mr. Walker's main idea of Liberal Sunday-schools for Liberals was sustained.

After this discussion Prof. Phelps of Kansas addressed the Convention making a vigorous and masterly statement of the general aims and purposes of Liberalism.

Marshaltown, Iowa, Aug. 28, 1880. T. C. LELAND.

[From the Marshalltown Times.)

SATURDAY AFTERNOON SESSION.

Convention convened at 2 P.M., and the minutes of the forenoon session were read and approved. The committee on the nomination of officers for the ensuing year reported as follows:

President: Matthew Farrington, of Denver.

Vice-Presidents: Dr. Shorland Harris, of Cerro Gordo; Dr. A. B. Dennis, of Linn.; Col. M. E. Billings, of Bremen; C. P. Robinson, of Story.

Chairman of Executiv Committee: E. C. Walker, of Norton.

Treasurer: Mrs. Cornelia Boeklin, of Des Moines.

Finance Committee: Daniel Davis, Andrew Goan.

Directors: C. N. Dibble, of Clark; Leroy Dutton, of Clinton.

Report of the Committee adopted and above-named persons elected to the respectiv offices. Dr. Harris then read a poem entitled "Eternal Justice."

Prof. Jamieson followed with an eloquent and earnest address on the subject, "Is This a Christian government?"

Convention adjourned.

SATURDAY EVENING SESSION.

The Convention was called to order at 8 o'clock, and Mr. Peck sang the song, "No Hell," amid much applause.

Mrs. Parry, of Beloit, Wisconsin, recited a poem called "The Christs of To-day." As a recitationist, Mrs. Parry is a success; her reputation as a speaker and thinker has already extended beyond the limits of her own state.

The lecture of the evening was by Prof. Phelps, of Kansas. His subject was "The Garden of Eden." He had rather more to say of the "Gardener," however, than of the Garden. Many of his "terms" and conclusions were very ingenious to say the least. He held his audience in the closest attention until a late hour, and at the close no one appeared to be weary.

The Convention assembled at 9:30, and opened with a song by Mr. Peck entitled "The Little Ones at Home." The Convention then proceeded to elect delegates to the Chicago Convention. A. T. Hisey, Mrs. H. S. Lake, and Mrs. M. L. Follett were chosen. The case of H. L. Barter was then taken up and explained by E. C. Walker, showing that Mr. Barter was incarcerated for publishing a serial by Mrs. Follet in the Le Claire Pilot.

Dr. Harris introduced a resolution condemning the authorities and charging the whole proceeding as an invasion of constitutional right.

Mr. Walker introduced a resolution of a very sweeping character, declaring, among other things, the "natural right of every one to eat, drink, wear, etc., what he pleased," as an amendment.

Dr. Harris's resolution was withdrawn, and the consideration of Mr. Walker's amendment as the main question digressed into a discussion of prohibition, participated in by Walker, Leland, Jamieson, Farrington, and Mrs. Parry. The resolution was lost.

Mrs. Lake then addressed the Convention upon the subject of "After Liberalism, What?" Mrs. Lake is a very forcible and impressiv speaker, and many sentiments expressed by her are entitled to a careful consideration and even commendation.

Sunday afternoon the Convention opened with a song by Mr. Peck. By request, Mrs. Lake recited a poem, "Peter Maguire, or the Grace of Nature." It was rendered with fine effect, and the sentiments were received with much favor.

Prof. Jamieson took the rostrum, and, by way of introduction to his lecture, recited a poem entitled, "I Wish it Were Respectable." The leading features of all these poems are the many hits interspersed through them. Prof. Jamieson is a lecturer and debater whose reputation is national, and a large audience assembled to hear his lecture upon "The Conflict of Religion with Science."

FRIDAY EVENING SESSION.

Number in attendance small. The exercises opened with a song entitled "Jesus Paid it All." Mrs. Lake then followed with an eloquent address upon the subject of "Infidel Integrity, as Contrasted with Christian Belief." The frequent applause elicited seemed to indicate that the lady's remarks were acceptable to a large portion of the audience.

Dr. Peck then awoke the risibles of the Convention with the song, "Yacob Found it Out."

The Chairman announced that Mr. Leland of New York would address the Convention. Mr. Leland's subject was, "Organization of the Liberal Forces Necessary to Accomplish Desired Results." This address was confined almost entirely to the dry details of organization, and consequently was not so interesting to the audience generally, but the thought and care of the organizer were manifest throughout.

At the close of Mr. Leland's address, Mr. McConnell, one of the clergymen of this city, occupied the attention of the Convention. To say that everybody generally in the locality was getting interested would be "putting it" mildly. Prof. Jamieson of Chicago followed Mr. McConnell, and the Convention closed a very interesting session.

SATURDAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Convention assembled at 9:30 A.M.

Constitution for state Liberal League read and adopted.

Committee on nomination of officers for the State League appointed, consisting of Messrs. Walker, of Norway; F. J. Emary, of Osceola, and Rose, of Washington. Ten minutes' recess.

Convention again called to order by the President. Mr. Peck of Clinton made a powerful ten minutes' speech in defense of his song, "Jesus Paid it All." Reply by Rev. McConnell, in which he attempted to lay some charges upon the Liberals, which, Mr. Jamieson said, properly belong to Rev. Bundy. Reply by Prof. Phelps of Kansas. McConnell then made a reply to Prof. Phelps, and was followed by Prof. Jamieson.

The Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League.

To the Auxiliaries and Members of the National Liberal League,

GREETING:

The Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League will be held at the Hershey Hall, in Madison street, in the city of Chicago Ill., on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September next. All charter and life members of the National Liberal League, the President and Secretary of each local auxiliary and three delegates from the same are entitled to seats and votes in the Congress, and al annual members of the National League are entitled to seats, but not to votes.

As a President of the United States is to be elected this year, it is important that every one of the now two hundred auxiliaries shall be represented, and that a republic, every citizen of which professes that the state should be independent of the church, and the church of the state, shall no longer stultify itself by subsidizing ecclesiastical corporations in exempting their property from taxation, supporting religious instruction in schools, robbing the people of their time by Sunday laws, paying salaries for religious services, and exacting religious oaths as security for truth and fidelity to civil obligations.

If the National League has any voice, now is the time to hav it heard. The Constitution under which we liv consecrates the rights of speech and opinion and has no punishing power except for accurately-defined and proven crime; and the depositaries of this punishing power, national and state, hav their well-defined provinces and limits as servants of the people and protectors against all personal violence and fanatical persecution. The great question of the day is whether these bulwarks of individual liberty shall be swept away by the greed of power truckling to bigotry and superstition, or the voice and votes of a free and enlightened people shall teach political partisans that the whole is always greater than any part in the administration of our republic.

Boston, Mass., Aug. 9, 1880. ELIZUR WRIGHT, Pres.

Hall and Hotel at Chicago.

On arriving at Chicago I find the hall named in the call for the Congress not adapted to the purpose of the meeting of the League. It is not large, comfortable, nor central enough. It is, as its name indicates, at the West End, and two miles from the center of business. I hav engaged HERSHEY HALL in Madison street, between Dearborn and State streets. It is new, spacious, and central located near the hotels and newspaper offices. The Congress will meet there on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September.

Then in Madison street, very near Hershey Hall, is the Brevoort House, an excellent hotel on the Europ an plan. Rooms, $1 per day, or, with two or more in a room, 75 cents each per day. Good restaurant in the basement, and others near by and cheap. The Brevoort House will accommodate five hundred guests, and I recommend the delegates to concentrate in a body in that house. T. C. LELAND.

Brevoort House, Chicago, Sept. 3, 1880.

Selections.

[From Mind and Matter.]

A New Exegesis (or Exposion) of the Gospel of St. John.

BY STEPHEN PEARL ANDREWS.

Revised by the author for The Truth Seeker.

FIRST PAPER.

PROEME.

A notable progress has been made within the last decade in the understanding of the mythologies of ancient peoples, especially the Hindoos, Greeks, and Romans, and in founding a new science to be known as the Comparology of the different Religions of the world. Max Müller, Coxe, and others hav done wonders in the application of the new principles of criticism to the so-called Heathen Mythologies; and the results of their investigations hav been appreciatingly and gladly accepted alike by Christians, Infidels, and Scientists. Heretofore, however, this new critical style of investigation has stopped short of the Jewish and Christian scriptures. Probably the lingering veneration of writers, and still more their sympathy with or dread of disturbing the tender regard of others, has hindered them from treating our own traditional scriptures with the same severity which they apply, without any such reserve, to other ancient books of literature.

But Science has, properly, nothing to do with reverence. It is simply a fearless inquirer into truth—irrespectiv of consequences. It is neither infidel nor faith-giving, except as the truth is revealed and demonstrated. The God of Science is Truth; and it is hoped and believed that the religion of the future will be devotion to the truth, lead where it may; even to the crucifixion of our most cherished beliefs and prejudices. Infidelity and Atheism to that religion will be any doubt that the truth must ultimate in the supreme good; or any supposition that the exposure of error can bring any permanent disaster to the world. The scientо-philosophic basis of the future harmony of mankind is in the following motto: IN THINGS KNOWN, UNITY; IN WHATSOEVER CAN BE DOUBTED, FREE DIVERSITY; IN ALL THINGS, CHARITY.

---

I propose to show in this critical review that the third gospel, which bears the name of St. John (as, also, by a general parity of reasoning, the remaining three gospels), is of a three-fold structure. The three parts are: 1. A Cosmical Recital (semi-poetical); 2. A Personal Recital (historical or biographical in form, but partially mythical in fact); and 3. A Spiritual Recital (or theological recast or gloss). That there are the two last mentioned, a personal relation, and a spiritual relation, running through the whole account, and blended into one, is the admitted and orthodox idea. In the beginning of the second chapter, for instance, an account is given of the attendance of Jesus at the marriage at Cana, of Galilee, and what transpired there, which is understood to pertain to the personal biography of the man Jesus; or to hav, in other words, an ordinary historical character. On the contrary, in the opening of the first chapter, "In the beginning was the word," etc., the account is transcendental, metaphysical, and spiritual; belonging, therefore, to a very different order of literature. So when (chap. iv, 14) Jesus says to the woman of Samaria, "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall giv him shall never thirst," etc., the recital is of a mixed character. It purports to be historical so far as the fact is concerned that he said to her those words; but the entire meaning of the words is of a spiritual nature.

The point, therefore, which is new in what I shall hav to show is, that there is, in addition to the personal and spiritual recital, a Cosmical Recital, of a very important and peculiar character, underlying and being, as it were, the foundation of the other two. It need only be said here that by this term is meant a series of statements respecting the physical constitution of the world, the sun, the dawn, or twilight, the light of the day, the light of the night, etc., taken in the most literal mundane sense—sometimes elevated into a poetical form of expression; ideas such as modern science has discovered in connection with the religious writings of other ancient nations, but the presence of which, in the gospel history, has heretofore, in a great measure, escaped observation. It should be added that this cosmical or mundane recital is of a much older date (probably by several thousand years) than the personal elements of the story of which it has furnished the substantial framework—somewhat as the traditional tales of the folk lore furnished to Shakspere the framework of his dramas.

In a word, the basis of this gospel (and substantially, consequently, so of the other three gospels) is a simple philosophic and scientific treatis, by some early writer or writers, far back in the dim recesses of antiquity, on what the Germans now call Erdkunde, or the theory of the constitution of the earth or world. With the long transit of years through many centuries—the original treatis or treatises being lost, and their contents obscurely remembered and partially transmuted by popular misapprehension—the objects in nature, and the features of nature, so discriminated, in a purely rational and cosmical way, ceased to be remembered, as objects and features of nature, and were converted into mythical personages, half human and half divine; in accordance with the method, now so well understood by scientific men, in which myths hav arisen. The circumstance which most favored this transmutation of things and the properties of things, into mythical and traditional form, was the imperfection of language in its early stages of growth, and its consequent incapacity to describe natural features and relations otherwise than by copying human attributes and relations. For example, when there were no words for such abstract ideas as cause and effect or source and emanation, they could only be alluded to, or described at all, by calling them father and son. The names of the objects or features, so called, could then hardly fail to be confounded, at a later day, with supposed persons who held that relation (especially as some similarity in the sound of the words used often favored the illusion). In this manner a whole vocabulary of ready-made, half-mystical or mythical names, with an extensiv system of their relationships, floated for ages in the traditions of the world, ready to be appropriated and modified, within each particular nation, according to its local and historical circumstances. These transmitted words were, in turn, naturally adopted as the names of successiv generations of children, yielding real personages, bearing the identical names in question. The whole treatis will be, in great part, an illustration of actual happenings of the kind in question, guaged to the conditions of time and place in Judea; so we may dispense with any further general discussion of the principle.

In this manner it will be shown that the leading personal names employed in scriptural history, especially, now, of the New Testament, and more especially of this particular gospel, were not, in their origin, personal names at all, but grave scientific terms instead. But before coming to the actual namings of persons, let us apply our principle of interpretation to the spiritual recital, at the opening of the book, thus:

EXPOSITION.

| THE COSMICAL RECITAL. (RESTORED.) | THE CANONICAL RECORD. (KING JAMES' TRANSLATION.) |
|---|---|
| At the origin of things we find the Solar Ray- or bundle of rays; the effulgent emanation, or emanating effulgence from the Sun. | 1. In the beginning was the word. |
| This is, in its origin, at the sun, or sun's surface; | And the word was with God; |
| And is, virtually the Sun (although to be discriminated from it). | And the word was God. |
| It, this effulgence, is, I repeat, at the very sun itself; if we speak of its beginning, source, or origin. | 2. The same was, in the beginning, with God. |
| All things are made from this Solar Ray: | 3. All things were made by him; |
| Without it, nothing whatever is produced. | And without him was not anyt hing made that was made |

COMMENT.

"The word" (Greek, logos; Latin, verbum) meant, originally, no more than the general idea of outer-ance or utter-ance; and was applied to whatsoever proceeds, flows, or gushes forth from something else; as water from its source or fountainhead; light from a lamp, the sun, or a focus (a fireplace); or language (word, or words) from the mouth of a speaker. The word, in the singular form, is used, (the part for the whole) to mean words, discourse, the whole outpouring of the voice, and so emanation, generally; quite as the solar ray is used, above, meaning all the rays of the sun, with their characteristic effects. The vulgate (Latin) verbum which renders the Greek logos (English, verb) is from the Græco-Latin root-word var (vardha) which means to flow, as water in a channel; the flow of words in speech, to publish to promulgate (1). The Greek word logos is a later adoption, in the growth of language, meaning, rather, the lay or level of that which flows; and so referring to the plainness and clearness of meaning of the utterance; and hence to the pure reason, in the more spiritual and metaphysical sense. The original idea, here, in the Cosmical Recital, is the out-gushing effulgence, or out-streaming radiance of the sun; especially, as we shall see, at the time of its rising or setting (2) This it was which gave rise to the celebrated emanation-doctrine of pre-Christian antiquity (3.) "The word" means therefore, in this earliest cosmical sense, no more than, simply, solar ray; the effulgence or outstreaming radiance of the sun.

In the same manner, the original material type of the later spiritual conception termed God was the sun itself. It is well-known that the doctrin of the sun-god pervaded, in the earliest times, all the nations of the world, and that it was, in fact, the dominant idea of all the early religions. The vulgate or Latin word for God here employed is Deus, etymologically the same as the Greek Zeus (used for Jupiter), and the Sanskrit Dyaus or Dyu. This must originally hav meant the literal sun; the beam-er, the shin-er, the illuminator of the world; the bright heavenly deity, in the cosmic or natural worship of those early times. Müller, it is true, cites chiefly cases in which dyu was applied to the general brightness of the sky, made bright by the sun itself (4); but it is the habit of developing language to apply the same word to a cause and its effect; the cause, and especially when a distinct prominent object, as in this case, being sure to hav loaned its name to the effect, rather than the other way. With our perfect knowledge of the general prevalence of the sun-god worship, in the earlier times; with this new approach to that idea in the actual etymology; and with the rational certainty that the sun was the object in the heavens which must first hav fixed the wondering and worshipful attention of mankind, in the infancy of the race, we hav a virtual demonstration that that which came, afterwards, in the spiritual sense, to be called and thought of as God, was no other, as to the prior cosmical aspect of the subject than the sun itself.

Or, if the difference be insisted on between the general brightness of the sky and the sun itself, in respect to this root Dyu and its derivativ Deus, then it would merely appear that already the analogy of the difference between God the son (the effulgence, the word) and God the Father (the sun itself) had begun to be felt.

But in turning to the consideration of the Greek word here used, Theos (God), no such ambiguity occurs, and we are clearly carried back to the analogy of God in his primitiv personality (God the Father).

This Greek word is derived from the Hindoo-Germanic root-word Dha, through the secondary form Dhas (thes os the-os). Such, at least, is the prevalent etymology. Dhas is, however, the smelting of two roots, dha and sp (spe, sep, sak) (5), which enter into the composition of The-sp is (dha sak), God-bespoken; but not into The-os, God. Nor could so primitiv a word as the name of the supreme God, or primal over-ness or government of the world, be expected to be derived from a secondary and compound root. The God idea is not, therefore, the-prayed-to (as Vanicek givs it), a secondary and accidental idea; but is all contained in the single primal root word dha, to put or make firm; in a word, the firmament, or universal space; as Chronos, the other primal God-idea, was time, universal time; the Eternal, as the space-god was the Infinit. We are here, therefore, at the fountain head of theological, as we are of etymological ideas; and logically speaking, Theos and Chronos are prior to Sol, Jam-et-non-us, and Jas-us Kryst os; although, historically, it can hardly be doubted that the Sun-god doctrin was, in some way, the first to be formulated. (See what is said subsequently of the meanings of the names John and Jesus Christ).

| COSMICAL RECITAL. | CANONICAL RECORD. |
|---|---|
| In the Solar Ray (the sun's emanation) is the Life-producing principle, the vivifying Heat; | 4. In him (the word, the utterance, the emanation) was Life; |
| And this same principle is also the Light which shines upon the world. | And the life was the light of man. |
| The Light shines into the surrounding darkness; and in so far as the darkness does not fully receive and appropriate or assimilate the light, it remains darkness. | 5. And the light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehended it not. |

COMMENT.

Little need be said in regard to the striking parallelism, here, of the two recitals. The statement in regard to the partial absorption of the light into the sphere of darkness is an allusion doubtless to the phenomena of color.

| COSMICAL RECITAL. | CANONICAL RECORD. |
|---|---|
| First, there is a dubious emanation sent forth from the Sun; which may be called Yes and No, a half-light, twilight, or twixt-light. | 6. There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. |
| This comes as a preliminary intimation, or witness of the coming light; | 7. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the Light (that all men through him might believe). |
| It is not the light (of day, properly so called); but merely an assurance that the light is about to appear. | 8. He was not that Light, but was sent to bear witness of that Light. |

COMMENT.

Yes and No (concurring with affirmativ light, the day, and negativ light or the negation of light, the night) is a natural and striking, if not the only possible original way of expressing the idea of dubiousness or vacillating uncertainty, the true character of the matutinal crepuscule, or twilight, which precedes the day. This terse expression, and its meaning in this connection, as a dubious somewhat, sent before to announce what was to come, was subsequently and traditionally converted or transmuted into the idea of a personal being sent from God, as an usher, to announce the coming of another personage of a higher rank; and the phrase meaning Yes-and-No was molded by successiv mutations into the personal name which we call John. The current word for Yes, or Affirmation, occurring variously in our family of languages, is in Latin Iam, Jam, Et iam (German Ja, Yah, English, Yea and Yes.) For No or Negation, the Latin is Non, (German, Nein, English, Nay and No). The Latin et means and. The Latin form for the name John is Johannes, which is only half-way changed from what we shall see was the primitiv form, in comparison with the greatly modified modern forms, French Jean, Spanish, Juan, English, John, etc. The original form was Jam-et-non (Yes-and-No) with the subsequent addition of us or es, used in Latin as the personal ending. The prior series of modifications (leading to the Latin proper name) when this term had been transmuted into a personal cognomen was then as follows:

Jam-et non us—(Jam, Ja, Jah, Joh.)
Joh-a-non-es.
Jo-han-nes.

The loss of the vowel in non accounts for the doubling of the n, which is so peculiar as to call for some special solution. The Greek form is Ioannes. The loss of the h indicates that the Latin form is the older one. Indeed, the formerly prevalent idea, that of those two sister languages the Greek was older than the Latin, is now reversed among Glottologists, and the Latin is regarded as the more ancient.

In this manner this coupling of opposit ideas which first occurred cosmically, in connection with the great governing

(1.) See Griechisch Latienisches Elymologiscoes Worterbuch von Aloes Vanicek, word, 3, 4, var; pp. 892-3.

(2.) There is a remarkably large number of the root words of the Hindoo-Germanic family of languages which mean both to pour forth, to enane, and to shine, and again to speak and utter, applying the same name to the several kinds of emission, or sending forth.

(3.) See my index series of Universological articles on the emanation doctrin.

(4.) See Science of Language Second Series; Max Muller, pp. 444-6.

(5.) Vanicek, dha p. 376, and 4 sak p. 997.

differences in Nature, between Light and Darkness, or between Day and Night, and which next appeared, by the feeling of an inherent analogy, in the equally fundamental metaphysical discrimination between Affirmation and Negation, or the affirmativ and the negativ spheres of the Universal Being, finally occurs in the historical, theological, and dogmatic arena, as the name of a particular individual, who retains, in his character and office, by another stretch of analogy, the characteristics which belonged to the two former stages of the idea. Daphne and Dawn are allied words with Johannes and John. The clauses which I shall throw into parenthesis in the text of the canonical record are evidently, or such as are supposed to be, later additions; after the theological and religious treatment of the original recital had fairly begun. The ending of the seventh verse, "that all men through him might believe," is obviously of this character. There is nothing in the primitiv recital which relates to belief, on anything by anybody. It is a mere treatis on natural facts.

And so, with the process of time, Johannes or John became "a man sent from God," instead of the morning twilight premising (or premonition-izing) the day.

| COSMICAL RECITAL. | CANONICAL RECORD. |
|---|---|
| The Light so foretold and ushered in is the true Light; (of the Sun, itself,) which fully illuminates the world. | 9. That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. |
| The darkness, as already stated, is not completely dispelled by the sun's rays; | 10. He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.11. He came to his own, and his own received him not. |
| But every object upon which they fall is illuminated by them and has a power to reflect them back; so that all such illuminated objects become secondary suns, or Sons of the Sun. | 12. But as many as received him to them gave he power to become the Sons of God. (Even to them which believe on his name.) 13. (which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.) |
| And, now, this Solar Ray, or radiation of Heat and Light, from the Sun undergoes an actual transformation into living substance or products; | 14. And the word was made flesh and dwelt among us, |
| Even while we are contemplating its resplendent glory, simply as one single sheaf of effulgent rays outstreaming from the Sun itself. | And we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father; |
| And merely as full of warmth and of its illuminating and penetrating energy. | Full of grace and truth. |

COMMENT.

In the twelfth verse, all who receive the Light are called the "Sons of God; but in the fourteenth and eighteenth verses we are introduced to the idea of an only begotten or single Son of God, as if excluding the idea of all others. This seeming contradiction is removed if we refer to the cosmical recital. The objects which receive the light of the sun and reflect it back, and thus become secondary suns, and sons of the sun, are many; but taking the whole outstreaming sheaf of the sun's rays, its collectiv radiancy is one, and we hav another aspect of the subject. The singleness of the idea is then adhered to. It is this latter conception which is expressed by the name Jesus Christ (as will be subsequently explained); and this is the reason why he is called Only begotten; as he is also SON or Issue of the backlying producent orb, which is the Cause, or FATHER.

| COSMICAL RECITAL. | CANONICAL RECORD. |
|---|---|
| The twilight in advance of day had predicted all this; saying, as it were: | 15. John bare witness of him and cried, saying: |
| That which comes after me is to be ranked as before me; | He that cometh after me is preferred before me; |
| For it was, all the time, back of, that is to say, before me. | For he was before me. |
| And of the wonderfully benign influences of this Solar Radiance we all continually partake; bounty upon bounty. | 16. And of his fulness hav we all received, and grace for grace. |
| For, while the rigid discrimination of the Yes and No (of Day and Night, and, metaphysically, of the Affirmation and Negation) comes from the Hard Geometrical Line of the Horizon, which parts and rules them, the bounties of Nature and the true Visible Appearance of things are furnished by the Full and Half-full radiance of the Sun itself (6). | 17. For the law was given by Moses; (the context would lead us to expect John, instead of Moses); but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ. |
| I say the full and half-full radiance; merely, for we do not and cannot actually see the Sun itself. No one has ever really seen the sun. The single collectiv sheaf of Solar Rays, which rests, for its basis, on the Sun's surface (or bosom) manifests the Sun to us. | 18. No man hath seen God at any time: The only begotten son which is in the bosom of the Father he hath declared him. |

COMMENT.

The sudden and unexpected turn by which Moses and Jesus Christ are here introduced (v. xvii), when the discourse has previously related to John, is somewhat startling. Still more so is the fact that Moses seems, by the connection, to be in some way identified with John; and Jesus Christ to be contrasted with both these taken as one personage. The solution of this identification of Moses and John is important, and profoundly interesting. They too hav, at bottom, the same origin; or are, at bottom, or in respect to the cosmical recital, nearly the same. Moses is merely another outcome of the great original discrimination of the Yes-and-No of universal things. Besides the Jam or Ja and the Non or No for Yes and No, there was another related primitiv pair of primitiv words, Ma and Na (more radically 'M and 'N) having the same meaning. These forms were capable of being inverted, and so of becoming am and an (7); and the direct and inverted forms might then be combined as Mam and Nan (for ma am and na-an)

Again, there are are quite diverse aspects of the phenomena of (morning) twilight. The one previously noticed is that of the diffusiv uncertain light of the morning, half day and half night, but with no sharp line of distinction between them; the other is that of the half risen sun stricken across by the line of the horizon; the light and the dark hemispheres of the orb rigorously sundered and defined. Both concur, however, in prophesying the full light of day. Johannes or John was the undefined twilight; and hence, as a person, he was conceived of as a prophet, but not as a law-giver. Moses, on the other hand, was the exactified lay or law; the sharp edge of the horizon between the hemisphere above and the hemisphere beneath; and hence the Defined Twilight; and the foundation-layer of all legal and intellectual; that is to say, of all exact distinctions. Moses, as a person, was then both prophet and law-giver.

All the nations of antiquity had the widely-diffused and ingrained tradition of a great primitiv law-giver, whom each claimed as the founder of their social polity and the hero of the pure intellect, as contrasted with their physical heroes. All of these characters, it will now appear, were one and the same, and all go back for the origin of the abstract idea, and of their supposed personality, to the semblance of Law in the sharp, hard, exact, level line of the horizon, cutting the orb of day and furnishing the universal type of law, precision, and legal severity, and so, again, of pure intellection. These properties are then contrasted with the diffusiv light and the gracious or pleasant warmth of the radiance, at large, of the same orb.

In the following list of word-forms for Yes-No; Affirmation, Negation, and their intermediate Limitation; they three (being what Kant calls the factors of quality) lie at the fountain head of thought and being. The words within brackets are hypothetical intermediate forms, thus:

| YES. | NO. |
|---|---|
| Ma ('m, used for yes.) | Na ('n. Eng na-y.) |
| Am; (Lat. Gr. root, to be strong.) affirmativ (8) | An (an, a—Sanskrit and Greek Privativ. |
| Ma-am, Mam } Mem. | Na-an, Nan } Lat. non; Ger. nein |
| MEM-NON (Yes—No) Egyptian (9). | |
| [Mem-non-us.] | |
| [Mem-nen-es.] | |
| [Mem-n-es.] | |
| Menes, Egyptian founder. | |
| Minos, Greek, law-giver and founder. | |
| Manas, Menu or Manu. } Hindoo, law-giver and founder. (10.) | |
| Mane, Latin for morning; Latin, Nox; German, Nacht, Night. | |
| [Manesa.] | |
| [Mansa.] | |
| Mousa, Mosa, Moisa, } Greek for the Muse of poetry and thought. | |
| Musa, Latin for the Muse of poetry and thought. | |
| MOSES, the Hebrew founder and law-giver. | |

(6.) The full radiance of the completely risen sun; the half full rising sun.

(7.) The root ma means to mow, harvest, gather, whence, in idea, (or rather from the idea of) affirm-ativ mass or quantity, a heap, pile, mass; reality, exhuberance, the affirmativ mass, as contrasted with the negativity or absence of matter; ma and na, the matter and no matter of being, or affirmation and negation, respectivly. But the further outworking of these ideas, and this contrast, belongs to the newest department of etymology. See my paper on "Ideological Etymology," notice of, "Transactions of the American Philological Association, 1879." "Annex, Proceedings, at Newport, p. 4.

(8.) Whence to strike hard, "to befall" or fall upon and "injure."

(9.) Vanicek; roots man; men, mon, pp. 660, 661.

10.) Johnson's New Universal Cyclopedia. w. Menu or Manu. (great and small) as allied ideas to yes and no; a slight further contribution to Ideological Etymology.

[From the National Reformer.]

Sir J. D. Hay, Bart., M.P.

In the course of the election campaign at Wigton, this person, who holds a commission as Vice-Admiral in Her Majesty's navy, on July 21st, used words in reference to Mrs. Besant and Mr. Bradlaugh which the Scotsman and Glassgow Herald refused to print, but which the editor of the Scotsman described as "language so coarse that it could hav hardly dropped from a Yahoo."

On the 23d of July Mr. Bradlaugh wrote and sent the following letter:

"July 23, 1880.

"Admiral Sir John D. Hay, Bart, Sir: I beg to ask you whether the report of your speech in the Glassgow News of July 22d, and in the North British Daily Mail of July 22d is accurately given. I hope you hav been incorrectly reported, because your suggestion is so infamous, and your statement so untrue, that I feel loth to believe that one whose rank and name favor the presumption that he has, during his life, at least come in contact with gentlemen, could hav been at the same time so cowardly and so untruthful.

"Yours obediently, (Signed) C. BRADLAUGH."

Having received no reply, although by a speech made on July 26th it was clear the letter had reached Sir. J. D. Hay, Mr. Bradlaugh on August 2d wrote as follows:

"August 2, 1880.

"Admiral Sir John D. Hay, Bart, M. P., Sir: On the 23d July I wrote you with reference to a speech reported to hav been made by you in the course of your election campaign, on the 21st July, and which speech, as reported in the North British Daily Mail and other journals of July 22d, contained some grossly foul and infamous suggestions against myself and a lady named in your speech, and this, though both of of us are strangers to you and neither directly or indirectly concerned in your election. I hav received no reply to my letter, but from the report, in the North British Daily Mail and other journals of July 27th of a subsequent speech by you, I hav reason to suppose that you received my letter, and that you did deliver the speech of July 21st as reported. It is impossible the matter can rest in the present state, and unless, within three days, I hear satisfactorily from you I must place your original speech and copies of my lettters before the Speaker, whom I shall consult as to the proper means of bringing the matter before the House. I shall to-morrow forward a copy of this letter to Sir Stafford Northcote, to whom, as leader of the Conservativ party, I hav already sent a copy of your speech of July 21st.

"Yours obediently, C. BRADLAUGH."

As the rules and orders of the House of Commons prevent the matter from being brought before the House, as the law affords no remedy, and as Sir John D. Hay's age and Mr. Bradlaugh's superior physical strength preclude the personal chastisement his cowardly falsehood merits, the above letters are submitted to the public.

The following letter was also sent to Sir J. D. Hay:

"OATLANDS, August 2, 1880.

"To Vice-Admiral Sir J. D. Hay, M. P., Sir: A friend has sent me two papers, in one of which you, in the coarsest language, accuse me of conduct which would entitle Mr. Besant to a divorce, and in the other you admit the language and make a sort of clumsy apology.

"You are aware that a man is not legally punishable for slander, however vile, provided he do not impute an indictable offense. There is, however, a court of public opinion before which such slanderers may be brought. I shall be glad to know from you, first, whether you think it the act of a gentleman to accuse a woman who is a stranger to you of adultery; secondly, whether you consider it the act of a gentleman to make such an accusation without a shadow of evidence; thirdly, whether you will write to the papers which hav printed your cowardly falsehood, admitting that you slandered a woman who had never injured you?

"I see that you object to Mr. Bradlaugh characterizing your language as cowardly and untruthful. But would anyone, save a coward, attack a woman who had never wronged him? And if the statement be false, as it is, why should it not be stamped as untruthful? If Mr. Bradlaugh alleged that Lady Hay had been guilty of the same crime, would either you, or the gentleman implicated, hesitate to characterize the slanderer as a coward and a liar? Yet the accusation would be as justifiable as the one you hav made.

"I know that Christians and Tories care little for honor and truth when Radicals are to be injured, but I did not dream that an English officer could stain his lips with language so foul as you, unprovoked, hav used against myself. No apology can atone for the offense, but before taking any steps toward punishment, I wait to hear your excuse.

"Obediently, ANNIE BESANT."

To this no answer was sent up to August 11.

A Defense of Mrs. Slenker.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav just read in your paper of August 28th an article signed A. M, in which Mrs. Slenker is criticised quite sharply for writing upon a "subject too delicate for a woman to touch," namely "Sexual Intemperance." I hav not heretofore felt called upon to enter the list in this contest, not because I shrunk from any opprobrium which a discussion of the subject might giv to me, but because of thinking Mrs. Slenker was equal to the work without my help; but if it has come to this, that my sex is to be debarred the privilege of speech or pen upon a subject which interests us almost beyond measurement, then, indeed, I must speak aloud. What, indeed, do "experts of the other sex" know more than my own sex of this subject which A. M. thinks so "unclean as to befoul the columns of a family paper."

Now, Mr. Editor, this cry of delicacy, this dictating to woman what it is proper for her to talk about, and threatening her with loss of "social status," if and if, is very disagreeable, but it does not frighten me in the least. The wrongs which woman has suffered, and is still suffering, because of ignorance upon this subject of the relations of the sexes is not longer to be tolerated. Is the relation of parent and child an obscene relation? Do husbands and wives commit acts that bring the blush of shame to their brows when discussed in regard to the physiological effects? If such is the case, what shall we do? If the laws of nature are vulgar and obscene, surely it is not strange that the effects of the use of the law should be obscene men and women. I cannot admit that the discussion of any subject relating to the physical health or the "law of population" is improper in even a family paper. I pity the father of the grown-up daughters who could not trust them with a treatis on sexual intemperance. I trust their innocence and ignorance upon the relations of the sexes may not result in the doing of any act that shall cause that father to blush for them.

I wholly disagree with A. M.; on the contrary, believe and know that "knowledge is called for" on this subject. I hope Mrs. Slenker will continue to write, and that her opinions may be met with arguments against her ideas if any there are. But let no man or woman presume to deny the right of woman to speak or write upon any subject of which she knows by bitter experience so much as "sexual intemperance."

A. M. seems quite disturbed by Mrs. Slenker's use of the friend's language. Language is, I think, for the expression of thought, and though the pronoun thee might hav been used by Mrs. Slenker ungrammatically, she evidently made herself understood. Faithfully, LUCY N. COLMAN.

August 28, 1880.

NEVER permit the most resolute curiosity, or the most friendly concern, to find the lowest depth of your character. Gain the reputation for reserve power by reserving it.

THE HORNELLSVILLE CONVENTION.

A Great Success in Spite of the Prayers Kindly Offered Up for its Failure.

The Hornellsville Convention is a thing of history, and I hasten to send you these few impressions left upon my mind.

It is only a short time since I cut the last tie that bound me to supernatural religion. With Harriet Martineau, the happiest day of my life was when I got through trying to save my soul, and found myself a free rover out upon the broad, bright, breezy common of the universe. It has been to me a great and unspeakable joy to make the acquaintance of so many other free rovers and citizens of the world—noble men and women, who, weary asking of a God (who heeds not their prayers) to mend all, are determined to do their level best to mend all themselvs; who, having grown tired with lying and rotting by an old crumbling, decaying theological wharf, hav launched their barks bravely out upon the shoreless sea, and so are daily discovering some fresh island of beauty, wonder, and light.

The church people of Hornellsville hav had a great fright. They hav acted very much like hens disturbed in their nests by a marauding fox. Though the eggs on which they are setting hav been this long time addled, still they make a great to do over them. The ministers said they would rather hav been visited by the yellow fever or cholera. Probably if their humane preference had been realized, they would hav been the first to flee the town. They and their flocks assembled every night in their churches to pray away the black plague of Freethought that had come among them; while the Young Men's Christian Association littered the streets with silly, lying tracts for our conversion and to act as an antidote to the poison of truth.

But in spite of fears and prayers, ignorance and superstition, liars and hypocrits, gods and devils, the Convention was a great success.

From the opening to the closing the interest, enthusiasm, and delight rose higher and higher. At the close of every meeting men and women, whether acquainted or not, clasped each other by the hand to congratulate one another on their good fortune in being present to enjoy such a feast of wit, poetry, eloquence, and intellectual and moral quickening.

I never saw a more interesting assembly of people They were not remarkable for good looks. Most of their foreheads looked as though somewhat overgrown, and so spoiled that fair and placid symmetry you behold in the true orthodox face. You never mistake Mrs. Brown for Mrs. Smith, nor Mr. Jones for Mr. Gray, as you do in an orthodox assemblage. Every man and woman had a face and dress of their own, thus revealing the healthful influence of freedom of thought in the development of individuality of personal appearance as well as of mental independence. I could'nt help being struck with the fact that there was not a single butterfly of fashion in the whole crowd. Mrs. Tillotson was present in her bloomer costume bearing a somewhat extreme but still tender and brave protest against the curse and folly of abject slavery to fashion in dress. Every woman present was in herself the strongest argument in favor of woman suffrage, by looking as noble, intelligent, and self-reliant as the men.

This convention has made no great noise through the country, as there were no reporters present to give it the world for an audience, and the managers were too busy to heed the prayers of various papers willing to report if furnished with a report. Still, many of the most remarkable men and women in America met together and beneath the inspiration of the occasion vowed by the eternal Right that truth shall yet triumph over error; the church yet be wholly separated from the state; every child born into the world hav a chance to grow in the sunlight of truth; the gloomy caverns of superstition be destroyed; universal mental liberty be assured to all; the constitution of this republic be vindicated; woman be made free and equal with man, and the immortal Declaration of Independence be carried out in the economy of our government, so that this government for the people and by the people may not perish from the earth. The church may pretend that the principles of the Liberal League are the fancies of brain sick fools bent upon destroying the foundations of truth, morality, and happiness, but the day is not far distant when they shall find that while they hav slept we hav undermined their fortifications and captured their every defense. The results of this convention will not be seen to-day nor to-morrow, but a to-morrow shall come when upon its platform shall stand the men and women who will rule the world, not by power but by love and wisdom greater than that of all the Gods and Bibles.

One of the striking things about the convention has been its entire harmony and good-fellowship, though about equally divided between Spiritualists and Materialists, so called Though the speakers were about equally divided, each address seemed to be the complement of all the others. All showed that they were true children of the liberal heart as well as of the free mind. Dr. T. L. Brown, of Binghamton, gracefully presided and meted out impartial justice to all The motto of the President, which he brought with him and had hung above his head, is "Damn others as you would liked to be damned yourself," and so not desirous at all of being damned himself he damned no one. His happy introduction to the speakers, and unbroken good nature and mirthfulness contributed much to the enjoyment of the occasion. His opening address was an able and piquant presentation of the superiority of knowledge over belief in decreasing the sum of human suffering and increasing that of its joy.

Mr. Lyman C. Howe, Miss C. Fanny Allyn, and Mrs. Amelia H. Colby spoke for the Spiritual side in part, while the remaining speakers were content with one world at a time. Mr. Howe is an earnest and forceful speaker, and also a man of fervent and clear moral perceptions. He seems to be a little nearer the old interpretation of the universe than the other speakers, as he was the only one who prefaced his address with an invocation to a conscious power outside of him. So our Convention was redeemed in the sight of the orthodox by one prayer.

Miss Allyn is a prodigy of fluency. Her addresses lacked the mental consistency and logical sequence of those that are thoroughly prepared and thought out before hand. Still this was atoned for by an increase of fervor and passion. Her intellect is quick, fiery, and versatile. She would hav made a grand success on the stage. In her most startling and impassioned utterances there is a beauty and grace of sincerity and naturalness that charms all. Her power to improvise is a rare gift of genius for which I intend to honor her instead of any ministering spirits. To those unacquainted with this power in the history of genius her ability to put into verse her thoughts on the moment upon subjects presented to her from the audience dazzles and confounds the judgment. While Miss Allyn believes in Spiritualism, she never dogmatizes nor crowds it upon the attention of any one. Mrs. Colby is the complete complement of Miss Allyn. Her presence is majestic and commanding. The poise of her head with every feature revealed a majestic and imperial mind. Whatever may be the source of her power, I cannot but admire and be thankful for the presence among us of such a storm and tempest of thought. Her audacity takes away the breath almost of ordinary people. In referring in one of her addresses to the political situation she trod so hard upon the toes of some of the partisans in the audience they forgot themselvs and hissed; but she thanked them for acknowledging that they were hit, and passed on to hit somebody else. Her logic sometimes limps, and occasionally she begs the question with an assumption. Still these are only as a few dead limbs upon the great all-powerful stream of passion, sarcasm, and eloquence with which she bears the freighted vessels of thought to every mind. I care not whether she speaks from her own splendid intellectual and moral power or by the help of the spirits I am only too thankful to know that wherever she goes she cannot help but do much to purify the dead calm of ignorance and faith.

Mrs. Lucy Colman and Miss Marion Slusser were the only other feminin speakers, and they did not try to lift the veil that hangs between this life and any possible future. Mrs Colman looks as though she could be a mother to the whole world, and all her time and talent was given to make some one else glad, while Miss Slusser tried to show us how rich and beautiful this present life is and worth the living even if death be the dreamless sleep of eternal rest. Her address was as chaste as snow, as clear as crystal, and as beautiful as a lily.

Mr. Burnham from Michigan was a strong force in the Convention. His masterly argument against the idea that there is design in the universe was unanswerable. He wields the hammer of the iconoclast and the idols of superstition receive no mercy from him. One of the speakers in the Convention was a surprise party. He came professing to be a Christian evangelist, sent to convert us to the true faith and so we all came out, to be led back as meek as lambs to the fold. He was a dapper little gentleman with a very round and small head, neatly dressed, and with gloves on and wearing a cane as though he had been put up in a band box and sent to us for the occasion directly from the Young Men's Christian Association. If he had been provided with a pair of eye glasses to balance occesionally on the bridge of his nose and parted his hair just a little nearer the middle nothing would hav been wanting in his personal appearance. He commenced trying to feed us taffy by announcing himself as a Freethinker. His discourse was made up principally of driviling trivialities which are not worth noticing. For a time we all supposed him to be a member of that Protestant Jesuit Society, better known as the Young Men's Christian Association when all at once he began to call Luther a scoundrel and arch-fiend and then he stood revealed as a Jesuit of the Catholic order, who had come to lead us back to the gloomy cloisters and chambers of the inquisition of Rome. It was a comedy from the beginning, but from that time on it was a screaming farce. Parker Pillsbury was appointed to do the butchering, and one or two little stories slipped in between the lines of a carefully prepared discourse did the whole business so gently and carefully that that the poor little fellow actually enjoyed it and smiled like Isaac beneath the sacrificial knife. This grand veteran of anti-slavery days, though somewhat scared with former battles is still young for liberty, and his presence with us alone ought to wake the slumbering conscience of the American people to the fact that ours is the cause of justice, humanity, and liberty. Elizur Wright was also with us and spoke as clear and strong words in behalf of universal mental liberty as he was wont to long since for universal physical liberty. And is it not a sure omen of victory that his white locks are found marking, like the white plume of Henry of Navarre, the place were the conflict rages the thickest.

His gifted daughter Ellen entertained the Convention with her character delineations. Her power to change her whole appearance and to sink herself into the personality of the characters impersonated is truly marvelous. She is a host in herself, and all who saw and heard her were more than delighted.

Sunday evening we enjoyed a grand and comprehensiv discourse from T. B. Wakeman on "The Church of the World." While somewhat dull to some of the dull minds who had straggled in, it was in breadth of vision and perfect grasp of all that religion, Christ, Bible, God, and man mean, or can mean, the grandest discourse delivered during the Convention. Mr. Wakeman is evidently a perfect master of the situation, and would shed the clear light of truth on the fallacies of such a masterly sophist as Joseph Cook. His discourse should be printed, for it is one of the best contributions ever made to religious thought. Much such work needs to be done before the true church of humanity will be placed upon its enduring foundations to stand for the rights and joys of all; to wing the truths of science with the bright plumes of poetry and romance; to substitute theology, the barbarian's interpretation of the universe, with science, the interpretation of the civilized man; to teach men to be content with the knowable; to giv his reverence and trust to invariable law instead of to the arbitrary and changing will of a Creator; to consecrate his devotion to suffering human flesh and blood instead of to a phantom; to look upon this world and its truth, its love, goodness, and beauty as an end worthy of all his devotion instead of singing such doleful songs as

"Oh tell me no more
Of this world's vain show."

Of course the grand event of all was the lecture of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll. He is the sun about which all the others revolved. He is the splendid child of genius who shines in his own light, giving to all, but borrowing from none. His lecture was a tragedy and comedy, a mingling of laughter and tears, of passion and gentleness, of eloquence, and wit, humor, and pathos. He spoke for two hours and a half without losing the interest and control of the audience for a single moment.

Many thanks are due from the Liberals of the country to H. L. Green, the indefatigable worker without whom there would hav been no Convention.

The Liberal Leagues ought to arrange to employ Mr. Green on a salary. Our work is first a labor of love. We must teach and agitate, destroy and build. We ought to organize Liberal Leagues or clubs in every city, town, village, and country school district and scatter Liberal tracts and pamphlets as thick as leaves in autumn. We ought also to hav a lecture bureau to assist speakers in getting before the Liberal public. No man could do this so well as H. L. Green. He ought to be paid a regular salary. We hav two hundred Liberal Leagues. Suppose each League should pledge itself to pay $6.00 a year and employ his whole time to work in this field. I believe that it would be the very best thing that could be done now for the League movement.

In conclusion, I should like to express my unbounded satisfaction with the Liberal people of the country. I was warned by many that I was going among a bad set; that hey were wild and extreme, most of them Freelovers and Socialists. I hav attended Methodist and Unitarian conventions, but I never met a better, more intelligent, appreciativ, and sympathetic body of men and women. Those who associate Freelove and licentiousness with Liberalism should be treated with the scorn and contempt of every brave and thoughtful man and woman.

We are told that we Liberals and Infidels are all going to hell together. Now, since I hav become acquainted with these people, I hav made up my mind that while heaven may hav the advantage of a good climate, hell will hav at least the best society; and as I am rather fond of warm weather, I will take the good society and risk the climate for the sake of the company.

Laying aside joking, these conventions do great good by bringing so many splendid men and women together of like thought and purpose in life. The human heart craves companionship with those who can sympathize with our ideas and emotions. In such meetings these desires are fulfilled. We find that we are not alone, but that there are thousands upon thousands who hav abandoned theology as the baseless fabric of a dream consecrating themselvs to the service of reason and science as the only light-givers resolving through honor or dishonor, poverty or wealth, to seek only what is true and do only what is right. So I am glad that through the kind and generous offer of Dr. Shattuck of the free use of his magnificent Opera House that the Convention is to meet again at the same place.

With many pleasant memories and profound gratitude for the good I hav received from the past one, I shall look forward with anticipations of renewed pleasure, more abounding joy, and larger usefulness to the coming one in the month of September, 1881. GEORGE CHAINEY.

CORROBORATIV TESTIMONY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: As I was at the Hornellsville Convention I should like to say a few words about it. My duties at the Truth Seeker Bookstore, in the vestibule of the Shattuck Opera House, prevented my hearing the many eloquent addresses made, so I can only speak of what I saw and heard outside.

Several of the prominent Liberals who were expected to be present were conspicuous by their absence, but the number present filled the time pleasantly and profitably, judging by the happy faces and enthusiastic exclamations of the intelligent looking Infidels as they poured forth from the doors of the theater at the close of each session. Many inquiries were made about Bennett, Mendum, Seaver, Mrs. Slenker, Bell, Jamieson, Bradlaugh, and others, by their numerous admirers, and much disappointment was manifested at their absence. It was hoped that the Convention would be a grand reunion of the representativ Freethinkers of the country, and such it was to a certain extent. But nothing is perfect, and the Convention was as near perfection as ought to be expected.

The good Christians of Hornellsville exerted themselvs to the utmost to destroy the influence of the Convention, but their weapons were old and blunt, their God was deaf to their prayers, and their mode of warfare betrayed the miserable weakness of their forces. The old lie about Paine submitting the manuscript of his "Age of Reason" to Franklin for his opinion was revamped and circulated in tract form by a pious ice cream peddler; and notwithstanding the well-known fact that Franklin died long before Paine wrote the first part of that great epitome of Infidelity, the tracts were distributed with as much brazen effrontery as if their contents were not self-evident falsehoods and their distributors not shameless hypocrits. That masterly combination of profound ignorance and pueril assumptions known as "Thurlow Weed's Letter on Ingersoll" was also freely circulated, furnishing food for mirth to those into whose hands it fell. When it was found that Christian tracts were being distributed at the door of the Opera House it was proposed to retaliate by distributing Liberal tracts throughout the town; but when the nature of the tracts was discovered, every facility was afforded for their thorough distribution, and no antidote was deemed necessary, as their childish blunders and silly lies were apparent to even the most superficial reader.

Judging by the comments of those who thronged the vestibule between the sessions, next to Ingersoll, the Rev. George Chainey, our latest accession from the Christian ranks, made the greatest impression on the minds of the audience. Indeed many said that could he dispense with notes during his address, his power over an audience would equal that of Ingersoll. An Episcopal lady who had the courage to hear one of his discourses was heard to exclaim, "What a pity! what a pity! what a pity that you hav fallen from grace, when you might hav accomplished so much good in the world!" Mr. Chainey is an eloquent speaker, and combines a ready flow of good ideas with a marvelous command of words in which to dress them. The cause of Freethought has gained a stalwart warrior in Mr. Chainey; and the cause of Christ has reason to mourn.

H. J. Thomas.

Bushwhacking.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In my last letter I promised to take up next the alleged political "Bourbonism" of the Democratic party. That the good of our whole country in the long run called upon us as patriots in the highest sense of the word to support Gen. Hancock was the point to be shown. That subject rises immeasurably above the Comstock laws, important as they are. I hav used them merely as a suitable means of introducing to the Liberals the main issues of the canvass.

Mr. Bush, however, does not wait for the end of the story, but in your last issue strikes in medias res with a long letter of underbrush which will be forgotten and lose all possible interest unless it is cleared up at once. Clearing up is all that Mr. Bush needs as to persons, state and federal rights, and indeed generally everything connected with the subject. He is in a state of obfuscation the reverse of delightful. To begin with, he is a Buttercup in regard to his persons, he has "mixed those children up." A large part of his letter is occupied in trying to cipher out some inconsistencies in "Mr. Wakeman's" utterances about the Comstock laws, and especially between his speech at Faneuil Hall and his address to the jury on Mr. Bennett's trial.

Now if this personal matter was worth referring to at all (as it was not), it was worth finding out and stating the truth about it. If Mr. Bush had looked at the speeches he quoted from, he would hav seen that the Faneuil Hall speech was made by T. B. Wakeman, Aug. 1, 1878, and that the address to the jury in the Bennett trial was in May, 1879, by Abram Wakeman. He should hav inferred that they were two different persons; that their addresses were entirely independent of each other and for entirely different purposes, and that one person and address should not be taken for the other.

This confusion of Mr. Bush may justify a few words of personal explanation.

Abram Wakeman was the sole counsel for the defendant in the Bennett case. His name only appears on the record and the appeal book. The insertion of my name after my brother's in the beginning of Mr. Bennett's report was a mistake. I took no part in the trial because I thought it would be indelicate after what I had said publicly on the matter, and would professionally limit my freedom of criticism afterward. My brother is often employed solely as counsel in cases in this way In such cases neither Mr. J. J. Latting nor myelf, his office partners, are in any way responsible. Nor were we in this case. I made several suggestions during the trial, of which some were adopted and others not. The sole responsibility rested upon the counsel, who accepted it, and did his best under the circumstances.

Instead of being "two in one," as Mr. Bush supposes, my brother and I are about as different as two brothers can be, and we agree to differ. He adheres to the traditions of his fathers in religion, and to the Republican party in politics. As to the party—habit and gratitude may hav something to do, for he held offices under that party for years as Congressman, Post-master of New York, Surveyor of the Port, etc., so they call him "Hon." Some people address me in the same way, but mistakenly, for I hav never held office at all. He seems to think that no gentleman changes his religion or politics—I think one may to get higher and clearer. I do not adhere to exploded traditions in religion, nor to the mission-performed Republican party. I am a constructiv Liberal as to one, an independent voter as to the other, although for twenty years (beginning with Fremont), when the fate of the Union seemed to depend upon it, I voted the Republican ticket without a scratch or a murmur.

Nor as to the Comstock laws has there been any concerted action between us. He never knew what I would say or had said at Faneuil Hall until it was printed, nor did I hav anything to do with the jury speech in the Bennett case; he and not I corrected the published report.

But Mr. Bush is under still worse confusion in supposing that those speeches are inconsistent with themselvs or with each other. My brother, as a lawyer, independently arrived at similar conclusions with myself as to the constitutionality of this legislation. I, who know him best, feel confidence in his opinion, for there are few in the United States more competent to form a correct conclusion on such a subject.

Now, as to myself, Mr. Bush undertakes to make me indorse all of the recent Comstock state legislation in Massachusetts, but I do not, and did not. In the Faneuil Hall speech I said: "You hav long-standing and sufficient laws on the whole subject in Massachusetts, and if Mr. Heywood had been found guilty under them I should hav left the matter to you as her citizens. I should never hav come here to enter a protest."

This is no indorsement of the Comstock laws since surreptitiously (as I am told) passed in Massachussits. I had examined the old statutes of that state as to obscenity, etc., and knew whereof I spoke. I never said that the state Comstock law was a "proper statute," nor did my brother, to my knowledge. How far my brother (now in Colorado) really approves of the New York state Comstock laws I do not know. I am not responsible for any expressions looking that way in his Bennett jury address, if such there are; but there are no expressions which go to the extent claimed. His (my brother's) point was to show the jury that after the state of New York had given laws, a Society, and an agent to punish Mr. Bennett for the alleged offense committed within her own borders, the matter should be left to them, and that the trick and device through the post-office to get the United States to interfere was not in good faith and not to be encouraged by a conviction of Bennett. He therefore properly enlarged upon the extent of those state laws and society and the good that had been done by them, which has been often admitted even by Mr. Bennett. But he is careful to say that "there is a diversity of opinion as to the propriety of such legislation." "Your representativs," he said, "hav made this law, hav incorporated this Society," and he thinks with good purpose and intent, and he wishes them, since the duty is placed in their hands, God speed, and he is not there to find fault with that Society, etc.

Of course he was not there to "find fault with that Society," but to use it to get Mr. Bennett justice, if possible; and he sailed just as close to the wind as he could to get the benefit of the state laws and society without really admitting their legality or even their propriety.

That was the proper position for skilful counsel to take, but he let slip no word that actually committed him to that legislation, although praising, as Mr. Bennett has done, the good that had been done under it.

But this botheration about persons and their speeches is the merest trivial bushwhacking, only if Mr. Bush does go into it he ought to be correct and know his persons apart, and what they were about.

But when Mr. Bush gets nearer to the real subject his confusion is more lamentable, because the subject is more important. Anywhere we take him we hav a fog; for instance:

He argued that because Congress had power to "regulate" commerce, it must hav to regulate the meaning of mailed matter. I showed that the power to regulate commerce was for general governmental purposes and had always been used as such from the first Congress down. But that the power to establish post-offices was a power for a special object, and did not include regulation of meaning of mailed matter for governmental purposes, and that Congress had never so acted or supposed until enlightened by Comstock after one hundred years. He replies, "Under that rule, Congress has no right to fix the rates of postage, nor regulate the transmission of mailable matter." Certainly this don't follow. The right to use and regulate the post-offices for all postal purposes has never been disputed. But the right and power to use them for ulterior and general governmental purposes is another matter and gives us at once a censorship, abridgment of the freedom of the press, and the spy and espionage systems. None but a Republican would fail to see this distinction.

Again, Mr. Bush seems to think that because, as we all know, the colonies never were states before the Constitution and so could not hav had post-offices as such, and because since the adoption of the Constitution, Congress has passed laws to "regulate the post-office establishment," therefore, it has power to regulate it for non-postal purposes. But there is nothing in this idea simply because the regulation has always been limited to postal purposes, as above remarked.

Again, Mr. Bush says, "Mr. Wakeman knows that there is a general knowledge among men as to what is and what is not obscene." He then with his usual confusion attributes to me what counsel quoted from Lord Lyndhurst, and tried to use as a definition on the Bennett trial. In attributing to me this "general knowledge" Mr. Bush is too generous. I hav tried to find such general knowledge, but with poor result. As a good example, take this: On this very Bennett trial I handed up to counsel a definition of obscenity which I had prepared with great research and care. The counsel shook his head and said, "No, that isn't it. It is safer to stick to Lord Lyndhurst." But to the dismay of the defense the court had also fished up a definition of its own, broad enough to condemn nearly everything from the Vedic hymns down to the morning Herald. The counsel argued and protested, but the court sent its definition to the jury as the law embodying the "general knowledge" of mankind. This is the kind of knowledge which is visible only as fog, yet Mr. Bush would leave this fog to the postmasters to determin and act upon at "the office of delivery!" Need I say more?

Again Mr. Bush is in utter confusion as to the difference and danger between the United States and the state laws on this whole subject. He seems to think that because the states can punish obscenity, lotteries, and frauds, therefore it is just as innocent and constitutional for the general government to do it through post-office trickery.

This difference has been gone over repeatedly, but Mr. Bush is as innocent as on the "first day" The common law regulates: The jury trial by peers of the vicinage. The accusation only before a grand jury bound to secrecy. The arrest without warrant only in case of injury to person or property, these are stricken down. Instead of them we hav a censorship of the press before publication by a thousand postmasters and special agents, utterly irresponsible, except to God. The espionage and spy systems as a regular part of the U. S. service and arrests practically without a warrant, much less an indictment; accusation without a grand jury, and a trial in a court and under rulings so constitu ed and prearranged that the "agent" is sure to convict. All this and much more is done to effect what any state, police, or sessions court can do. The result is a precedent that if followed utterly abolishes the distinction between the states and the general government in all criminal jurisdiction.

This brings up another topic as to which Mr. Bush seems to delight to illustrate his confusion, viz, "state rights." He seems to think that I am a fanatic on that subject. Nothing is further from the truth, as my letter in the last Truth Seeker will show. I hold to the old orthodox Jeffersonian position as there quoted, and to which I beg prayerful attention. The powers, rights, and duties of the states and of the general government are balanced in the Constitution, and when that balance is overthrown the republic ends. Upon one side of that safe and solid middle ground the nullifiers and secessionists hav arisen and tried to overthrow it by war. On the other side the monarchial and imperial Federalists are trying to consolidate all possible power into a strong general government with a "strong man at its head. They speak of the general government as "the nation," forgetting that the states are a part of the nation as well, and that there is no nation except E Pluribus Unum. But I must not repeat my last letter. There are in short but three positions on this subject, the Secessionist, the Democratic, and the Empire. Mr. Bush in his horror at the first is going to the latter extreme. The middle, or democratic, ground only is safe.

As to the question whether half of the fines and penalties under the U. S. laws go to the informer, I hav not the statues at hand now to review the matter, but Mr. Bush does not convince me that the statute I quoted does not apply because these and all fines are by another statute made part of the revenue. It is admitted that half of the fines under the state laws go to the informer. If the section I quoted from the U. S. laws does not apply—that is a small matter in relation to the whole subject—except to show that I was half way mistaken in saying that half of all of the fines, etc., went to the informer. If I was misled it was by the words of the statute I quoted, and I will acknowledge the error when discovered—"honor bright."

The important fact is that Mr. Bush does not dispute any of the remarkable quotations from the statutes by which it was proved that the United States mails and their contents are at the mercy of the United States officials. He merely tries to show that in the Bennett case Comstock did not hav the aid of the post-office people to do all the wickedness he might hav done. This is confusion again, for I expressly said that these most dangerous powers were not used because the post-office officials were mostly fair and decent men, and will not yet submit to Comstock and the influences that sustain him. This I know to be the fact in New York and elsewhere. But wait until "this issue" has been decided in favor of theocracy by the election of Garfield! When that "dear brother in the Lord" is at the head of a strong government how long will these undisputed powers remain unused? How long will the officials hold out?

Lastly, Mr. Bush seems to think that those who oppose these United States laws are ignorant of the United States decisions to which he thinks we ought to submit at once. Will it do for Liberals to accept the decisions of those courts or of any court as final on moral, religious, or political questions?

In the Faneuil Hall speech I showed that an appeal has been taken again and again to Congress and the people from those courts and been carried, and it must be carried again. That is the whole object of Mr. Bennett's protest. We know the decisions as well as Mr. Bush, and that it is useless to go before these courts. The object of Mr. Bennett in suffering his prosecution was to hav these facts known and these laws illustrated. At the trial no time or effort was wasted upon the question of the unconstitutionality of the law. That was a foregone conclusion there, and upon any appeal that could hav been taken. The appeal was really to the press, to the people, and especially to Liberals, to understand this question, and prepare to secure an inviolable mail, the right of publication without previous censorship of any kind, and the accusation and punishment for any abuse of that right by a grand and petit jury only and in the common law courts.

Will they listen to this appeal, or allow their most precious rights and liberties to be filched by the "agents" of God? They refused to follow Mr. Abbot, and I hope they will now refuse to follow Mr. Bush to the same conclusion Indeed he goes far beyond Mr. Abbot. T. B. Wakeman.

New York, Sep. 4, 1880.

Personal.

Before I return to Evansville I hav yet some spare time to devote to lecturing in the state of New York. Address me care of Truth Seeker office.

George Chainey.

To Mrs. R. E. Munsore

[WHO HAD ASKED FOR SOME POETRY.]

BY C. M. OVERTON.

Yes, they speak and I do hear it,
This they speak, or something near it;
Thou hast said, and I believe thee,
I hav something now to giv thee;
So I giv in full fruition,
Simple word of recognition.
Words are cheap, yet hearts hav broken
That a word has not been spoken;
Words are cheap, yet men are dying
O'er a cold and hard denying,
Should we speak what might be given,
Sorrowing earth were changed to heaven,
Now we walk a world of dangers,
Mute like unrelated strangers
Frozen stiff, yet hearts are bleeding
For one word the soul is needing.
Words are cheap; while man is dying,
From a cold and hard denying.
Thou hast asked and I will giv it,
If thou wilt deign to receive it.
Little gift to thee I proffer;
Nay, 'tis great, my all I offer;
But I giv to all that's human,
Giv alike to man and woman;
Not a soul, howe'er degraded,
Not a soul so sunk and shaded,
But I giv in full fruition,
Kindly word of recognition,
Would'st thou share this gift so common?
Share my gift with all that's human?
Take the word, my gift so royal,
Keep it in a spirit loyal;
Send it on its glorious mission,
Bid it take its true position;
Word so broad that none can span it,
Wealth that shall redeem a planet,
Now I giv in full fruition,
This small word of recognition;
Gift so great earth needs no other,
Sister soul, I am "thy brother."

---

NEARLY all the leading English philologists are either Vice-Presidents or members of the committee of the English Spelling Reform Association.

---

LECTURES OF

R. G. INGERSOLL.

THE PEOPLE'S EDITION.

Paper Covers.

Vol. I. "The Gods, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thos. Paine," "Individuality," "Heretics and Heresies." Price, 50 cents.

Vol. II. "The Ghosts, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man Woman, and Child," "Declaration of Independence," "Farming in Illinois," "Speech at Cincinnati," "The Past Rises Before Me Like a Dream." Price 50 cents.

Both volumes bound in one, price, $1.00.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll, by Sarony, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

Imperial, or large size..... 40 cents.
Photo, or card size..... 20 cents.
Life-size lithograph, 21x27..... 50 cents.

Postage paid.

Either of the above Volumes handsomely bound in cloth, $1.25.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

---

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

| | |
|---|---|
| Thomas Paine. | F. E. Abbot, |
| Paine's Bust. | Frothingham, |
| Paine's Monument. | Wendell Phillips, |
| Voltaire. | Emerson, |
| Rousseau. | Garrison, |
| Humboldt. | Henry Bergh, |
| Goethe, | Peter Cooper, |
| Schiller. | D. R. Burt, |
| Aug. Comte. | S. P. Andrews. |
| Heine. | Walt Whitman, |
| Alex. Pope. | Froude. |
| John Milton. | Max Muller, |
| Goldsmith. | Warren Chase. |
| Shelley. | Jas. Parton. |
| Byron. | Wm. Denton, |
| Burns. | Dr. Slade, |
| Washington. | A. J. Davis. |
| Franklin. | Foster, |
| Jefferson. | J. M. Peebles, |
| John Adams. | Frances Wright. |
| J. Q. Adams. | E. V. Wilson, |
| Madison, | G. L. Henderson, |
| Jackson. | Prof. Fiske, |
| Lincoln, | Fred Douglas, |
| Lincoln's Monument. | N. P. Banks. |
| Gerrit Smith, | P. V. Nasby. |
| Henry C. Wright, | Beecher, |
| J. S. Mill, | Tilton, |
| Sumner. | Moulton. |
| Edgar A. Poe. | G. W. Curtis. |
| Greeley. | Th. Nast, |
| Castellar. | J. G. Bennett. |
| Tennyson. | Chas. A. Dana, |
| Darwin | Phoebe Carey. |
| Tyndall. | Alice Carey. |
| H. Spencer. | Elizabeth C. Stanton, |
| Huxley. | Susan B. Anthony. |
| Proctor. | Lucy Stone, |
| Draper, | Julia Ward Howe, |
| Bradlaugh, | Chas. Cheney, |
| Holyoake. | Paulina Davis, |
| Ingersoll. | Mary F. Davis, |
| Underwood, | Emma H. Britten |
| Mendum, | Lizzie Fowler, |
| Seaver, | Mrs. Slenker, |
| L. Colby. | Susan H. Wixon. |
| Dr. Hare, | D. M. Bennett. |
| Judge J. W. Edwards, | W. S. Bell. |
| Lizzie Doten. | J. C. Bundy. |
| Mrs. J. Conant. | S. S. Jones. |
| Dr. Mary E. Walker (full figure). | Asa K. Butts, |
| Geo. Francis Train. | W. F. Jamieson, |
| H. L. Green. | Kersey Graves. |

---

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

---

SUPERSTITION;

THE RELIGION OF

"Believe or be Damned."

OPEN LETTER TO THE

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL BOARD.

BY

M. BABCOCK.

This book contains an inspired PHOTOGRAPH of the GOD that's being worshiped at the expense of the district in our public schools; the God that "overshadowed" Mary; the God that's wanted in the Constitution; the gentleman that owns some three billion dollars' worth of untaxed church property; the "so-help-me" God that makes a lie the truth in court; the God that governors besought to stop the yellow fever, which he didn't do. The picture is worth the price of the book. Price, 25 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, New York.

---

LADIES!!

"SALEM, OR., July 17, 1880.

"S. H. PRESTON, Dear Sir: Please send me by express, C. O. D., to Portland, Or., $100.00 (one hundred dollars) worth of that "Comstock" Syringe. I mean business.

"DR. MARY SOLANDER."

Only sixteen had been sold when

COMSTOCK

set out to suppress it. Now orders come as above. Grand jurymen buy it for their wives. It is SIMPLE, SAFE, INFALLIBLY RELIABLE, necessary to HEALTH and personal purity, and is pronounced by patients and physicians to be the greatest

GODSEND TO THE SEX

gotten up in this generation. Sent securely boxed, with private instructions for special use. Confidential terms to agents. Price $5.00; improved, $10.00. Address SAM. H. PRESTON, tf32 209 West 34th st., New York.

---

"SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES"

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This volume is printed on toned paper, in clear, bold type, and handsomely bound in muslin, containing 275 pages, 12mo. Price, $1.25.

This book contains the principal points that Mr. Ingersoll has made against the Pentateuch in all his lectures on that subject. The pamphlets that hav been surreptitiously issued are incorrect, filled with mistakes, and consist of only about fourteen or fifteen pages, while there are two hundred and seventy-five pages in the book just issued. The book is unanswerable in its facts and logic, inimitable in its style, and filled with wit, satire, eloquence, and pathos.

---

Busts of R. G. Ingersoll,

By the celebrated sculptor, CLARK MILLS.

Cabinet size, price $2.50.

Small Busts, on Pedestal (mantel ornament), price $1.25. Neatly packed and boxed ready for shipment. Every admirer of this great Apostle of Liberty should hav at least one.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll.

By SARONY, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

Imperial or large size . . . . 40 cents
Photo or card size . . . . 20 "
Life-size Lithograph, 21x27 . . . . 50 "
Postage paid.

D. M. BENNETT.
141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK.

---

Call.

A lady, who is free, about forty years of age, of average mind, health, and means, wishes to correspond with a gentleman of like or similar qualifications, who believes that divine law is more important than human, but would, notwithstanding, conform to the latter if possible, in such a manner that it should at the same time be a protest against it. Address,
3 37 LEEAL, care THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

---

THE

Anonymous Hypothesis OF Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

---

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., N.Y.

---

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address

DR. J. M. MOSELEY,
13 27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

---

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

---

AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

---

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrins, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

---

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familiar tunes. Designed for Liberal Leagues and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00; twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3.00. Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York,

---

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. . . $1.00.

---

MODERN THINKERS:

What They Think and Why.

By V. B. Denslow, LL.D.,

With an Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The work contains critical essays upon Emanuel Swedenborg, and the origin of the Christian ideas of heaven, hell, and virtue; Adam Smith, founder of the school of Economists; Jeremy Bentham, the apostle of law reform and of utilitarianism in morals; Thomas Paine and his relations to the Declaration of Independence and democracy in America; Charles Fourier, the philosopher of passional harmony and co-operativ association; Herbert Spencer, a review of his theories of evolution and of morals; Earnst Haeckel, the demonstrator of the doctrin of evolution; Auguste Comte, founder of the Positive philosophy and pontiff of the "Religion of Humanity;" and an essay on the authorship of Junius, as a sequel to the critique on Thomas Paine.

This volume consists of 384 pp., 12 mo, and is illustrated by portraits of each of the eight great thinkers, and opens with an introduction from the pen of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

Cloth, $1.50. Sold at this office.

---

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19, 1880.

I wish to notify the public that a Mr. Baldwin, of Chicago, also Rhodes & McClure, of the same place, are publishing pamphlet editions of my lectures. All the lectures published by them are grossly inaccurate—filled with mistakes, horribly printed, and outrageously unjust to me. These men are simple literary thieves and pirates, and are obtaining money from the public under false pretenses. I take this course to warn the public that these publications are fraudulent. The only correct copies of my lectures are published by C. P. Farrell. All others are published by people who are willing to steal from me and defraud the public vender. These wretches hav published one lecture under four titles, and several others under two or three.

3m31 R. G. INGERSOLL.

All of C. P. Farrell's editions of Col. Ingersoll's works, and none others, are sold at this office. D. M. BENNETT.

---

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructiv work. In cloth, $3 per vol. the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4 50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

---

UPPLYSNINGENS TIDEHVART

(AGE OF ENLIGHTENMENT).

A SWEDISH WEEKLY,

Devoted to the culture of Freethought, to the investigation of the religious systems of our times, and to the discussion of religious and social questions in general.

The only Swedish religio-philosophical publication in America.

TERMS PER YEAR . . . . $2,00

Exchange is desired with any other papers in any language.

ERICKSON & OLSON,
Grove City, Meeker Co., Minn.

---

For sale, in the Swedish language:

A BETTER RELIGION.

By FRANZ HERMAN WISTRAND,
Editor of the Truth Teller,
Lake Constance, Buffalo Post-Office,
Wright Co. Minnesota.
Published by ERICKSON & OLSON,
Grove City, Minn.

---

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER,

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

NEWBURYPORT MASS., Sept. 23, 1878.

To Miss Anna Knoop, Dear Madam:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

JAMES PARTON.

Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

---

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot, and Power Presses. Die work of all kinds. Perforating Dies a specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N. Y
tJan31.

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 East 28th Street, N. Y

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. By COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp, $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2.00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo. 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 68 pages; price, 25 cents

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 130 pages. Price, only 25 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Forms for Organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-Laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected, for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Over 580 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents, in cloth.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A New Scripture from an antique manuscript (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL, in conjunction with A. HOOK, Esq. Very amusing. Price, 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Freethinkers' Convention, held at Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878. A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. George W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, and several other persons. Price, cloth, $1.25.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound Volumes I., II., III., IV., and V. These volumes, containing over 520 pages each, are made up of over one hundred Truth Seeker Tracts, with some additional kinds. They embrace a variety of subjects by different authors, written in a terse, trenchant, and spicy style. They are offered at the extremely low price of 60 cents per volume in paper covers, and $1.00 in cloth; or 50 cents each in paper, and 75 cents each in cloth if the whole set is taken.

Sepher Toldoth Jeschu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First English translation of the ancient Jewish story of Jesus, who was born at Bethlehem about the year 106 B. C., being the son of a betrothed maiden named Miriam (Mary) by Joseph Pandera. How and why the Romans changed "Kepha" to "Petros." Startling evidence that Paul flourished before the middle of the first century B. C., contemporary with the aforesaid Kepha. Price, 20 cents.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, curate of a Romish church in France in the eighteenth century, whose views upon theology were not published until after his death, and are now for the first time presented in English. Very radical and able. Price, 25 cents.

Influence of Christianity Upon Civilization. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Revised edition. One of the most able treatises upon the subject ever written. Price, 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Revised edition. In this treatise the two systems are fairly and ably examined from a historical standpoint. Price, 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in the Place of Christianity. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Price, paper, 10 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus; His Character and Doctrine. A chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief." By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Price, cloth, 60 cents; paper, 35 cents.

Resurrection of Jesus. By W. S. BELL. Revised and enlarged edition. Price, 25 cents.

Religion not History. An able examination of the morals and theology of the teachings of the New Testament. By W. F. NEWMAN. Emeritus Professor of University College, London. From the London edition. Price, 25 cents.

Bennett-Teed Discussion, Between D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker," and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED, of Moravia, N. Y. Proposition discussed: "Jesus Christ is not only divine, but is the Lord God, creator of heaven and earth." Teed affirming: Bennett denying. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Blakeman's Two Hundred Poetical Riddles. (For children and youth.) Embracing a great variety of subjects. This work is new and interesting, and affords a great amount of amusement in the family circle, as well as in gatherings of children and older people. Price, 20 cents.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR. Delivered at Steinway Hall, New York, in the winter of 1875-76. 1. Growth of Worlds; 2. Life and Death of Worlds; 3. Other Worlds than Ours; 4. Other Suns than Ours; 5. The Great Mysteries of the Universe; 6. Religion and Astronomy. 65 pp. Paper, 20 cents

Beyond the Veil. A Spiritualistic work, said to be dictated by the spirit of PASCHAL BEVERLY RANDOLPH, aided by Emmanuel Swedenborg and others, through the mediumship of Mrs. Frances H. McDougall and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. It gives minute and interesting descriptions of life in the spirit world—its location, intermediate state, landscape, habitation, food, clothing, industrial interests, etc. It contains a steel engraving of P. B. Randolph. A neat volume. Price, $1.50.

Tee Cee Lee in a Pulpit.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I hav been and gone and done it. I hav preached! I hav stood on praying ground, interceding for terms of mercy—or words to that effect. I hav pleaded the cause of the anthropomorphic ape vs. Adam, before a Christian audience! I took my text outside the "leds of the Bible," and discoursed. In short, I hav pounded a pulpit "drum ecclesiastic" very gently.

And this is how it came about. The Rev. Mr. McConnell came into our convention the first and second days, asked questions, offered objections, and made little interlocutory speeches. We freely let him hav his say. After a while we taunted him with the fact that the clergy would grant us no such privileges. He made a sort of claim that they would, and cited one instance in his own practice. Finally W. F. Jamieson dared him to invite one of the speakers of this convention to deliver a lecture in his church. He flatly declined—backed square down. Meantime I had heard of his complimenting, while at the same time deprecating, my address of the night before, and I got up and made him a specific offer to deliver my lecture on "Social Evolution," describing to him briefly the tenor of it, and assured him he would get fifty dollars' worth of idea out of it, and I would giv it to him and his people for nothing. Upon that he began to wilt; still made objections; said that his church was small and he hadn't control of it, and offered, if I would go one hundred miles away, to get a larger church for me.

I replied that I didn't mind the small church nor slim audience; I wanted him to establish the principle of giving a hearing to Liberals in his church and before his people as freely as we do the clergy; and a small church was as good for that purpose as a large one. Finally he said he would consult his people. Then he left, and in the afternoon returned to the hall for a moment, came privately to me, and said, "Our church will be lighted [not delighted] and ready for you on Monday evening." Jamieson was speaking; and when he closed I announced the decision to the Convention, and it was received with hearty and heartfelt applause.

This is a triumph of right, reason, and free speech in an unexpected quarter, and all credit and honor are hereby rendered by the speaker and by the Convention for the unexampled liberality on the part of the reverend gentleman and of his church. It was the talk of the town after the announcement that an Infidel is going to deliver an Infidel lecture in a Christian church! And people here told me, "There will be a jam in the little church.

Well, everything came gloriously off to-night. The house was crowded as predicted. The audience seemed intelligent and appreciativ. I feared in advance that my application of the law of evolution to social development might shoot over their heads, but I think they understood it. I was in good trim myself, and waded in regardless of the depth of the orthodoxy. The clergyman did not offer to introduce me nor to open with prayer nor to make me feel at home in any way. I asked a suggestion about the proper time for the trouble to begin. "Oh," he said, "begin when you like The affair is yours; run it as you please."

After it was over the dominie went for me and hedged and sheltered his flock from the effect of the poison of my Infidel science to the best of his ability, but it was not a formidable performance. I still liv, and the audience livs still; and an idea or two I think will remain and abide with both pastor and people for at least forty days. I closed, cordially thanking him for inviting me and them for coming out and listening. He opened, disclaiming that he invited me—said that the Liberal League invited me—and seemed to wish to shirk the responsibility of my being there. He injected a blessing for me into the middle of his speech and hoped that I might be jerked from the phalanstery I had pictured on earth to the house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. And at bottom there is an honesty about the man and an effort to be just and do the liberal thing in his bruque, blunt way that I rather liked. All honor to the progress that the Rev. McConnell is making. I shall always remember him with pleasant emotions.

Marshalltown, Iowa. T. C. Leland.

The Liberal League Congress Hotel Rates and Railroad Rates.

Messrs. P. A. Seymour & Co., proprietors of the Parker House, in Chicago, writes: "We will make the terms $1 25 per day for your delegates. Probably if you will cot-up in good rooms we might do better."

The rate of railroad fare will be from New York, and all other stations on the Erie road to Salamanca, full fare to Salamanca and one third fare when returning. The full fare for the round trip from Salamanca will be ten dollars. But all the delegates must go on train No. 3, that leaves New York about 7 P.M. on the 13th day of September.

H. L. Green.

The Universal Federation of Freethinkers.

Dr. Cæsar DePaepe, one of the secretaries of the Brussels Congress, has sent a preliminary acknowledgment of the address (Truth Seeker No. 33) concerning the "Universal Educational Plan," by the following cable-telegram:

Brethren: Thanks to all concerned! Triumph of science over prejudice! Fraternal salutation. C. DePaepe.
Brussels, Sept. 3, 1880.

John Swinton, of the New York Sun, having visited France, writes as follows concerning the people: "The extent and intensity of the opposition to the church among the Parisian masses can hardly be overstated. At a Sunday meeting of many thousands, which I took a look at, the dogmas of modern religion were assaulted and ridiculed out and out; and of this sort of thing you can find any quantity."

Letters from Friends.

"UNITED WE STAND, DIVIDED WE FALL!

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I am very much interested in the political arguments in The Truth Seeker of July 31, 1880, and I say "Let the chatter go on." Liberals should fully understand both sides of this question, and the best way to arrive at the truth is to perfectly ventilate the subject. When both sides are fully understood, then will be the time and opportunity for all Liberals to unite together in one common cause, and in solid phalanx vote as one man in order to insure success. Then, as sure as America gained her independence by being united, so sure will victory finally crown our united efforts to regain the lost liberties for which our noble fathers bled and died.

Perhaps no man in this nation realizes more fully the true inwardness of the Democratic party than the writer, but of two evils always choose the least. For the life of me (so far) I can see no good reasons why all Liberals should not adopt the philosophical plan of Leland, Bodge, Bennett, and all others of the same opinions. If in union there is strength, let us as Liberals all unite with the party which is most likely to giv aid and comfort to the cause of Liberalism. Union at the ballot box is indeed our only refuge.

If we can succeed in any other way than by organization and perfect union, will some writer for this paper kindly make it known to us?

Nearly 73 years old, I hav never voted the Democratic ticket, but I am now determined to follow where the Liberals lead, having learned that only in organization and union is there strength and victory.

Should all Liberals vote for his Satanic majesty, the devil, I would unhesitatingly follow their example, knowing as I do that that is the only reasonable hope of accomplishing our objects and regaining our freedom. "A word to the wise is sufficient for them." "United we stand divided we fall." E. N. Kingsley.

P. S.—I forgot to say that every Liberal who leaves his ranks, and separately votes for the enemy absolutely assists in riviting his own chains tighter, and thus keeping himself forever in bondage. E. N. K.

---

Piedra, Col., Aug. 11, 1880.

Dear Friend Bennett: Hav had no mail since first of this month, but my last Truth Seeker dated July 17th is of more than usual interest in consequence of the bombshell you, Mr. Wakeman, and others hav thrown into the Greenback camp. I rob sleep from its just dues, after a hard day's labor in the hay-meadow to put in my protest against the attempts to giv the strength of the Liberals in the forthcoming election to the Democratic party. I hav no sort of doubt of your good intentions in advising and recommending such a course, but as you hav heretofore proved yourself superior to ordinary living individuals by frankly disclaiming infallibility, I trust you will reconsider your resolve to support a party whose promises mean no more when made to Liberals than those made by the Republican party. It may be news to you and Messrs Wakeman, Leland, and Ingersoll, to learn that the great majority of the Liberals and supporters of The Truth Seeker are Greenbackers. I hav always felt that the attempt of Col. Ingersoll, Mr. Wakeman, and others to organize a political party to be composed of Liberals was premature, and that it would prove a failure, but am just as confident as I ever was of anything in my life that if they had decided to throw their strength and influence into the scales with the great mass of reformers embracing every phase of political, religious, and labor reformers including the Socialists, with the Greenback party at the head and front as the largest and best organized party of all the dissatisfied factions, that we would not hav long to wait for a complete victory for every principle for which we contend. Col. Ingersoll could have occupied the presidential chair as our next president, and Leland and Wakeman might hav been members of his cabinet; but Col Ingersoll is wedded to his idol, the Republican party, and will vote for Garfield. Hundreds of letters from his friends and admirers all over the country hav been addressed him both publicly and privately in a vain endeavor to draw him out on the questions of finance and labor, but he has studiously avoided committing himself on these great questions, and has ignored the communications of a host of friends who would be glad to cast their votes for him for any office within the gift of the people. Talk about drafting questions to be propounded to Garfield and Hancock, I wonder if he is willing to giv Weaver an opportunity to wrestle with his questions; if so, I'll wager my existence that he will receive satisfactory replies to them. So far as the great body of the Liberals are concerned, I guess, however, that Weaver's responses to the Colonel's hard money questions would hardly prove satisfactory. I presume that the great majority of the Liberals would prefer the success of the Democratic party to that of the Republican, but it would be hard to convince them that to vote the Greenback ticket would defeat that end, since by your own confession, the majority of Liberals are or hav been Republicans. I was, until I became a Freethinker, a Democrat (died in the wool), but I find little difficulty in renouncing my fealty to a party who hav as little love for an Infidel as the Republican party, notwithstanding their outspoken recommendation of the separation of church and state (for the good of both,) that pleases friend Leland so well. I had rather risk the little obscure reference to this matter contained in the Greenback platform than a whole chapter from a party whose only object in incorporating such a plank in this political rostrum was thrown out as a mere bait to catch such Infidel gudgeons as would swallow it. Trust them not, fellow Greenbackers and Liberals. The Methodist, the Catholic church, and the money-changers will hav a finger in that pie when it is served up, and the Infidel, the Greenbackers, the Socialists, the Woman Suffragist, and others of that stripe, will be shown a back seat, with the publicans and sinners, as heretofore, should either of the old parties get into power again. Why, gentlemen, the great mass of the Liberals hav already fallen into line under the Greenback banner; politically, we hav taken to it as naturally as ducks to water, and we are none the less good Freethinkers, Liberals, and Infidels, notwithstanding Bro. Ingersoll informed God that we had come to him on our own hook, and I believe I speak truth when I say that the great majority of the members of the Greenback convention were resolved to fight the battle though on their own hook, God to the contrary notwithstanding. If I am correct I guess the Greenback platform can be widened out so as to giv that diminutiv church and state plank a chance to spread. Yours truly, J. Allen Evans.

Washington, D. C., Aug. 29, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I notice in a late issue of your paper a growl from a subscriber in reference to the discussion now going on between you and Mr. G. M. Mair in the columns of The Truth Seeker. Now, speaking for myself (and I think a majority of your readers als'), I will say that I regard this feature of your paper, viz, the presentation of both sides of all the questions it discusses, either political or religious, as the one that has contributed more than any other to its present success.

While your correspondent and a few others may hav been enabled, by possessing superior advantages, to acquire a thorough knowledge of both sides of religious questions, and consequently can learn nothing new from reading discussions, I am sure it is quite otherwise with the greater part of your readers. Engrossed with the duties and cares of life, they hav neither time nor inclination to pour over deep and learned disquisitions on the subject, and therefore receive information in this way they might not otherwise obtain. It was from a perusal of the "Humphrey-Bennett Discussion" that I was first led to doubt the truth of old orthodoxy, and emerge from the darkness of error into the glorious light of Freethought and mental liberty. I therefore say, Mr. Editor, let discussion, free and untrammeled, go on, and it will do more toward showing the weakness of religion and upbuilding the cause of humanity than anything else you can possibly publish.

As I am reminded that my subscription has expired, please find inclosed $3, for which please send me Truth Seeker Tracts, etc., as per order. Your sincere friend.

Wm. H. White.

---

Sylvester, Wis, Aug. 18, 1880.

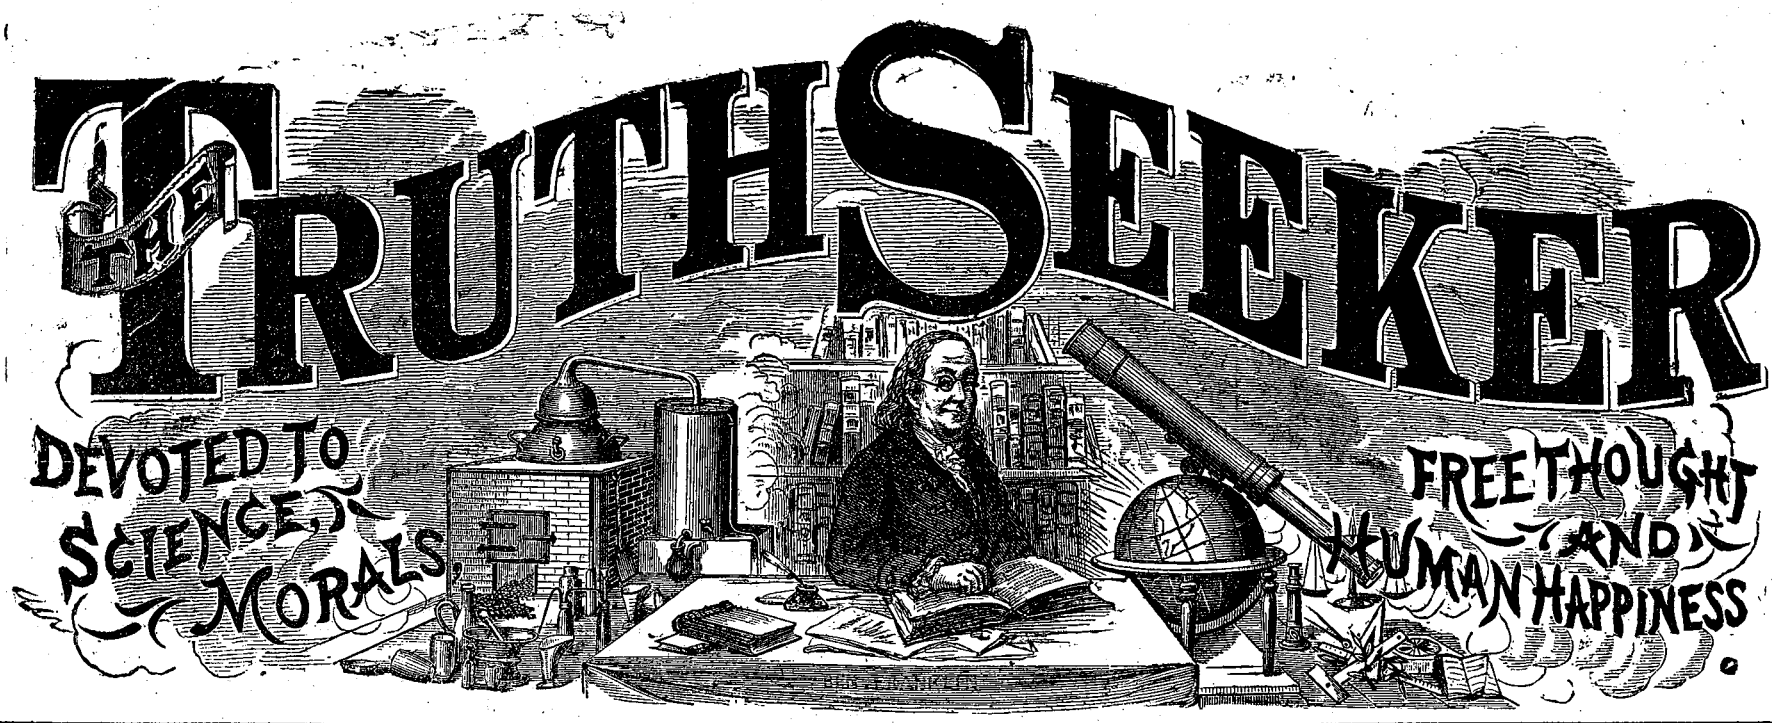
Editor Truth Seeker, Dear Sir: I hav been a reader of your paper since March, 1879, and hav felt, as hav a majority of Western Freethinkers, that the imprisonment of D. M. Bennett was a disgrace to the civilization of the nineteenth century, for however objectionable the book he was entrapped into selling, it is certainly no worse than that holy book we hav been trained to venerate.

When at last Mr. Bennett's days of bondage had passed, and he returned to his home, many of his friends assembled to gree him and express their joy at his safe deliverance; so they brought wine to set before him, of which he tells us he "drank a glass," not having drank any for a year, and he adds, "it did me no harm" I hav been waiting a long time, hoping that some of the numerous correspondents of your paper would utter a protest against this wine bibbing, but so far, I am sorry to say, they are all dumb. Yet the churches which Mr. Bennett so berates would consider the drinking of a glass of wine a grave offense in one of their members—an offense which, if repeated, would subject the offender to excommunication. Is the morality of Freethinkers below that of the churches? The Truth Seeker has denounced Mrs. Hayes in no very gentle terms, yet with all her bigotry she has, be it said to her everlasting honor, thrown her influence on the side of temperance.

There can be no doubt that the orthodox house is getting a little shaky; but before pulling it down, would it not be well to be able to build more stately mansions rather than go back to the wigwam of the Indian, or, worse, the cave of the troglodyte? C. L. Morgan.

[Reply.—Our friend seems to be an ultra temperance man, and as we are not, it is not probable we shall agree. The "coiled and poisoned worm" that crawls from the still never gave us the jim-jams. If we want a glass of wine we take it, and if we do not we let it alone. Intemperance has done a great deal of harm in the world, and no intemperance is worse than intemperate use of stimulants. Intemperate eating is about—if not quite—as bad, and sister Slenker would hav us believe that intemperate use of the procreativ faculties is a common and hideous vice. Undoubtedly "what is one man's meat is another man's poison;" and if any one injures himself by intemperance in any direction, he should restrain himself; but when he attempts to interfere with those who never injured themselvs or others, he becomes a fanatic, and should be treated as such.

Our friend has evidently not read the Bible very thoroughly, and is not well acquainted with church-members and their practices, or he would not say they denounce the use of wine. They publicly use it at communion, and privately to a great extent. Neither is the use of wine immoral any more than the use or practice of any luxury. Eating has killed a good many; and reading, a highly commendible recreation, might be carried so far as to ruin one's eyesight. Yet we hardly think our friend would prohibit food or taboo books and newspapers.



Moderation should be kept in all things. Temperance fanatics like Mrs. President Hayes only succeed in making their cause ridiculous. People do not hav much respect for those who hav to be forcibly restrained from making beasts of themselvs. A man who rises after a fall into the gutter should be encouraged; but the man who never tumbles into the ditch is the one who commands our respect.—Ed. T. S.]

---

Mr. Editor: Rev. Mr. Merifield, the Methodist clergy man residing at Oswego Center, N. Y., told one of his congregation to write down and hand in "his objections," and in a week from that time he would answer them. Accordingly he (the objecter) handed in a long list. The result was a private meeting of the brethren and a crowded house at the public service, when he (the elder) slunk square out by saying that he "agreed to answer written arguments," and not "objections," and "he should hav nothing to do with them," and then went on with his sermon to prove the Bible true because there was evidence of a flood some time on the face of the earth. When he (the clergyman) got through with his sermon, which consisted almost wholly of assertions, every one of which were positiv misrepresentations (not to say falsehoods), he gave invitations to "speak" with the injunction "not to say anything against what had been said nor against Christianity," and remarked that "the obscene Bennett was imprisoned for sending dirty, obscene matter through the mail, and he ought to hav been imprisoned for life; he ought to hav been hung," and one old sister got so happy she singsonged out, "Amem, bless the Lord!" and so the whole evening was filled up with just such balderdash, and the elder claimed all new and useful inventions, even the printing press, for Christianity. It seems strange, but so it is in this land of Bibles, that intelligent persons will listen to such d—d nonsense.

This same man (the elder) is the one that sold the service plates last spring for old junk to a peddler, and your correspondent bought them from the peddler to make solder, they being principally block-tin. Selah.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

Vol. 7. No. 38. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, September 18, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

"WHO was it that said it is not good for man to be alone?" asked a Sunday-school teacher of his class. A bright boy answered, "Daniel, sir, when he was in the lion's den."

THE Smithsonian institution has received from the observatory of Paris an announcement of the discovery of Coggia, at Marseilles, on the 30th of August, of a planet of the eleventh magnitude.

MR. EDISON says he has completely solved the problem of electric lighting. In the October number of the North American Review he will state the advantages of electricity over gas, and explain how the new light is to be introduced.

MISSIONARY CALHOUN writes from Tripoli to Syria, saying that as the Greek priests of that place could do nothing else to hinder the mission work, they cursed the missionaries and their dolings, as well as the rooms they occupy and the people who enter them.

A WOMAN has been Lelected ecturer of Modern Literature in the University of Webster, Ohio. She is Miss Irish, the translator of several volumes of German literature. She has had entire charge of the foreign correspondence of Secretary Carl Schurz during Hayes's administration.

MR. HOLYOAKE, in a recent account of his American experiences, lays stress on the fact that while he could in Chicago get a good cup of coffee, comfortably served, for five cents, he had to pay ten to hav his boots brushed. The bootblack charge is almost the last survivor of war prices.

AFTER Col. Ingersoll had spoken an hour and fifty minutes to a Boston audience somebody asked him, "How long are you going to keep us?" The reply was: "You can go as soon as you want to. I always notice that a person generally goes as soon as he gets his head full." The audience broke out in roars of laughter.

MRS. FLETCHER, the Spiritualist, charged by Miss Davies of England with obtaining a large amount of property from her by false representations, was arrested in Boston, and a large amount of diamonds and other property was recovered. Mr. Fletcher was also found, and promises to restore the property in his possession.

SO UNEASY did the Rev. George C. Miln become under the theological fetters which bound him that he has broken loose from them by resigning the pastorate of the East Congregational church in Brooklyn. He intends to devote himself to the study and practice of law. His principal difficulties are with the doctrin of the Trinity and with that of everlasting punishment. He confesses himself unable to accept a creed which admits of the existence of hell-fire.

ACCORDING to Land and Water the Norwegian fishermen always carry with them on their expeditions a kind of telescope called a water telescope. This is a tube three or four feet long, with an eye-piece at one end. The other end, which is open, is placed in the water over the edge of the boat, and a little practice easily enables the observer to distinguish objects at a depth of from ten to fifteen fathoms. The fishermen are thus enabled to discover shoals which would otherwise go unnoticed. They then giv the signal, their comrades surround them with seines, and they frequently make wonderful hauls in places and under circumstances that would never hav been suspected but for the use of the telescope.

AT a co-operativ meeting of the churches of Jewell county, Kansas, June 19th and 20th, it was moved by Mr. Harwood that this body appoint a committee to investigate the Wilson scandal. The above commission sat Aug. 30th on the business for which it was created, and found as follows: The honorable committee chosen to investigate the charge made against Bro. J. A. Wilson, of being in criminal intimacy with one of the sisters of the Jewell City congregation, after a careful examination of the witnesses and the correspondence between the parties accused, find the evidence so overwhelming that it cannot be set aside by any that may ever appear. Therefore the committee hav decided that said Wilson is guilty of said charge in the highest degree.

THEY hav had something like the Salvation Army in St. Louis. An ex-circus clown, who claimed to be converted, began his evangelical work in East St. Louis. Having had fair success in gathering crowds there, he crossed the Mississippi and procured the services of half a dozen other enthusiasts, chiefly girls. These he organized into a band, with himself as Generalissimo. He held a number of meetings in St. Louis, which were considered more clownish than religious. These meetings brought forth no fruit in the way of conversions, the only definit result as yet seen being two suits by members of the Army against the Generalissimo for their wages. The Army is supposed to hav disbanded, as no more meetings are announced.

A CENTER street mother is training her little boy to sit still in church, by making him sit still in his chair at home fifteen minutes every day. How the little martyr stands it we don't know, but he has our warmest sympathy. We venture to say that if the mother will take him to the next circus his untutored mind will there see God in the ringmaster and hear him in the band, and she won't hav the slightest difficulty in making him sit still fifteen minutes or four times that length of time. If we had a boy, and he could or would sit still—unless in philosophic sleep—through the dry prosaic Sunday servic s in any of our Winsted churches, we would accept it as proof conclusiv of lamentable weakness either in his head or his legs.—Winsted Press.

THE report of the membership of the Northern Presbyterian church for the last three years are: 1878, 567,855; 1879, 574,486; 1880, 578,671. The number of churches is reported at: 1878, 5,269; 1879, 5,415; 1880, 5489. The increase of the membership over all losses during the twelve months reported in 1879 was 6,631 in over 5,000 churches. A gain of a trifle over one member by each church. The increase of the last year was only 4,185, or an average gain of less than one member by each of the nearly 5,500 churches of the denomination. These figures show how little real hold Christianity now has upon the masses of the people. All the cumbersome machinery of a church, with all the thousands of dollars of yearly outlay, for one convert! It must be discouraging to the brethren.

THE Worthington Advance, in commenting upon the Barter case, says this of the Comstock laws: "It is such legislation as this which is disgusting thousands of voters with the Republican party. The principle of the inviolability of the mails was considered established until this law was passed whereby a spy or informer can hav any editor arrested, dragged from his home, and held until his business is ruined. It was passed by a Republican Congress, and is executed by Republican officials. It was a cowardly Republican President who failed to do his duty in pardoning one of the victims when he knew great injustice had been done. This is one of the steps toward centralization and imperialism in the Republican party of which so many complain. Even so strong a pro-slavery man as John C. Calhoun refused to join the fire-eaters in demanding that 'incendiary matter,' or abolition documents, should be excluded from the mails, because he held, as did all the earlier statesmen of our history, that the mails were inviolable. It was reserved for the Republican party to violate this fundamental principle, and its tendency is constantly in the direction of a violation of the Constitution and of making the general government the vehicle for punishing crime. We do not know that the Democratic party would giv us relief from such odious and infamous legislation. A Democratic Congress has been in power for four years and has not repealed nor amended the law. But if we were sure of getting relief through that party, and of checking the tendency to such legislation, the Republican party would never get another vote from us.

WHILE the Convention was in session in Hornellsville, the daily Truth of this city had the following: "The church people of Hornellsville are acting toward the Freethinkers now assembled in Convention there after a very characteristic fashion. The clergymen admonish their congregations to avoid attendance at the meetings of the Convention, very much as a parish priest might forbid the credulous and superstitious lambs of his flock from attending a Methodist prayer-meeting; the Young Men's Christian Association are liberally circulating Thurlow Weed's pious letter to the Herald, which was designed by him as a sort of peace offering to heaven, and prayer-meetings are being held nightly as a counter-attraction to the bigger show. We certainly find no fault with this conduct of the good people of Hornellsville. The clergymen are doing no more than any man would do to defend the pursuit by which he earns a livelihood; the prayer-meetings are no doubt edifying to those who attend them, while those who are not interested (henpecked husbands and little children excepted) may stay away; and Thurlow Weed's twelfth-hour letter is really one of the most harmless productions he ever published. Nor do we conceive that the Freethinkers hav any just cause to complain. Indeed, they ought to be grateful that the religious inhabitants of Hornellsville and vicinity so far restrain their righteous indignation and godly wrath as to permit such unsanctified innovators to pollute the place with their terrible blasphemy. They ought to be thankful that their leaders are not burned at the stake and their followers fed with burning oil, drawn, quartered, and drowned in bags. These are legitimate punishments for denying so probable a theory as that of the immaculate conception or the divine loveliness of a being that tempts men to think and inflicts them with eternal torment for thinking. But, we ask seriously, is not this an exhibition of moral and intellectual cowardice unworthy any people who make pretensions to intelligence? This Convention politely offered the orthodox an opportunity to be heard before it through any twelve respectable clergymen whom they might select, each one of whom was guaranteed a courteous, respectful hearing for two hours. This was no flippant or insulting proposal. It was made in good faith, and the character of the leaders in the Convention is an assurance that it would hav been scrupulously observed on their part had it been accepted. The orthodox clergy claim that the arguments of Freethinkers are specious and pueril. They claim that no logic upon religious topics is sound unless it begins with accepting as indisputable the fundamental doctrins of the Christian church that the Hebrew God is the architect and ruler of the universe, that the Galilean Jesus is his son, one with himself, both man and deity, and the Hebrew Bible and the Greek Testament are divine revelations. They also claim that unbelievers are the worst sinners and are certain to suffer the warmest displeasure of heaven. At the same time they profess that it is their mission to save the souls of sinners, even the worst of whom may find salvation through faith. What higher duty can devolve upon men entertaining these views and making these professions than in a proper way and at a proper time to preach the truth to unbelievers? And what more appropriate time, what better place can there be, than before an assemblage of unbelievers who invite it, as did these Hornellsville Freethinkers, with a sincere desire to be instructed? Instead of going to this Convention, where they would find intelligent and cultured people to sift their doctrins, and there giving their reasons for the faith that is in them, these clergymen hunt their burrows and chatter to the little knot of believers around them about the enormous wickedness of people who presume to dispute the divinity of the deity whom they profess to serve. They gather their flock in prayer-meetings to pray for men so infinitly their intellectual superiors that they dare not meet them in frank, courteous, and fair debate. They drivel at the public for attending the Convention, and urge them to stay away lest the poisonous arrow of reason may penetrate the armor of superstition with which priestcraft has invested them. And in place of meeting argument by argument, they prompt pious babes just out of their swaddling-clothes to hurl at the heads of impious Infidels the disjointed letter of a poor old man, written on the verge of the grave, to court the esteem of pietists and appease the wrath of an easily-angered God for the transgressions of a long and scheming life. The way in which the orthodox avoid the assaults of rationalism and shrink from all intellectual conflicts with its leaders must be little less than disgusting to men of thought on both sides of the theological fence.

Events of the Week.

BARNUM'S bearded woman died on the 12th.

THE New York State Fair was opened at Albany on the 13th.

ARKANSAS has gone Democratic by about forty thousand majority.

GEN. GRANT will spend the winter in New York and Washington.

THE Cathedral of Notre Dame, in Paris, was struck by lightning last week.

VERMONT went Republican by the usual majority in its state election.

G. W. KNAPP, of Utica, committed suicide on the 6th by leaping over Niagara Falls.

MARSHALL O. ROBERTS and E. J. O'Reilly, two well-known journalists, died last week.

G. B. WILLIAMSON, a Georgia legislator, committed suicide this week. Ill health was the cause.

A TWO hundred thousand dollar fire was the sight which met the eyes of the St. Louisans on the night of the 12th.

CHAS. LIVINGSTON, a Brooklyn man, is trying to outstarve Tanner. He would like to go forty-two days without food.

THE Emperor William of Germany was serenaded by thirteen hundred musicians on the 9th. They were army bands.

GEN. WEAVER, Greenback candidate for President, spoke last Monday night at Cooper Union, this city, to a crowded house.

THE ocean steamer Bermuda, while crossing New York Bay on the 10th, ran into and cut in two the tugboat Edith Beard.

A LIBRARY table and writing desk which formerly belonged to "Boss" Tweed were sold for thirty dollars in this city last week.

THE storm which wrecked the Vera Cruz last week, destroyed about a dozen other vessels. The coast of Florida is strewn with wrecks.

THE Republicans of New Hampshire hav nominated Charles H. Bell for governor. He is a mediocre congressman, and very pious.

IN the recent walking contest at Chicago between men and horses the men triumphed over the brutes. Byrnes made 541 miles in 140 hours

DR. TANNER lectured on "What I Know about Fasting" at Booth's Theater on the evening of the 9th. Only about two hundred people attended.

A BATTERY gun was tested at New Haven, Ct., on the 9th, that fired 12 828 shots per minute. It was invented by Myron Colony, and $15,000 were spent in perfecting it.

DR. BUCHANAN, the Philadelphia medical diploma manufacturer, has been sent to prison and the man who swore he saw him jump overboard is held for perjury.

THE Manhattan Market, in this city, was destroyed by fire on the 8th. The building covered a very large block, and cost over one million of dollars. Insured for $100,000.

AT the fat man's clambake last week the president of the club was so heavy as to be beyond the capacity of the scales to weigh him. The limit was four hundred pounds.

AN explosion took place in the Seaham coal mine, in England, on the 9th, by which 162 lives were lost. Most of the victims were single men, but 76 widows and 284 orphans were created in an instant.

ABOUT one hundred families were left destitute by a forest fire which spread over a large territory in Quebec last week. An immense amount of lumber, hemlock bark, and grain was destroyed.

SIX million dollars is the estimate of the loss of property by the recent earthquake in the Philippine Islands. Six millions more would hardly cover the loss in Jamaica and the other West India Islands by the recent gales.

AT the Maine state election, held last Monday, Plaisted, the Democratic-Greenback nominee, was elected by a small majority. The Republicans lost also three congressmen. This is a serious loss for them, and places Maine among the debatable states in the presidential contest

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 18, 1880.

Letter from Europe.—No. 4.

LONDON, Aug. 18, 1880.

DEAR FRIENDS: There is so much I wish to tell you I will not delay my duty longer, lest I forget much I ought to say. I will begin another letter now and continue and finish it as I can.

On Monday morning Mr. Rawson and I commenced the week's work by walking down to Mr. Truelove's place on High Holborn street, one of the pleasantest business streets in the city, and also a general thoroughfare, being, in connection with Oxford street—which is another name for the western part of the same street—one of the longest and widest in the city. Finding Mr. Truelove's place of business not yet open, we continued our walk to Stonecutter street, to the office of Mr. Bradlaugh's National Reformer. Finding that place also still closed, we were able to realize that Londoners do not commence business as early as we do in New York. After looking at the market opposite, walking out into Farrington street, calling at Thomas Cook's place, buying tickets to Paris, and disposing of one of our circular notes, by which we obtain our funds to meet expenses, we returned to the Reformer office, where we found two very pleasant gentlemen, who seemed glad to see us, and gave us some mail that had arrived there for me. Mr. Bradlaugh seldom goes to the office of the Reformer, his place being in St. John's Wood, several miles away, in the northwestern part of the city. Being aware that the fore part of the day is the best time to see him, we took the Metropolitan Railway, which is the underground road, and in less than an hour were at St. John's Wood depot, and by walking a few squares we were at his place, which is over a music and musical instrument store. This is comparatively a new part of the city, and very pleasant; the streets are wide; but few business houses; the dwellings neat and commodious, not jammed up together, with neat front yards, in which were a profusion of brilliant flowers. A young woman met us at the door, to whom I handed my card. She took it to Mr. Bradlaugh, and immediately returned, inviting us upstairs at once. We found Mr. Bradlaugh in his study up to his elbows in business, examining his correspondence, etc. His study is a room about fifteen by twenty feet, well lined with shelves full of books, and piles of others on the floor. He rose as we entered, and received us very cordially. He informed us he had just returned from Manchester, where, the day before (Sunday), he had spoken to fully three thousand persons, once in the day and once in the evening, riding back to the city by night and sleeping but little. He is undoubtedly overworked; in fact, he admitted as much. Parliament, being still in session, requires much of his attention. He is attending very closely to his duties in that direction, and scarcely is absent an hour when the Commons is in session.

We conversed about the Congress at Brussels and various other subjects. He gave us copies of the Reformer containing his first speech in Parliament. He will be at Brussels, but his duties in the House of Commons will not admit of his being there during the entire three days the Congress will sit. He seems not at all disposed to be away from his seat in the House whenever it is in session. He informed us that his daughters were with Mrs. Besant at Jersey, on the coast, for their health. Mrs. Besant has been applying herself too closely to business and needs recuperation. One of Mr. Bradlaugh's daughters is also somewhat complaining. He gave us much hope that we would be able to meet them in Brussels. He kindly wrote us letters of introduction to two friends in Paris, deputies, that is, members of the national legislative body of France.

Mr. Bradlaugh is a very genial man in conversation, though he is a person of great presence. He is a large man, has a large head, is six feet in hight, and weighs considerably over two hundred pounds. He is doubtless destined to greatly distinguish himself in Parliament, and it is to be hoped he will be able, with the aid of other able members of the House, to bring about a change in the land tenure system of England, and have it so it cannot be held in immense tracts by a few men, but be more equally distributed among the masses, allowing those who till the land, in some cases at least, to be the owners of it. He also entertains hopes that England may become a republic before this generation passes away. He invited us to visit Parliament in the after part of the day, and said he would see that we had good seats. It seems no person can gain admission into either branch of Parliament save by invitation or permission of one of the members.

Not wishing to obtrude ourselves too long upon Mr. Bradlaugh's time and attention, we withdrew after an interview of thirty or forty minutes, as others were in waiting for an audience with him, much pleased with our visit with him and highly impressed in his favor as we went away.

From this point we took a hansom to the British Museum, a good long ride. There we found sights enough to engage our attention for a long time. I would be glad to give you a full description of the hundreds of thousands of curiosities on exhibition at this the greatest museum in the world, but the number of articles worthy of notice is far too great and my ability wholly inadequate to the task. The great museum of art, natural history, and literature has been of gradual growth for many years. It dates its foundation from 1753, but for the better part of a century the collection grew slowly, although steadily. The building has been enlarged from time to time. It is now an immense structure of hewn stone externally decorated with sculptures. I do not understand architecture well enough to describe the style of the building, but will say the front is two or three hundred feet in length, and stands one hundred and fifty perhaps from the street. On either side are two extensive wings which come within fifty feet of the street and join the front. Though the edifice covers eight or ten acres, the room is still insufficient to display all the wonders they have in store, including extensive antiquities which are now stored away in the basement of the building. A bequest of £60,000, or $300,000, has recently been made to the Museum, and with this sum another large addition is to be made to the building on the north to hold the articles they now have not room for. The present edifice and the vast collection of all conceivable curiosities are the result of the munificent donations that have been made by the rich men of England since the Museum was commenced, and who amount to hundreds of persons.

Upon entering, one is struck with the view presented in the main hall, filled for two or three hundred feet with a vast number of antiquities from Egypt, Assyria, India, Babylon, Lycia, Greece, Rome, etc. These consist of sculptures of gods, heroes, architectural models, remains, tombs, sarcophagii, monuments, obelisks, sphinxes, vases, models of temples, columns, tablets on which are inscriptions engraved three and four thousand years ago. There I saw ancient statues of gods and kings cut from stone, four or five times as large as life, and weighing tons; sarcopagii and tombs almost without number, cut out of stone, some so large as to weigh two or three tons; images of huge oxen or bulls with a man's head which stood before the temples in Assyria in the long ago; these are of immense size and have been well preserved. The Egyptian sarcophagii are many of them elaborately engraved, and could I only read the inscriptions they doubtless would tell much about the ancient history of Egypt. These antiquities are very extensive and fill many large rooms, halls, and galleries. Enough is there to study over for months, but in passing through and taking a hurried view I of course could take note of but a small portion that is there displayed. I saw hundreds of ancient gods of all grades and sizes, and among them Isis and Horus, one of the prototypes of the virgin and child, from which the Christian idea was taken. I saw the celebrated Rosetta-stone filled with inscriptions, which has attracted so much attention from the learned, and was the key by which Egyptian hieroglyphics were read.

I saw a tomb of a satrap of Lycia, elaborate and large in size; a restored model of the edifice of the Neried monument discovered at Xanthus; numerous friezes taken from ancient temples, showing warriors, battle scenes, etc. These were very nuerous and extensive. In one long gallery, for hundreds of feet, were Assyrian representations, in stucco work, or something of the kind, on the walls, of wars, soldiers marching to battle, deadly conflicts, honors bestowed upon the victors upon their return, King Shalamanser superintending various public works, drawn in state in his royal chariot, etc., etc. It was a great curiosity to look at all these.

With peculiar interest I examined the tablets, cylinders, etc., found by Sir George Smith and others on the sites of Babylon, Nineveh, and other points, full of cuneiform inscriptions made fully four thousand years ago. I saw the tablets giving the Chaldean account of the creation of the world, the adventures of the first human pair in the Garden of Eden, of the temptation by a serpent, of the flood which covered the whole earth, the building of the tower of Babel, etc. It was undoubtedly from this source that the Jews obtained their ideas of cosmogony, when they were held as captives in Babylon. It is now well known that the book of Genesis was not written till after that captivity, and the source whence they drew their inspiration is most apparent. The tablets on which these inscriptions are made are of various sizes, generally six, eight, or ten inches square, and about an inch in thickness. They appear to have been made of clay in a plastic state, and the impressions made with dies, or something of the kind, when they were put in ovens and baked similar to ordinary earthenware, when they were calculated to keep forever. The cylinders are eight or nine inches long and some four inches in diameter, being larger in the middle than at the ends. They are full of the cuneiform inscriptions, and were baked in the same way as the tablets. Some of the latter are no larger than two or three inches square. Historical matters were inscribed on them, as well as deeds, contracts, agreements, and everything of the kind. I was glad to view these relics of the literature of an age and people long since passed away.

The Indian sculptures consisted largely of Buddhistic figures, comprising a large number of Buddha's alone. There were many relics from Buddhistic temples and monasteries, particularly from the temple at Amravati, on the river Kistna, in southern India. In the Grecian and Roman gallery are great numbers of sculptures of ancient gods, goddesses, heroes, warriors, and celebrated characters; here are numerous Jupiters, Junos, Minervas, Venuses, Mercuries, Apollos, Hercules, Ceres, Dianas, Bacchuses, Cupids and Psyches, satyrs, the Muses, and all the rest of those old fellows, to the heart's content, some very large, and others of human size. There were also heads of Homer, Orpheus, and many other distinguished Grecians, and all the Roman emperors in full figure, together with authors, writers, and statesmen. These are all ancient productions, and were brought from Greece and Rome. A great many artists and students of both sexes were busily copying many of these works of ancient art. It would require a large catalogue to name the wonders in this department, including the remains of heathen temples, etc., and I must pass them over in silence.

Of archaic sculpture there is a great variety and quantity of figures, seated, standing, and in all imaginable postures and attitudes; some in chariots and some on horses. The friezes in the Greco-Roman department are extensive, and represent armies, battles, and triumphs. In the Mausoleum room are arranged the remains of the mausoleum at Halicarnassus, erected by Artemesia over the remains of her husband, Mausolos, prince of Caria. The whole structure, according to Pliny, was one hundred and forty feet in hight, and crowned by a chariot group in white marble, in which stood Mausolos himself, represented after his translation to the world of demigods and heroes. Here are portions of colossal horses, statues, colossal figures, parts of temples, and far more than I can remember or have room and time to mention.

The Elgin room contains the sculptures from the Parthenon, a portion of the frieze of the temple of Wingless Victory at Athens, some architectural remains from the Erechtheum, a statue of Bacchus from the Choragic monument of Thrasyllos, together with numerous fragments of casts, all from Athens. The Parthenon, or temple of the virgin goddess Minerva, was constructed by Ictinos, 454 B.C., under the administration of Pericles. It stood on the Acropolis of Athens, on the site formerly occupied by the more ancient temple of Minerva, called the Hecatompedon, which was burnt when the Persians sacked the city of Athens, 480 B.C. The Parthenon, a correct model of which is presented, was of the Doric order of architecture and was of the form termed peripteral octastyle. The sculptural decorations were executed under the superintendence of Phidias. In this room are many groups and statues too numerous to give in detail, even could I remember the one half of them, but nearly all the gods and goddesses are represented there.

In the Hellenic room are marbles exhibited that have been brought at different times from various parts of Greece and its colonies, also as well, many casts of important monuments of the period preceding the marbles.

The Assyrian galleries, more than 300 feet in length, contain the antiquities that were principally discovered by Layard in Ninevah, Hormuzd Rassam, Loftus, Rawlinson, Smith, and others. They were mostly found in extensive mounds, formed by the natural accumulation of soil over the debris of ruined edifices, particularly at Nimroud, Khorsabad, and Konyunjik, still indicated by local traditions as the site of Nineveh, nearly opposite Mosul, on the Tigris. The monuments of Nimroud date back as far as 885 B.C. Those from Khorsabad, 722 B.C., while those from Konyunjik are 721 B.C. Among them are the palace of Sennacherib, who closed his reign 705 B.C. A great variety of sculptures are in this department, and one inevitably becomes overwhelmed with the muchness of the whole thing. Here are massive statues of old Nebo in stone, and representations of Nimroud, Sennacherib, and others, with their valorous exploits. The bronze bracelets, anklets, fetters, etc., together with the swords and weapons of warfare, are numerous. The bas-reliefs here relating to battles, representing them as they used to be in antiquity, are most extensive. These bas-reliefs present a vast amount connected with their system of mythology, their gods and goddesses, as well as of the history of their wars, conflicts, etc. The ancient ivory carvings in this part of the Museum would keep one studying for months together. Among the inscriptions is the account of the defeat of Nebuchadnezzar, by Cyrus, as well as many other events in ancient history. There are roomfull after roomfull, gallery after gallery, of these antiquities of various nationalities, but I am compelled to pass them by in silence. To form any realization of them they must be seen.

In the Egyptian department are many carved and sculptured coffins and numerous mummies preserved from the older dynasties four or five thousand years ago, together with sepulcher vases, emblems, etc. There are also great numbers of specimens of Egyptian glassware made in the long ago, and many of them still possessing brilliant colors. There are several rooms filled with Egyptian vases. Some are called painted Fictile vases, discovered in the tombs of Italy and Greece. Many are of porphyry and terra cotta. The amount of bronzes is great, and largely diversified, being figures of all the old gods, heroes, celebrities, etc.

In the Ethnographical room are cases filled with far more objects than I can name, including smaller idols, implements, musical instruments, weapons, dresses, costumes, and a great number of articles from the American continent belonging to savage life, comprising bows and arrows, dresses, utensils, baskets, show-shoes, etc. Mexico, ancient Peru, New Zealand, Polynesia, and Malaysia are also fully represented in ancient relics and curiosities.

When we had gone over but a part of the territory here indicated, Mr. Rawson, having business with some of the publishers of the city, left me to make my way alone through the labyrinth of wonders and relics and antiquites, with all else that is to be seen in this vast collection.

Perhaps one of the most important features in the British Museum is the wonderful library of 1,400,000 volumes. One's awe is thoroughly aroused in wandering from room to room filled with immense tomes, about as large as a man would wish to lift, and printed in all the languages of Europe. The most important of the collections that have been presented to the museum are the Old Royal Library, presented by King George II., in the year 1757; bequests from Sir Joseph Banks, C. M. Cracherode, and especially the immense library formed by King George III., and transferred to the Museum in 1823, known as the King's Library. In addition are many choice collections from numerous generous persons, running over a term of more than a hundred years. I was surprised to see so many large folios, and was not aware that so large a portion of the books of olden times were made in such huge volumes. I walked up to many cases in King George the Third's Library and read the titles. Many are histories of European countries, many contain the legislative proceedings in various countries. Some are in French, some in Spanish, some in German, some in Italian, and many of course in English. I could not read even one thousandth part of the vast collection of books had I taken a whole day for it. To pass through one vast room with eight or ten tiers of shelves, all filled with large volumes, is perfectly overwhelming. One is filled with wonder that man has written and printed so much.

In the center of the library rooms are rows of cases filled with curiosities in typography since the days of Faust and Guttenberg.

In case 1 is the Biblia Pauperum, or Bible of the Poor, once a popular manual of devotion, and supposed to be the earliest of the "block books." The cuts are colored by hand. Many other specimens of antique printing are in the same case.

In case 2 is Speculum Humanæ Salvationis, also a block book, one of the oldest books printed, Temptations Demonis, a single page printed from a block, showing the seven deadly sins and the minor sins which sprung from them; a German almanac, by Johann Müller, for 1474; also an impression from a block representing the seven ages of man, with the wheel of fortune in the center. Date about 1460.

Case 3 contains rare specimens of the earliest productions of the printing press in Germany, and every article in it is worthy of special attention. In looking at these we stand face to face with the first efforts of that marvelous art which has proved to be the most powerful engine of modern civilization, and one is justly astonished at the wonderful perfection which is reached in its very infancy. In many instances the initial letters of chapters, etc., are in red, and in other instances the lines or words are alternately in black and red; and the neatness and perfection with which they were executed are wonderful indeed. Here are Bibles in Latin, a bull of indulgences, a psalter in Latin, a psalter on vellum, the works of Cicero, etc., and all from the earliest periods of the typographic art.

Case 4 contains more Bibles, psalters, etc.

Case 5 contains a series of early German books, and some from the low countries.

Case 6 contains specimens of the earliest letter-press in Italy, among which are Lactantius' Opera, printed in a monastry, in 1465, the first printed in Italy with a date. Also the works of Livy, Dante, Lascaris, and Virgil.

Case 7 is a continuation of the same.

Case 8 contains specimens of the earliest productions of the printing press in England. Prominent among them are the works of Caxton on the game of chess, the siege of Troy, etc.

Case 9 contains specimens of fine and sumptuous printing, among which are Petrarch, Herodotus, Dante, Bourasse, etc.

Case 10 contains specimens of beautiful illuminations of a most perfect character, considering the age in which they were executed. Among them are Virgil, Martialis, Boccaccio, etc.

Case 11 contains illustrations on wood and copper-plate, and the wonder is how they could have done so well when the art of printing was so young.

True, the copper-plate engravings are not as fine as the copper and steel engravings of the present day, but they are very good.

Case 12 contains numerous books containing autographs of distinguished and remarkable persons, as Lord Bacon, Michael Angelo, John Calvin, Luther, Melancthon, John Milton, Cecil, Lord Burghley, Queen Catharine, Parr, Sir Isaac Newton, etc. It also contains some remarkable "broadsides," among which are copies of the indulgence issued by Pope Leo X. for the rebuilding of St. Peter's at Rome, on vellum. This indulgence was extensively sold by Tetzel and Samson, and aroused the indignation of Luther and started the Reformation. Luther's appeal to a general council against the proceedings commenced against him at Rome, etc.

Case 13 contains typographical and literary curiosities, among which are the following: Henry VIII. of England, printed in 1521; the Great Bible, on vellum, 1539; Shakspere's Romeo and Juliet, 1597; Shakspere's comedies, histories, and tragedies, 1623; Defoe's Robinson Crusoe, 1719, etc.

Case 14 contains samples of book-binding, many of which are beautiful, though antique.

The department of manuscripts is extensive, and the saloon devoted to them possesses peculiar interest. Here are specimens of ancient and illuminated manuscripts, bindings, autograph letters, charters, and seals. On one side are English and foreign charters in glazed frames. Near them are specimens of calligraphy, or copy books, written in their youth by Edward VI., Queen Elizabeth, Charles I., when prince, the handwriting of Lady Jane Gray, said to have been written by her on the scaffold. Part of the original will by Mary, Queen of Scots, an inscription by John Milton, a diary kept by John Locke in 1679, a volume of the original draft of the translations of Homer's Iliad, and Odyssey by Alexander Pope, Ben Jonson's "Masque of Queenes," 1609. The corrected draft of "The Sentimental Journey," by Laurence Sterne, Dr. Johnson's tragedy of "Irene," a volume of the writings of Frederick the Great, a dialogue written by Jean Jacques Rousseau, an autobiography of Robert Burns, a novel by Walter Scott, etc., etc.

Here is also a photograph of the deed from William Shakspere whereby he mortgaged some London property. It bears his signature. The original articles of agreement between John Milton and his publisher for "Paradise Lost;" a document in the handwriting of Edmund Spenser; an enumeration of the British cavalry at Waterloo, in the handwriting of the Duke of Wellington. There are also four frames containing forty-nine letters of English and foreign eminent men, from the sixteenth to the nineteenth century, among whom are Luther, Calvin, Melancthon, Erasmus, Wolsey, Cranmer, Sir T. More, John Knox, Sir Walter Raleigh, Sir Phillip Sidney, Lord Burghley, Sir Francis Bacon, John Hampden, William Penn, Sir Isaac Newton, Sir Christopher Wren, Michael Angelo, Reubens, Rembrandt, Galileo, Molière, Racine, Voltaire, Dryden, Swift, Addison, Byron, Pitt, Burke, Fox, Washington, Franklin, Wellington, Nelson, etc. There are also two frames containing autographs of English and foreign sovereigns, from Edward IV. down to George III. The foreign sovereigns include many of Germany and France, Spain and Italy.

In the center of the room are three tables containing illuminated manuscripts and others of great interest. They are very curious and interesting, but too numerous to even name. On the east side of the room are exhibited in frames attached to the screen a series of photograph prints from early illuminated manuscripts and from Anglo-Saxon characters of periods from 692 to 838. On the west and south sides are placed four upright glazed cases containing early biblical manuscripts, among which are the Codex Alexandrinus, the Bible in the vulgate Latin text, a double roll of the Pentateuch, a volume of the Koran in Arabic, written in gold. The display of papyri is large. At the north end of the room are two table-cases, in which are displayed impressions of royal, ecclesiastic, monastic, and baronial seals, the greater number being attached to original documents. The table on the west contains the great seals of the British sovereigns, from Edward the Confessor to Queen Victoria. The east table contains, in its several compartments, seals of ecclesiastical dignitaries, chiefly archbishops and bishops of different sees of England and Wales, from the close of the eleventh century to the eighteenth; and of the abbots and abbeys of England, and of noble knights and ladies of rank from the eleventh to the sixteenth centuries.

The department of prints, engravings, and drawings is most extensive, but I cannot take the time to say much of them; suffice it to say, there are enough of them to satisfy the most extravagant tastes, embracing all conceivable subjects. The portraits of dignitaries and celebrities are very extensive. The historical list is great indeed, but I must pass them by.

I looked into the vast reading-room of the Museum. It is a round room under the largest dome in the world, save the one on St. Peter's in Rome, which is of the same size, 148 feet in diameter. In the center are several desks where clerical work is being performed by a large force of clerks. On seats outside of these are numerous persons who go there to examine the 80,000 volumes in that room alone, which fill some twelve or fifteen shelves running all around that vast room. It is free to every person who brings a recommendation as to good character. Some were copying from the volumes before them, while others were simply reading. Outside of the circular area is a passage some ten feet wide, with seven shelves of books on either side. In that passage alone, running all the way around, are twenty-five miles of shelves filled with books.

The department of coins and medals is a most extensive one. It is an interesting collection of coins from the earliest times, and from all nations down to the present time. Many of the older coins are grotesque and odd looking enough, but they served for money, and were a great convenience to the hundreds of thousands of people through whose hands they passed. They were in cases arranged chronologically from 700 B. C. to our own century, comprising some seven different classifications. They are a study to which days could be properly devoted.

The department of zoology is on the upper floor. It is a vast collection of specimens selected for exhibition from the existing classes of animals, and is contained in three galleries, and arranged in two series. The beasts, birds, reptiles, and fishes are exhibited in upright cases against the walls. The hard parts of the molluscous, radiated, and amulose animals (as shells, corals, sea-eggs, star-fish, crustacea, and insects, and the eggs of birds, are arranged in the table cases in the middle of the several rooms. The names and numbers of the rooms are placed over the doorways in each apartment, and the numbers of the cases of the glass frames. The specimens are labeled with the scientific names, the English name when they have one, the country whence they came, and when they have been presented, with the name of the donor. The general collection of mammals, or beasts which suckle their young, is arranged in three rooms, the hoofed beasts being contained in the central saloon and southern zoological gallery, and the beasts with claws in the mammalia saloon.

In the wall cases of the central saloon are exhibited antelopes, goats, and sheep. The cases between the doorways contain bats. Some of the larger mammalia are placed on the floor, such as the giraffes, the walrus from the Arctic ocean, the Rhinoceros, the hippopotamus, the elephant, all in different varieties. In two large glass cases are stuffed specimens and skeletons of those apes or monkeys which bear most resemblance to man, called "anthropoid apes." To this group belong the gorilla and chimpanzee, inhabitants of western and central Africa, and the two kinds of ourang from Borneo and Sumatra. These animals live chiefly on fruits, and possess great strength.

It will take too much time and space to even give the names of the animals represented, but it is perhaps enough to say that everything in the animal kingdom is represented there, duly classified. There are representations from all quarters of the globe and from every country on it, including all birds, reptiles, and insects, great and small, and thousands in number. Here the most devout student of natural history has an excellent opportunity for studying nature.

In the upper part of the building, in the north gallery, is a wonderful assortment of geological specimens and fossils. The latter are partially arranged in zoological order and prrtly in geological sequence. Thus the species of the natural families are grouped together, but each family commences with the most recent examples of the group and terminates with those of the older rocks. The series of the remains of vertebrata, or animals with a backbone, commences with the fishes, is continued on the walls facing the windows from room No. 2 to room No. 6, and there returns in the wall-cases near the windows to terminate in room No. 2.

The smaller objects are in the table-cases. In the lobby, between the bird gallery and the gallery of minerals and fossils, is a restored model of an extinct fossil tortoise of gigantic size from the Siwalik Hills in India.

In room 1 are fossil plants in great variety and too numerous to name. They run from the smallest seaweed to the trunks of trees.

Room 2 contains fossil fishes in almost endless numbers.

Rooms 3 and 4 are devoted to the reptilian classes, which are in themselves a most extensive study. Among them are crocodiles, huge lizards of every conceivable variety, with many varieties of birds.

Room 5 is occupied by the mammal fossils, including the cave-lions, hyenas, and wolves; the cave-bear, rhinoceroses, monkeys, bats, and beavers, gigantic deer, etc., etc. On some of the tables are seen corals in great variety; worms, sea-urchins, fossil insects, crabs, lobsters, fossil shells, bivalves, etc. Here are tertiary fossil shells of the newer pliocene, the older pliocene, the miocene, or middle tertiary, chalk, gault, etc.; the pearl oyster, scallops, etc.; Jurassic, or Oolitic shells, shells of the Triassic system, Palœozoic shells of the Magnesian, Carboniferous, Devonian, and Silurian systems. All these specimens of the former life on our globe hundreds of thousands of years ago tell in thunder tones that the silly fables upon which current theology is founded are wholly false and unworthy of credit.

The department of mineralogy is extensive and most interesting, but I had not the time to give it investigation.

The department of botany is complete; everything pertaining to the vegetable kingdom is there represented and scientifically classified and arranged. But I must confess that before I got around I was completely wearied both mentally and physically. I had seen more than I could comprehend and duly digest. Perhaps I felt a trifle as Artemus Ward did when among the Mormons of Salt Lake City, and when some seventeen damsels of uncertain ages approached him and wished him to marry them. He felt constrained under the circumstances to say "No," he could not marry them, whereupon they wrung their hands in great distress, bewailing their sad fate, saying, "O, this is too much, it is too much!" "Yes," replied Artemus, "that is just the trouble with me, it is the muchness of the thing that overpowers me." So it was with me in the British Museum, the muchness of the thing completely overwhelmed me and caused me to go across the street to my hotel and rest.

I soon fell asleep, but was awakened by the intelligence that Dr. T. S. Andrews, of Kipton, had called to see me. I soon joined him and his London friend, John S. Dryden. After chatting for about an hour we started out and called first upon Mr. Edward Truelove; this time we found him in, but so busy at getting a lot of books ready to send away that we remained but a short time, intending to call again. We then kept on down to the rooms of L. N. Fowler, the phrenologist, brother of O. S. Fowler. He has been living in London twenty years. He is very affable and courteous, and entertained us pleasantly. He examined my head in New York nearly forty years ago, and I felt a little curiosity to see how an examination now would agree with the former one. He accordingly put me through a phrenological examination. He said I was not a felon even if I had been shut up with them, and that my love for truth and justice is strong, that my bent of mind is more philosophical than scientific, that while I have not love for combats and contentions, I would defend myself if attacked. He said my defects consisted in a want of self-esteem, mathematical calculation, and memory of details, and with these exceptions I have a pretty well balanced head. What else he said is not worth while to repeat; suffice it to say I deemed his description as very correct.

It was time now to return to our hotel for dinner. (Londoners, like many New Yorkers, take their dinners at 6 P.M.) After dinner we took an omnibus for the House of Parliament. The entrance to the House of Commons is through a vaulted hall probably sixty feet in hight and forty or fifty feet in width, built many hundreds of years ago; after this we passed two or three other spacious halls or entrances embellished with statuary of England's favorite sons, also historical paintings of noted events in English history. We found several dozen in waiting for an order for admission, and I could not help being struck with the red-tapeism which rules them. I sent in my card to Mr. Bradlaugh who soon came out and bid us follow him. He had secured from the Speaker the privilege of occupying seats in the space reserved for distinguished strangers. These seats are on the same floor (but somewhat more elevated) with the seats of the members, and but few have the honor of being seated there, the major part of the spectators being sent up into the galleries. The House of Commons consists of a room about 150 feet in length and 75 or 80 in width. The Speaker's seat is at one end and those of the members on either side of the room, being continuous seats with wide cushions and not separate or independent seats as are usual in legislative bodies in our country. No one has a steady seat of his own as with us, but occupies for the day the seat assigned to him when the House sits. The House is richly fitted up, the seats being of mahogony, rosewood, or some dark wood. The light used is a gaslight, which shines through an immense skylight of ground-glass nearly as large as the room. The light thus furnished is not strong, but sufficient to enable one to read, and it is very soft and mellow. Upon the whole the room has a somewhat heavy or semi-gloomy appearance, not by any means equal in cheerfulness to legislative halls I have seen in my own country. There was not a full attendance at the time we were there, the work on hand being committee work, and in reference to insane asylums, the salaries of keepers, chaplains, etc. The style of speaking of the members is mild and unimpassioned, they making but little effort to be ornate or to display oratorical ability and power. Some of the members were in favor of the bill under consideration, and some were opposed, of course. We listened with interest to what the different members had to say, though we but imperfectly understood the merits of the case. We observed that a Scotch member was quite witty in his remarks, and frequently caused the members to cry out, "Hear! Hear!" The terms "my noble friend," "the learned gentleman," and "his noble lordship," were very frequently used, there being several lords in the House. It was gratifying to see the Atheist Bradlaugh sitting there on an equality with other distinguished members. I trust he may eventually be able to effect the great reforms in the government of England upon which he has placed his heart. He came to us two or three times and conversed with us on matters pertaining to the rules of the House, and pointed out to us several of the members, giving their names—Lord this, Secretary that, etc. Gladstone was not present, neither was John Bright. The House of Lords had risen, so we did not see them.

When we felt that we had viewed the proceedings of the law-making body of England long enough we returned to our hotel to retire to rest. I assuredly felt that I had put in a good hard day's work, and know I was thoroughly weary.

On Tuesday morning Dr. Andrews and his friend Dryden called upon me to accompany them to some points of interest, Mr. Rawson having other matters to look after. We first called again upon Mr. Edward Truelove, and had an excellent visit with him. He narrated the particulars of his two trials for selling Robert Dale Owens' "Moral Physiology," the first trial being a disagreement of the jury. On the second trial he was convicted and sentenced to four months' imprisonment. His experience in prison was more severe than my own, he being compelled to sleep for several weeks upon a hard plank for a bed, his food was of the most undesirable character, and he was not allowed to see any of his friends, or to communicate with them for the first three months. But he thinks his imprisonment has done good, and that the prosecution has done more toward bringing the work into notice than the opposite course would have done. He took us up stairs in his dwelling, and showed us the handsome testimonial gotten up by his friends upon his discharge from prison. It is neatly executed and is in a gilt frame. He also showed us the table on which Thomas Paine wrote the "Rights of Man." It has on it an engraved silver plate, placed there by Paine's true friend, Thomas Clio Rickman, who wrote a life of Paine, and valued the table very highly. I should judge by Mr. Truelove's description that the Comstock of London, Mr. Collette, is another just such a meddler and unprincipled person as we have in New York, attending to the dirty work of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, and it is believed he is doing more harm than good. He is evidently come a good deal into disrepute, as he deserves to be.

The next point visited was St. Marguerette's church and Westminster Abbey. A military wedding had just taken place in the church, and a company of very finely dressed soldiers were in attendance. The church is built in the style of the cathedrals, high and lofty, with heavy stone columns, and no wood work. Around the sides were numerous paintings and statues of saints, kings, and queens. Under the aisles and passages were buried distinguished individuals of the past centuries, and on the flat stones forming the floor were inscribed their names, date of death, etc. The dead were said to be resting all over the church beneath every part of the surface. It seems to me an unfit place for burial. The idea of a church being made a charnel house is a repulsive one.

Westminster Abbey is in close proximity, and we soon entered its lofty-vaulted nave, and walked slowly through its aisles, transept, chancel, cloisters, and chapels. It is one of the most remarkable edifices I ever entered. There is a legend that it was built on the site of an ancient pagan temple. This was built by the Catholics, and partakes of all the grandeur characteristic of Catholic abbeys. The first building on this ground was built by the early Britons who became converts in one of the early centuries. This was burnt, but in the reign of Edward the Confessor the debris was cleared away, and a most magnificent structure was built in its place. He did this to ingratiate himself with the clergy. He also renewed their charter, and granted them new and additional favors.

Henry III. in his day pulled down the edifice built by Edward, and enlarged the plan of the ancient abbey. He also added a chapel, which he dedicated to the "Blessed Virgin." But it was not till the time of Henry VII. that the present stately chapel now known by his name was planned and built. The abbey seems to have fallen into some neglect, and Henry VIII. robbed it of some of the valuables. After this Sir Christopher Wren was deputed by Parliament to repair it and decorate it, and he skilfully and faithfully executed his commission.

The Abbey is built in the form of a cross. The length from west to east is 375 feet; from north to south, 200 feet; breadth of nave and aisles, 75 feet; hight from pavement to inner roof, 101 feet; hight to the lantern, 140 feet. The stone columns are heavy and carved. There are two dozen or more of these massive columns nearly a hundred feet in hight and six or eight feet in diameter, fluted or cut outwardly in rolls. But it is what is in the old Abbey that invests it with great interest. Here hundreds of the kings, queens, and notables of England were buried. There are large numbers of tombs in the south portion of the Abbey. These consist of more or less elaborate masonry, carving, and ornamentation of the olden style. A recumbent figure of the departed, in stone, bronze or other metal, the size of life or larger is upon the tomb. They lie with their faces upward, the palms of their hands together in a devotional attitude, apparently waiting for Gabriel to blow his trumpet to call them to arise. But, however full of contention they were during their lifetimes, they have now for hundreds of years lain very quietly together; and it is my opinion Gabriel will have to blow his horn extremely loud, and keep it up a long time, before he can make those old decayed bones change their position.

In the Abbey are buried thirteen kings and fourteen queens, to say nothing of dukes, earls, marquises, knights, warriors, statesmen, and authors—one of the latter being Charles Dickens.

In the chapel of St. Edmond repose the bones of John, son of Edward II., 1331; the Earl of Stafford, 1702; Monck, bishop of Hereford, 1661; the children of Edward III.; Lady Jane Seymour; and many dukes, duchesses. right honorables, bishops, etc.

In the chapel of St. Nicholas are buried some sixteen other notables of "ye olden time."

In the chapel of Henry VII. are hardly as many tombs.

In the north aisle is a monument to Queen Elizabeth, Mary, daughter of James I., Edward V., and several more.

In the chapel of St. Paul repose the bones of a dozen more.

In the chapel of St. Edmond are Henry III., Queen Eleanor, Henry V., Queen Philippa, Edward III., Margaret, daughter of Edward V., Richard II. and queen, and others.

So in numerous other chapels lie various other dead kings, queens, dukes, duchesses, lords, ladies, generals, etc. Some of them were extremely turbulent and dishonorable when alive, but they are all extremely quiet now. The chapels are comparatively smaller rooms or little churches that partially surround the Abbey or the cathedral as the case may be. They are dedicated to some particular saint, and are large enough for two or three hundred to worship in, and some of them are double that capacity. In one of the chapels of Westminster Abbey the walls of which were painted in antique style, the House of Commons at one time held its sessions. Much of the decoration has perished, although considerable still remains.

Besides the distinguished personages buried in the chapels, the aisles, transepts, etc., are said to be full—or rather the earth beneath them—of the dead bodies of knights, sirs, and honorables who bustled and bustled on the stage of life one, two, three, and four centuries ago. There is a great deal of history connected with this grand, gloomy old abbey, but I will not undertake to give it to you, for I am not sufficiently familiar with it; but there the coronation of many of England's kings and queens took place; there royal weddings and funerals were celebrated, and there great numbers of England's distinguished dead were buried, as I have already stated. No persons could have the honor of being buried there unless they were of the royal family or the nobility, or had conferred some distinguished services upon their country.

Ralph Waldo Emerson, upon the subject of this old abbey, wrote these lines:

"O'er England's abbeys bends the sky,
As on its friends with kindred eye,
For out of thought's interior sphere
These wonders rose to upper air,
And nature gladly gave the place
Amongst the glories of her race,
And granted them an equal date
With Andes and the Ararat."

Sir Walter Scott penned the following on the same subject:

"Here, where the end of earthly things
Lays heroes, patriots, lords, and kings;
Where still the hand and still the tongue
Of those who fought and spoke and sung;
Here, where the fretted aisles prolong
The distant notes of holy song,
As if some angel spoke again,
'All peace on earth, good will to men.'
If ever from an English heart,
O here let prejudice depart;
. . . . . .
Where, taming thoughts to human pride,
The mighty chiefs sleep side by side,
. . . . . .
The solemn echoes seem to cry,
Here let their discords with them lie."

In one of the chapels, among the tombs of the fallen great, I noticed a striking representation in sculpture of Death striking his dart into the wife of a doting husband. The man and wife were on a marble table some three feet from the pavement, and Death, a horrid skeleton with a blanket drawn around him, and javelin in hand, was, with deadly aim, directing it at the lady, while the husband stood appalled with horror and dismay. It was most striking.

The statuary and paintings in the abbey are the most pleasing features in it. One can walk around there for hours and view with rapture the works of art there displayed before his ravished gaze. I will not undertake to give the names of the statues or fine large paintings, but they must amount to several hundreds, and they are a great study for the students and for every appreciative person. The trouble is, one has so much to see and wonder at that his little vessel is soon running over, and he is unable to fully comprehend all the beauties presented before him.

At the end of the south transept is what is called the poet's corner. Here are finely wrought statues and busts of the most distinguished writers, poets, and historians of the realm. There may be found Shakspere, Chaucer, Grote, Thirwell, Garrick, Grabe, Camden, Casaubon, Coxe, Wordsworth, Burns, Wyat, Wetenhall, Hobbes, Addison, Macaulay, Thackeray, Campbell, Mackenzie, Goldsmith, Gay, Dickens, Pope, Thompson, Southey, Johnson, Pritchard, Rowe, Scott, Sharp, Prior, Milton, Gray, Butler, Spenser, Johnson, Drayton, Cowley, South, Dryden, and many others whose names I do not retain.

Let me repeat again that all along the walks are paintings and statues in great numbers. It doubtless would be interesting to read the names of all the subjects, but I cannot give them; they, however, consisted of statesmen, generals, nobles, and big men in all the walks of life. It is a great honor, of course, to be commemorated by painting or statue in Westminster Abbey.

The stained windows are a marked feature and cost a large sum of money. These are at the ends of the nave, transepts, and aisles, and are large and brilliant. They are full of figures and designs in the brightest colors.

The organ is very large, and doubtless sends forth sonorous sounds when the saints assemble there to worship, which is every Sunday. Service may be held in the main aisle, in the chancel, or in the transept, or in some of the chapels, according to the numbers; but with all its magnitude, with all its loftiness, all its magnificence, all its great expense, it seems like a cheerless, gloomy place in which to assemble for a meeting. A snug little church, or even a good country schoolhouse, would seem preferable, especially in cold weather.

As I traversed the cloisters and walks where the monks used to do penance and pass hours in meditation; as I looked at the places where they used to say their prayers and count their beads, when I looked at the cells where they lived, when I took into consideration all the errors in the system of religion the old Abbey was built to perpetuate, and the many years of toil and tears and groans it has cost on the part of thousands—for it is at last the laboring classes that build all the abbeys and cathedrals—I pronounced it a monument of human folly, and nothing less.

We next made our way to South Kensington Museum, four or five miles away. It has most beautiful grounds of several acres, laid off and decorated elaborately in beautiful plots, walks, fountains, lakes, etc., with a profusion of flowers everywhere. The day was pleasant, and for the first time in London we had a view of the sun.

The Museum is most extensive, occupying many hundreds of feet of buildings and covering twelve acres of ground, and cost £60,000, or $300,000. In many respects it is fully equal to the British Museum, and contains many things not found in the latter. But I know you will excuse me if I do not enter into anything like a detailed description. I am too weary to undertake it, and I am not certain but that so much detail has become irksome to you.

We passed first through the Indian and oriental departments, where we saw almost everything pertaining to oriental life in the past and present, including the rude and imperfect plows with which they till the ground, the vehicles and carriages in which they ride, the style of houses in which they live, the clothes they wear, the boats and ships which sail upon their waters, the coins they use for money, as well as the gods they have worshiped and still continue to bow down to. There are hundreds of idols and gods used in Asiatic countries, Egypt, Greece, and Rome. These are of all sizes, kinds, and varieties. Some are pocket gods, and some twice as large as a man; some made of stone, some of wood, some of bronze, and some of gold. I am sure there are gods enough in that museum for all the people in the world.

The collection of Indian, Assyrian, Egyptian, Grecian, and Roman antiquities is very large, and in viewing them one is lost in wonder how so many articles from the olden times could be procured, and even how the people of old should find time to make so much. I was impressed with the conviction to what extent England has robbed India. The rich fabrics, wares, and various articles of manufacture of all conceivable kinds are perfectly astounding. It seemed as though we must have walked at least a mile viewing the rich carpets, tapestry, robes, laces, scarfs, shawls, silks, satins, with vases, work boxes, cabinets, inlaid boxes, musical instruments, porcelain wares, swords, guns, spears, in all conceivable varieties, battle axes, gewgaws, curiosities in metal, wood, glass, porcelain, and thousands of things I cannot begin to remember. Enough is there to study for weeks, and thousands of great curiosities may be passed wholly unnoticed.

The department of statues is large and most interesting. It would require quite a pamphlet to give a catalogue of what is there. The subjects are both pagan and Christian, and which contain the greatest absurdities is a matter of question. Many of the statues are of fine marble, while some are plaster casts from celebrated pieces in various parts of the world. Among the casts were two sections of what I think is called Trojan's Pillar, from Rome. The diameter must be fully ten feet, and the hight of each section forty feet, the surface covered with sculptured designs, such as battle scenes, etc. They are very imposing.

One large, long hall is devoted to the display of keramic pottery. Here is arranged in cases the whole of the museum collection of earthenware, stone ware, and porcelain. Here are fine specimens of pottery of the past few centuries, with an interminable variety of patterns, models, and designs, and from different countries.

The picture galleries are most extensive and attractive. Here are numerous paintings by the old masters, among which are Raphael's cartoons, pieces by Burnet, Callcott, Carpenter, Clint, Collins, Constable, Cooke, Cope, Creswick, and scores of other celebrated artists. The subjects of the paintings are widely varied, but quite a portion are Christian, while there are numerous landscapes, historical events, battle scenes, marine pieces, portraits, poetical and imaginative designs, in short, embracing almost everything attempted by art. A large proportion of the paintings are large and brilliant, and one may wander through chamber after chamber, from gallery to gallery until his head is weary, turned, and confused with the wonders and beauties he has seen.

Here are also a large collection of books, but not as many as at the British Museum. Great facilities are extended to classes and students in the various departments. I saw many copying statues, portraits, landscapes, etc. But I could not tell you all were I to write a week. I may as well quit right here as anywhere. At a little past nine in the evening, being greatly wearied, I was glad to take an omnibus to reach the hotel, arriving there about 10 P. M. I was so fatigued that sleep soon came to my eyelids, when the statues, the antiquities, the paintings, the gods, were for the first time fully forgotten.

On Wednesday morning I made my way, in company with Mr. Dryden, through the Strand, Fleet street, Cheapside, etc., to Billingsgate. This is the great fish market of London, once so noted for its coarse, vulgar women, but which has become changed, and is now wholly attended to by men, and everything is conducted as well as possible. The building is a large substantial stone structure, far superior to Washington Market in our city. I saw a great quantity of fish of many varieties which I never saw before, and which seemed to be changing owners pretty rapidly. They were selling by auction, and the stock went off rapidly. I saw large turbot, a flat, singular looking fish; periwinkles, a kind of sea snails. These are boiled, and the meat picked out. They are much used by the poor. I saw here many other singular looking marine animals, whose names I can not remember. The oysters were from Dutchland, and look differen from their American cousins, being shorter and stouter looking. I have tasted of none of them.

I then made my way to the celebrated Tower of London, which for many centuries has had a bloody, cruel history. Here many princes and princesses have been shut up, here many a brave man has been made to drag out year after year, here many have been sentenced to death, and here many hapless human beings have been executed.

The tower is not one building, but a series of grim looking buildings of varied appearances and sizes, more or less joined together by walls, and surrounding an area of three or four acres. It was not all built at one time, but in different centuries. The older part is said to have been erected at the time the island was in possession of the Romans, other portions under the Saxons, and later under the Normans. It is of massive stone, some of the walls being fifteen feet thick.

Joing a company which had formed by paying a shilling—twenty-five cents—a guide accompanied us and explained, in unintelligible English, some of the events which have transpired within those walls, as well as the relics, arms, etc., which are stored there. He first pointed out what used to be the moat surrounding the tower, but which half a century ago was filled up.

He next pointed out the Traitor's Gate—two heavy, cumbrous leaves, nearly on a level with the walls of the Thames, and which gate has swung open to receive many unfortunate wretches, who rarely escaped with their lives. When the tide is high, small boats could pass through the gates and bring the prisoners to the castle steps.

We entered the fortress by the Middle Tower. This is a strong portal, flanked with bastions, and defended by gates and bastions and a portcullis. The latter is a most formidable looking affair, being a heavy gate of iron with huge pointed bars, which falls suddenly, when desired, upon man or horse, causing instant death to all who stood under it. Heavy metal gates were also used to shut and protect the tower against invasion.

The Byword Tower stands at the southwest angle of the fortress, and forms the principal entrance to the exterior line of fortifications.

Of the Cradle Tower, only the lower part of the original structure remains. It forms a curious vaulted gateway, which in former times led to a drawbridge.

The lower part is all that exists of the original Wall Tower. It consists of a vaulted chamber 15 by 10 feet.

There is but a relic left of the ancient Develin, or Inner Gate Tower, much of it being of modern date.

The larger portion of the White Tower buildings was erected under the Normans some eight hundred years ago. This is a quadrangular structure, and occupies the central portion of the inner ward. It measures 116 feet by 96 feet, and is 92 feet in hight. It is embattled, and has watch-towers, or turrets, at each angle. The roof is covered with lead. It consists of three lofty stories, besides the spacious vaults in the basement floor. The outer walls are fifteen feet thick.

The first apartment we entered was filled with figures of footmen and horsemen in the armor that was used then—more than four centuries ago. We saw the armor used by many of the kings, and as the heavier sets weigh one hundred and twelve pounds, we could easily comprehend that a man must feel extremely clumsy to fight in such a garb. The whole front of the body was covered, including legs, arms, hands, and face, when the front piece was lowered. Among the sovereigns represented was Queen Elizabeth on horseback, as she appeared when she went to Westminster Abbey to return thanks for the destruction of the Spanish Armada. Her horse was led by a page. She was buried in Westminster Abbey, where I saw her tomb and a figure of herself, life-size, or larger, on the top of it. There must have been forty or more figures of knights, princes, and kings on horseback and on foot representing the king, and nearly all were clad with the armor peculiar to the times in which they lived.

On the walls were numerous ornamentations, as suns, rosettes, etc., composed of swords, spears, lances, sabres, bayonets, and knives. These murderous implements were bright and very artistically arranged. There were great quantities of them. One is filled with wonder at the great number of them, and that man should ever be led to use such deadly weapons upon his fellow-man. Some of the swords were nearly four feet long and heavy enough for a giant. We saw, also, all conceivable manner of firearms used three centuries and more ago. In the time of Henry VIII. they had revolving guns with four chambers. The most of the guns were heavy and unwieldly. Different kinds of shot were exhibited, and, among others, round-stone shot of various sizes, the largest being nearly twelve inches in diameter. In the same room were the old implements of torture with which many poor wretches.

(Concluded on page 600.)

Communications.

Politics Once More.—A Voice from the West.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Your correspondents differ very materially upon the political situation. There is nothing wrong in an honest difference of judgment, which is the case in this instance. I hav no doubt about the honesty of Messrs. Bennett, Leland, Wakeman, and others in desiring to hav the Liberalists vote the Democratic ticket. It is as unkind and ungenerous to charge them with dishonesty, as some hav seemed to do, as it would be for them to charge us with dishonest motivs because we do not see as they do politically.

The popular political feeling among Liberalists, so far, seems to be expressing itself in three directions, namely, in favor of supporting the Democratic ticket, in favor of supporting the Greenback ticket, and in favor of running a separate or independent ticket. The vital point is, which will be the best for the cause? Mr. Leland is showing up the advantages of voting the Democratic ticket as well, I think, as any one can who entertains that position, and others are showing up the advantages of running an independent ticket as well, I think, as can be done.

With your permission, Mr. Editor, I desire to present in an impartial manner, as I hope, the advantages that would result from using our forces with the Greenback party. Before I do so, however, I desire to notice Mr. Leland's position and the arguments he and others offer on that side of the question. Mr. Leland says, "Vote the Democratic ticket this time, and if we cannot get what we want of that party, then vote the Republican ticket next time and defeat the Democrats, and so on." This is what is termed, in the science of politics (if there be any science in politics), "policy." Is it true that policy is a stronger basis on which to work or build than principle? When did friend Leland make that important discovery? Does history prove it? If so, when and where? That a scheme may succeed sooner sometimes by this method or short cut is perhaps true, but its very success, so-called, is mostly a defeat, and the worst kind of a defeat too. Yes, it is the old theological dogma that the end justifies the means. But you get persons to adopt this policy business generally, and how long before the sense of justice and truth and goodness in the human heart is deadened, and principle itself succumbs to the mastery of the devil? If you want to demoralize the forces of Freethought, feed them on policy and I fear you will do it, and that, too, in a short time. Given a general and an army inspired by policy instead of patriotism and principle, and how long before demoralization and utter defeat will overtake him and his forces? I ask if there ever was any other road yet found to real permanent and lasting success but that of principle? If so, where is it? I own I hav never found it. No, the true and lasting basis of all political, moral, or social revolutions or reforms in this world is principle. Establish your movements upon this basis and they can brave the flames of hell, and will liv and prosper and bless humanity; but you build them upon policy and you build upon the sand, and the first gale that sweeps by will level them with the earth. Oh, yes; I know what Mr. Leland will say, that he proposes to stand to principle; that he will be true to the principles of the League. Are you sure of that, Mr. Leland? You come to me with principle in one hand and policy in the other. What am I to think of you playing good God with one hand and good devil with the other, and, like the traveler in the "satyr's cave," first blowing hot and then blowing cold? You say this is the true method of reformation, and you no doubt honestly believe it, and maybe your method is the true one, but if so, I honestly own I cannot see it. You know good old dog Tray was badly beaten for getting into bad company, and will not we be badly beaten if we get into the Democratic party? At least, I think we should canvass this ground thoroughly in all directions before we conclude to do so.

If you believe in policy as above principle, why not join the Catholic church to defeat the Protestants, and if the Catholics will not giv you your rights then join the Protestants to defeat the Catholics? Why not alternate in this manner and see-saw until you obtain the end in view?

I hav serious fears that Liberalism will be murdered in the house of its friends. Most certainly I am apprehensiv that if this great movement is to be based upon policy, it will be short-lived and soon pass to its merited oblivion.

One word about throwing our vote away—unless we vote for the winning side. Suppose Jesus Christ was really what our Christian friends say he is—a bona fide Savior—and was running for the Presidency of the United States to-day, and his Christian satanic majesty, the devil, was the opposing candidate. Well, our Christian friends say that ninety-nine hundredths are already voting for and bound for the Devil. Now we say that we will not vote for Christ, though he would save us and bless us all, because he cannot succeed; but we will vote for his satanic majesty, because he is the winning man, and we thereby elect him; and then we burn our tar barrels and fire off our sky rockets and shout ourselvs hoarse over our grand success. Yes, a glorious success indeed—a boomerang, for which we are roasted alive, punched up with a long pole, and suffer indescribable torments to all eternity—all the untold agonies of an undying hell! This is political success, is it? "O consistency, thou art indeed a jewel!" Save me forever from such political success.

Yet this is a parallel case with those who talk about voting for either of the old parties because they can succeed. What boots it to succeed when success is irretrievable ruin? Yet this is the philosophy of that ignis fatuus dogma of success without principle. I only speak for myself when I say that I would just as soon vote for the devil outright as for either of the old political parties. I do not believe his satanic sovereignty could inaugurate a worse policy or enact worse laws than both the old parties hav done.

Mr. Leland says in his reply to Mr. Hoover in The Truth Seeker of August 14th, "Besides, of those Democrats twenty years ago, some millions are dead, and other millions, younger, more progressiv, not so bloody, Democrats are born in the party instead," etc. Will friend Leland tell us how honest, progressiv young men voting for a political party is going to change the policy of that party? If Mr. Hoover's logic has lost one leg, has not friend Leland's lost both? The honesty of the voters has nothing at all to do with the case; it is the leaders who run the party, not the voters. I say that the leaders of both the old parties are dishonest, but I would be far from saying that all who vote for them are dishonest, or that all the candidates are, but I mean to say that the party machinery of both the old parties is as corrupt and rotten at heart as hell itself. All the manipulators of the wires think of and care for are the spoils of office, and these facts are admitted by Mr. Bennett himself and nearly all the former Republicans who propose this season to vote the Democratic ticket. I ask, then, what good can Liberalists secure in helping either of the old corrupt parties into power? Try your policy, gentlemen, of supporting political vice (a party that is full of it) to obtain political virtue, of supporting an infamous load of dishonesty to obtain honesty, and see if you do not get your own virtue and honesty a good deal tainted, your forces demoralized, and the Liberal cause seriously injured, if not entirely defeated, before you get through. Rather giv me a thousand honorable defeats than one ignoble or corrupt victory that will engender a deadly political pestilence that will bring ruin in the end.

Principle will eventually spike our enemies' guns and silence their batteries forever. But try policy in one direction, and you will begin to court it in other cases, and still on, until it will permeate and infuse itself into the whole organization and bring speedy and inevitable ruin. I am very sorry to see almost every great movement of our age truckling to policy, for to me it argues future ruin and death.

I desire to notice Mr. Herbold in some of his declarations in The Truth Seeker of August 14th. He says, "To vote for James B. Weaver and the Greenback party is equally impossible for one who does not believe in a corncob currency interconvertible with cornstalks, or, to drop metaphor, does not approve of financial vagaries and follies that hav been exploded a hundred times, as often reappeared, and been cried up as something new under the sun by their holders." How does it occur that this gentleman has made such a grand discovery as all that? Where did he get his clairvoyant powers from to see so much humbug lying in the folds of the swaddling-clothes of the young "rag-baby." Many of our countrymen, possessing the ablest minds, hav examined very thoroughly the pedigree of the "rag-baby," hav examined the claims of its parentage, and the place of his parentage, and they say it is of legitimate birth, born in the natural way, not sired by the "Holy Ghost" nor any other ghost; and, further, they hav examined the child from the "crown of its head to the sole of its feet," and declare that it is sound every way and without blemish. How, then, I ask, does it occur that one Charles J. Herbold, hailing from the "queen city of the West," has made such a wonderful discovery of the "spots" and "blemishes" in the body of this modern prodigy, the rag-baby?

Ought he not to get his discovery patented and sell it out by states, counties, and townships, or pass it over to Barnum? He further says, "The American people hav too much good, solid common sense to reopen the financial question, which has been settled by a dozen square fights, much to the disgust of the Democratic party, which in some states forsook its old and tried convictions on the subject of finance, entangled itself with these financial crotchets, and got soundly trounced for its pains." And so we hav another important discovery—that the financial question is now entirely settled by the American people, and that the Democratic party got its fingers badly burnt for meddling with it. Then I can only say, Served it right. It had no business to meddle with it, when it was doing so in bad faith, simply to catch votes. But it will be remarkable and startling news, I apprehend, to thousands and tens of thousands in America to-day to learn that the financial question is now permanently settled by the American people. I own it is startling news to me. One of the greatest questions that ever appealed to the statesmanship of any age or any country for adjustment is now permanently settled. Since there is a political oracle to go to now, will it not be wise for Mr. Weaver to go home, draw off his forces, quit canvassing, and disband his political organization, for we are told that we cannot succeed as a party?

Again, this friend and brother—for such I believe he is, and I desire to only attack his political views and not the brother himself—says he is going to vote for Hancock, and giv his reasons, and also says he is going to vote for English "because he is one of the people, a self-made man, and a square man." Let us see about that, my good brother, for a moment. It is not denied by the Democrats that this man English is, or has been, a bondholder and banker, and that he is worth about a million of dollars. Is such a man "of the people and for the people, a self-made man, and a square man?" I can say at least that there is one vote Mr. English will not get. "Square man," is he? "self-made and of the people?" and yet worth a million of dollars, and made it by government bonds and banking! No honest man was ever worth a million of dollars. No man can make that much money and make it honestly. When you support Mr. English you support a bloated bondholder, a thief, a robber, and I hav no doubt a murderer too, for robbery produces starvation, and starvation is murder. And these are the candidates we are called upon to support for the highest office within the gift of the American people—men who liv on government spoils and rob widows and orphans, men, women, and children, on every hand by taking advantage of their necessities. I do not blame the men so much as I do the corrupt system under which we all liv, but I can never support the system or the men while I hav my senses.

But it has been said that the Greenback party has some dishonest men in its ranks. Yes, that is true; all parties hav them, and if we wait to support a political party until we get all the dishonest men out of it, it will be some time before we cast another vote. But I can safely say that the Greenback party has not so many dishonest men yet, besides its platform and principles cut off the spoils of office, and hence destroy the opportunities for stealing; and if honest men would all take hold of it they could soon make it a political organization that would secure all the rights of the people and destroy the arbitrary and unjust exercise of power in all directions. No one but a political fanatic would claim that the Greenback party, or the men who compose it, or its platform, or its principles, are perfect, but in every respect think this new political organization is ahead of either of the old parties except in numbers, and the history of the old Abolition or Free-soil party shows what has been done by a strict adherence to principles can be done again. Then what need we fear while we stick close to principles and hav the bright and glorious example of the old Abolition or third party before us?

Now it is possible that I shall be throwing a big bomb-shell into the Liberal camp, and perchance get badly trounced for it, if I should say that I think the Liberals hav got "the cart before the horse," and yet I honestly believe that such is the fact. The Liberals think, as I apprehend, that the Liberal League movement is the greatest reform in the world, and of the most vital importance. Now is this true? I think not. I hold that the Labor Reform is far ahead of it in importance. Do not the child's necessities require food, clothing, and shelter long years before it knows whether it is a slave or not to any religion, church, or dogmatism? Food, clothing, and shelter, a spot of earth to call a home, and land on which to earn a living, are first and always our most pressing necessities. These necessities and blessings the Labor Reform advocates are endeavoring to furnish to all persons who are willing to labor for them. These are inalienable rights and prime necessities to all human beings, and should be guaranteed to all who will lend a helping hand to obtain them. Those who labor should hav the full proceeds and fruits of their labor, which is not in any sense the case now. Secure these advantages to the people, and you can get a hundred and I believe a thousand subscribers to The Truth Seeker to where you now get one; your tracts, papers, and Liberal publications would be spread all over the land like the leaves of the forest, and be read, digested, and appreciated; your Liberal Leagues would spring up everywhere; your camp-meetings and conventions would be attended by thousands of truth-seeking, earnest souls, not one of whom goes now, because they hav not means to go with; your public lecturers would be supported with a lavish hand, and the good work go bravely on. I know whereof I speak. I know a large number of Liberals here in this vicinity who desire most earnestly to go to the Bismarck Camp-Meeting commencing next week, but cannot do so on account of lack of means, myself among the rest. And so I know many who want to subscribe for The Truth Seeker and would like to send for the many able and excellent works published at the office, and they would like to listen to the many eloquent Freethought lecturers now in the field, and would pay liberally for such rare feasts and blessings, but they cannot do it for lack of means, and still they are literally starving to death for this kind of food.

Do Shylocks say they do not labor and economize to get along. Then I hurl the charge back into the teeth of those Shylocks, and deliberately say they lie. The people are civil, industrious, and economical. Don't tell me, Mr. Shylock, that it is their fault, for you lie when you say so. What, then, is the matter? Do you wish to know? Then I will tell you, and would to God I could write it upon your hearts with a ray of light snatched from the meridian sun, that you might realize its full and true import: The honest and industrious laboring classes, the producers of wealth, of ours and all other countries of our globe, are slaves to the infernal money power, the most damnable tyranny that ever cursed this or any other planet in the realms of space. There is no tyranny, no monarcy, no despotism, no hierarchy, no priesthood, no church, no despotic government, no king, no potentate, no pope, nor combination of them all, can equal the diabolical tyranny of the money power that prevails to-day in the land of Columbia and every other country beneath the sun. It is a hydra-headed monster—a million devils in one. I do not desire to underrate the influence and power of money for human good, and the world-wide blessings that would result to humanity from the legitimate use of money, for those things are too self-evident to be denied, and no one would desire them more than myself, but it is the abuse of money that I complain of. Take the money basis from the church, and everybody knows it would soon tumble. Take it from the two political parties, Republican and Democratic, and how soon they would fall to pieces. These two old parties sold themselvs, soul, body, and estate, years ago to the god Mammon, and if they had sold only themselvs to this god, and if he had foreclosed the mortgage, and they gone into everlasting bankruptcy, it would hav been a glorious good thing, but unfortunately they hav sold the people too. I said the two parties, Republican and Democratic, but I say here and now that they constitute but one party, including the bondholders, the bankers, the Shylocks, and money-getters on every hand, but not money-earners or producers. I mean the leaders and manipulators of the political machinery. Banks, corporations, and innumerable swindling institutions of every character hav grown up and grown rich, tyrannical, and oppressiv from the toil and sweat and industry of the people under these two parties, if you propose to call them two instead of one, while many of our citizens are houseless, homeless, foodless, and in rags. I can take you, within an hour's ride of the place where I am penning this article, into the mining towns of this county, where you can see every day men, women, and little children begging in the streets, in the depth of ignorance, dirt, filth, and rags, until you could scarcely believe the picture of destitution a reality. They are everywhere. You say, Shylock, that it is their own fault. I say you lie. The time has come for square talk, and I shall not mince language. It is the infernal money power that has usurped all the lands, all the railroads, all mining operations, all trade, all commerce, and has even bought up the wheat and corn, and established a corner, holding it for speculation, thus making merchandise of the bread of life; and it makes all our laws, and controls all legislation and governmental operations. Well might it say,

"I am monarch of all I survey.
My rights there are none to dispute."

This land on which I am writing is known as the "Joy purchase," a rascally swindling operation that cheated the honest settlers out of it to whom it belonged, and now they hav to buy it of the railroad company at its own figures, mortgage it, and borrow money at a heavy interest; and the most of them will lose their places after working hard to improve them, hoping to make permanent homes of them. It is a sorrowful picture to see men, women, and little children striving and laboring and economizing to the last penny to try to secure a home, and then lose it and all they hav paid on it, most likely, and all the labor they hav done. And it is not only here, but everywhere the same. At least one-third of the farms in Kansas are to-day under mortgage to the Shylocks. So in Indiana and many other Western states. Yet Mr. Herbold says resumption has taken place, and that we are having good times. Yes, it is the resumption and good times of bankruptcy and ruin. Millions on millions of acres of the public domain hav been given away to railroads, private enterprises, and individuals. Everywhere the rich are growing richer, getting special privileges at the hands of the government, by which they soon become millionaires, while many poor, honest, laboring families get only a crust of bread, a hovel not fit for swine to liv in, and a few rags to cover their wretchedness.

We pitied Mr. Bennett when he was incarcerated in the Albany Penitentiary for no crime he had committed; but bad and unjust as that false imprisonment was, was it to be compared to this wholesale incarceration in poverty's bastiles for a common lifetime, as millions of human beings are, men, women, and children? I know a soldier of the army, who fought for his country and contracted a disease while in the line of his duty that has disabled him for life, and in consequence of which he has lost his farm, worth $2,000, and other property worth one thousand dollars, and has been separated, through no fault of his, by the loss of his home, from his family and children for four years. He has applied for a pension, and though he has furnished as good proof of his disability—and that it was contracted in the army—as any soldier has furnished, he does not yet get any pension, and perhaps never may. This is how the government is treating this one, and many others of her soldiers. What does it care for its soldiers, now the war is over? And what do the two old parties care for the soldiers only to get their votes? The above case is not the only one, for I am acquainted with a number of cases of a similar character. Now is it to be supposed that I would vote for either party—if you say there are two—that has bankrupted many of our soldiers, and many of our most worthy citizens, by a financial policy that was gotten up by the Shylocks and money thieves to play into their own pockets at the expense of the industrious wealth producers of our country? Thousands and tens of thousands who voted the Republican ticket voted themselvs out of house and home, and into a state of hopeless bankruptcy, and now they ask the soldiers and others to vote the Democratic ticket, which would result in the same thing to thousands and thousands more.

The policy of both parties is the same. It is hard money! hard money! hard money! There is no difference in either party, for I still insist they are both one, and that it is working for the banker, the bondholder, and the millionaire, for palaces with stone fronts furnished with all the modern appointments on one side for the rich; with hovels and dug-outs on the other side for the laboring poor. I hav sat at the hearthstone of many a ruined home and hav seen the tears trickle down the face of bearded manhood and down the face of doting, loving, grief-stricken mothers over the loss of their dear home, taken by merciless Shylocks, and the mother, father, and children driven out bare-headed to subsist on the cold charities of a merciless world. The Republico-Democratic party has destroyed thousands and tens of thousands of those homes in our land and sent the inmates adrift upon the world. The Democrats need not say that the Republicans hav done all this mischief, for the Democrats hav held Congress for three years, and they could hav undone some of the bad Republican legislation and done something for the people had they felt an abiding interest in the public welfare. No; you can just as well hug a boa-constrictor or an anaconda to your bosom as to vote for or embrace either of the old parties. When you do so, according to my view of the political situation, you seal your own financial death warrant (that is, if you are a laboring man) and foreclose the mortgage that the money-power holds against your worldly goods and chattels, and which will take your home in time, if you hav one, and send you and your family adrift in the world. I ask, What will the Liberals do? Will they stand in defense of human justice, right, and humanity; in defense of our homes, our firesides, and the laboring interests of our country as against the invasion and encroachment of capital? Or will they support the Republico-Democratic party that is continually robbing the people of their homes and dearest interests? The Greenback National Convention at Chicago unanimously adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That land, light, air, and water are the free gifts of nature to all mankind, and any law or custom of society that allows any person to monopolize more of these gifts than he has a right to, to the detriment of the rights of others, we earnestly condenm and seek to abolish.

I ask all true Liberalists, and all just and liberty-loving persons, if there was ever a resolution passed by any political convention since our country was first settled that contained more of human equity and justice than that? It is the quintessence of justice itself. Also the resolutions in regard to money and woman suffrage, which I cannot here quote on account of space. Those three resolutions alone, of land, money, and woman suffrage, contain more real truth, justice, equity, and humanity, in my judgment, than all other political platforms put together since our country was inhabited. Yet these do not by any means cover the whole ground, but they are good as far as they go, and other vital matters can be secured in the future. If the Liberal League movement is going to work for truth, justice, equity, and humanity by enlarging the boundaries of Freethought and human liberty, then why not extend the hand of fellowship and ally itself with the land, labor, money, and woman suffrage reforms, and present a wall defense for human justice that cannot be broken. Do not suppose, good friends, that I am endeavoring (if I had the power to do so, and I know that I hav not, nor the desire either to drag anybody in that direction) to drag the Liberal movement into the Greenback party, as it has been charged that Bennett, Leland, and others wanted to drag it into the Democratic party. The political action of the League will be a most vital matter. To make a mistake now politically would doubtless result in a lasting injury to the cause, hence I sincerely desire before we take a decisiv step that we should look at this vital matter impartially from every standpoint, and then vote as our honest and highest convictions shall dictate. I am sure I hav no interest in this matter but the good of the cause, and I believe that is true of a large majortty, if not the entire membership, of the League. No one is trying to drag the movement in any direction, but what all desire is to see it crowned with a permanent and lasting success.

Brush Creek, Kan. R. E. LaFetra.

Another Greenbacker Heard From.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: It is very amusing to observe how well "the chatter goes on." In your issue of the 14th Chas. J. Herbold leaps over into the support of the Democracy, but not before he has "utterly demolished" the poor Greenbackers with their "corncob currency," "interconvertible with cornstalks"—which he says is a "vagary and folly that has been exploded a hundred times," as often reappeared, and been cried up as something new under the sun by its holders—the fiat or irredeemable paper money "Wherever the fiat scheme has been tried it has ended in ruin and disaster to the people." So then, Mr. Herbold, it is nothing new that these silly Greenbackers are advocating? It is the same "old coon," or "assignat and continental currency," you say. Are you quite sure of this? You ought to know, for you are well versed in the history of the French Revolution. The history of the assignat, as I read it, made it a redeemable paper money, its redemption unjustly based on the confiscated property of the Catholic church and clergy, instead of being based, as it ought to hav been, on the entire property and credit of the nation. It is true that the bottom of the assignat "fell clear out" when Bonaparte restored to the church the confiscated estates. But a word might be said in favor of the assignat, though it was improperly based. It enabled the revolutionists (destitute as they were of gold and silver) to arm and equip a vast army and to hold at bay the combined armies of Europe—giving material prosperity to France, such as she had not enjoyed for many years. And it must be remembered that all the hard-money advocates of the day were stirred up, as they are now, to cry down the people's money. It is said that no less than eighteen printing presses were engaged in printing counterfeit assignat money in the city of London to flood France with their spurious emissions. In Belgium they were engaged in the same effort to explode the assignat by counterfeiting it "to death." We find a British court refusing to convict for this crime against the people of France. The continental currency was redeemable in Spanish milled dollars (they said so on the face of each bill). They also being printed on coarse paper, before the art of engraving, were easily counterfeited, to their utter ruin; and the states making no provision for redemption, they "came to grief." So, dear brother, the assignat of the continental and "wildcat banks," with their promises to pay specie when they cannot hav but one dollar back of ten of their issues, is not the kind of money advocated or desired by Greenbackers; and although you may rejoice that De LaMatyr, Gillette, and Weaver "are to be extinguished" this fall through the Democrats withdrawing their support—and as you say, "the Democratic party hav always got 'trounced' for its forsaking its old and tried convictions on the subject of finance"—what do you say to the seventy-five Democratic members of Congress who last spring voted for that "blue light and bigot," Gen. Weaver's, resolution, embodying substantially the Greenback platform, when they were so frantically appealed to by Garfield to come forward to then and there end this fanatic Greenback party, and only thirty Democrats could be found to respond to his call? I respect and honor the courage and manhood of those seventy-five Democratic members for standing up in opposition to the demands of the "money power." I hav faith to believe if the Democratic party will not throttle the grasping and grinding monopolies that are crushing labor, they will at least furnish the men that will do it. And I hav nothing so say against many of the reasons given by Mr. Herbold for his support of Hancock, and were I a citizen of New York I would be tempted to vote for him myself for the sake of a change of administration; but as Hancock can't carry Ohio (and if he could he does not need it), I will vote for Gen. Weaver, to swell the number of those in favor of his policy, and keep alive the party that will some day do the work.

In conclusion I will say for the encouragement of brothers Herbold and Truesdell that one man has made his fortune by writing a campaign document trying to prove that the French assignat was identically the same with our national greenback money; he has received a foreign mission from this government. I refer to President White of Cornell University. So, gentlemen, keep on repeating the "assignat argument."

G. B. Purdy.

Salem, O.

The Responsibility of Law-making.

I think few worth damnation save their kings.—Byron.

Such are the words Byron puts in the mouth of Satan when he speaks of this our earth and its people. If we hav any persons in the Union who may be called kings they are our legislators, the men we choose to make laws for us, and surely, to continue the poet's idea, the miserable creatures we generally choose for members of legislatures are hardly worth a d—n. One need only visit a state capital while the law-makers are in session to assure himself of that. To be a law-maker for the people of a state is to be vested with an awful power when one reflects seriously upon it. Yet under our party management the people hav grown utterly indifferent about the matter, and almost any miserable, broken-down idler is deemed good enough for that office. To hav the power to make laws—what is that but to hav a power almost godlike? The statute book contains the wisdom of ages, for it has all that ages of experience hav shown a nation is needful for its life, safety, and comfort. There is no state in the Union but could liv all the better under the laws in its statute books to-day were they unchanged for twenty years to come. Yet every year these fellows who are picked up at random for legislators assemble together and make several hundred new laws. If a member does not get up some law his constituents grumble and say he does not earn his wages! Thus the blind, ignorant constituency regard the duties of the still more blind, ignorant members they hav chosen. Never will this condition of things be remedied until the people insist that no bill shall ever become a law until after they themselvs hav voted for it. A great authority has shown that nearly all the evils of modern nations hav come from too much law-making, and that the greatest service that legislatures generally do is when they repeal some act made by their predecessors. See Buckle's "Civilization," vol. i. Spencer and Mill and others hav said to the same effect. A few hundred men picked at random over a state are sent to some point to make laws. Raw, ignorant, crafty, avaricious, they fall into the hands of agents of corporations and individuals who hav schemes on hand. They begin to enact laws at their instigation, and this is legislating. All is well in the state, or if any ill exists it is because of something that a previous legislation has done. No wonder the country goes from bad to worse.

We all know that man is a being utterly unfit to hav great power put into his hands unless he be made answerable to some other men for its use. The most pious, best men and women are not fit to hav irresponsible power over their fellows. And when this power has been given to them, oh, how cruelly they hav used it! How they hav made their poor fellow-mortals suffer, either by their carelessness and neglect or by their cruelty and hatred! Woe unto those whom they hav had cause to hate. Woe unto those whom they desire to blackmail for their money. Only the most harmless and contemptible of men and women hav escaped their notice and cruel treatment. Cruel as individuals may be, their oppression is nothing nearly so severe as that of associated crowds. A society or body of men banded together is the most frightful of all despotisms. When a nation is rich and prosperous, and several thousand citizens get control of government and rule the army and oppress the people with heavy taxes, and when they grant out to each other special privileges under the name of franchises, corporations, etc., by law, it is dangerous to resist them. The single person who dares to resist them becomes a marked man and will be imprisoned on some charge, or will be assassinated finally.

Many governments of the kind hav existed. Such were several Grecian governments and the republics of Venice, Milan, Genoa, and many others. The statute-making power makes laws to increase the officers and army. These laws are made to protect commerce, morals, peace; promote virtue, etc. Judges are appointed for new courts, detectivs and sheriffs abound, spies reside at every central town and giv names of dangerous persons—the most dangerous persons being those who tell the people of their rights, or who, in a word, talk and write freely.

In the United States to-day several thousand men are banded together to preserve certain institutions, corporations, or laws unchanged. Like the old slave oligarchy they are a host in themselvs. They hav all the legislation they need. Woe be unto him who falls into their snare! Accusation is all they require, for it is ruin to be accused, as all lawyers know. The machinery is all ready. All that is needed is an organization with a center somewhere to direct. There is not one county in the Union where spite may not each a man and ruin him.

Holt

(Continued from page 597.)

were most cruelly tormented. Here were the thumb-screws which pressed points into the thumb, causing most acute pain; here were the iron collars, weighing fourteen pounds, with pointed irons within and without. These were worn on the naked neck, and the pointed iron would penetrate the flesh and bring the blood, though the points were somewhat dull.

Here was also the "Scavenger's Daughter," a horrible iron instrument of torture which holds the neck as in a vice, and the hands and feet at the same time and in the most uncomfortable positions. A model was also exhibited of the rack upon which persons were stretched out, a rope being attached to each wrist and ankle and then by a windlass stretching each till the joints were often torn asunder—a pretty occupation, indeed, for Christians to be engaged in!

We ascended into the next story by a solid circling stair-case, where we found rooms three stories high, full of the latest army rifles, standing upright, in frames for the purpose. Even those deady weapons looked pretty, but still one could not help thinking of the suffering they are capable of producing. We saw 104,000 rifles thus tastefully put away so that every arm could be seen. The number of swords, bayonets, and other weapons was truly appalling.

The Tower was used as a palace for the royal family at one time, and we visited the banqueting room, the council chamber (Parliament also held its sessions there), and various other vaulted capacious rooms, including St. John's chapel, built by the Romans eight hundred years ago. It is a neat chapel, considering there is no internal finish save hewn stone. The columns are two feet and a half in diameter. It is not used now save occasionally by a regiment of Scotch soldiers which have quarters in the town, as is the case at present. The newer portion of the tower is now used as barracks for soldiers. There are large numbers of soldiers on guard in various parts of the Tower, on the grounds, etc. In fact in many parts of the city you will see the red-coats on duty. I judge the British keep up a pretty large standing army, for which the people have the privilege of paying.

In the Tower yard we saw a large number of heavy bronze cannon, some brought from India and some from other countries, where the British have been victorious. The Indian cannon were gotten up more or less in the form of savage beasts. I noticed a mortar in the form of a tiger supported on its front legs.

We climbed up a narrow stone winding stairway into the upper apartments, where prisoners of state used once to be confined. In one room especially, which was the prison of many unfortunate political prisoners, we saw the inscriptions they had made in the stones of the wall. Here are the names of Walter Paslew, Robert Dudley, Johan Decker, Robert Tider, Thox, Jenkins, Marmaduke, Nevill, Wm. Beveridge, Wm. Tyrrell, John Dudley, Ro. Bainbridge, G. Gyfford, Charles Baily, John Store, Thomas Migah, Lawrens Mylford, Wm. Dollard, Wm. Rame, Henry Cockyn, Edward Smalley, T. Salmon, Richard Old, B. Lassals, Hugh Longworthe, John Ireile, Thomas Fitzgerald, W. Wodbus, Anne Boleyn, Thomas Abel, Thomas Calhoun, John Marten, John Seymour, Thomas Steven, James Rogers, Inggram Percy, John Prim, France Owdal, Lady Jane Gray, George Ardun, John Colliton, Thomas Talbot, besides many others. Many of these inscriptions are accompanied with various sentiments, quotations, passages of scripture, etc. Some of them were very quaint.

In that room the beautiful and amiable Lady Jane Gray was immured, and from the narrow window of that cell she saw her husband carried by in a cart to execution, and in a short time afterward his headless body brought back. We stood on the mound within the yard where she was beheaded, and saw Tower Hill, one-fourth of a mile away, where many persons were publicly beheaded. We saw also the beheading axe and block last used in England. The blade of the axe was ten or twelve inches in width.

There is much that I saw in the Tower which I cannot now call to mind and which must remain unmentioned. There is much of great interest connected with the old pile. I wished to see the room where Sir Walter Raleigh was confined many years, and where he wrote his work, "A History of the World," but the stairs leading to that part were deemed unsafe, and we were not taken up to it.

One of the most interesting sights connected with the Tower were the crown jewels. These are in a room by themselves, and in what may be called a large iron cage. No one can get at these jewels and crowns save with a key that will unlock the door; and as they are of immense value, the key will not likely be passed around very freely. The collection of crowns and jewels are on a pyramidal table. First, the Queen Victoria is at the top. It consists of a cap of purple velvet, inclosed with hoops of silver, surmounted by a ball and cross, all of which are resplendent with diamonds. In the center of the cross is the "inestimable sapphire," and in front of the crown is a heart-shaped ruby, said to have been worn by the Black Prince. The whole is valued at many thousand pounds, but I do not retain the amount.

2. Is St. Edward's crown, rich and elaborate.

3. Is the Prince of Wales' crown, formed of pure gold, unadorned with jewels.

4. The ancient queen's crown, used at coronations for the queen's consort.

5. The queen's diadem, made for the wife of James II. It is richly adorned with large diamonds and pearls.

Among the royal scepters are St. Edward's staff, four feet seven inches in length. It is surmounted by an orb, and is said to contain a portion of the "true cross," but that is extremely apocryphal. There is doubtless wood enough in Europe said to be of the cross Jesus was crucified upon to make a good-sized house. This scepter is carried before the king or queen at coronations.

2. Is another royal scepter of a similar kind.

3. The rod of equity, or scepter with the dove. This is placed in the hand of the sovereign at coronations. It is ornamented with diamonds.

4. The queen scepter is somewhat smaller, and is ornamented with precious stones.

5. The ivory scepter which was made for the queen of James II., Maria d'Este.

6. Another richly wrought golden scepter, supposed to have been made for Mary, Queen of William III.

In addition to the foregoing are, 1. The Curtana or pointless sword of mercy. 2 and 3. Swords of justice, temporal and ecclesiastical. They are also borne before the sovereigns on coronations. There are also coronation bracelets and spears, the anointing-vessel and spoon used at the coronation; a baptismal font used at the christening of royal children, various dishes, spoons, a beautiful service or sacramental plate used at the same august ceremony; an elegant silver wine-fountain, given by the Corporation of Plymouth to King Charles II. on his restoration; the most ancient and noble Order of the Thistle, with collar, badge, and star; the Victoria cross; most noble Order of the Garter, complete, with garter, collar, George, and star. Besides these there was much else of the same senseless character. What can be more foolish than such insignia of sham royalty and majesty?

I never saw one-tenth part so many diamonds before, nor so large ones. I "hardly ever" saw so much gold before. I dare not say how much the guide said all those trappings are worth, but I think it was into the millions of pounds sterling. How much more sensibly it would have been used in making poor unfortunate people comfortable!

From the Tower we went to the great wine vaults of London, and they are also a marvel in their way. They are immense cellars for storing wine. They even extend miles in a given direction. They are of brick, built in arches, and supported by columns or pillars about every twenty feet. The whole is laid off in streets at right angles, with lights occasionally. In the center of what may be called the street are two rails for rolling the casks upon. I was informed there were twenty-five miles of these rails, and on either side, all the way, are tiers of casks of wine, two and three stories high. Just think of it, what a vast quantity of wine! I doubt if the United States altogether has one-hundredth part of the wine now in those vaults. The sherry is in one locality, the port in another, and other varieties in other places. All the casks are marked and numbered, and a record kept of them, so they are easily found. The wine belongs to various individuals, who place it there for storage, paying a certain tariff per month, per quarter, or per year. I saw some casks which have been lying there nearly twenty years. Sometimes the expenses amount to so much that the owners decline to pay them and leave the casks to rot down and the wine to be wasted. Two casks were tapped while we were there, and under the circumstances I did not object to taking a moderate-sized glass of good sherry and port. I am also compelled to say that, according to my judgment, the quality was very fine. It made me so slightly dizzy-headed that no person would have suspected me of drinking. These vaults are owned by companies. They cost largely, and afford a handsome income. We each took a lamp fastened to a stick two or three feet in length. With them we could overcome the darkness enough to enable us to see the objects immediately around us. There was a curiosity in the form of a fungus growth on the roof all over the vaults, which arises from the vapors from the wine. Sometimes these hung in beautiful festoons, drops, and curious formations, as though the work of art. The air in the vaults is by no means oppressive, and is rather an agreeable retreat on a warm day.

From the vaults we went to the docks, where goods and wares from all parts of the world are stored as taken from the ships. They are large, substantial, stone buildings, which look as though they would stand for ages. I was particularly interested in the building where gums, drugs, etc., are received and classified before being sold. I was also particularly interested in the dock building where Peruvian bark and ivory are stored, examined, and sold. A vast quantity of bark and ivory were on hand, though a sale of the ivory had taken place not long before, and much was taken away. I saw the ivory from Asia, and much more from Africa, the tusks of which are much larger than the Asiatic. A large share of it comes from the Zanzibar coast. My attention was also called to a lot of ivory from the frozen part of Siberia, and were the product of the Siberian elephant or Megatherum. These lived before the glacial period, and are found in immense bodies of ice. How many hundred thousand years ago no one can tell, but that it was more than a hundred thousand years ago there is scarcely room for doubt.

From this point we took cars for the Victoria docks, five miles down the Thames, where the wheat from America is unloaded, and where the large steamers plying to all parts of the world have their docks. We went on one of the large steamers.

On our return we called upon Mr. Charles Watts, editor and publisher of the Secular Review, and publisher also of various Liberal books and pamphlets. He is on Fleet street. He extended a cordial reception to us, and we had a pleasant chat of more than half an hour, and in that time became very well acquainted. He will be at the Congress in Brussels, when probably we will see more of him.

Now I have about finished my first instalment of London. Mr. Rawson and myself have concluded to go to Paris and do that city before we go to Brussels, so as not to have to return to Paris after the Congress. We shall return to London again after we have finished on the continent, and will spend a few more days in looking up the sights not already attended to. London is truly a great city, though, of course, it has its drawbacks. It is said to have a constant foreign population of 200,000; to have more Catholics than Rome, and more Jews than the whole of Palestine. It is a great city for business. Its people are more distinguished for struggling for money than seeking for pleasures. John Bull is a grave, conceited old fellow, and thinks his modes and manners better than other people's. He is very slow to adopt American customs and improvements, even when much better than his own.

Forms of expression are often quite different from what they are with us. Instead of saying, "Go to the head of the street," they say here, "Go to the top." In place of the "foot of the street," they say "the bottom." If, in conversation, they fail to understand a remark, instead of saying they did not understand, or asking what was said, they simply say, "I beg pardon," etc., etc.

But enough of London for the present. You will next hear from me in Paris. Au revoir,

D. M. B.

---

W. F. JAMIESON is engaged in the political campaign in Illinois, tenth district, stumping for Weaver and Chambers; A. J. Streator for governor, and Robert Holloway, the Democratic-Greenback nominee for Congress. His engagements extend to June 1st.

---

One More Fight with Comstock.

Again the Liberals of this country are called upon to defend an innocent victim of this monster spawned out of the ooze of modern Christianity. Another Liberal editor is attacked, without the slightest reason or justice, under a stretched and perverted definition of the word "obscene."

The Comstock crowd hav made so little and the Liberals so much out of the late prosecutions that we did not suppose they would continue in the unprofitable business of arresting Liberal editors. Doubling the circulation of Liberal newspapers and increasing by tenfold the sale of "Cupid's Yokes" must be a source of more joy in heaven than over ninety and nine sinless Sunday-school tracts, else why do they advertise the business and urge the sale? It has been given out that the government at Washington were tired of this sort of thing and ordered it stopped. The National Defense Association thought they had defended their last case and had adjourned sine die But here is a new and unexpected demand for their intervention to see that justice is done.

This time it is a citizen of Iowa who is attacked, a state where the Republican majority is so large that the priestly power who runs that party thinks it can commit any infernal act of oppression and yet not lose its hold upon the state. It may hav been intended, too, to smooth down brothers Walker, Farringon, and Peck, lull them into security, and lure them to return from the Greenback departure. I wonder if it will hav that effect!

Anyhow it seems that the Western branch of the Vice Society, envious and emulous of the Comstock prowess in the East, desires to try its hand at regulating the Liberal press. So McAfee plunges into the obscene pool and shouts to Comstock, "Look, now, how we rotten apples can swim!" Well, all the world will note what the end shall be of that regatta.

Mr. H. L. Barter, editor of the LeClaire Pilot, Iowa, is the last editor arrested and imprisoned under the Comstock laws. He is now out on bail awaiting trial, which will probably take place in November next, at DesMoines or Keokuk, and will be pushed on mercilessly. He is a man approaching forty years of age, slight of figure and build, and little able to stand a term of imprisonment. He says a year of it would finish him. He has a wife and children to support, and they would suffer. He has been an acceptable editor of the Pilot for several years. He espoused the temperance cause with the people of LeClaire, and carried in a local administration opposed to license. He aimed to publish a reputable business and family newspaper, and united with the citizens in all good works. Though Liberal in his own personal sentiments, he strictly avoided giving offense to his religious patrons. But it would seem that the path of strictest rectitude, according to the straitest sect, has its pitfalls. In an unsuspecting hour that seems now inauspicious, he heard that Mrs. Maria L. Follett, a respectable citizen of LeClaire, was writing a novel. This was novel for a backwoods country town, and, on the alert always as enterprising editors are for new features to please their patrons, it occurred to him that it would be a fine stroke of business, and attractiv to subscribers, to publish an original story, especially a local story, in series, in his columns. So he applied to Mrs. Follett, and obtained permission to publish her work in his paper.

Now who is Mrs. Follett? This time it is a woman who writes a prosecuted story. It is no varlet of a man now, who did eat and write a little book sweet in the mouth but bitter in the belly to the exteat of sending three men to jail, no man so corrupting and obscene that woman could not read him. No, this time it is Eve herself who brought death into this Western world and all our Comstock woe. Mrs. Follett is a true, gentle, genuin woman, a citizen of Le Claire from her youth up, a trifle over forty years of age, owns her own house and grounds, having her young daughter and aged mother with her, who also owns a farm adjoining the village and is a substantial citizen. She has been twice married, and has reared a family of children, some of whom also are married. Not three years ago she was a shouting Methodist, aiding in revival work, and had been a member of that church more than twenty-five years. If she is a corrupt woman, from what influence could her corruption come? But her real sin is that she left the bosom of the church, got weaned, as it were, and don't hanker after its milk for babes any more.

Well, this godly, pious woman, daughter of the church and unspotted from the world, was overshadowed by the Holy Ghost (or something), inspired with a mission and impregnated with a word which she must say to her suffering sister women. In an unsuspecting hour, which seems now inauspicious, she too was tempted to write a book. The church reads and hopes, "O, that mine enemy would write a book!" and she did it. She had suffered much in her two marriages, has refrained ever since from contracting a new marriage through fear of further suffering, and had known of unknown outrages among her friends and acquaintances worse than any experiences of her own. So she sat down and told all these stories in a book. She calls it a novel, but she has brought very little imagination to play in it. The story is only a thin clothes-line on which to hang out her foul married linen to air and dry and disinfect itself. It is too fearfully realistic to be pleasant reading, but it is true; and can't we men stand anything a women of this character chooses to say on this subject? Can't we survive without imprisoning her publisher? With a strong grip on the planet, I really feel like taking the chances myself. Don't believe anybody will be blowed into the abyss of thereal space the morning her work appears in book form.

But Mrs. Follet has a remedy for the evils that are endured in marriage, and she publishes her remedy openly and without charge in her book. And now, dear reader, what can you suppose that remedy may possibly be? What is the desperate, dangerous medicament she would apply to the great, widespread social disease? Shut your eyes, stop up your ears, open your mouth, and listen! And then don't tell anybody! It is, "No sex union except for generativ purposes!!"

Just think of it. Consider the effect of that remedy upon the social state. If that sin of omission should be universally committed it would make saints of all the fourteen hundred million inhabitants on this planet. Not a rape, not a seduction, not an incest would ever be committed. It would prevent half the murders and nine-tenths of the suicides. Apply it to prostitution, and it would probe and scalpel out that moral cancer from the social body, root and branch. Desdemona would then be equal with Othello, and that occupation would be gone. Think of the distressed state of society that remedy would bring upon us—girls removed from almost all the dangers that attend their path; unhappy, suffering wives unknown; saloons in cities without pretty waiter girls; assignation houses without tenants; ministers without mistresses, and infamous dens without a devotee the whole world over.

And this is the book, with doctrins of this kind, and results of this happy character, that this Western Comstock is prosecuting as obscene. And this is the book and these the doctrins that the Liberals of this country are called upon to defend the right of their author and her editor to publish if they see fit. These short-sighted pietists might as well attack the writings and doctrins of Mary Ann Lee, and set their dogs on a community of Shakers on a charge of sex immorality, as to arrest and imprison the publisher of this story of Mrs. Follet's. Never did a set of blind guides fall into a more open and obvious ditch. They are in a false position, and if they hav any grains of sense left they will soon find it out.

The main inculcation of Mrs. Follet's book is the same that Mrs. Slenker is publishing, without let or hindrance, through THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that Mrs. Winslow is advocating in her Alpha in Washington, right under the nose of the immaculate Mrs. President Hayes—and Comstock in the East don't smell a rat nor peep a word. He says to his coadjutor, McAfee, "Go West, young man; go West! There the Liberals havn't been raided. Besides, they are green and unsophisticated, and you shall find obscenities in literature worthy of your steal. No National Defense Association exists there, and you can steal a march and whisk a defenseless backwoods editor into prison before anybody knows it." Well, we shall see if this little game will work.

It is curious to note the criss-cross way in which things many times double up and evolve in this world. Over in England it devolves upon Bradlaugh, the Atheist, to defend the second commandment, and now it seems the Infidels of this country must come to the rescue of the seventh. At this rate the whole decalog will hav no friends in the church, and the Liberals will hav to accept the abandoned responsibility of maintaining social order by enforcing the whole ten, including even, "Thou shalt hav no other gods before me." Well, this wonderful world turns on several other things besides its axis!

Now, Liberals of the United States—yes, and of Canada—I appeal to you on behalf of Mr. Barter and Mrs. Follett to come to their defense. I hav been personally to Le Claire, interviewed these so-called obscenists, questioned and cross-questioned them, read the book, and examined into the situation—and these are the facts as I hav stated them. You can hav no worthier cause, you can protect no worthier people than Mr. Barter and Mrs. Follet. It will take five or six hundred dollars to defend Mr. Barter in court. There must be many Liberals who are able and willing, indeed, who will feel themselvs honored by the privilege of contributing to defend so noble a cause against such prosecutors.

It costs something to spread Liberal principles, but not nearly so much as the other side hav to expend to spread illiberal ones, and after all these latter don't spread to any alarming extent. One of our dollars will go farther than ten of theirs, because theirs hav to roll up hill and against gravitation, while we hitch our wagons to the stars and get them in their courses to fight for us. These prosecutions are really the best and cheapest way to sap and mine Christianity, blow up the church, and spread Liberalism everywhere—they furnishing the blasting powder at their own expense. We ought to welcome every such arrest as those of Lant, Foote, Heywood, Bennett, and Barter—you see they are getting very respectable in number now—and joyfully pay the little they cost us in view of the good they do.

We do indeed sympathize with the individuals who are called upon to bear the vicarious suffering for our salvation and atonement, and we must alleviate their lot and make it as endurable as possible; but even to them there are great compensations. Remember that when Mr. Bennett stood before that splendid applauding audience assembled in Chickering Hall to receive him back from prison, he said that that reception alone paid him for all the sufferings of his trial and imprisonment. Let Mr. Barter, too, hav the assurance, as well as every other Liberal editor they choose to prosecute in the future, and let the church take notice, that if he is condemned to a felon's cell and livs to emerge from it, he too shall be greeted with such a reception from the Liberals of the West and of the whole Union as shall do him honor, pay him for all his sufferings, and teach the Comstock party that the whole shameful proceeding has been their loss and our exceeding great gain.

From LeClaire I went to Davenport, the county seat, and had an interview with W. A. Foster, Esq., the attorney whom Mr. Barter had engaged in the preliminary proceedings in his case. He is a man of first rate reputation as a criminal lawyer, is influential with a jury, and will conduct the case ably and on Liberal principles. He thought at first that he ought to hav five hundred dollars for defending the case; but in view of the poverty of Mr. Barter and the need of contributions to make up the sum, I finally negotiated with him to do it for three hundred dollars. Then there will be other court expenses, the attendance of witnesses, etc. Also a report of the trial ought to be made and published, and that will cost something. Also Mr. Foster expressly wished that I, or some representativ of the National Defense Association, should attend and assist him on the trial. I am willing to go, but the journey and expenses from New York will cost $75 or more. The trial may come off as early as November, in Keokuk or Des Moines.

Now, Liberals, the case is in your hands. "He givs twice who givs quickly." All contributions may be sent to H. B. Brown, Treasurer of the National Defense Association, 141 Eighth street, New York, or to the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, and he will hand the money to Mr. Brown. All sums sent will be acknowledged in THE TRUTH SEEKER under the head of "The Barter Trial Fund."

The Liberals of Iowa, I am assured, will do their share for the vindication of one of their fellow-citizens. For unity of action and for correct account-keeping, they will do well to send their contributions to the same fund. The Defense Association is national—knows no South, no North, no East, no West—or rather it does know them all equally and is ready to defend impartially any citizen of any state who is prosecuted or persecuted for opinion's sake.

Mr. Barter has been already greatly damaged and broken up in his business—already two weeks in prison awaiting bail. He wishes to move his paper to Davenport and make it more distinctivly Liberal. Any contributor who wishes to make a special gift for Mr. Barter's personal indemnity and support may so designate, and the money will be sent to him. He greatly needs it, and these gifts, too, will teach the church that she persecutes in vain. Another, and perhaps best, way to promote his interests is to subscribe for his paper. Price $2 a year. Address H. L. Barter, editor of the Pilot, Le Clare, Iowa.

If the Liberal papers generally will please copy this statement, or make an abstract of it, or find out the facts for themselvs and make report on them, they will aid a worthy cause, receive the thanks of those in bonds, and forward the general work of Liberalism. T. C. LELAND,

Chicago, Ill., Sep. 8, 1880. Ch. Ex. Com. N. D. A.

Liberal News Items.

THE expression everywhere is that the Hornellsville Convention was a great success—that in many respects it was the most important Liberal Convention ever held in this country.

THE full receipts at the Hornellsville Convention were one hundred and ninety-one dollars and ninety-one cents. The expenses were three hundred and forty-one dollars and twenty cents. The balance of the expenses—$149 38—was paid out of the receipts of Col. Ingersoll's lecture.

COL. INGERSOLL gave his lecture at Hornellsville for the benefit of George Chainey and your correspondent. The full receipts of the lecture were $395.25. After deducting the above-mentioned $149.38, the balance was divided between the persons above named, giving each $122.99.

AT the Hornellsville Convention seventy-two persons joined the Association and paid into the Association twenty-five cents each, which leaves a fund on hand for next year to the amount of $18. We are all learning that it is a very convenient thing to hav Col. Ingersoll around at our conventions and congresses to pay up the expenses.

I THANKFULLY acknowledge the following contributions to aid me in my Liberal League work for the month ending August 31st: B. M. Knap, 25 cents; Wm. Hart, 50 cents; A. Johnson, 50 cents; George Wood, 75 cents; H. W. North, 50 cents; F. A. Albright, 75 cents; Peter Keyser, 85 cents; L. Sevaly, 75 cents; St. Johns Liberal League, $2 50; J. H. Northrup, $5; Duncan McLaron, 50 cents; J. G. Deshler, 77 cents; Eustus Jackson, $1; J. H. Burnham, $1; Lewis Masquerier, $2; Wm. Holgate, $1; Caroline Broecklin, 75 cents; J. E. Baum, $20 00; Mrs. J. T. Brown, $1; L. Johnson, 75 cents; Samuel P. Putnam, $1; Wm. T. Carter, M.D., 50 cents; James Bridges, $2; the Utah Liberal League, $3; in all, $47.85.

At the Freethinkers' Convention all the old officers were re-elected, with the exception of the following changes, which were made: Dr. A. Robinson, of McLean, N. Y., was elected in place of Charles A. Gurly, and Mrs. Asenath Macdonald in place of Clara Neymann, on the Executiv Committee. Edgar M. Sellon, having promised to be present with the Association at its next annual meeting, was re-elected Recording Secretary, notwithstanding the fact that he is now a resident of Colorado.

THE Convention voted to hav the Corresponding Secretary appoint the Vice-Presidents for the next year. And I now request that the Liberals in each county select their best man or woman for that place and send me the name. Until changes are made the last year's officers will please retain their places. What we want is to get appointed the persons who will do the most for the cause.

I DESIRE to ask pardon of my many correspondents for my negligence in answering letters during the last month. My time has been so much occupied in preparing for the Hornellsville Convention and the Chicago Congress that I could hardly find time for anything else. So soon as the Congress is over I hope to be able to again get to work and make my items for the Liberal papers more interesting than they hav recently been. H. L. GREEN.

The Brussels Congress.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The Congress of Freethinkers met at this city on the 29th, as announced, with 225 delegates in attendance, representing nearly every nation in the civilized world. The great thinkers of the world are in the work, and some of them are here. Prof. Ernst Haeckel, Prof. Louis Buchner, Charles Watts, Annie Besant, and a long list of names well known in their various homes, of scholars and instructors, are here to form a union and devise a plan for warring against prejudice and for mental liberty.

Our delegation was received with cordiality, and our reports of work done in the United States with enthusiasm.

I regret the necessity of closing this brief notice in time to send by one of our returning delegates, Mr. Edmond Gastineau. A. L. RAWSON.

Brussels, Belgium, Aug. 31, 1880.

Forgot His "Kyarving-Knife."

Messrs. Peck and Lynn hav both had a say at Mr. Leland in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and that free lance has seen their articles. He wishes us to say to them thus:

DEAR EUGENE: Please say to brothers Lynn and Peck that "when the cat's away the mice may play." I can't cut off their heads with a "kyarving-knife," 'cause I left mine at home. And, when I return, the Congress will be over, its decrees proclaimed, and the sun will hav gone down on my wrath. Retribution will not then follow immediately upon an evil work. Lucky for them! TEE CEE LEE.

Chicago, Sept. 9, 1880.

BULLION IN THE CAMPAIGN OF 1880; OR, SHYLOCK IN VERSE. By A. B. Brown. Published by the author at Worcester, Mass. Price, 15 cents singly; in quantities of ten or more, 6 cents each.

This little work of thirty-three pages is a Greenback document, and recounts the evils which in all ages hav overtaken the nations that hav taken gold and silver for the basis of their money. It deals particularly hard with banks and other "bloated corporations," and shows in pleasant jingle how they hav filched money from the pockets of the poor. The squanderers of the public lands come in for their share of poetic vengeance, and the Credit Mobilier, whisky rings, and other thieving jobs performed by such immaculate statesmen as Garfield and Grant are touched with no light hand. Mr. Brown is an able thinker and writer, and if his verse is sometimes a little awry in its construction his arguments are not. Send to him for as many of the books as you can use advantageously in your neighborhood.

Communications.

Ingersoll and Denslow on Paine and Junius.

We hav read "Modern Thinkers," by Van Buren Denslow, LL.D., and agree with Col. Ingersoll in his enthusiastic praise of the work. But as the author freely criticises his "Thinkers," so we venture to criticise both him and his eulogist, Ingersoll, on the question of the authorship of the letters of Junius. He names eleven works that lie before him on that subject, the last of which, published in Washington, D. C., in 1872, he says, "is hastily written, but its argument, derived from unity of literary style, mental characteristics, identical beliefs, and other internal evidences. is conclusiv."

Col. Ingersoll is "inclined to think that Paine actually wrote the Declaration of Independence," but not the letters of Junius, although he says that the two critiques of his friend Denslow "make by far the best argument upon that subject he has ever read." And he raises four objections to the identity of Paine and Junius, which we quote and answer as follows:

"First. Paine could hav had no personal hatred against the men so bitterly assailed by Junius."

Answer: Nor against the men he so bitterly assailed in his "Common Sense," "Crisis," and other writings.

"Second. He knew at that time but little of English politicians, and certainly had never associated with men occupying the highest positions, and could not hav been personally acquainted with the leading statesmen of England."

Answer: Six years ago James Parton, in a private letter, said, "When I was writing my 'Life of Franklin,' I had to become familiar with the men whom Junius descanted upon, and I discovered that he knew them not—that he was not within the circle of the well-informed."

"Third. Paine was not an unjust man; he was neither a coward, a calumniator, nor a sneak. All of these delightful qualities must hav lovingly united in the character of Junius."

Answer: If Junius was a calumniator, so was Paine, as shown in many of his writings, particularly in his letters to Lord Howe and George Washington. But that Junius was a coward and a sneak we now challenge the great calumniator of Jehovah, John Calvin, and Joe Cook to prove.

"Fourth. Paine could hav had no reason for keeping the secret after coming to America."

Answer: He had the very best of reasons. Almost the last words that Junius wrote were these, "I am the sole depositary of my own secret, and it shall perish with me." Had the writer broken that solemn and deliberate promis, he would hav been worse than a coward and a sneak.

In Dr. Denslow's first critique he finds the argument of "Junius Unmasked" conclusiv. But in his second he raises "four reasonable objections to the theory that Paine was Junius." It looks as if some one had seen him and said what Col. Ingersoll says in his Introduction—that it would not add to Paine's reputation as a writer to prove that he was Junius. Well, of the "four reasonable objections," the author says that only one is "well taken," and that is "that Paine's means of knowing the state and court secrets were inadequate to the demands of Junius." This is precisely the second objection raised by Col. Ingersoll, neither of whom is aware how little Junius really knew of state secrets. But Dr. Denslow goes on to argue from this false assumption that Junius must hav been inspired and posted by leading statesmen, and that "probably Lords Sackville, Chatham, and Shelbourne were in the secret."

The fact that Junius was not within the circle of the well-informed is proved from his private letters to John Wilkes, which were first published in 1812. We quote:

"Not venturing to consult those who are qualified to inform me, I am forced to collect everything from books or common conversation. The pains I took with that paper upon privilege were greater than I can express to you. Yet after I had blinded myself with poring over journals, debates, and parliamentary history, I was at last obliged to hazard a bold assertion, which I am now convinced is true—as I really then thought it—because it has not been disproved or disputed."

"I willingly accept as much of your friendship as you can impart to a man whom you will assuredly never know Besides every personal consideration, if I were known, I could no longer be a useful servant to the public. At present there is something oracular in the delivery of my opinions. I speak from a recess which no human curiosity can penetrate, and darkness, we are told, is one source of the sublime. The mystery of Junius increases his importance."

"I am much obliged to you for your information about Eyre. The facts are as I understood them, and with the blessing of God I will pull Mansfield to the ground."

That Junius could not hav been known to Lord Chatham, as Dr. Denslow supposes, appears from a letter addressed to that lord inclosing proof slips of Junius's last public letter. This private letter, marked "most secret," came to light only a few years ago. (See Bohn's edition, appendix.) In it is this sentence:

"Retired and unknown, I liv in the shade, and hav only a speculativ ambition."

We were but little surprised when Mr. Parton first wrote to us, "Junius was nothing and knew nothing." And yet Mr. Parton must admit that Paine was something and knew something. As Junius he failed to effect a revolution in England, but he succeeded in America. We dissent, therefore, from Parton's opinion that Junius was nothing, and most decidedly from Denslow's assertion that Paine's life was "unsuccessful."

But the lamest part of Dr. Denslow's work is the attempt to prove that both Junius and Paine were prone to scurrility and blackguardism. To prove Junius a blackguard, he quotes from a letter signed "Correggio," and written a year and a half before the first Junius letters appeared. This letter is scurrilous, but there is no evidence that Junius wrote it, and it was never attributed to him until forty-two years afterward, when Woodfall's son collected numerous so-called "Miscellaneous Letters of Junius," most of which are spurious, this among the number. Another quotation is from a letter which, though signed "Junius," was expressly disavowed by him in his preface, saying, "This edition contains all the letters of Junius." The only other extract adduced is from a genuin Junius letter, and it is this, "But to become the stalking-horse of a stallion; to shake hands with a Scotchman at the hazard of catching his infamy." This, we apprehend, would not be adjudged scurrilous, at all events, not half so much so as this sentence in Col. Ingersoll's reply to Dr. Prime of the New York Observer, "You hav eaten your words, and, for my part, I would rather dine with Ezekiel than with you." (See Ezek. iv, 12).

But the attempt to prove Paine a blackguard is a still worse failure. "Stalking-horse" in his letter to Washington, and "Scotch and foreign mercenaries" in the Declaration of Independence, find their parallels in Junius; but they fall so far short of scurrility that when the critique first appeared in the Chicago Times, the writer added the following:

"Editor's note. We had intended to set opposit this sample of scurrilousness and blackguardism some equally authentic and equally scurrilous sentences from Thomas Paine's acknowledged writings, but we cannot find them. To those who apprehend that Junius excels Paine in moral dignity or cleanness of speech, the foregoing should be conclusiv (!!) Paine was frequently scurrilous (!), and at times indecent (!!), but not so recklessly so as Junius (!!!)."

And now, after having a whole year to find scurrilous and indecent sentences in Paine's writings, what do we see? Two extracts from the "Age of Reason," one in which Paine says that "Matthew should hav told us who the saints were that came to life again . . . whether they came out naked and all in natural buff, he-saints and she-saints . . . whether they reclaimed their wives . . . or brought actions of crim. con. against the rival interlopers." And another in which he describes Mary Magdalene as "a woman of large acquaintance," of whom the apostles "appear to hav known most," and of whom "it was not an ill conjecture that she might be upon the stroll."

When the cultured Rev. W. H. Channing, in a Free Religious convention, called Paine a "turkey-buzzard," he was not aware that he was outdoing in fowl epithets the man he calumniated. To the believer in the story of the resurrection Paine's comments are of course shocking, but it is prudish to call them indecent.

That "Junius Unmasked" was "hastily written," as the learned editor of the Chicago Times and author of "Modern Thinkers" remarks, we do not deny. Perhaps he would be astonished to be told that one year prior to its publication the author had never read twenty pages of either Junius or Paine, yet it is true. Nevertheless, the author of "J. U." is willing to stand a comparison in point of care and accuracy with the accomplished editor, who has had eight years to produce his two short essays.

There are several important dates in Dr. Denslow's essays which are erroneous and could easily hav been corrected from the newspaper articles. He has forgotten to answer the fourth objection raised to the theory that Paine was Junius, namely, that he had not the leisure essential to the composition. And while he was about it, why didn't he tell us in what sense an objection could be "reasonable" which was "not well taken?" He forgets to go back and erase or amend his first statement that the argument of "Junius Unmasked" is conclusiv. He asserts that Paine was twice dismissed from the excise service for smuggling. Paine's petition to the Board of Excise in 1766 for reinstatement negativs the first instance, for he says, "No complaint of the least dishonesty or intemperance ever appeared against me."

But with all these defects, we hail this work as an able supplement to "Junius Unmasked." The day is dawning upon Thomas Paine, and soon no competent critic will dispute that he wrote the letters of Junius and the Declaration of Independence. Nor do we fear that this will detract from the merits of Paine, or that the self-evident truths enunciated in his Declaration of Independence will be generally denied in spite of the assertion of the astute Chicago editor that they are self-evident lies. WM. HENRY BURR.

Washington, D. C, Sept. 8, 1880.

Liberal League Notes from Illinois.

In accordance with my promis on accepting the arduous task of trying to awaken an interest in the Liberal League movement in Illinois, I will make my first monthly report of the amount of money sent me to help defray the necessary expenses incurred by the undertaking.

My appointment on the Executiv Committee of the National Liberal League dates from June 15, 1880, and I immediately set about arranging my affairs, so as to giv my whole time and attention to the Liberal work. Since receiving my certificate of membership in Executiv Committee of the National Liberal League I hav promptly, on the reception of calls for instruction how to organize auxiliary Leagues, sent to all such applicants the National Liberal League circular pamphlet of instructions, containing both the National and the Auxiliary League constitutions, and other needed information in regard to the purposes and objects of the Liberal League movement. I hav also sent blank applications for auxiliary League charters, and given all other necessary written instructions in regard to the League work and how to properly organize auxiliary Liberal Leagues.

I hav thus far expended for postage and stationery alone, exclusiv of everything for incidental expenses, about ten dollars, and I hav received in contributions to assist me in the work as follows: G. K., of Chicago, in postage stamps, 30 cents; A. F. Benedict, stamps, 24 cents; Dr. A. J. Clarke, $1; J. B. Beel, stamps, 45 cents; Mrs. J. A. Miller, stamps, 30 cents; Sarah Canboy, stamps, 27 cents; Henry Gildemeister, $1; Mrs. M. E. Hall, for Thomas Goddard, 50 cents; O. Richardson, stamps, 24 cents; L. G. Burns, stamps, 45 cents; total, $4.75.

I am endeavoring to make my traveling expenses out of the sale of Liberal books, but thus far hav not been able to do so. I hope to do better after the people hav marketed their crops.

I broke camp in Rockford three weeks ago to-day with the expectation of giving my entire time and attention to the Liberal work in the state of Illinois as long as I am able to procure pecuniary aid enough to do so. But I am very sorry to see such a lack of enthusiasm in a large majority of our professed Liberals and Freethinkers in a cause that should arrest their most earnest attention. A large proportion of them take no Liberal papers, and seldom read any Liberal books, and, as a consequence, are ignorant of what is passing in the world for the spread of Freethought, or what is being accomplished toward lifting humanity out of mental bondage and into the light of a living truth and freeing the world of the fogs of religious superstition and bigotry. If the Freethinkers of this country could only be enthused with one-half the zeal that is shown by Christians to promulgate their false dogmas, nothing could impede their onward march to complete and unobstructed mental liberty.

I hope to meet full delegations from all of the League organizations of this state at the coming session of the National Liberal League Congress, which meets in Chicago on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September. There will be a good deal of important work to be done at this session of the Congress; and on the action that will be taken there the future success of the Liberal League movement will largely depend.

I hope to hear from all who are willing to extend a helping hand toward carrying forward the League movement in this state as soon as they can conveniently write me, as on their doing so or not must rest my success or failure in the work I am undertaking. Those desiring to write to me, either to send me pecuniary aid or applications for charters and instructions about organizing Leagues, will please address me at Rockford, Illinois, P. O. Box 263, and their letters will reach me.

F. F. FOLLET,
Ch. Ex. Sub.-Com., Ill.

Obituary.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I send you herewith the obituary, as published in the Grant county Herald, of Mr. Jno Woolstenholme, a zealous, hard-working Freethinker, and a subscriber to your paper. His broad and logical views, and his upright and honest life, made him an honor to our cause and a most potent worker for reason, mental freedom, and truth. In him and the Hon. Jared Warner, Grant county has lost two of its most worthy and best citizens, and the great cause of Freethought and free action two of its most determined and creditable supporters. They came to Grant county in the early days, when ignorance and superstition reigned, and when to be a Liberal was to be ostracized, hated, and even persecuted. They braved all insults and abuse, untiringly advocated and fearlessly defended the infant Freethought; they sustained and nursed it until it became respected and predominant, and they died surrounded by many disciples, and mourned and respected by all.

The Investigator will confer a favor upon an old subscriber by copying this.

F. J. SCHELL.

Bloomington, Wis.

[From the Grant County Herald.]

DIED.—At his home in the city of Lancaster, Wis., August 20, 1880, at 3:30 P.M., John Woolstenholme, aged 46 years, 1 month, and 22 days.

The deceased was born in the city of Philadelphia, June 28, 1834, of mixed parentage, his father being English and his mother German. After his birth his family resided in that city some four or five years, and then moved to the West, living for a short time near Dubuque, Iowa, and at New Diggins, Lafayette county, Wisconsin, engaged in mining.

Thereafter they moved to Grant county, Wisconsin, and settled upon the Fennimore prairie, in what is now the north part of the town of Liberty, in this county, being then the only settlers in that part of the county west of Wingville. The deceased was engaged with the family there in farming, and, by hard work and industry, succeeded in opening an extensiv farm and prospered, and was so engaged until after the death of his mother and until his marriage in February, 1859. For several years after his marriage he was also engaged in farming, but since the war, where he contracted disease, he has been engaged in merchandizing in Lancaster.

In his business relations with his fellow-men he was ever upright and honest, as all who knew him best will testify, and there is no man who had fewer enemies than he. In his religious views he belonged to what are called "Liberals." He believed in a controling spirit governing the universe; did not believe in the atonement of Christ or in his divinity, but believed that every man was responsible for his own acts. He inculcated his views in his family, on the minds of his children, ever exhorting them to liv honest, upright, moral lives.

The deceased was married, February 25, 1859, to Henrietta Nathan, daughter of Jacob Nathan, of this place. He leaves her and their four children surviving him to mourn his loss. The funeral services took place Sunday afternoon, August 22d, and the esteem in which he was held by his neighbors and friends, near and far, was attested by the long concourse of people who followed his remains to their last resting-place. No religious services were held, except by request of the family Mr. Cook offered prayer at the house, from whence the remains were taken to the cemetery, where, by special request of the deceased, Col. J. G. Clark delivered an address, giving an outline of the religious views of the deceased, and in the course of the address appropriately extolling his virtues and worth. Peace to his ashes.

S. D.

Special Pleading for the Republicans.

To Members of the Liberal League Convention: Soon you are to assemble to discuss and devise means for the promulgation of free thought, free speech, and free press. Will you listen to the words of one who has no voice in your meeting, but bears a deep interest in your cause, and awaits with much anxiety to know what course you shall take?

While I place the most implicit confidence in your honesty and integrity, I trust you will deeply weigh this matter with all the gravity its importance demands. Weigh it not in the balance of blind bigotry or malignant hate, but by the scale of justice let your actions be determined. Think not of the persecutions we may endure, but of the happiness, peace, and prosperity of the ten millions of firesides in our land. Better it would be for us that we should suffer all the pain of an Inquisition than that we should deteriorate the condition of one human being. Better that we spend our days in the slimy dungeon than hav it said of us we helped to rob one household of its sunlight, or took from one child its happiness.

If you think of organizing a political party, pray do so only when you hav matured well the subject in all its phases. There are serious objections to a separate party. Let friendship, truth, and love be the interminable links which shall bind us one to another, in every clime, but let it never be said we united our strength to oppress the weak. Reason, humanity, and the undying principles of right hav placed us beyond the bane of superstition, and honesty will ever secure for us the admiration of even those who know not of this boon. Thousands are coming daily to quaff the thirst for knowledge at the rivulet of Freethought, but when its waters are made murky by a political party set over the fountain-head they must turn away in disgust. Shall the only people in the world who hav the courage to battle for intellectual freedom bind themselvs to a creed?

If you do not see fit to form a new party, do not indorse any of the old ones. Let every man settle his opinions with himself. If you indorse one party above another let that party be the Republican party. I will tell you why. It is the better party of the two great organizations, one of which must succeed in November. It is the party of progress. It is the party which carried the nation through the most critical period in her history. It carried us through the panic which inevitably must follow every inflation of paper currency. It has made the promis of our government worth one hundred cents on the dollar, and given us the best currency on earth. It took the nation at a time when everything was dark, and secession threatened an imminent dissolution of the Union, when but one other nation of all the mighty powers sent to us a ray of hope. It fought four long years for a federal government. It shook the shackles from four million blacks, and forever banished the hydra-headed monster of human slavery from our land. At the end of twenty years it is all that the most fastidious could consistently ask. Our growing fields are overspread with a network of railroads, our ships of commerce go to every port on earth, while the Stars and Stripes float above the waters of every sea.

We should ever be hopeful for the future; but there is no better criterion of the future than the experience of the past. Not until the maimed soldiers we every day meet hav been laid away to rest; not until children hav forgotten loved parents; not until we cease with the return of each May to decorate with sacred flowers the hallowed graves of our nation's dead, can we forget the war. But overlooking the past, the great issue of to-day must be upon finance. The Greenback idea (if Greenbackers can be said to hav an idea) is impracticable, and if put in vogue would engender the loss of public credit abroad; in fact a currency at variance with the established idea of the world is preposterous, at least.

The Democratic party has ever been wrong on the subject of finance. During the war, when we issued the Greenback dollar, it was a negativ party. It shook its empty head and said, "The thing can't be did." What are the facts concerning that issuance? Our resources were exhausted by war; we had bonded ourselvs to foreign capitalists until our credit was gone. The noble boys in blue said to our Congress: "We honor the government established by our forefathers and love the sunny land in whose defense they spilled their life's blood; every throb of the nation's heart sends its pulse-beats through our veins; we rejoice with her in prosperity and fly to her rescue in times of danger, and if you will giv us a little hard tack for ourselvs and send the greenback dollar to wipe the tears from our mothers', wives', and children's eyes, we will sustain the Constitution now and pay the debt when the war is over."

When we issued our paper currency we were in the midst of a civil rebellion. Fathers had kissed their children and hurried to the field of battle; sons had wiped away the mother's tear dropped upon their cheek and received the last blessing of fathers; husbands had embraced their wives for the last time perhaps, and all had buckled on the sword and hurried away to maintain the Union or die in its defence. They were issued when the destiny of the grandest nation on earth hung upon the slender thread of hope; issued when every gale which swept from the South bore sadness to the hearts of weeping mothers, sorrowing sisters, disconsolate wives, and starving children; issued when every dispatch from the South was the news of a battle, together with its victory or defeat; issued when every letter borne northward was, not a missiv of love, but a messenger of death; issued when iron shot and leaden hail mingled with the summer rain, when the saber's gleam and lightning's flash united to light the scene of death; when bivouac fires on the distant hillsides seemed only fire-bugs reveling in the gathering shades of night; when the sentry's night call echoed to the scream of the nighthawk; when on every Southern field lay the dead bodies of Federal soldiers—the bright buttons on their coats of blue glistening in the sunshine, or their bones watched over by the stars, silent sentinels of heaven; they were issued when the nation's heart was palsied and the blood within the public vein stood still. We then promised when the war was ended, when the sword was hung away as a memento of the past, when our muskets were put aside, when our cannons rang out no more in battle but in the silvery tones of new school bells, when a million yeomanry should settle down in honest toil, to pay them off in gold, and by the undying memory of our three hundred thousand honored dead, if left alone, the Republican party will keep that pledge.

Avaunt! Away with your cowardly repudiators, the crawling, sneaking, slimy vipers who denounce that debt! The obligation is an honest one, and the promis must be sacredly kept.

In 1872, when it was an impossibility, the Democratic party said, "Let us resume specie payments" (at no time and place). In 1876 they said again, "It can't be done." In 1880 they say, "Resumption is a failure." In 1876 the Republican party said, "On the first day of January, 1879, we will resume specie payments." When that auspicious day arrived the vaults of the sub-treasury in New York were thrown open and every man with fifty dollars in greenbacks was invited to exchange them for two and a half double eagles. Does this look like a failure? I appeal to you as business men—can you conscientiously abet a party whose every policy has been proven by the logic of events to be damnably corrupt? Such, my friends, is the undying record the Democratic party has made for itself during the last twenty-five years. I appeal to you as husbands, fathers, and sons, with wives to cherish, children to make happy, and parents to comfort; as lovers of liberty; as believers in the purity and freedom of the ballot-box; with peaceful, quiet, and happy homes; with all our works of art and science; our institutions of learning; with a hallowed and undying reverence for the unsullied honor of our country, can you support the party whose every action has been to rob us of all we love? Such is the living monument of the Democratic party.

We hav just passed through the most deadly maelstrom on all the seas of human life, and the ship of state is righting herself from the shocks she has received. We are paying our debt at the rate of about one hundred million dollars per year. With a remembrance of all these things, I ask you to consider the feasibility of committing yourselvs—if commit you must—to the party of progress; the party of abolition, whether it be to a master or a creed; the party which is of itself the embodiment of all that is noble in American politics—the Republican party. M. Watson.

Terre Haute, Ind., Aug. 24, 1880.

Neither Will I.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: So there's "an end to it" for another. J. S. Verity is out of political moonshine and is living in the solar light of day when he says, "I cannot vote for Hancock, and will not, so that's an end to it." Better yet if he had added, as I do, Neither will I be cajoled, wheedled, or driven by sophistry, multiplicity of words, or to spite anybody, into voting for the other fellow, Gar-cock, or anything like either or both. It is precisely what these two old rotten party-hulks are aiming at—that if one fails, the other shall be sure to win.

The leaders of both old parties are Shylocks; a subsidized press kept blowing for t'other and which; a reserve fund stolen from honest labor for backing; a bandit's swindling banking gouge, which both like and approve; a two billion national bonded debt, every cent the people's stolen credit, and in possession and under control of the fuglemen of both these old hangers-on; a centralization of the distributing agent called money, belonging equally to fifty million citizens, all in the hands of a self-constituted syndicate of both these old party parasites; a set of thieves, swindlers, and robbers of the people's domain, sufficient to make an empire; all of both in favor of no tax for rich thieves; all of both in favor of the robbery of honest toil through corporate wealth, dear transportation, and exorbitant tax; all of both determined, when either wins, to choke the wind-pipe, as usual, of productiv wealth until it gapes for breath like a suffocated rat, and thus force, through a tax-released oligarchy, the tale of ruined plebeians of ancient Rome to repeat its tricks on American soil.

Has history no lessons to teach American "dam-phules" how and when to shoot? Blaze away with your ballot-wads, leveled horizontally at the pit of the stomach of both the old hypocritical party cormorants!

The only dispute between them is which shall rob the trap of the feathers which both are alike guilty in setting and baiting.

See the figures on the horolog! It needs no telescope nor microscope to bring them in sight. All it needs is to open the left eye (the other being blind) and look straight ahead. If your eye blurs, then stand back; you are too close to see, and confusion is what's the matter. Get among the tomb-stones back yonder and see alphabetically chiseled on used-up nations' monuments the unmistakable epitaph that with extraordinary power and fees conferred to any individual class, both they and it become the nucleus around which the hell-hounds of devastation and ruin are always generated and hatched. The Gothamites stand so near to this nucleus they seem not to realize that the target of equal rights to all has but one center to it. Where is that center now? A few heartless and shameless scamps, pets of Demo-Republican nondescripts, with millions a year income at the expense of productiv labor, with the power of creating and disposing of a million officials to fatten on others' sweat and toil, hav scattered it worse than Beecher's "throne of grace."

Are the liberties and rights of wealth-producers not in limbo with the balance-wheel and center gone? Here we are, with one of the most vicious systems of political economy, being choked down the throat of the nation, known to history by both old parties alike, and men disputing which to vote for. With either to administer, the government will become more and more the guard and protection of all minor rascalities and abuses. Large bodies of water will run down hill. It is only when scattered into mist that it ascends. The law is imperativ. The nabobs of corrupt old parties, being the recipients of millions yearly, are the last people on this earth to look to to encourage or advance a system of reform in anything.

Don't deceive yourselvs with the juvenility that to put one out and the other in will scare either, or cause the outs to help reform the ins, or vice versa. In that event, reform would be in danger of reaching the reformer. Both being corrupt in every fiber, it is to their interest to screen, uphold, and protect each other in all political and ecclesiastical plundering so as to be in condition to defend the common citadel which both hav erected—for Christ's sake; i. e., their own.

Who are the defenders and in-dwellers of that citadel but the Randalls, Garfields, & Co.? Is it not patrician lords vs. plebeian serfs? A nation's credit gobbled; a squeezing bank robbery, baited with honest money, which pulls as one man from three thousand centers a stipend of fifty millions a year; a robber class of foreign noodles keeping time and giving orders. Thus, step by step, the once bequeathed inalienable rights of American freemen are being throttled. The plebeian's credit of a nation gone to roost in the money bags of foreign and home gobblers, the money prerogativ in the hands of a few, and the war and taxing power will soon consummate the epitaph of liberty's ruined bulwark.

Nod after nod, wink after wink, for the two decades past our children, little and big, hav been taking lessons how gracefully they can submit to a domestic married to a foreign tyrant's demands without offending either or smelling powder.

At home and abroad tories and imperialists in church and state hav "soured" on representativ government; hav succeeded so far as to induce Demo-Republican voters to yield up the most important sovereign prerogativs to clans, cliques, and combinations of moneyed capital; hav already so weakened our government that these clans, cliques, and combinations boast that they can easily control it to carry on their schemes of plunder. Aha! say they.

Both Garfield and Hancock are the figureheads only of these clans, cliques, and combinations. They know their men. The people had nothing to say, but are being prepared to yield submission to the demands of old party clans, cliques, and combinations by clothing one of these figure-heads with executiv power. Thus our people are quite ready to surrender representativ government and popular liberty into the keeping of clans, cliques, and combinations composed of foreign and domestic money kings, combined with European royalty and a home nobility.

How vividly the lines of Byron on the downfall of Rome come to mind! Niobe, the daughter of Tantalus, it is said, wept herself into a stone through grief for the loss of her children:

"See! the Niobe of nations! There she stands,
Childless and crownless in her voiceless woe!
An empty urn within her withered hands,
Whose holy dust was scattered long ago.
A Scipio's tomb contains no ashes now;
The very sepulchers lie tenantless of their heroic dwellers.
Dost thou flow, old Tiber, through a marble wilderness?
Rise with thy yellow waves and mantle her distress.
The Goth, the Christian, time, war, flood, and fire
Hav dealt upon thy seven-hilled city's pride.
She saw her glories, star by star, expire,
And up the steep barbarian monarchs ride
Where once the car climbed up the Capitol.
Far and wide, temple and tower went down, nor left a site.
O chaos of ruins, who shall trace the void
O'er these dim fragments casting lunar light
And say there was, or is, where all is darkly night?"

Well, boys, it will take a sharp lookout of the people to prevent history from repeating itself with us. The clans, cliques, and combinations, ecclesiastical and political, are on the track, straight as a string. The people are yet the sovereign power; the ballot yet remains. Figures tell me, minus fifty years, the present rate of usury on debts, national, state, county, township, corporate, and on "honest money" (national bank script swindle) will swallow down, or up, every agricultural freehold on American soil. Figures, you know, are hard to beat for telling truth. How's that? Because, to do their prettiest, the outs of the farmer are greater than the ins. It is only a speck of time, and the devil-fish know it. It is the same "Old Man of the Sea" that has ridden to death productiv labor everywhere else, and is now getting the "heels" of us.

Now, "men and brethren, what shall we do to be saved?" Vote for Garfield? For Hancock? We might as well take a dose of Helmbold's buchu. Their traps are all set; they must be sprung.

Only this and nothing more. No power or issues on this continent are so dreaded and feared by combinations in church and state to rob labor as are those presented by Greenbackers. A united fire in that direction would bring the rascals to "terror-pitch" in double quick. Let us try it a thwack. Yours, A. Bennett.

The pebbles in our path weary us and make us footsore more than the rocks, which require only a bold effort to surmount.

Work is a necessity in one way or another to all of us. Overwork is of our own making, and, like all self-imposed burdens, is beyond our strength.

The Union the Controling Issue.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Your article, "Our Reasons" for supporting Gen. Hancock, in your last paper, quoting the opinion and admonition of Hon. E W. Barber, is abundantly sufficient to relieve me from further pursuit of Mr. Bush. If those reasons and that opinion do not open his eyes to the present and dangerous "Bourbonism" of the Republican party, it may be safely concluded that his eyes are so nearly "got" by the petrifying influences of party as to be beyond the reach of anything short of galvanism.

This unexpected lift from your pen leaves me free to conclude these letters by stating concisely the issue which, it seems to me, should be the controling one to all independent voters, such voters as I take most of the Liberals to be.

The fact is that the Democratic party is now the only party that can become a Union or National party in the proper and only real sense of that word—national. This I will endeavor to show.

We are bound to throw our votes for the best interest and welfare of the whole country in the future, in the long run. We must rise above party, section, church, or trivial issues of prejudice, hate, or spite, and vote as patriots, or we are not worthy to vote at all.

From this, the only true because the highest point of view, we can see at a bird's-eye glance where we belong. It is on the side of a substantial union party as against sectional feelings and interests. The Union can only be really consolidated by the incorporation into it of two great and very diverse elements, viz., the white and the colored people of the Southern states. This can only be done by a party with which they will and can affiliate, and which has strength and many votes in every part of our country.

The inhabitants of the South cannot safely nor properly be kept permanently as a conquered people. They can only be effectivly, that is, in heart and soul, re-incorporated into the Union but by receiving them to share the duties, responsibilities, and honors of some political participation in the general government. This is the opportunity to hav that work of peace safely accomplished. Now, and under Hancock, a Union general, this can be done without humiliation or danger. Those people are after all much like ourselvs—proud and sensitiv to injustice. For their part in the Rebellion they hav suffered the bitter consequences bravely and without complaint. They hav had, under Republican auspices, a probation of twenty-one years. During that time a new generation, who had no part in the Rebellion, has come to manhood, and will appear this fall at the polls. For twenty-one years, the usual term of minority, the Republican party has practically excluded their fathers from participating in public affairs. During that time the business of the Southern states has revived to an astonishing degree. The population has also increased, so that the census-takers seem to hav found a new South. Is it not the proper time to incorporate that South safely into the Union?

But this is not all. The Republican party under President Hayes has withdrawn its carpet-bag governments and the U. S. troops, and has wholly committed to those Southern white people the necessity of living with, and to a great extent the necessity of taking care of and educating, the freedmen who were left by the war as the wards of the Union.

Now, how does any rational man suppose that these sensitiv people can be made good, patriotic, American citizens and co-workers in the care and elevation of the freedmen? Can it be done by visiting the sins of the fathers upon the children? No. If we keep the position and tone of conquerors we shall compel them to keep the position and tone of rebels. We shall deepen into a smothered but hereditary feud the feelings of difference of race and of section, which, as sure as fate, will in time break up our Union, or else compel it under "Republican" Presidents to become an empire. If you make an issue of the "lost cause," you must keep it down by political ostracism, then by legislation, then by force, and then by empire! Each of these steps inevitably leads to the other.

What Ireland and the Irish people hav become to England, and Poland to Russia, we shall hav repeated in America. "The sense of injustice is intolerable to man," says Carlyle. Shall we for the selfish object of keeping the general government in the hands of a few at the North bury the seeds of injustice and hate to revive and curse us for an indefinit future? England and Russia keep down their conquered provinces from generation to generation by sheer weight of brute force. Do you think that such a thing can be done in a popular or federal republic? No. In order to do it the republic must become practically an empire. The Republicans know that by instinct, and so they are for centralization, a strong man and a strong government, and finally an empire.

There is but one way a republic can really conquer, and that is by assimilation. The people must become as brothers, with the fullest equal rights, duties, responsibilities, and honors of citizenship, suffrage, and office. There must be fraternity and equality or there is no liberty and no republic. The wiser monarchs know enough to take this course. This is what Prussia did with part of Poland, and the people became patriotic Prussians. So did France with her conquered provinces of Alsace and Loraine two hundred years ago, and when lately they were reconquered by the Germans they were French to the core, and their people who hav not emigrated, long for the French republic and will become a part of it in time. Such a reconciliation and incorporation into our Union is the only good statesmanship, and it is only possible by political as well as a legal amnesty to be followed by a social and material union and prosperity. The French statesmen hav just illustrated the wisdom of this course in their complete amnesty to the Communists. Thereby they founded the republic in the hearts of the whole people, and to-day it is invincible at home and abroad.

Such should be the result with us, and it can be achieved only by the party which is powerful in every state and which can cement the Union by the victories of peace instead of boasting of its victories of blood.

The Republican party is no longer to be the party because it has made itself a sectional and an exclusiv party, and seeks to remain so. It is practically an empire within itself, by which the Republic is administered, and largely for party benefit and perpetuation. If one does not belong to that party, and belong subserviently too, he has no more lot and part or say or influence in this Republic of the people, for the people, and by the people, than a subject of the Czar has in his government—that is, he has only the duty of obedience. For twenty-one years this party has consolidated itself in the North and in the hands of a few politicians with a large dependency of office-holders. They hav failed to do justice to the freedman and hav resigned the undertaking. They hav made the South solid against them by gross robbery and mismanagement, and they are glad to keep it solid against them now merely for political effect. In this present canvass the Republicans hav abandoned the negro and the South. They hav made the South solid and are yet trying to fire the Northern heart on account of it by waving the bloody shirt, and by clamoring about Southern claims and state rights.

Thus they hav made themselvs intensely sectional. They do not expect to carry the majority of the voters of the country any more than they did in 1876, when they were half a million in the minority. They hope to carry barely enough of the Northern states to get a small majority in the electoral college. Thus they expect to leave a majority of the people, viz, nearly half of the people in the Northern states and practically all of the people of the Southern states, with no more part in the general government than though they lived in Europe.

If this result seems to be overdrawn, you must remember that this old party has become not only a sectional but an exclusiv party—in fact, a close corporation of office-holders and their leaders. They became sectional when they gave up the negroes and the South. They became exclusiv when they gave up the civil service reform. This is the next important point to be considered.

In order to carry the election of 1876 they put forth the pretense of inaugurating that most needed of all reforms—an impartial, non-political civil service reform. That pretense was simply a fraud. Their singular mixture of cowardice and hypocrisy, President Hayes, immediately after he was seated in the Presidential chair, threw off the mask at once by rewarding those who stole the office for him and his party. The party now make no pretense in regard to that reform. They repudiate it entirely. They go for the spoils, and not only for two terms, but as many terms as they can get, from tide-waiter up to President.

This means a permanent consolidation of the general government into the leaders of that sectional party. Thus it will be their interest to excite the Southern people to imprudent acts and expressions, and to keep alive the old feelings of hostility. That will be easy enough with a little injustice, and with Northern interests and pride eagerly listening in order to keep a preponderance in the government. Thus the Republican abandonment of the South and of civil service reform leaves us an inchoate Northern party empire. Are we ready to merge the government into that?

Now let us look at the other party. The Northern politicians hav had the Southern people, white and black, in training for twenty-one years to prepare them to come into the full enjoyment of citizenship. They ought to be of age now if they ever are to be. Certainly, under an unexceptionable Union general, and with a large Democratic vote in the North, which is absolutely necessary for that party to keep, the experiment can be safely tried, if ever, of a perfect amnesty. The time has come to try it or to prepare for the end of government by the people.

I hav weighed carefully the principal objections to this course, and I find that they hav really little weight if fairly considered, for instance:

1. Southern barbarism. If the Southern people are barbarian and cruel, as is often alleged, they will certainly be made more so by being treated as rebels. The responsibility for good government is the best inducement to them to obtain it. The Democratic party will practically giv bail for their good behavior. The revival of business and prosperity will banish barbarism from the new South, for it will be in every way, then, their interest to hav it banished. This is the true and only effectiv motiv to appeal to. Ostracism, troops, and carpet-baggers hav proved to be worse than useless.

2. The protection of the freedmen. The freedmen ought to hav been the wards of the Union, but they hav been abandoned by the Republican party, with nothing to help them but their own efforts and such aid and good will as may be found or developed in the Southern people. The proper thing to do is to make it the interest of those people to do well by their colored fellow-citizens. This can only be done by doing well by them. If, after full trial, it is found that the two races cannot dwell together with mutual advantage, then the Democratic party is the only power that can obtain the West India islands for them and make it an object for them to remove there when dissatisfied, and, perhaps, to found there a republic which shall be the salvation of their race. Gen. Butler, in proposing annexation there, may be the Moses to lead his "contrabands" to their true Canaan on this continent.

3. The fruits of the war will be lost. Revolutions never go backward. The new South are not Bourbons, and they control. They accept all the results of the war and the constitutional amendments. If they fail to do so the Democratic majority will disappear like the morning dew. On those issues the North is an overwhelming majority, and must become more and more so by the admission very soon of nine new states. But the new South has and will hav no interest or motiv to reverse its own progress. It is the Northern Bourbons who will not see the new South who make this talk about southern Bourbons. They wish to hav and to keep up an old South so that they may keep in power—that is the true story. The few fossils whose extreme statements are kept alive in Republican papers can only be reanimated by Republican injustice and partisanship. If Gen. Hancock is elected, these few quasi-rebels will be as powerless as those who fell before him at Gettysburg. I envy neither the head nor heart of that man who now for partisan purposes tries to impose upon the ignorance and prejudice of northern voters by stories about four new states to be made at once out of Texas, about a rebel senate, and a secession majority in the Supreme Court.

Let any one look at the relations of the business and people of the new South to the whole Union, and realize how wicked and foolish all this talk really is. These partisans are the Bourbons, who never can learn that slavery, the motiv of the old South, has forever disappeared.

4. Financial ruin. But if the Republicans go out our finances and business may be ruined. If there is any danger of that the sooner they go the better. It is just an instance of the danger of having a party become so nearly perpetual that people begin to think that it is the republic and the only safe or possible government. If the change cannot be made now in the rising tide of prosperity, can we ever expect it to be made in adversity.

The Democrats propose reform, economy, and honest money. They hav been from time immemorial the advocates of this policy. Their success in the future depends upon their doing it so well as to eclipse the Republicans if possible. This is the best security that they will do it. The productiv enterprise and needs of the country are so great that no party can stand in the way of its prosperity, nor has any party been the cause of it. When foreign nations see that it is the republic that is strong, independent of any one party, then the finances and business of the people will be on a surer basis than ever. It is time for these objectors to learn that when the government is sustained by the hearty good will of the whole people it will not shake its credit if Bayard instead of Sherman should be at the head of the Treasury.

5. Inexperienced officials. Can the government be run as well with raw hands? That there will be a sudden and entire change of the 100,000 officials is not to be supposed. But some changes should be made, unless we are to hav a continuous bureaucracy utterly inconsistent with a republic. It is announced in the influential Democratic paper, the World, that Gen. Hancock strongly favors the Civil Service reform. If this is so, it is one of the strongest reasons why independent voters should giv him their hearty support. It is evident that a reform of that kind can be best instituted by an incoming administration, and we may reasonably hope that the effort will be made by an arm strong enough to put an end to the trade of politics.

But if we are not to hav such a reform, the next best thing must be short terms and frequent rotation in office. The official duties will then be kept simple, and those who can perform the duties will be many; the advantages of office will be more generally and equally enjoyed, and the dependence upon government pap for a livelihood will not be encouraged. The government by the people will be for the people. That may be the best way, after all, under proper civil service regulations. Bureaucracy is properly the child of empire.

The above are sufficient examples to show how the principal objections fade away in the light of the Union as the controlling issue. The frequent disputes about the past of parties or candidates are of still less importance. Whether General Arthur was dismissed from office so "that it might be honestly administered," or whether Mr. English is an Indiana Shylock, is of little moment; for the Vice-President is a cipher, and will hav little or no influence upon the future welfare of the country. The record of the Presidential candidates is more important in that view. It would certainly seem more honorable to our country to hav a President with an unquestioned past, but that is a matter largely of taste. To argue with a man who does not feel it, is useless.

As to the past of the parties, each has rendered glorious services, and had serious defects and shortcomings. The past is not to be judged and paid off in our elections. Of that history will award the glory and the shame. We are to consult for the good of the present and the future. In that view for over twenty years I supported the Republican party unflinchingly: it was the party of "Liberty and Union, one and inseparable." Then the Union could be maintained only by war, and I sustained it. But now that Union must be perfected and crowned by the victories of peace, the Democratic party only is able to close up the bloody chasm left by war. This is the needed victory. It will be a greater victory than Gettysburgh, for it will be the perfected union—the final victory of peace and brotherhood—for which that battle was fought. Unless we can gain this higher victory, that battle and the whole sacrifice of the war will hav been substantially lost. We shall hav conquered provinces, but the Union, as our fathers wished it and left it, we shall never see again.

T. B. Wakeman.

New York, Sep. 10, 1880.

---

W. S. Bell's address is 38 Upton street, Boston, Mass.

---

Somebody says: "God means good; damn it means condemn it; hell means a place to purity things; so 'God damn it to hell' means, 'Good condemn it to purification'—thus, elevating the use of language, we discover in seemingly useless words a scientific prayer addressed to God, in the New England business-like way."

Letters from Friends.

RIO VISTA, CAL., Aug. 23, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: A writer in your paper of August 14th says, "The Democracy adopted, defended, extended, and tried to perpetuate that sum of villainies—human slavery; and when they failed in having the 'divine institution protected wherever the flag of the Union floats,' they, with fiendish malignity, tried to destroy the life of the nation itself."

By the "Democracy" he evidently refers to the South. I say the Republicans adopted, defended, and extended slavery just as long as it paid them to do so. As for perpetuating slavery, they are doing all in their power to perpetuate slavery by protecting and encouraging Chinese immigration.

Slavery was as firmly and rigorously established in the North as in the South, and with even more severity, until it was found that slaves did not thrive well on Northern soil, and not till then did the North commence to pass laws for the extinction of slavery. In New York, prior to the Revolution, it was declared by statute that no slave should be a witness for or against any freeman in any matter, civil or criminal. It was also enacted that if any slave talked impudently to any Christian, he should be publicly whipped at the discretion of any justice of the peace, not exceeding forty stripes. The master and mistress were authorized to punish their slaves at discretion, not extending to life or limb, and each town was authorized to appoint a public whipper for their slaves, to whom a salary was to be allowed. If guilty of any of the numerous capital offenses of the day, they were to be tried by three justices of the peace and five freeholders, and were denied the benefit of the testimony of their associates, though it might be used against them, and they were to be put to death in such a manner as this formidable tribunal thought proper. They were occasionally adjudged to the stake; and an execution of this kind, and probably the last, was witnessed at Poughkeepsie shortly before the commencement of the Revolution.

So much for adopting and defending human slavery; and as for extending it, it cannot be denied that the importation of slaves was carried on by Northern shipmasters.

In 1740 it was observed by the Legislature of New York that all due encouragement ought to be given to the direct importation of slaves, and all smuggling of slaves condemned as "an eminent discouragement to the fair trader."

Such was the tone and policy of the statute laws of New York on the subject of domestic slavery during the whole period of the colonial history, and doubtless the same general regulations prevailed in the other Northern states.

It was nearly thirty years from the time that New York commenced passing laws to provide for the abolition of slavery down to the time when slavery was finally abolished in 1827, thus giving ample time for slaveholders to dispose of their slaves down South.

In the North slavery died out simply because it was unprofitable. In the South, on the other hand, slavery was so closely connected with domestic affairs that it could not be abolished unless it were done gradually, as in New York and other states, without breaking up and ruining the business of the whole of the Southern states.

If the Northern people could only hav minded their own business and let the South alone they would doubtless hav made laws for the gradual abolition of slavery, and that in such a way as to do comparativly little harm to the business interests of the country; but the North, having grandly and heroically abolished slavery within her own limits because it was of no use to her, commenced a regular crusade against slavery in the South, and kept it up until the South undertook to secede from the Union for the sake of being allowed to govern herself.

There were many slaveholders in the South who would hav rejoiced to be able to free their slaves; but what could they do? Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and other states passed laws prohibiting free persons of color coming into their state under penalties, and all the while they were clamoring for abolition with might and main. The very fact of a large number of slaveholders being anxious to giv their slaves their freedom, and being unable to do so, owing to their inability to enter the free states, and thus secure their liberty, would hav led to abolition, and that, too, by peaceable means and without injury to either the white or the colored race.

But why say more? Slavery is dead; but it cost one million men their lives and saddled a debt of $2,749,000,000 on the nation. And all this to free four million of slaves; and now it is universally admitted that these people are much worse off than before the war. Before the war they had happy homes, were provided for, and they were perfectly free from the cares and troubles of life; now they are emigrating to Kansas and Indiana in search of homes.

Toward the close of his article Harry Hoover says, "Garfield represents Comstock, and Hancock the 'lost cause.'" Garfield undoubtedly does represent Comstock and the rest of the bigots in the God-in-the-Constitution party; but the assertion that Hancock represents the "lost cause" is perfectly absurd and ridiculous. Hancock was a Union general, as every one knows. It is true he will obtain many votes from the champions of the "lost cause," but does that make it that he represents the "lost cause?" Hav those who once favored a separation from the Union no right to hav a hand in the administration of the government after being compelled to remain subject to it? It looks very much as though Mr. Hoover was an advocate of slavery, after all.

LAW STUDENT.

---

LONG LAKE, MINN., Aug. 18, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: I do not wish to open a financial discussion in your columns, but when a man, in advising others to vote the Democratic ticket, goes out of his way and gratuitously abuses and misrepresents the Greenback party with all the venom of a bondholder's partisan, as Mr. Charles J. Herbold has done, I think it only fair for you to allow at least one protest.

Who are these men that Mr. Herbold flippantly and falsely stigmatizes as played-out politicians, "wire-pullers, and party hacks?" The Chicago Convention, that nominated Weaver and Chambers, was the peer in intelligence and moral worth of any assemblage of the kind ever convened in this country, and acknowledged by some of their bitterest enemies to be as fine an assemblage of brain and brawn as the country has shown. People of any observation in the matter know that wire-pullers and party hacks do not flock to a weak and struggling party.

The sublime flourish with which he disposes of Greenbackism by his allusion to the French assignats, continental currency, etc., is highly edifying, but it unfortunately happens that those who hav read the history of these things know that they hav no bearing or analogy to it. It is comforting, however, to know that we who compose the "masses" of the Greenbackers hav Mr. Herbold's lofty pity—being led by knaves, we must necessarily be fools. I am glad to know Mr. Herbold is not unnatural enough to hate that class of people.

As to Mr. Bennett's course in advising Liberals in a manly, modest way to support the Democratic party, although I will probably not follow it, I think he is to be commended for frankly advocating that which he believes best under the circumstances, and a man must indeed be narrow who will take offense at it. He admits that he has no particular admiration for the Democratic party, but by supporting it he considers it the most effectiv way to destroy Republican supremacy. I believe if any of us had been in Mr. Bennett's place the last year or two we would feel like taking the shortest road to cripple the Republican party.

JOS. H. LYDIARD

---

BROOKFIELD, Mo., Aug. 27, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Out here in Missouri we are watching the respectiv positions assumed by the Liberals in political matters, and concluded to make our statement and giv our position. First, this fall will be the first vote cast by the undersigned for a President. Second, the parents hav always been Republicans, and of course his education has been in that direction. Third, thought and honesty compel him to say that the Democratic nominee and the necessary result of Democratic success sought, to convince the men who love liberty and constitutional freedom, that in the success of that party many of the objectionable laws, the work of the Republican party, will be repealed, and many of those who hold federal offices under the present administration will be removed, among them that "righteous overmuch," Anthony Comstock.

Those who object to the Democratic party because the Southern states, lately in rebellion, are all Democratic, are controled, it would appear, by passion and prejudice rather than thought. We do not consider it a conclusiv argument that because the South twenty years ago favored slavery and attempted secession, it to-day is an enemy to our government, and to believe it we must deny their action, their resolutions, their platforms, and the declarations of their leading men. They hav nominated as their candidate for the chief executiv a man who for us to believe false to the principles of the Constitution and its amendments, would demand of us to giv the lie to the conduct of a lifetime and to confess that the Republican party for twenty years has tolerated a man in the army of the United States who was unfit to be trusted. We stop right here, considering it weakness to attempt the defense or vindication of a man whose name left out of the constitutional and patriotic side of American history leaves that history false and incomplete.

Again, the time has arrived for a return of fraternal feeling among the people of the states of the Union, for we cannot make that progress and reach that destiny to which we aspire so long as one section of the Union is regarded as an enemy to the government. Those principles which the Rebellion settled are as certain and irrevocably settled as though they were incorporated into the Constitution. The payment of the Southern war claims can only be accomplished by constitutional amendment. So there need, it appears, be no fear about the perpetuity of the results of war. Those arguments ought to be used by the political demagog alone. In the history of the world one faction or party which for a time may hav been the friend of the people, their rights and freedom, when by revolution or rebellion they are placed in power, and become rulers, they hav become as venal and oppressiv as those whom they swept from power; and why should the rule of the majority, or parties long entrenched in power, be an exception in this country? To-day one party may be the friend of freedom; to-morrow its enemy. Let us try and wipe out the passions and prejudice of the war, and favor in this campaign that party who will repeal some, at least, of the obnoxious laws passed during the notorious salary-grab Congress. The success of Hancock will oust the inquisitorial court that has confined the bodies of some of the free and profound thinkers of the day (vain attempt to stay the mandates of thought), and by proper effort repeal or amend the unjust, unfree, and unconstitutional act under which Comstock (that monstrosity your state supports) persecutes by direction of the Y. M. C. A.—the Young Men's Cowardly Association—those who, like Galileo, say the "world moves."

Believing, then, that the Democratic party will for the next four years be the greater friend to those who believe in free mails and free press, and will rid New York of Comstock, we vote for Hancock. Missouri has been cursed with the James boys for some years, but we would rather hav a whole regiment of James boys than one Comstock.

This letter has grown already too long, so we close by hoping that the Liberals of the country will be as free from passion and excessiv mind in considering this political question with the same freedom they do about religious matters.

With the best compliments to Mr. Bennett, his associates, and the men and boys in and about THE TRUTH SEEKER office, I am yours for freedom in politics the same as in all other matters.

M. M. CRANDALL.

---

KALAMAZOO, MICH., Aug. 30, 1880

MR. EDITOR: The ten-days camp-meeting of Spiritualists and Liberalists at Lansing, Mich., closed to-day. The meeting was throughout harmonious, and a good degree of interest was manifested in all the exercises, and we trust that some good has been done in the way of advancing the great cause of human freedom in which we are all engaged. The Liberal element proper was ably represented by J. H. Burnham, who is truly a power which cannot but be felt wherever he may labor. He is truly a host in himself, and is very courteous toward, and considerate of, the feelings of the Spiritualists with whom he fraternizes. Though a professed Materialist, he demonstrates immortality by an unanswerable logical argument, and speaks with great earnestness, and the Spiritualists say he is inspirational, and clairvoyants claim to see hovering over him on the platform bright spirits who are urging him on, so that at times he goes behind himself and giv forth sweet morsels of spiritual truth, and they confidently expect to see Bro. Burnham at no distant day come out fully into the liberty of the blessed gospel of immortality and spirit communion.

The dominant interest of the meeting was evidently in the Spiritual element, and the circles, seances, and numerous manifestations through the many excellent mediums present. Some of the most confirmed Materialists got such evidence through Dr. Salses and others that they were forced to a frank acknowledgment of their utter discomfiture and inability to explain or account for the manifestations which they know to be genuin, and which to the intelligent Spiritualist are simple and in perfect accordance with nature's laws.

I hav not time to giv a full account of this meeting, and presume you would not care to occupy space with one. I thought your numerous readers might be interested to hear this much of this very interesting meeting. One feature was plainly noticeable with all, viz, a bold, fearless, outspoken, and unequivocal defense of free speech and free thought, equal rights to all, regardless of sex, and a manly and womanly determination to stand firm in the cause of human progress, liberty, and equality. Onward is the watchword.

BETA.

---

MEMPHIS, Mo, Aug 30. 1880.

MR EDITOR: I think it a great mistake to suppose there is more Liberalism or toleration in the leaders or rank and file of the Democratic than in the other old party. On the contrary, I regard it as lower down in the scale of civilization, more bigoted, and more under priestly rule.

I giv a straw from this place. A hard-shell Democratic Baptist neighbor presented your humble correspondent to the grand jury for quietly laboring on Sunday on his own premises, and but for the influence of a Greenback neighbor he would undoubtedly hav been indicted, and as his trial would hav been before a pious Bourbon judge, he would, no doubt, hav had to pay a heavy fine, as there would hav been several counts. I find the Democratic county officials think that the Sunday laws should be enforced. But the Greenbackers are multiplying here, and we expect to elect our Congressman this fall. The Bourbons charge the Greenback party with containing all the Spiritualists and Infidels in the place, which is substantially the case

I voted for Tilden, but will lose my right arm before I will again cast a vote for either of the old parties.

The New York World claims to be the leading Democratic paper of the nation, and here is what it enunciates: "The American laborer must make up his mind henceforth not to be so much better off than the European laborer. Men must be contented to work for less wages. In this way the workingman will be nearer to that station in life to which it has pleased God to call him." Still more fiendish sentiments might be quoted from Republican organs. It is amazing that Col. Ingersoll, or any other intelligent Freethinker, can support either of the old parties, when such a Liberal, progressiv party has reached such an advanced point as the Greenbackers now occupy.

Some of your contributors call casting a vote for Weaver throwing it away, because he probably cannot be elected. What logic for progressivs to use! Such reasoning, or to use Carlyleism, unreasoning, if carried out, would not only block the wheels of progress, but would roll them back to barbarism. Old parties never reform. The more votes the Greenbackers cast in November the more restraint the successful party, whichever it may be, will feel; and if all Liberals, Spiritualists, Infidels, and Freethinkers were to cast their votes for the Greenback candidates, both the old corrupt candidates would soon cease to taint the political atmosphere. But in any case, the Greenbackers, the only party of really republican and democratic principles, are bound, sooner or later, to win, and wrench the republic from the clutches of a soulless oligarchy. And the sooner this is done the sooner will the masses be emancipated from the serfdom in which the money power, which inspires the New York World, and nearly the whole press, holds them, and reach a competence which will giv them time and inclination to think for themselvs, when the church bonds will be broken, and all will be allowed to liv the Declaration of Independence.

Admitting that Hancock is all that a subsidized Democratic press claims, were he to be elected he would be bound by the Shylocks and shorn of his locks like the fabled Samson.

Some of your correspondents seem to exult over the defeat of the Greenback ticket in Alabama. But how was it defeated? Simply by the throwing out of the ballots of Greenbackers, and substituting those of the immaculate Bourbons. [Q. E. D.—ED. T. S.]

F. C. Leland likens the Greenback to French assignat, and continental paper, whereas it has nothing in common with them except the material of paper of which they are composed.

STEPHEN YOUNG.

---

YANKTON, VA, Aug. 25, 1880

MR. EDITOR: I write to you to ask if you know of any physician of your acquaintance that would like to settle in this country, and in our town, as we think it a good chance for one that is not afraid of work. I would like to correspond with such, giving description of country and prospect. If you could do so you would confer a favor on a brother Liberal. Yours, E. D. ROOT.

[We refer our friend to our readers. If any one knows such a person, will they kindly write to Mr. Root?—ED. T. S.]

---

[From the Liberal.]

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.

A WONDERFUL BOOK, BY A WONDERFUL MAN.

We hav on our desk that wonderful work, "The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times," in two volumes of eight hundred pages each, compiled, arranged, and written by D. M. Bennett in the short space of about one year while serving out an iniquitous imprisonment imposed by Christian guile, corruption, and official oppression.

This is one of the most valuable books now presented to the public. It treats of the primitiv condition of man, antiquity of the earth, distance of the heavenly bodies; archæological quotations from Prof. W. Draper, aqueous formations, change in the site of Niagara Falls, change on the sea coast, elevations and depressions on the earth's surface; America older than Asia, India the cradle of language, literature, religion, and civilization, early superstition, origin of priests and their rule, fetichisms, cuneiform inscriptions, primitiv forms of writing, sun and star worship; Chaldean antiquities; origin of Jewish cosmogony; Grecian, Hindoo, Norse, Greek, and Roman mythology, with a full and accurate description of the gods of the Hindoos, Persians, Chaldeans, Egyptians, Chinese, Norsemen, Grecians, and Romans; gods of the African tribes; gods of the Indians, Semitic races; primitiv religion; Polytheism and mythology; Phallism; religion of the Hindoos; Brahmanism; Buddhism; religion of the Persians, Chaldeans, Chinese, Thibetans, Egyptians, Assyrians, Phœnicians, Grecians, Romans, Druids, Judaism, Mohammedanism, Christianity, and much other information useful and instructiv to Liberals. His history of the Bible is worth the price of the book. No Liberal should be without it.

Price, in cloth, $5; leather, $7; morocco, $8. Address D. M. Bennett, 141 Eighth street, New York.

Jesus Paid It All.

BY W. F. PECK.

"Nothing, either great or small,
Remains for me to do;
Nothing, Jesus paid it all,
All the debt I owe."—Revival Hymn.

Rejoice, ye debtors, and be glad!
Ye saints, rise up and sing;
From every land and every clime,
Your hymn of praises bring;
From every debt of sin or crime,
Committed since "the fall,"
You are discharged, no man you owe,
For Jesus paid it all.

No matter what the sin has been,
How great the debt may be;
Only believe, and then be set
From obligations free.
Deprive the widow of her mite,
Nor heed the orphan's call;
You've no concern in things like these,
For Jesus paid it all.

So wallow in the sinks of vice;
Rob virtue of her gold;
With slander sting your brother's name,
And spare not young nor old;
Play with the devil hide and seek,
Hell need not now appal,
For Satan's might is broken quite,
Since Jesus paid it all.

Let Winslow keep his Christian charge,
And every Sunday preach;
To congregations rich and large
The truths of gospel teach;
What though by forgery he made
A hundred thousand haul,
He owes no man a dollar now,
For Jesus paid it all.

If Christian tires of his wife,
And craves another's charms;
If strychnine powder takes her life,
That gives him no alarm;
On bended knees, in felon's cell,
He on the Lord will call,
And that will balance his account,
For Jesus paid it all.

From every gallows in the land
The blood-stained wretches go,
To sit at once at God's right hand
(Their victims down below);
And there they sit and claw their harps,
And each will loudly bawl,
"We owe nobody anything,
For Jesus paid it all."

The presidents of savings banks,
Defaulting cashiers, too,
And all the rogues whose swindling pranks
Delight the scurvy crew,
Will look their victims in the face,
And each will caterwaul,
"We owe you not a single cent,
For Jesus paid it all."

And so throughout the catalog
Of rogues and scoundrels all;
Preachers, laymen, sinners, saints,
All "ransomed from the fall;"
For every debt contracted here,
However great or small,
Expect to 'scape the just demand,
With "Jesus paid it all."

But when the day of reckoning comes,
With due bills thick and fast,
Ye truckling knaves and trembling sneaks
May well stand back aghast;
For every debt, with interest, too,
For settlement will call,
And to the utmost farthing you
Will hav to pay it all.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

| | |
|---|---|
| Thomas Paine. | F. E. Abbot, |
| Paine's Bust. | Frothingham, |
| Paine's Monument. | Wendell Phillips, |
| Voltaire. | Emerson, |
| Rousseau. | Garrison, |
| Humboldt. | Henry Bergh. |
| Goethe, | Peter Cooper, |
| Schiller. | D. R. Burt, |
| Aug. Comte. | S. P. Andrews, |
| Heine. | Walt Whitman. |
| Alex. Pope. | Froude, |
| John Milton. | Max Muller. |
| Goldsmith. | Warren Chase. |
| Shelley. | Jas. Parton. |
| Byron. | Wm. Denton, |
| Burns. | Dr. Slade, |
| Washington. | A. J. Davis, |
| Franklin. | Foster, |
| Jefferson. | J. M. Peebles, |
| John Adams. | Frances Wright. |
| J. Q. Adams. | E. V. Wilson. |
| Madison. | G. L. Henderson, |
| Jackson. | Prof. Fiske. |
| Lincoln, | Fred Douglas. |
| Lincoln's Monument. | N. P. Banks, |
| Gerrit Smith. | P. V. Nasby, |
| Henry C. Wright. | Beecher, |
| J. S. Mill. | Tilton, |
| Sumner. | Moulton. |
| Edgar A. Poe. | G. W. Curtis. |
| Greeley. | Th. Nast. |
| Castellar. | J. G. Bennett. |
| Tennyson. | Chas. A. Dana, |
| Darwin | Phoebe Carey, |
| Tyndall. | Alice Carey. |
| H. Spencer. | Elizabeth C. Stanton, |
| Huxley. | Susan B. Anthony. |
| Proctor. | Lucy Stone, |
| Draper. | Julia Ward Howe. |
| Bradlaugh. | Chas. Cheney, |
| Holyoake. | Paulina Davis, |
| Ingersoll. | Mary F. Davis, |
| Underwood. | Emma H. Britten |
| Mendum. | Lizzie Fowler. |
| Seaver. | Mrs. Slenker. |
| L. Colby. | Susan H. Wixon. |
| Dr. Hare. | D. M. Bennett. |
| Judge J. W. Edwards. | W. S. Bell. |
| Lizzie Doten. | J. C. Bundy. |
| Mrs. J. Conant. | S. S. Jones. |
| Dr. Mary E. Walker (full figure). | Asa K. Butts. |
| | W. F. Jamieson. |
| Geo. Francis Train. | Kersey Graves. |
| H. L. Green. | |

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. . . $1.00.

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

SUPERSTITION;

THE RELIGION OF

"Believe or be Damned."

OPEN LETTER TO THE

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL BOARD.

BY

M. BABCOCK.

This book contains an inspired PHOTOGRAPH of the GOD that's being worshiped at the expense of the district in our public schools; the God that "overshadowed" Mary; the God that's wanted in the Constitution; the gentleman that owns some three billion dollars' worth of untaxed church property; the "so-help-me" God that makes a lie the truth in court; the God that governors besought to stop the yellow fever, which he didn't do. The picture is worth the price of the book. Price, 25 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth street, New York.

LADIES!!

"SALEM, OR., July 17, 1880.

"S. H. PRESTON, Dear Sir: Please send me by express, C. O. D., to Portland, Or., $100,00 (one hundred dollars) worth of that "Comstock" Syringe. I mean business.

"DR. MARY SOLANDER."

Only sixteen had been sold when

COMSTOCK

set out to suppress it. Now orders come as above. Grand jurymen buy it for their wives. It is SIMPLE, SAFE, INFALLIBLY RELIABLE, necessary to HEALTH and personal purity, and is pronounced by patients and physicians to be the greatest gotten up in this generation. Sent securely boxed, with private instructions for special use. Confidential terms to agents. Price $5.00; improved, $10.00. Address SAM. H. PRESTON. tf32 209 West 34th st., New York.

GODSEND TO THE SEX

"SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES"

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This volume is printed on toned paper, in clear, bold type, and handsomely bound in muslin, containing 275 pages, 12mo. Price, $1.25.

This book contains the principal points that Mr. Ingersoll has made against the Pentateuch in all his lectures on that subject. The pamphlets that hav been surreptitiously issued are incorrect, filled with mistakes, and consist of only about fourteen or fifteen pages, while there are two hundred and seventy-five pages in the book just issued. The book is unanswerable in its facts and logic, inimitable in its style, and filled with wit, satire, eloquence, and pathos.

Busts of R. G. Ingersoll,

By the celebrated sculptor, CLARK MILLS.

Cabinet size, price $2.50.

Small Busts, on Pedestal (mantel ornament) price $1.25. Neatly packed and boxed ready for shipment. Every admirer of this great Apostle of Liberty should hav at least one.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll.

By SARONY, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

| | |
|---|---|
| Imperial or large size . . . . | 40 cents |
| Photo or card size . . . . | 20 " |
| Life-size Lithograph, 21x27 . . . | 50 " |

Postage paid.

D. M. BENNETT.
141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK

Call.

A lady, who is free, about forty years of age, of average mind, health, and means, wishes to correspond with a gentleman of like or similar qualifications, who believes that divine law is more important than human, but would, notwithstanding, conform to the latter if possible, in such a manner that it should at the same time be a protest against it. Address,

3.37 LEGAL, care THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

THE

Anonymous Hypothesis OF Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT. 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

D. M. BENNETT. Publisher. 141 Eighth St., N.Y

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address

DR. J. M. MOSELEY.
19'27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn. N. Y.

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth: price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER.

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

NEWBURYPORT MASS., Sept. 23, 1878.

To Miss Anna Knoop, Dear Madam:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

JAMES PARTON.

Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.
D. M. BENNETT. 141 Eighth St. N. Y

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot and Power Presses. Die Work of all kinds.
Perforating Dies a Specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N.Y. tJan81.

MODERN THINKERS:

What They Think and Why.

By V. B. Denslow, LL.D.,

With an Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The work contains critical essays upon Emanuel Swedenborg, and the origin of the Christian ideas of heaven, hell, and virtue; Adam Smith, founder of the school of Economists; Jeremy Bentham, the apostle of law reform and of utilitarianism in morals; Thomas Paine and his relations to the Declaration of Independence and democracy in America; Charles Fourier, the philosopher of passional harmony and co-operativ association; Herbert Spencer, a review of his theories of evolution and of morals; Earnst Haeckel, the demonstrator of the doctrin of evolution; Auguste Comte, founder of the Positive philosophy and pontiff of the "Religion of Humanity;" and an essay on the authorship of Junius as a sequel to the critique on Thomas Paine.

This volume consists of 384 pp., 12 mo, and is illustrated by portraits of each of the eight great thinkers, and opens with an introduction from the pen of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

Cloth, $1.50. Sold at this office.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19, 1880.

I wish to notify the public that a Mr. Baldwin, of Chicago, also Rhodes & McClure, of the same place, are publishing pamphlet editions of my lectures. All the lectures published by them are grossly inaccurate—filled with mistakes, horribly printed, and outrageously unjust to me. These men are simple literary thieves and pirates, and are obtaining money from the public under false pretenses. I take this course to warn the public that these publications are fraudulent. The only correct copies of my lectures are published by C. P. Farrell. All others are published by people who are willing to steal from me and defraud the public vender. These wretches hav published one lecture under four titles, and several others under two or three.

3m31 R. G. INGERSOLL.

All of C. P. Farrell's editions of Col. Ingersoll's works, and none others, are sold at this office. D. M. BENNETT.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructiv work. In cloth, $3 per vol. the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4 50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

LECTURES OF

R. G. INGERSOLL.

THE PEOPLE'S EDITION.

Paper Covers.

Vol. I. "The Gods, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thos. Paine," "Individuality," "Heretics and Heresies." Price, 50 cents.

Vol. II. "The Ghosts, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Declaration of Independence," "Farming in Illinois," "Speech at Cincinnati," "The Past Rises Before Me Like a Dream." Price 50 cents.

Both volumes bound in one, price, $1.00.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll, by Sarony, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

Imperial, or large size..... 40 cents.
Photo, or card size..... 20 cents.
Life-size lithograph, 21x27..... 50 cents.

Postage paid.

Either of the above Volumes handsomely bound in cloth, $1.25.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrins, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

Radical Newspaper.

The undersigned desires to get a loan of $5,000 or a business partner with such a capital, for the publication, in the city of St. Louis, Mo., of an independent, radical weekly newspaper, devoted exclusivly to American affairs.

J. C. BERTWIG,
Fox Creek, P. O., St Louis county, Mo

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1869, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth: price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves'" Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. By COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2.00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo. 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER. PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 63 pages; price, 25 cents

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 180 pages. Price, only 25 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Forms for Organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-Laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected, for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Over 580 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents, in cloth.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A New Scripture from an antique manuscript (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL, in conjunction with A. HOOK, Esq. Very amusing. Price, 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Freethinkers' Convention, held at Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878. A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. George W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, and several other persons. Price, cloth, $1.25.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound Volumes I., II., III., IV., and V. These volumes, containing over 520 pages each, are made up of over one hundred Truth Seeker Tracts, with some additional kinds. They embrace a variety of subjects by different authors, written in a terse, trenchant, and spicy style. They are offered at the extremely low price of 60 cents per volume in paper covers, and $1.00 in cloth; or 50 cents each in paper, and 75 cents each in cloth if the whole set is taken.

Sepher Toldoth Jeschu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First English translation of the ancient Jewish story of Jesus, who was born at Bethlehem about the year 106 B. C., being the son of a betrothed maiden named Miriam (Mary) by Joseph Pandera. How and why the Romans changed "Kepha" to "Petros." Startling evidence that Paul flourished before the middle of the first century B. C., contemporary with the aforesaid Kepha. Price, 20 cents.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, curate of a Romish church in France in the eighteenth century, whose views upon theology were not published until after his death, and are now for the first time presented in English. Very radical and able. Price, 25 cents.

Influence of Christianity Upon Civilization. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Revised edition. One of the most able treatises upon the subject ever written. Price, 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Revised edition. In this treatise the two systems are fairly and ably examined from a historical standpoint. Price, 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in the Place of Christianity. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Price, paper, 10 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus; His Character and Doctrine. A chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief." By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Price, cloth, 60 cents; paper, 35 cents.

Resurrection of Jesus. By W. S. BELL. Revised and enlarged edition. Price, 25 cents.

Religion not History. An able examination of the morals and theology of the teachings of the New Testament. By W. F. NEWMAN, Emeritus Professor of University College, London. From the London edition. Price, 25 cents.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker," and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED, of Moravia, N. Y. Proposition discussed: "Jesus Christ is not only divine, but is the Lord God, creator of heaven and earth." Teed affirming: Bennett denying. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Blakeman's Two Hundred Poetical Riddles. (For children and youth.) Embracing a great variety of subjects. This work is new and interesting, and affords a great amount of amusement in the family circle, as well as in gatherings of children and older people. Price, 20 cents.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR. Delivered at Steinway Hall, New York, in the winter of 1875-76. 1. Growth of Worlds; 2. Life and Death of Worlds; 3. Other Worlds than Ours; 4. Other Suns than Ours; 5. The Great Mysteries of the Universe; 6. Religion and Astronomy. 65 pp. Paper, 20 cents

Beyond the Veil. A Spiritualistic work, said to be dictated by the spirit of PASCHAL BEVERLY RANDOLPH, aided by Emmanuel Swedenborg and others, through the mediumship of Mrs. Frances H. McDougall and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. It gives minute and interesting descriptions of life in the spirit world—its location, intermediate state, landscape, habitation, food, clothing, industrial interests, etc. It contains a steel engraving of P. B. Randolph. A neat volume. Price, $1.50.

Gems of Thought.

AGITATION is good or evil according as the objects of the agitation are good or evil.—Macaulay.

WHERE is the teacher who ha' felt, if not said, "No man cometh to the Father but through me?"—Froude.

THE gloom of a Presbyterian Sunday (Sabbath) was, is, and forever will be, detestable to the natural man.—Froude's Bunyan.

THE priest continues what the nurse began,
And thus the child imposes on the man.
—Dryden.

BE true to yourself whatever comes, even if damnation come. Better hell with an honest heart than heaven with cowardice and insincerity.—Froude.

To THINE own self be true;
And it must follow, as night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.
—Shakspere.

I WILL call no being good who is not what I mean when I apply that epithet to my fellow-creatures, and if such a being can sentence me to hell for not so calling him, to hell I will go.—J. S. Mill.

MAN is his own star, and the soul that can Render an honest and a perfect man
Commands all light, all influence, all fate;
Nothing to him falls early, or too late.—
—Fletcher.

IF there are many things that may be won by vehemence, there are others which can only be obtained by moderation and self-denial:
"Such, it said, is virtue, such is love,
Which is allied to her. Think well of this."
—Hayward's Goethe.

NOTHING is at last sacred but the integrity of your own mind. It is easy in the world to liv after the world's opinion; it is easy in solitude to liv after our own; but the great man is he who, in the midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude.—Emerson.

IT is, doubtless, with feelings of the deepest pain and solicitude for his future happiness and welfare that the many friends and advisers of Mr. Wendell Phillips will learn, upon authority of the New York Evening Post, that he "never attends church and takes no part in religious worship anywhere."—Lib. Bulletin.

Some books are lies from end to end,
And some great lies were never penned:
E'en ministers they hav been kenned,
In holy rapture,
A rousing whid at times to rend,
Wi' faith and hope, and love and drink,
And nail't wi scripture. —Burns.

No honest soul can look out upon the world and see it as it really is without the question rising in him whether there be any God that governs it at all. No one can accept the popular notion of heaven and hell as actually true without being as terrified as Bunyan was. We go on as we do and attend to our business and enjoy ourselvs because the words hav no real meaning to us. Providence, in its kindness, leaves most of us unblessed or uncursed with natures of too fine a fiber.—Froude's Bunyan.

THE Bible cannot be the same to any two people, but each one must necessarily interpret it for himself. Now, the moment the doctrin is established that we can giv to this book such meanings as are consistent with our highest ideals; that we can treat the old words as purses or old stockings in which to put our gold, then each one will, in effect, make a new inspired Bible for himself and throw the old away. If he has a little courage he will doubt, and the doubt will, with new interpretations, modify the literal texts, but if his soul is free, he will scorn, reject it all.—Ingersoll.

LAVATER'S conception of his own humanity so completely agreed with his conception of Christ that it was impossible for him to understand how a man could liv and breathe without being a Christian. Here the new friends Lavater and Goethe were on the point of splitting, and at last Lavater broke out, "Either Christian or Atheist," "I then," says Goethe, 'declared that if he would not leave me my Christianity as I had hitherto cherished it, I could just as well decide for Atheism, especially as I saw that no one rightly knew what either exactly meant."—Hayward's Goethe.

ALL religion is paradoxical to reason. God hates sin, yet sin exists. He is omnipotent, yet evil is not overcome. The will of man is free, or there can be no guilt, yet the action of the will, so far as experience can throw light on its operations, is as much determined by antecedent causes as every other natural force. Prayer is addressed to a being assumed to be omniscient, who knows better what is good for us than we can know, who sees our thoughts without requiring to hear them in words, whose will is fixed and cannot be changed. Prayer, therefore, in the eye of reason, is an impertinence.—Froude's Bunyan.

SHOULD banded unions persecute
Opinion and induce a time
When single thought is civil crime,
And individual freedom mute;

Though power should make from land to land
The name of Britain trebly great:
Though every channel of the state
Should almost choke with golden sand:

Yet waft me from the harbor mouth,
Wild wind! I seek a warmer sky,
And I will see before I die
The palms and temples of the South.
—Tennyson.

Odds and Ends.

"I'LL make it hot for you," as the cayenne pepper said to the man who was putting it into his soup.

"BRAINS are wanted," says the Kansas City Times. Ahem—ah—let us know the salary, please.—Vall jo Chronicle.

THAT many ladies indulge in the fragrant cigaret is an open secret.—Yonkers Gazett And a burning shame.—N. Y. Times.

A RURAL correspondent writes to us to inquire: "What is an editor's easy-chair?" Well, my poor innocent, it's an undressed grub plank held up at each end by a candle box.

ETIQUET requires that a call should not be more than fifteen minutes. This rule does not apply to newspaper offices. Editors don't hav anything else to do but receive visitors.

A YOUNG lady wrote some verses for a country paper about her birthday; she headed them, "May 30th." It almost made her hair turn gray, when it appeared in print, "My 30'h."

DEUCED queer how men differ about different things. When a man hooks a lot of fish he will brag about it for three days, and when he hooks a lot of apples he has not a word to say about it.

AN eminent barrister, when he was in a facetious mood, being asked to define a lawyer, said, "A lawyer is a learned gentleman who rescues your estate from your enemies and keeps it himself."

"I AM an independent voter, and I can't support you until I've seen your platform," she said as he finished proposing. A couple of hours later it dawned upon the young man's mind that she wanted to know the amount of his salary.

JOSH BILLINGS says that "a lady born in August will be mistress of the situashun. She will hev menny admirers, but will lead them a dusty chase. After a while she will marry and bekum az serius az a white mouse in a wyre trap. Her husband will be az proud ov her az a 2d Lieutenant (of the Light Guard) of his first shoulder strap."

THE latest and worst case of lover's revenge comes from Australia. A young man whose affianced went back on him and broke off their engagement received a note from her asking him to return the lock of her hair which he had. He looked over his trunk, collected a heap of tresses culled from various sources during his love-making career, and forwarded them in a bundle to his late lady-love, inclosing a note to the effect that he had really forgotten which was hers, but she might select it from those forwarded and return the rest at her earliest convenience.

"WOULD you mind standing here till I go in and get a cigar?" he asked.

"Of course not," she replied; "but don't you think, Henry, that smoking is offensiv and that it will be easier practicing economy after marriage if it is practiced during courtship?"

"You're right," he said, "I shan't smoke any more, sweet," and she looked unutterable love at him as they resumed their stroll. Just then they came to an ice-cream saloon, and he said:

"There, now, I meant to treat you to ice-cream, but, as you say, it is best to practice economy during courtship. Ten cents for a cigar, thirty cents for two ice-creams—forty cents saved in a single night. Let's go over to the fountain and take a drink of water."

THE cucumber graceth the festal board,
Enshrouded in condiments rare,
And the epicure gleefully rubbeth his paunch
At the sight of the treasure there.
The doctor smileth a sad-like smile
And giveth a crocodile groan,
And the marble man goeth out the while
And polisheth up a stone.
The undertaker mournfully asks,
"What will his measure be?"
And the sexton marketh a spot "reserved"
All under the willow tree.
'Tis hard the times and 'tis scarce the cash—
And so with a zestful joy
We welcome waft to the fitful fruit
That giveth the folk employ.

LAW IN VERSE.

The New Jersey Law Journal givs the following midsummer law in verse, reporting the cases of Kuhn vs. Jewett:

The shades of night were falling fast
As o'er the Erie railroad passed
A locomotiv laden down
With crude petroleum near the town
Of Patterson.

A piercing shriek, a blinding flash,
And then an instantaneous crash—
Two trains collided—down the banks
The oil was emptied from the tanks
Immediately.

The oil igniting, sparkling, flowed
Down the embankment, across the road,
Into a bubbling brook that pours
Its waters on the fertil shores
Of the Passaic.

The barn of the complainant stood
Beside this unheroic flood,
And thus the floating flames of fire
Consumed it and produced a dire
Calamity.

His honor, the vice-chancellor, says
That if a devastating blaze
Is negligently started, still
The defendant is responsible
In damages.

If no obstructions intervene,
As a new agency, between
The cause and its effect as here,
The rule is singularly clear
And logical.

Truth Seeker Tracts.

| No. | Revised List. | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 2 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft. " | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. | 3 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. " | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. " | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 2 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. E. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | 2 |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. | 2 |
| 32. | The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 3 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. " | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 3 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 3 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry, Bennett. | 3 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite, " | 3 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 3 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 3 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 3 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. | 3 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 3 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 5 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. " | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 2 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 3 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 3 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 80. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 5 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 1 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 2 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 5 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London. | 2 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 10 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 2 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 3 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Biblo-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 2 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 92. | The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 5 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 1 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 5 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 10 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 2 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Scieta. | 5 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 102. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 1 |
| 103. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 2 |
| 104. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 10 |
| 105. | Decadence of Christianity. Capphro. | 2 |
| 106. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 107. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 108. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 2 |
| 110. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 1 |
| 111. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 112. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 2 |
| 113. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 114. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 1 |
| 115. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 2 |
| 116. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 117. | Constantine the Great. Preston | 3 |
| 118. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 5 |
| 119. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 3 |
| 120. | The New age. Bell | 10 |
| 121. | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 2 |
| 122. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 10 |
| 123. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 124. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 125. | German Liberalism. Clara Neymann | 2 |
| 126. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 10 |
| 127. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 5 |
| 129. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 2 |
| 130. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 5 |
| 131. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 3 |
| 132. | My Religious Belief. Ella E Gibson | 1 |
| 133. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | 5 |
| 134. | Talks with the Evangelists | 5 |
| 135. | Is there a Future Life? | 3 |
| 136. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett | 5 |
| 137. | Christian Love. C. L. James | 3 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper. | 5 |
| 139. | Massacre of St. Bartholemew. Preston | 2 |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | 2 |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142. | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wan Ho. Eli Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 145. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L.L.Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D. | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off, on two dollars' worth, 20 off; on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.
As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

2
"Women Without Superstition"
EDIT
THE PHYSIOLOGIST.

SARA B. CHASE, A.M., M.D., Editor.
ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER, Associate Editor.
September number contains some intensely interesting articles on Fewer Children and Better.
Prevention of Conception.
Enlightened Parentage.
Scientific Starvation (Tanner's fast).
Marriage, etc., etc.
Remember it is our

ELMINA'S PET PAPER.

$1.50 per annum. Sample copies 15 cts.
Address, S. H. PRESTON, Business Manager,
tf38 209 W. 34th st., N. Y.

THE
Cause and Remedy of the Present Financial Condition of the Country.

A lecture delivered at the Courthouse, Albion, New York.

BY MRS. A. H. COLBY.

Price 10 cents. For sale, wholesale and retail, by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

BULLION IN THE CAMPAIGN OF 1880;
OR,
SHYLOCK IN VERSE.

A Pamphlet on the Issues in Finance.

It will be sent to any address on receipt of fifteen cents, or in lots of 10 or more, at the rate of six cents each. Address, A. B. BROWN, Worcester, Mass.

Mrs. Besant's Tracts.
Prices Reduced.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion, | 5 |
| The Fruits of Christianity, | 5 |
| Constructiv Rationalism, | 5 |
| On Eternal Torture, | 5 |
| On Prayer, | 5 |
| The True Basis of Morality, | 5 |
| The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought, | 5 |
| Is the Bible Indictable? | 5 |

ALSO

| | |
|---|---|
| The Law of Population; Its Consequences and its Bearings Upon Human Conduct and Morals, | 40 |
| Marriage; As it Was, As it Is, and As it Should Be, | 40 |

The last two contain a fine steel-plate engraving of Mrs. Besant.
There is no clearer, better writer in the English language.

IN ADDITION.

| | |
|---|---|
| The Church and Education, | 5 |
| On the Religious Education of Children, | 5 |
| Government. An Essay. By Charles Moran. | 10 |

Sold at this office.

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familiar tunes. Designed for Liberal Leagues and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00; twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3.00. Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.
141 Eighth street, New York.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 7. No. 39. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, September 25, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

BUFFALO'S Courier refers to lawn tennis as Presbyterian base ball.

THE costs were $600 in a suit over a hog to two farmers of Moniteau county, Mo.

FROM a single potato planted by David Brown of Princeton, Pa., the product was 537 fine potatoes.

IF Eve was not afraid of a serpent, the Elmira Advertiser cannot understand why her daughter should scream at a mouse.

A SCHOOL meeting in the city of Manistee, Michigan, ordered the discontinuance of reading the Bible in the schools by sixty majority.

THE Presbyterian Ministerial Association of Philadelphia has voted that the opening of the Pennsylvania State Fair on Sunday was sinful.

WORK is the weapon of honor, and he who lacks the weapon will never triumph. Gratitude is the music of the heart when its chords are swept by kindness.

THE expedient of charging ten cents for admission to the Ohio State camp-meeting of colored Methodists, at Caldwell, might hav served to pay the expenses if the treasurer had not absconded.

IT is estimated that there are at present in New York city 135,000 children requiring to be educated, of whom ten thousand cannot be received into the public schools through lack of proper accommodations.

A TEXAS clergyman, about to become chaplain of a penitentiary, preached a farewell sermon to his congregation, who had ill-treated him, from the following text, "I go to prepare a place for you, so that where I am ye may be also."

ALBANIAN women walk over rough mountain pathways with sixty pounds of fagots on their backs and spinning with distaff and spindle as they go, while the men shoot at a mark and the boys turn somersault races on the gentle slope of the mountain sides.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL children are no longer taught to believe that Lot's wife was turned into a pillar of salt; but in the "International Bible Studies" for Sunday-schools it is said that she was caught in a storm, which "suffocated her, incrusted her, and possibly burned her to a cinder."

A BAPTIST clergyman in Magoffin county, Ky., preaches against supporting missionaries because, as he says, the Bible gives assurance that whenever the gospel is preached unto all people the end will hav been reached, and God forbid that he should contribute one cent toward hastening that portentious period!

ALLEGANY county's Reporter tells of a negro who, suspected of surreptitiously meddling with his neighbor's fruit, being caught in a garden by moonlight, nonplussed his detectors by raising his eyes, clasping his hands, and piously exclaiming, "Good heavens! dis yeer darkey can't go nowhere to pray any more without bein' 'sturbed."

THE date of the earliest eclipse of the sun, recorded in the annals of the Chinese, when "on the first day of the last month of autumn the sun and moon did not meet harmoniously in Fang," or in that part of the heavens defined by two stars in the constellation of the Scorpion, has been determined by Prof. Von Oppolzer, of Vienna, to hav been the morning of Oct. 22, 2137, B.C.

BENEATH a shady tree they sat,
He held her hand, she held his hat,
I held my breath and lay right flat;
They kissed, I saw them do it.
He held that kissing was no crime,
She held her head up every time,
I held my peace and wrote this rhyme.
While they thought no one knew it.

THE evidence is conclusiv that some brother uttered a profane oath in a meeting of the Universalist church at Reading, Pa., but it is not clear who he was. There was a great deal of confusion; a charge of falsely counting the vote on the resignation of the pastor having been made, and the highly objectionable words were among the many ejaculations. An investigation is to be held.

A GIRL was found nailed to a plank so that she could move neither hands nor feet and floating on the Yangtse River, in China. Beside her was the head of a Buddhist priest and some coins. An inscription said, "This money is provided for her coffin when she is dead." She belonged to a wealthy family, and her two brothers, petty mandarins, used this cruel treatment because she married the priest whose head was on the plank with her.

THE Rev. Father Crude and Zoe Allerd simultaneously disappeared from Brown county, Wisconsin. He was a respected Roman Catholic pastor, and she an accomplished, lovable girl. They were traced to Covington, Ky., where they were found keeping house in a pretty little cottage. They had told the neighbors that they were married, but to their friends from Wisconsin the priest declared that he had simply taken Miss Zoe away from home for religious instruction.

DO YOU ever think of it? Every dollar that enters into a church building withdraws a dollar from taxation, and its quota has to be made good by a corresponding increase of the levy upon other property. Thus it is that every property owner is compelled indirectly, and in violation of the Constitution of the United States, to giv a portion of his property to the support of churches. Is it right? Whoever thinks it is can hav the free use of our columns to defend it.—Cloud County Blade.

MARRIED men are beginning to get their rights from courts and legislatures. The women hav had things their own way long enough. A Connecticut wife and daughter left the church which the husband and father attended, and hired a pew in another. He refused to pay the rent, and was sued, and a just judge has decided that the husband was not liable for the rent. It is to be feared that none of the family hav been much benefited in their tempers by church going, nor has the church which sued for its pew rent much claim for sympathy upon Christian people.

PIOUS people hav often said that there is no redemption for the poor drunkard except through saving grace. Brother Bunting has given practical illustration to the doctrin. He reclaims drunkards by the inculcation of piety, relying upon roast beef and delicate puddings for his own salvation. The difficulty about pious philanthropy seems to be that it always leaves the stomach out of consideration. As one of Bunting's boarders, a German, remarked to a fellow-boarder, when he dropped upon his knees, according to the rules of the place, "No matter if you eat wind, it ish all for Shesus."

AN English vicar recently caught a small boy in the act of stealing fruit from his orchard. He called in a constable and had the child arrested for theft. The parents of the little fellow begged hard to hav the case dismissed, but the vicar was inexorable and the child was tried before the magistrate. The counsel for the defense made so strong a point of the unnecessary zeal of the vicar in dragging a little urchin into prison where he would run the risk of associating with criminals that the magistrate dismissed the case by imposing a fine of five shillings.

THE Rev. Father Kemper, of St. Louis, started a Roman Catholic school in his parish, and from his pulpit warned his congregation against sustaining irreligious schools. James L. Brackett, the principal of an academy, regarded this policy as injurious to his business, and when they met Brackett used a whip on the priest. For that offense the principal was excommunicated. On a Sunday soon afterward he went to worship in the church, and Father Kemper ordered his expulsion, which was effected. Again Brackett entered during a mass, and again the pastor requested the ushers to eject him. They did not obey, and the services were therefore left unfinished.

IN his inaugural address at the meeting of the British Association at Swansea, Professor A. C. Ramsay, Director-General of the Geological Survey of the United Kingdom, dwelt at length on the recurrence of various phenomena in geological time. His final conclusions as to the origin and age of mountain ranges were thus summed up; "If the nebular hypothesis o astronomers be true (and I know of no reason why it should be doubted), the earth was at one time in a fluid condition, attended by intense heat. By and by consolidation, due to partial cooling, took place on the surface, and as radiation of heat went on, the outer shell thickened. Radiation still going on, the interior fluid matter decreased in bulk, and, by force of gravitation, the outer shell being drawn toward the interior, gave way, and, in parts, got crinkled up, and this, according to cosmogonists, was the origin of the earliest mountain-chains. I make no objection to the hypothesis, which, to say the least, seems to be the best that can be offered, and looks highly probable. But assuming that it is true, these hypothetical events took place so long before authentic geological history began, as written in the rocks, that the earliest of the physical events to which I hav drawn your attention in this address was, to all human apprehension of time, so enormously removed from these early assumed cosmical phenomena that they appear to me to hav been of comparativly quite modern occurrence, and to indicate that, from the Laurentian epoch down to the present day, all the physical events in the history of the earth hav varied neither in kind nor in intensity from those of which we now hav experience."

THE announcement by Octavius B. Frothingham of his intent to relinquish his calling as preacher, and to pursue henceforth the profession of literature exclusivly, has caused great surprise and disappointment to the members of his society in this city and to many of his friends and admirers throughout the country. It can hardly be a surprise, however, to some of his intimates, who hav long been aware of his strong leaning to letters, pure and simple, and of his belief that in that field he could do more good than in the pulpit or on the platform. Repeatedly during the last fifteen years he has been, it is said, on the point of taking the step on which he has just decided. His present sojourn abroad has, as he writes to his friends, crystallized his purpose, and enabled him to see more clearly the superior advantages of the written over the spoken word. He confesses that it is very hard for him to sunder the ties that hav bound him for so many and fruitful years to his society; but he is perfectly confident that he can help the cause of Liberalism and humanity, substantially one, by the change he is about to make. Frothingham's instincts are unquestionably literary. He belongs to the study rather than to the rostrum, to the department of thought and scholarship more than to the world of action, and he will now be more in his own atmosphere than he has ever been. It may seem to some persons somewhat late for him to alter his profession. But he is barely fifty-eight, and, with his health much improved, he ought yet to hav years of valuable work and development before him. His father, Dr. Nathaniel Langdon Frothingham, was seventy-seven when he died, and his mind was clear and vigorous to the last. It is twenty-one years since the son removed to New York from Boston, and for nineteen of these he preached to the society of which, until lately, he had ministerial charge, steadily growing out of Unitarianism into Rationalism. He dropped a good while ago the prefix of Reverend, and has since aimed to be a lecturer, a guide in ethics and life, not a clergyman or pastor. As he is pecuniarily independent, he can better afford than most literary men to follow the financially unremunerativ trade of authorship. He has long had several literary plans on hand, which he has never had time to carry out, in conjunction with his ministerial duties, and those plans will, no doubt, claim his earliest attention. Under the circumstances, many of Frothingham's followers, who hav been called Frothinghamites from their ardent faith in his teachings, will, in all likelihood, attach themselvs to the Society for Ethical Culture, of which Prof. Felix Adler is the front and foundation, and has been from the first. A number of them hav been attending Professor Adler's lectures since Frothingham's departure for Europe, some eighteen months since. No new society will be formed at any rate. The bulk of its members are too individual in opinion and character to care for any organization now that the man they so much admire has surrendered his office and returned them, so to speak, to their purely philosophic selvs.—N. Y. Times.

Events of the Week.

MR. HAYES and party are about to visit Washington territory.

THE French Prime Minister, de Freycinet, has resigned.

ONLY twelve persons were saved from the lost steamship Vera Cruz.

THE Maine Republicans are trying to count out Plaisted, the newly-elected Democratic governor.

THREE members of a family at Patchogue, Long Island, recently died of diptheria caught from a cat.

THE foreign powers interested in Peru hav forbidden the contemplated invasion by the Chilian army.

THE Pope is piteously begging for more Peter's Pence from the faithful. Times are hard with him.

THE Rev. Mr. Kalloch, of San Francisco, has been renominated for mayor by the workingmen of that city.

A BELGIAN baron recently died in prison on Blackwell's Island. Drink had reduced him to beggary and crime.

THE German government has ordered the expulsion of the French Jesuits who emigrated to Alsace-Lorraine.

THE police made a raid on a notorious gambling-house in this city a few nights since, arresting fifty gamblers.

HERR HASSELMANN, the well-known Socialistic member of the German Parliament, is lecturing in this country.

ONE hundred thousand operativs are interested in a strike at the Accrington cotton mills in Lancashire, England.

THE steamer Aurora, from Oporto, Portugal, to Southampton, England, recently foundered, carrying down fifty persons.

THE excursion season here is about over, and the many boats engaged in that business are being laid up till next season.

SENATOR L. S. FOSTER, who was acting Vice-President after the assassination of Lincoln died at Norwich, Conn., on the 19th.

THE fastest trotting time on record was made a few days ago on a Chicago race-course by Maud S. She made a mile in 2:10¾.

A NEW fifty million gallon reservoir at Jersey City was recently finished, and is now being filled with water for the thirsty Jerseyites.

THREE acres of coal mines at Scranton, Pa., caved in a few days ago. Luckily the miners had left the mines before the cave occurred.

IN a fight between a preacher and wheelwright at a fishing excursion near Ramsey's, N. J., the dominie was knocked out of time in the seventh round.

THE wife of a wealthy farmer near Reading Pa., recently went crazy through religious excitement, and a few days ago she committed suicide.

SEVERAL pounds of fulminate exploded in a Bridgeport cartridge factory on the 17th, demolishing the building and dismembering four men and a boy.

A BALLOONIST who ascended from Montreal on the 18th, after going to a hight of four thousand feet, descended into the St. Lawrence river, but escaped with a ducking.

THE striking miners at Corning, O., are causing some trouble. The militia hav been called out, and several skirmishes hav already taken place. Several of the miners hav been shot, and serious disturbances are apprehended.

BOSTON celebrated its 250th birthday on the 17th. Regiments of militia from this and other cities took part in the festivities. The Thirteenth New York regiment, of which Beecher is chaplain, one of the visiting regiments, was quartered in Paine Hall.

THE Nihilists are operating in England. A plot was recently discovered by which a train on which the heir to the Russian throne—who is on a visit to England—was to ride, was to be blown to pieces. Four pounds of dynamite were found under the railway track.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, SEPT. 25, 1880.

Letter from Europe.—No. 5.

PARIS, FRANCE, Aug. 22, 1880.

DEAR FRIENDS: We have reached the capital of France, and no excitement was caused by our arrival. So far as we are able to judge, everything is moving on just as quietly as though we had not entered this gay city. The people manifest no uneasiness at our presence, and I see no indication that they are not willing we should remain just as long as we wish to, which we shall proceed to do

We took cars from London to New Haven on the British Channel coast. The moon was full, and gave us light enough to obtain considerable of an idea of the country we passed over. I judge it to be a good farming country, and it presents an appearance similar to the country between Liverpool and London, though, perhaps, it is in places more low and flat. Two hours brought us to the port of New Haven on the Channel. I think it not a large place, though we saw nothing of the town. About midnight our small steamer, after loading with freight, left the British coast for Dieppe, France. It rained before morning, and the channel was rough enough to make a good many sea sick. Wash bowls were distributed around the cabin to accomodate the miserable passengers, a part English and a part French, who could not enjoy the passage. I was rather amazed with the way in which some of them took it. One poor Englishman groaned out: "Oh, blost it! what makes it go up and down so? O dear, I wish it wouldn't be so lumpy!" While others around me seemed to be making an effort to throw up their very boots, I for a long time remained pretty passive, and I felt like giving my stomach a certificate for good behavior; but, alas! after a time I too began to feel unpleasant. It was so "lumpy" that I could not maintain my equanimity and was compelled to join the others.

Dieppe is an old town, and makes a pleasant appearance from the Channel, though it has a decided foreign appearance. The British Channel is probably fully three times as wide between New Haven and Dieppe as it is between Dover and Calais, but as the fare is considerably cheaper by Dieppe we decided to come that way. One of the first things that attracted our attention as we were entering the narrow harbor was a cross fifteen or twenty feet high, standing upon an eminence, with Jesus stretched upon it, as large as life, or larger, with his mother, as I inferred, fastened to the upright part of the cross below him. I do not presume that they meant to crucify her, but at all events she was upon the cross. When I saw this I knew I was in a Christian country. I am told that these crucifixes, with their God exposed upon them, out of doors, is not an unusual thing in this country. I certainly cannot admire their taste, but if they expect to get to heaven by it let them crucify away.

The landing and disembarking probably required half an hour, when we had a similar Custom House examination to pass through that we had at Liverpool. The officials merely poked slightly into the trunks and satchels, looking more for whisky and tobacco than anything else. Adjoining the building which is used for examining baggage is an eating and refreshment room, and over the door was the word "Buffet." After the night's experience I felt as though I could endure some of that kind of buffeting, so we entered and took a good wash, for which we paid six sous each, and were buffeted to the tune of three francs apiece, which is about sixty-five cents. I presume the word "buffet" means refreshments, as I have noticed it several times connected with station-houses or depots. We relished our first meal in France very well, and after this was dispatched we found we had two hours to look about the town before train time. We accordingly sauntered up the quay, Mr. Rawson, a Mr. Linton, from near Pittsburgh (also going to Paris, and who remained with us till last night), and myself. It was not at all difficult for us to see that the manners and customs of the place were different from those of our own country. The doors of the shops and dwellings all along the street stood open, exposing to view all the internal arrangements. Many women with patens or wooden shoes were out sweeping the streets. We saw also young women from the rural districts, driving little old-fashioned donkeys, not taller than a yearling calf, with panniers loaded with various country produce. The panniers are two oblong baskets fastened by a wide band, which rests on the little donkey's back, the baskets coming down on his sides, much as I have seen them pictured. Sometimes the damsels led the donkeys and sometimes drove them along with a slight stick. Both seemed extremely well disposed. We passed through the market where women were selling to women numerous vegetables, fruits, and fish. Here we saw peaches and melons—the first since leaving America—and invested in some peaches, which we found very good, the meat being somewhat more solid than with us. The only melons are of the musk variety. I have not seen a watermelon since we left the ship. The muskmelons look like squashes on the outside, but are rather stout, rich, and thick-meated inside. The plums are also fair, but the apples still remain small and indifferent.

We visited the old cathedral in Dieppe, and it is an old-timer sure enough; the stone columns and door posts have crumbled away by the effects of time and the weather. All around the entrance and in the walls above are niches wherein are sculptured figures of saints in plentiful numbers. Above these were the heads of monsters with long necks, and we called them devils, some representing the heads of birds of prey and others wild beasts. They seemed to be stretching out their heads as far as possible to see what was going on below and to watch those who entered the gospel shops over which they presided. These horrible objects were probably placed there for some purpose, but I cannot imagine what it could be. It certainly could not be their good looks or the beauty they add to the structure. Since then I have noticed the same vile-looking figures on other cathedrals and churches in considerable profusion. They must have been special favorites with the French people from five to ten centuries ago.

The cathedral at Dieppe is of large size and is gotten up on the same general plan that are all the cathedrals and churches I have seen here. They are built in the form of the cross. The main aisle or nave is long, wide, and high, with a row of very heavy, tall stone columns on either side. The transept crosses the nave about one-third of the distance from the main end. At the junction of the main aisle and the transcept is the altar, very large, rich, and imposing, with a great deal of gilt work and many images of Jesus and his mother in various positions and representations, and with six or eight holy candles, six feet long or more, standing in immense candlesticks on either side, with all the other mysterious paraphernalia pertaining to the worship of the Virgin and the rest of the firm. Sometimes these altar-pieces are thirty feet in hight, elaborate and very rich. Behind the altar—the nave beyond the transept—is the chancel, with another altar at the end of it, and also at the end of the transept, and at other points. The chancel, perhaps, may be considered the holy of holies where special services are performed. At the crossing of the main aisle and transept is a large dome with stained glass of costly and exquisite workmanship. This dome is the highest part of the inside of the cathedral, and is sometimes one hundred and fifty feet or more from the floor. The whole affair is vaulted, usually as much as a hundred feet high. The windows at the end of the naves, transepts, side aisles, and dome, and over the columns, are of rich stained glass with all the saints portrayed on it, and they are the most doleful looking beings you would ever wish to see. I am not partial to kings. I don't like the bloody butchers called warriors, but either suit me better than these everlasting saints, which you see in endless profusion outside and inside all the cathedrals and churches. They are a long-faced, idle, useless, hypocritical set of meddlers and mischief-makers for whom I have neither love nor respect. They have helped to enslave mankind, and have made the world worse instead of better.

You see, then, that these cathedrals and churches are large, vaulted, cold, dreary places. The floors are stone, the pillars are stone, the walls are stone, the religion, even, is stone; everything is stone, with no plaster, no wood, to be seen. To me they seem very dreary and uncheerful, and I judge it must be very difficult for the bishop or priest to be understood in such a deep-vaulted place. But probably it matters little whether the worshipers understand much or little. If they dip their fingers in the holy water—a font of which is always to be seen on each side of the entrance—if they kneel at the time indicated, if they bow devoutly before the image of the Virgin, if they listen with due reverence to the priest or bishop when he chants in Latin, and, last of all, if they are faithful to giv the priest and the church a quarter of their earnings, it is all that is necessary, and it does not matter whether they understand what is said or not; it is all sanctimoniousness and holiness to them, and the fact that they go there, bowing thier heads and spirit, acknowledging the power of the priest, they are fulfilling their duty. They have nothing more to do when they pay roundly for it all.

The big organ, usually at the entrance end of the main aisle, or the opposite end from the altar, is an indispensable factor in the worship business. When its sonorous tones reverberate through those sacred aisles and vaulted domes, when the priest chants his Latin domini, dominum, dominorum, etc., with the rich and extensive paintings and statuary of the Virgin, Jesus, and all the saints all around him, the devout worshiper can easily imagine that he is in the presence of the Most High and that he has discharged his duty in worshiping him. Thus the priests hold their power over the masses. The cathedral and the trappings are all very grand and expensive. As the devout worshiper has but little thinking to do, it becomes easy for his mind to accede to what he is told. Thus he is chained and wheedled; thus the rich cathedrals help greatly to build up and perpetuate the strong power which the church holds over the masses, and thus it will probably be until science and reason dispel the myths and vagaries upon which the Christian system rests.

The cathedral at Dieppe is bountifully supplied with pious paintings and statuary along the side aisles, on the walls, and in the little chapels still outside of the side aisles are numerous paintings of holy saints with the palms of their hands pressed together, and their eyes, like those of a dying calf, rolling heavenward, looking all the world as though they were the most unhappy beings in existence. If holiness and deep piety make people wretched, I don't want any of it.

The chapels are each dedicated to some special saint, whose painting, of life-size, is the most prominent object in it. These chapels may be considered as shrines where the worship of the special saint presiding there is performed. Thus, there is always a chapel to the Blessed Virgin, one for her son, one for St. Peter, St. John, St. James, St. Joseph, and as many more saints as the bishop deems best. In several of these chapels we saw persons sitting in chairs reading from the breviary or missal, or kneeling before the special saint aforesaid. In many of the chapels were large bouquets of flowers, in others the flowers were artificial, and in some very cheap ones at that, made of colored paper. Many ancient dignitaries are buried beneath the cathedral floor.

The cathedrals and churches are open at all hours of the day, and any one may enter who chooses and worship on his or her own hook if preferred. Mass is performed, or "celebrated," early in the morning, then again later, and finally three or four times through the day, and every day in the week. Thus Catholic priests have to do a good deal more to earn their money than do Protestant priests. The Catholic religion is more of a constant, every-day affair than that of Protestants, who attend to it only on Sundays, and cheat and swindle their neighbors the remaining six days of the week. It is the women, however, who mainly attend to the religious observances of the church here. They go to early mass, they go to later mass, they do the principal part of the praying, the counting of beads, and the worshiping. The men are very indifferent to the flummery. In fact, it is the women who keep up all the churches and sustain the priesthood; without their aid the whole thing would collapse in twelve months.

We noticed the confessional boxes in the chapels, and thought of the many criminal relations that have been oft told there. A funeral was about to be held in the cathedral when we were in, and an old man with a large white cotton smock over his clothes was vigorously pulling away at the bell-rope to call the faithful together to help attend to the last rites. Priests are numerous enough in every place we have visited, their long black gowns coming to their feet, and their priestly hat, with a wide disk for a top-piece, like a black platter stuck upon the top of their heads, easily distinguishing them from all other people. We frequently see them passing around from place to place, seeming intent on what they have on hand. We marvel at their numbers, and wonder why the people are willing to forever support such a useless, worthless, unproductive, idle set of men who pretend to be doing God's work for him. I hope it will not ever be so, but realize the vast work of enlightening the people that has still to be accomplished.

After leaving the old cathedral at Dieppe—perhaps nearly a thousand years old—we looked about the old town. There were a large number of ships and vessels in the harbor, and a fair amount of business was being done at the numerous stores. All seemed quiet and industrious. We saw but one drunken man. He seemed to be making a disturbance. Two policemen were leading him along the street; finally he got tired, or stubborn, and resolved to go no further; he dropped upon the ground, refusing to rise or take another step. At this a third policeman came up; the three picked him up and carried him bodily to the lock-up, showing not the least severity.

In wandering around the town the difference in the language spoken, the difference in the appearance of everything, the inability to read the signs even, kept one reminded that we were in a foreign country. Yes, everything had a foreign look, but all rather cleanly and pleasant, and amusing at all events.

Dieppe stands on a chalky formation; the whitish bluffs show their colors to an observer far out in the channel, somewhat as do the high chalk banks of Cornwall in England. This chalk seems to modify the color of the sea water, giving it a light pea-green. The water of the oceans is not always of the same color. Sometimes it looks blue, sometimes dark-green, and as night approaches it becomes more somber. Light undoubtedly contributes to making these apparent changes of color.

We were back to the depot, or the gare as the French call a railway station, in time, and soon we were in our little compartments, the same as in England, whirling southward toward Paris, over two hundred miles away. We found a truly beautiful country, and under a high state of cultivation. Sometimes in the distance we saw moderate hills, but the most of the country through which we passed is gently rolling, and many times we saw extensive plains, bearing quite a resmblance to the prairies of Illinois. The country is teeming with good crops, which are now being harvested. The wheat and hay are already largely secured, but much of the oats is still standing, and some badly thrown down. There is also much clover still to cut, but I judge it is the second growth. Beets are very largely grown. In the aggregate we saw hundreds of acres of them. These are for sugar-making. The French manufacture their sugar from beets, because they can keep in their country the very large sum of money required to buy the great amount of sugar needed by the people. Sugar cannot be as cheaply manufactured from beets as from suguar-cane, but the French government finds it to the interest of the country to give a premium on the sugar produced, so as to enable the beet sugar to be sold at the same price at which cane sugar could be imported. We see it in the refined state, and it seems equal to the best refined cane sugar. The French are not extensive importers. Their policy is to produce everything among themselves so far as possible, and this is the reason why they are a wealthy, independent nation.

The beets are cultivated in rows about sixteen inches apart, and invariably looked to be well tended. For scores of miles the country looks like a vast garden. It is very different here from what it is in England with regard to fences. There the country is cut up into small fields, averaging not more than five acres; here there are very few fences. You can sometimes ride for twenty miles without seeing a fence, save by the side of the railroad. This saves a great deal of ground, a great expense, and a great amount of labor. In districts, however, where stock raising and pasturage is the course of farming pursued, the land is fenced. In other places we noticed cattle feeding in considerable numbers, but attended and watched by a herder. I think sheep are not as much raised in the part we have seen of France as in England. The fences we saw were sometimes hedge, neatly trimmed, sometimes iron, and sometimes stone, in localities where stone is to be had. In the immediate vicinity of villages or chateaux we saw many stone walls laid smoothly in mortar, the same as the walls of a house.

The country houses generally present an antique appearance. They are not very large or beautiful. They are generally built of stone or brick, with very steep roofs of heavy earthen tile, and some with thatch or straw. The more modern and better buildings are roofed with slate. I saw no shingles. It is quite common to see country houses, and, in the old villages, buildings, partly frame and partly brick, the latter being laid between the timbers, studs, etc., leaving the wood in view, even with the brick. Such buildings do not present an attractive appearance, and have not been built much of late years. I saw many all stone houses, which looked as if they had stood five or six centuries. These generally have the thatch roof, unless replaced by the heavy tile. In some comparatively new buildings the tile roof is common, especially with the cheaper class of buildings, but on all good buildings the slate is mostly used.

There is a profusion of flowers all along through the country; we see them in patches around the farmhouses and in the chateaux, with numerous pots of flowering plants in the windows. They give a cheerful, happy appearance. The cultivation of flowers is most commendable. They are nature's beauties, and conduce to happiness. The fields and by-places also abound in wild flowers, many of which were new to me. The scarlet poppy grows wild here, and some fields are fairly red with them. There are few forest trees to be seen save those which have been transplanted, and they are almost invariably placed in rows, like orchards. The carriage roads are excellent, as in England, but seem not to be extensively used. I noticed but few carriages upon them. It is very seldom here, as in England, for carriage-roads and railroads to cross each other on the same level. Almost invariably one is above the other. The viaducts in England, and also to some extent in France, are decidedly an institution. They are built of brick or stone, and with architectural stateliness. This is much safer than having the carriages driving over the railroad tracks, as in our country. Here and in England where one railway crosses another railway, it is often done by a viaduct, one road being ten feet or so above the other.

In some rather hilly country we passed through are several tunnels, one of them one thousand feet in length. I think I did not mention the tunnels in England in our ride between Liverpool and London. We passed through several of them, one nearly a quarter of a mile in length.

As we came rolling pleasantly on our road to Paris, and the country opening before us like a beautiful panorama, vista after vista, view after view, I easily appreciated why the Frenchman so enthusiastically exclaims, "La Belle France," and why he so seldom wishes to emigrate from it. It is indeed a lovely country, and is surpassed by few countries in the world.

We stopped off three hours at the old town of Rouen to look at the city and the noted old cathedral, for which it is celebrated. Rouen has been a good-sized city for about a thousand years. It is situated in the beautiful valley of the Seine, and may be considered the head of navigation for large shipping. It is a pretty city of one or two hundred thousand inhabitants. Some of its houses look antique, but it is mainly well built, the streets well paved, and all very cleanly. They must have an abundant water supply, for it poured down the gutters in great profusion. We saw a stream of waste water large enough to carry a mill.

The great point of attraction is its old cathedral —eight hundred or one thousand years old. It is immense in size. I think it is over three hundred feet in length; the top of its dome is nearly two hundred feet from the floor, and the iron spire is four hundred and fifty feet in hight—one of the very highest in the world. The great hight of this can be appreciated when it is remembered that Trinity steeple, in New York, which we think is pretty tall, is but two hundred and twenty feet high. It requires nine hundred steps to reach the summit of the Rouen steeple; and as the day was warm, we did not feel enterprising or ambitious enough to undertake the ascent, for which privilege we would have been permitted to pay two francs, and would have obtained a splendid view of the city, the river, and the beautiful surrounding country. I will not undertake to say how many hundred tons of material were required to construct that very elevated steeple, but it was a great many. The number was stated to me, but I did not retain it.

This old cathedral must have cost a "mint of money." Its great size, its hewn stone and intricate workmanship, would necessitate in any age a great outlay of wealth. In the outer walls are some hundreds of niches in which have quietly stood for centuries the same everlasting grim old saints that are seen in and on all the cathedrals and churches. They are generally of stone, skilfully sculptured, but occasionally they are of bronze. The latter, for certain reasons, secure the greatest safety to the useless old vagabonds. I noticed the noses, ears, and eyes of the godly images had been knocked off or materially damaged by wicked boys who had thrown stones at them. Over the grand entrance, which is made in the form of a high gothic arch, is a great amount of sculptured work in bas-relief or rilievo, containing half a hundred holy figures, some of life size and some smaller. A network of iron wire had been placed in front of these to prevent their injury from the little urchins stoning them. Above the saints, and perhaps fifty feet from the ground, were great numbers again of those same demons or devils which we saw in the cathedral at Dieppe. They were stretching out their vile-looking heads and exposing their long necks as though their anger was greatly aroused. I am not sure but that these devils are appropriate symbols for these old churches and cathedrals. What is understood to be the devilish spirit has been so rife in them for hundreds of years, and so much of the devil has been raised in connection with the system to which they belong, that perhaps the devils are the most fit monsters to be placed on guard over them. The whole thing is too devilish to suit my prejudices.

The inside of the Rouen cathedral is truly magnificent, if immense pillars, vaulted naves and transepts, fine old paintings, statuary, elegant stained windows, a dome two hundred feet in hight over the meeting place, constructed of the same stained glass (all being representations of saints in prayer and other positions of wretched misery), constitute magnificence. It is a moderate estimate that one such cathedral as that at Rouen cost more than one or two hundred reasonable churches ought to cost; and unless God is better pleased to have one grand old stone pile to receive adoration in than to have two hundred decent, respectable places for that purpose, his professed friends have doubtless made a mistake. How much better the money would have been spent in erecting schoolhouses and colleges, of which there are far too few!

The paintings on the walls of this Christian temple are large and of the most artistic character, and many of them by the old masters. But what spoils them for my use is the fact that they are religious, showing Jesus at all ages from the time he was born and before the swaddling-clothes were wrapped around him, when he was a neatly dressed baby in his mother's arms, and the wise men of the East came to worship him; when he was a little two-year old, playing on the ground; when he was a good-sized lad, discussing with the doctors in the temple; when he was a young man at the carpenter's trade, up to the time when Mary and Martha were washing his feet and wiping them with their hair; when he turned water into wine at Cana of Galilee; when he cured the halt and the blind; when he drove the devils out of the insane and into the swine; when he fed the five thousand with five loaves and seven fishes; when he was baptized in the Jordan by John the Baptist, and the celestial dove descended upon his head; when he was tempted of the devil in the wilderness; when he was transfigured; when he prayed and sweat blood in Gethsemane; when the bad Judas betrayed him; when he was arraigned before Caiaphas the high-priest, and then Pontius Pilate; when the crown of thorns was placed on his head; when he was scourged with thorns; when he was made to bear his cross up on to Mount Calvary, sometimes falling down with the weight, the sweat pouring from his face; when he was made to get up and go on again (I think twelve different stages are represented where he toiled and fell in getting his cross to the place he was to be executed); when he was nailed to the tree; when the gall and vinegar was administered to him; when he cried out in agony and despair, "Eloi, Eloi, lama sabacthani?" where the soldier thrust the spear into his side; where he conversed with the thieves on either side of him, promising one to heaven, the other to hell; where he spoke to his mother; when at the ninth hour he gave up the ghost; when he was taken down from the cross; where Joseph of Arimathea put him in his new sepulcher; where the women looked on and wept; when he arose after two nights and one day; how he appeared to his friend Mary Magdalene and then the gardener and then to a few others, and then his ascension up into heaven. Besides all this the holy and blessed Virgin is painted in all conceivable attitudes and positions, and so on to the thousand and one saints, always looking as sorrowful and wretched as it is possible for human beings to look. I wonder why it is that to love and worship God makes his devotees so utterly wretched. Among all the saints and holy people I have seen painted and sculptured I do not remember one who looked happy or as though life were a pleasant existence to him. All look sorrowful, wretched, and utterly woe-begone. I have concluded I shall not join their band. Oh, what a mistake it is to think God is pleased with our making ourselves wretched, to think he is made happy by our making ourselves miserable, and that to secure happiness in the world to come we must make ourselves as unhappy as possible in this! I enroll myself as one who will be as cheerful as possible in this life, with an equal chance for good cheer in another life, if there is one. As "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush," so happiness now is far more valuable to us than the promise of it a thousand years hence in some other place of abode. There is no better way to be always happy than to secure happiness in the present. If we take the means to be happy in the now, and not defer it till the future, we may always have happiness. Whereas, if we make ourselves unhappy now, with the expectation of being very happy in consequence at some indefinite time in the future, we have no positive assurance of happiness at all. It is a poor consolation when a person is very hungry for a good meal to put him off by saying he may have an excellent dinner, or a multitude of them, one year, five years, or twenty years in the future, and that if he will starve now he may have a plenty after he gets over being hungry. Verily, one present is worth two futures, and it is far more sensible to take the steps to be happy now than to defer it to an indefinite by and by. A "good time" here is better than for it to be put off and always "coming." If we can form the habit of being happy here, we may always find it easy to be happy, while if we accustom ourselves to being wretched in the present we may always be wretched. A rational, prudent, sensible life is more conducive to happiness than one made up of long faces, long prayers, and severe penance. A life of frivolity and vice is not the way to secure happiness; but cultivating temperance, benevolence, cheerfulness, good deeds, and contentment will do it.

The church in the past centuries monopolized all the talent, and there was little or no field for painters and sculptors save in making the images of the Virgin, her son, and a great number of long-faced and doleful-looking saints, who passed their lives in the most conceivably useless manner. The church paid the old masters liberal prices for their pious productions with which to decorate their numerous cathedrals and shrines, and this was by far the best market the artists found for their productions. The church had the better share of the money, and was able to pay the most munificently. This is why nearly all the meritorious works of art of five or ten centuries ago were madonnas, holy annunciations, the son without a father, the worship of a babe by wise men; a very sedate mother, with a fat, chubby child; the baptism in Jordan; the temptation; the transfiguration; the trial and condemnation; the crucifixion, the ascension, and all the interminable saints. These were the subjects in demand, these were what paid the best, and hence the dearth of sensible artistic productions from the tenth to the eighteenth century.

I do not say we saw in the Rouen cathedral all the paintings and statues above indicated, but we saw many of them there and in other places, many of them over and over again, until I became tired of them. I had far rather look upon Venuses, Minervas, Jupiters, Appollos, Mercuries, Herculeses, Bacchuses, the muses, graces, etc., and still more upon the paintings and statues of real moral heroes, sensible, good men and women, historical paintings, landscapes, high mountains, works of a healthy imagination, and all that. I have seen so many saintly, holy pictures that I would not care if I never saw another.

At the entrance of the Rouen cathedral, as at all others, sat miserable beggars, cripples, eyeless unfortunates, and dried-up crones, holding out their cups for the sous and half francs to the generous visitors to the holy shrines. Doubtless many of them are needy enough, but begging is one of the constitutional evils of these European countries, and a sympathetic person will soon find objects on whom to bestow all his spare change. The cry is constantly, "Give, give, give!"

The cathedral at Rouen, as I said, is one of the oldest, largest, and richest in the country. Its columns are massive and high. Its nave, transept, and chancel are vaulted and very high. The dome is especially rich and lofty. The stained windows are extensive, and have more saints, if possible, than the calendar contains. The paintings are antique and highly valued. The statues are all that saints, popes, cardinals, archbishops, bishops, priests, and hermits can be. There are twenty-five chapels outside of the side aisles, and these are all richly decorated with gold and paintings, with a profusion of flowers, real and artificial. In each chapel is a private altar for the worship of the saint to whom it is dedicated, and in many of them are confessional boxes. The main altar is near forty feet in hight, and gold enough is used on it to make a man very wealthy. The altars in the chancel and at the ends of the transept are also gorgeous. The organ is of the largest dimensions, and everything there indicates that in that establishment the worship of the being who planned the ignominious execution of his only beloved Son is carried on in the most approved orthodox Catholic manner. I could not help pitying the poor penitents and devotees whom we saw in the various parts of the church performing the rites of their religion and going over the various meaningless mummeries by counting beads, repeating prayers and Ave Marias, which, to their ill-informed minds, make up the acts of a righteous life.

Rouen does a large manufacturing business in various lines and enjoys a large trade; and as it is surrounded by an excellent farming country, it has all the requisites for a flourishing city. It has many fine looking stores, and the appearance of thrift and prosperity is on all sides. There are in addition to the cathedral several other churches, some of which are rich and expensive. In one of the public squares, opposite the Hotel de Ville, or City Hall, is a fine bronze equestrian statue of Napoleon Bonaparte, considerably larger than life-size. In another square is a marble statue of Joan of Arc, the brave fanatic who, in the fifteenth century, was burnt on the very ground where her statue now stands. She is represented dressed in her military costume, with a wreathed and ribboned sword beside her. Her cruel death was a sad commentary on the religious folly which prevailed in that age.

There appears to be a profusion of priests in Rouen. We saw them in the city; we saw them at the depot in considerable numbers; their long, black gowns, and flat-topped black hats might be seen here, there, and everywhere. I could not help realizing the burden they are to society. The people of this country are indeed struggling under a heavy priestly load. If the money that the cathedrals and churches cost, and what it takes to keep up the great numbers of men who pretend to do God's business, could be devoted to giving the people such information as they need, in providing them comfortable homes, and in making them virtuous and happy, the world would be much the better for it, and God would not suffer the slightest inconvenience. It may be well known that I am not a special friend of the priestly class, and hope the time will come when the world will learn to dispense with their services, and leave them to pursue an honest, useful course of life, in place of the fraudulent claims they now set up that they understand the secret will of the king above the clouds, and that he has commissioned them to be mouth-pieces and prophets for him, to make known his wishes and to pronounce hell and damnation upon all those who do not "come down" munificently with the shillings, francs, and thalers to support them in lives of idleness and hypocrisy. It almost makes my blood boil to see these insidious, canting, ingratiating, hypocritical knaves gliding around from place to place, and the obsequiousness accorded them by the sisters and a certain portion of the brethren, in public as well as private. They have proved enemies to the human race. and I will gladly see their numbers grow less.

The ride from Rouen to Paris was of the same pleasant character as before described. In stretches as far as the eye could reach we saw the most beautiful and productive country the mind of man could wish. Towards night it became quite showery for a distance of fifty miles, and when we entered Paris it was just as the rain was subsiding. We soon secured a cab and directed the driver to convey us to Madame Feron's hotel at No. 59 Rue Neuve des Mathurins (where many Americans are in the habit of stopping), hoping to find there Mrs. Dr. E. B. Foote and Augusta Cooper Bristol, but we learned that the former was spending a few weeks for her health at Mount Dore, in the mountainous district of southern France, and that Mrs. Bristol was at the Familistere of M. Godin, at Guise, between Paris and Brussels. Thus here we find ourselves in the grand capital of the French nation, probably the finest city in the world, replete with everything that talent and industry can produce—a city of gaiety, grandeur, taste, and luxury, containing two millions of inhabitants who seem to know quite as well how to get the full measure of happiness out of existence as any people I ever met with. They are gay, joyous, light-hearted, and happy. They do not believe in making life a sad, gloomy existence. With Parisians pleasure is the object of life, and they manage to make it yield as much of the desired article as possible. In this respect there is an obvious difference between the inhabitants of London and Paris. In the first city they are grave, serious, matter-of-fact people, intent on pounds, shillings, and pence; the Parisians, while not unmindful of the franc, make it conserve to their enjoyment.

But I will give you more of Paris in my next, and here draw this letter to a close.

Amicably yours, D. M. B.

Letter from Europe.—No. 6.

SOMETHING ABOUT PARIS.

PARIS, Aug. 24, 1880.

DEAR FRIENDS: There is a great deal in this beautiful city of Paris that I can never tell you anything about. There is far too much here to include in one, two, three, or a dozen letters. I have fully come to the conclusion that it is a great city—the biggest of its size in the wide world. It is the prettiest city I ever saw, or ever will see. It has been wonderfully improved within the last twenty years. Louis Napoleon is entitled to much of the credit of this. He caused thousands of old rookeries—some of which had stood for centuries—to be leveled to the ground, and a great number of crooked, narrow streets to be made wide and straight. The buildings are of a light-gray colored sandstone, much taller than the great bulk of the buildings in London, and, as a general thing, are five to seven stories high, counting the mansard or attic story. I have scarcely seen a brick building in the entire city. This cream-colored stone is almost entirely used, and the atmosphere being so much clearer and freer from fogs and smoke than in London, the stone does not turn to a dull black or brown, as there. This stone is quite soft when taken from the quarries, and cuts easily, but upon exposure to the sun and weather becomes hard.

The city is laid off peculiarly, there being many general centers or places from which the streets radiate in all directions, like rays or the spokes of a wheel. There are very few streets that run in one direction for any great distance, and it is therefore far more difficult to learn the streets and points of compass than in other cities, especially as the names of the streets are so outlandish to one who cannot speak a word of French. There are no crooked streets in any part of the city I have seen, but very few of the corners are right angles, and no attention is paid to points of compass. The streets of Paris are like Daniel Webster—they "know no north, no south, no east, no west," but they know how to run straight and to be wide and beautiful. There is a great uniformity in them, one looking just as fine as another, if not more so. This spontaneity of beauty and external appearance helps to bewilder a stranger and cause all the streets to look alike to him. The fronts of the buildings are beautiful, many of them are carved with exquisite skill, and the public buildings are profusely supplied with statuary of royal characters, warriors, marshals, eminent statesmen, scientists, authors, poets, and artists, as well as Grecian and Roman divinities, heroes, and myths. A great deal of stone in Paris has been finely hewn and chiseled into human shape. It is perfectly astonishing and overwhelming to realize the extent to which this has been carried. The places, the public squares, the gardens, the public grounds, the fountains, the public buildings, and all the places of general resort, are supplied with beautiful statuary with a munificence that can only be understood by being seen.

The fronts of some of the buildings are ornamented extensively with gold. No expense has apparently been spared to make the city the finest of all the cities on the globe. The streets are evenly and splendidly paved, and carriages roll over them as smoothly as upon a barn floor. The pavement is pretty evenly divided between true and even blocks of stone and the asphalte, a species of concrete cemented together with hot coal-tar and pitch. This kind of pavement appears a perfect success here, and is remarkable for its smoothness. It seems, also, to be very durable, far excelling, in this respect, the attempts made with asphaltum pavement in America. I also bear evidence that the streets of Paris are kept very clean for so large a city. I learn all the principal streets at this time of the year are cleaned every night.

The stores are rich and attractive. The goods are tastefully arranged in the show windows and otherwise, and show a richness and exquisiteness of quality. Almost everything is of French manufacture and of good quality. Watches, jewelry, pictures, views, photographs, fancy goods, etc., seem to be in larger proportion than with us. Both London and Paris are extremely well supplied with watch and jewelry stores; very many large, elegant show-windows are half full of beautiful watches, gold chains, and gold ornaments. They all speak emphatically, This is a golden age. If the Paris stores are not as large as in New York and many American cities, I am compelled to admit that they are neater and more tastefully arranged. It is a perfect museum to walk leisurely along many of the boulevards and view the show-windows and take some account of stock of the richness thus displayed. A large proportion of the shopkeeping or clerking is done by women, and I judge it is very well done indeed. If one only had lots of money and could parley vous with these French shopkeepers, it would be pleasant to patronize the Parisian clerks extensively. I am afraid, however, that there is too much truth in the statement that the shopkeepers of Paris are disposed to take advantage of poor, unsophisticated Americans, and charge them more for what they buy than their own people. A Frenchman looks upon an American sight-seer as his lawful prey, and he holds it right to get all the francs out of him possible. Their consciences are very elastic in this direction, and as a matter of fact I am not sure that it has been fully demonstrated that a French shopkeeper has such a thing as conscience about him.

The changes in counting money in passing from one country to another is a constant perplexity to the uninitiated. In England it was pounds, shillings, and pence, with sovereigns, crowns, etc. As when a boy I used to cipher in sterling money, the English circulating medium was not difficult to understand. The shilling is the greatest sum of convenience. A pound is so much money that it seems too much for poor people to use with frequency. In Paris you hear nothing about pounds, shillings, and pence, and the circulating medium becomes francs and centimes. A franc is nearly twenty cents of American money, and is the great measure of value here. Gold pieces of twenty francs, called Napoleons, are very common, but in stating amounts they are scarcely ever used. The centime is the hundredth part of a franc, but they have no coin so small as to represent it, or at least I have seen none of them. The smallest coin I have seen is sou, or five centimes. The one and two sou pieces are copper, and are of the value of one or two cents with us. In reckoning money the sous are not used half so often as centimes. Their decimal is easily understood; seventy-five centimes is three-fourths of a franc, or fifteen cents of our money. One soon becomes familiar with it. Half-francs—silver pieces—are of the value of our dimes. Two franc and five franc pieces (dollars) are much used. The Bank of France issues paper money not nearly as pretty as ours, but it seems to be little used in ordinary small trade; gold, silver, and copper are the principal circulating mediums, and it is almost astonishing to realize what slippery stuff it is, and how readily it gets away with itself. Out here it is very much as it is in our own country, hard to keep. The French dealers will not take American money, and do not like to take the English, so in coming here we found it necessary to get our money exchanged, and the same will be necessary when we pass from here into Germany and Switzerland.

Street cars, called tram cars, five hundred in number, are not quite so much of an institution in Paris as in New York, though more than in London, where they are not permitted in the city proper. In Paris they traverse the city considerably, but not to the same extent as with us. The street cars are very heavy and have two stories, the deck being quite as much used as the lower story. It is the same with the omnibuses or stages, seven hundred in number; they are also large and heavy, having the two-story arrangement, and weigh at least as much as two New York stages, and with both stories hold three or four times as many passengers, requiring a conductor as do the street cars. The omnibuses require three strong, large horses, which work abreast. But on the heavy carts, stone wagons, drays, etc., they work tandem, or one before the other. I often notice, in heavy hauling, four or five horses in a single line, one before the other. The heavy team horses are large, stocky, strong animals, and march along with the dignity of a military officer, and appear remarkably well trained. The streets are so level and smooth that they haul immense loads. There are no elevated roads nor underground roads in Paris. All the traveling is done on the surface of the earth. The favorite mode of riding is the cab—Paris has twelve thousand of them—an open carriage with one or two seats, which is very pleasant to ride in. The body of the carriage hangs low between the wheels, and it is but a step into them. They are usually provided with a calash top that can be raised when it rains. The English hansom, so common in London, seems not to find favor with the Parisians. The usual price of the cabs is two or two and a half francs an hour, or for a shorter time, but the driver invariably expects his pourboire, or fee, for himself. The custom is much the same here as in London, every servant or waiter expects a fee if he does anything for you. If the pourboire is not forthcoming insolence is likely to follow. The cabmen wear a uniform, a distinguishing feature of which is a glazed hat, looking as though made of patent leather or japanned tin. I am told the cabs all belong to one company, and the omnibus lines to another. The drivers never own the establishments they drive.

The Seine at Paris is not so large as the Thames at London, and seems not to be used one tenth part so much. A few small steamers ply on it, and that is all the craft I noticed on it. It is nowhere near the source of life and animation that the Thames is with Londoners. No vessels of size reach Paris from the ocean.

The natural politeness of the Frenchman is proverbial. This the visitor is made conscious of at every moment. "Mousieur," "Madame," and "Mademoiselle" are used every few words when addressing each other. The hat is raised a thousand times a day, when one addresses another, when a store is entered, or a favor of any kind requested. The Oui, monsieur, is heard an innumerable number of times every day. The Frenchman who is not polite is not a true Frenchman. The ladies are neatly dressed, and many of them are beautiful of course, but as a class I do not think they look so well as the English or American women. Many are too deeply brunette, and there is a marked tendency to embonpoint or corpulency—more so than the idea of a true Venus allows. I will cheerfully state that as a class they are very modest, more so than I was led to expect from accounts I have heard. I think well of the Parisian ladies.

Hot and cold baths may be had in every quarter of Paris, at prices varying from half a franc to a franc; towels and soap extra. Soap, even, is not furnished in the hotels, and it is the same with candles, which are extra. There are many excellent swimming baths for ladies and gentlemen in the river Seine. The charges of admission to these floating establishments vary between twenty centimes and one franc. Swimming dresses, towels, soap, etc., extra.

The cafés of Paris are an institution of themselves. They are daily and almost hourly the resort of citizens and strangers. They abound in all quarters of the city, especially on the boulevards, which are the widest and most gay and beautiful streets. Many of the cafés are fitted up with splendor, rather ahead of what we see in America. It is very common for ladies to assist in attending them. The cafés furnish coffee, tea, or wine, as desired, with the viands they prepare. Stronger liquors may doubtless be had, but wine is the great beverage here and is used most freely. The cheapness of the ordinary qualities of wine is very noticable. A quart of vin ordinaire is furnished at the moderate-priced cafés at 1 franc. A dinner table is never set in Paris without the wine bottle to every set of four persons, and water is seldom drank at the table unless with wine in equal quantity. Everybody, men, women, and children, drink wine, and that several times through the day. I hav noticed ladies when traveling by rail have the wine bottle in their satchel and occasionally resort to it as openly as we would eat an apple or peach. And yet I do not think I have seen a drunken person in Paris, or one who seemed even slightly intoxicated. The people are fond of their wine, but they do not use it to excess. It is very common to see twenty or more tables and chairs sitting on the sidewalk in front of restaurants and wine houses, at which gentlemen and ladies sit and quaff their wine and eat their cakes as openly as ladies in America partake of ice cream or soda water. It is not an unusual thing for hotels to be back fifty or one hundred feet from the street, with a wall or shallow stores in front and a beautiful area in rear for tables, eating, and wine drinking, with always a profusion of beautiful flowers. It seems not the most disagreeable thing in the world to sit in one of those cozy little places and drink a glass or two of wine. Some of the finest hotels have these courts with a glass roof forty feet or more from the ground, with orange trees, exotic plants, and brilliant flowers all around. The French are lovers of flowers, and they are seen almost everywhere. If flowers do not help to make up Paradise I do not know what does.

Policemen, or gardiens de la paix, are numerous, and are to be found in all parts of the city. They are dressed in military uniform, and are ready to impart information about places and distances to those who are fortunate enough to know how to speak and understand French. Policemen are also seen on the railroads in the country.

Paris is said to have been founded by Julius Cæsar before the Christian era, before which time this immediate country was inhabited by barbarians. After the advent of the Romans, who made it their headquarters, it gradually rose in importance, and from the period of the Emperor Julian, the remains of whose palace still exists here, it became recognized as the metropolis of Gaul, and was accorded special privileges by its masters. From this epoch to the advent of Clovis, the first king of the Franks, in 481, history makes little mention of Lutetia, the original name of Paris. But Clovis, having married a Christian lady, was, by her influence, induced to erect a cathedral church, which was dedicated to St. Genevieve. He added to the fortifications and buildings of the city. It was not, however, until the twelfth century, in the reign of Louis Le Jeune, that public buildings were undertaken on an extensive scale. The next monarch who greatly improved the city was Phillippe Auguste, who caused the streets to be paved, the works of Notre Dame and the Louvre to be proceeded with, and the whole of the Faubourgs to be surrounded with ramparts and defenses. Then followed the improvements of St. Louis, who added much to the city's importance. In this prince's reign Robert de Sorbonne founded the famous school which still proudly bears his name and which has served for a model to many similar institutions throughout Europe.

Owing to the constant invasions of the English during the government of Charles V., the suburbs were enlarged and fortifications thrown around them. During a long time after this the middle classes continued to increase in intelligence and influence. Paris became more and more the resort of all who sought literature, art, or mere pleasure. Louis XIV., with what may be justly said against him, is entitled to much of the credit of embellishing Paris and its environs and making it the most fascinating city in the world. He improved the streets of the great city, he established the Institute of France, the Invalides, the Observatory, and other public institutions. It was he who made the Boulevards public promenades. In his reign the beautiful public palace and park at Versailles were constructed. Napoleon I. is also entitled to much credit for adding greatly to the beauty of Paris, for restoring much of the damage done during the Revolution, for projecting many public works, and for enlarging the Place du Carrousel and the Louvre. To him Paris is indebted for the magnificent Arc de Triumphe, the Column Vendome, several handsome bridges across the Seine, and the designing of manifold undertakings subsequently carried out. Considerable was also done to beautify Paris in the reign of Louis Philippe. But, as observed, to Louis Napoleon III. a still greater meed of praise is due; his was such an era of improvements as Paris had never known before. He made away with all that remained of "Old Paris," and replaced by superb thoroughfares the dingy alleys and miserable narrow streets that previously existed. He restored, enlarged, and beautified almost every public building and place. He constructed new bridges wherever they were required, and opened all of them free to the public. He remodeled and repaired every building that was defective, and really made Paris the most attractive city in the world.

Much of all this was marred in the terrible days that followed the invasion of the Prussians ten years ago. For five months the hated Teutons had possession of the hills which surround Paris, and with their huge seige guns they could have made Paris a heap of ruins. As it was, their shot did not a little harm, but the opportune treaty of peace saved the utter destruction of the city, and her inhabitants from starvation. Her supplies of the very commonest material for bread and horse flesh were exhausted, and she was compelled to surrender to her hated oppressors. But the wars of Paris were not yet ended. The Commune was proclaimed on March 18, 1871, and once more a siege was sustained, and this time from a French army. After more than two months stubborn resistance the Communists in their despair and frenzy set fire to many public buildings, where blacked walls for years afterward bore grim witness to their reckless conduct. For a time the populace relapsed into their old fury of 1793. Women and children paraded the streets, and barricades were raised and desperately defended upon the entry of the government army. Truly, Paris, which Victor Hugo aptly describes as the vast pendulum of civilization ever oscillating between Thermopylæ and Gomorrah, had then reached the uttermost point of that mythical City of the Plain. Two hundred and thirty-eight buildings, including thirty-one public edifices, were destroyed by the Communists, whose Reign of Terror lasted seventy-three days, and cost the city $200,000,000.

Paris with wonderful recuperative power, in the short time that has intervened has almost completely recovered from the heavy series of disasters which occurred during the terrible days of 1870 and '71, and has resumed her social sovereignty of Europe. The glory of the new Paris may be justly ascribed to the enlightened republic which now presides over the destinies of France. Everywhere may be seen the good fruits of its interposition. Nearly the whole of the ruins have been cleared away, and other and handsomer buildings have arisen in their places. It is safe to say the new régime has done even more than its predecessors, and therefore merits the most hearty praise that a grateful people are able to bestow.

The French people are undeniably a great people, and I have but one serious fault to find with them, and that is they use a language that I can neither speak nor understand. There is a great sense of inability and loneliness that creeps over a man in a strange country where a language is spoken that is as incomprehensible to him as Greek or Choctaw. It matters little to a man how mellifluous and liquid the French language is, or how rapidly those who were brought up on it can r-r-r-roll it off, or how sweetly they may say Oui, oui, oui, if a man cannot speak a word of it, or understand a word of it, of what possible use is it to him? This train of thought, and a longer train, too, ran through my mind on my first half day in Paris. I stopped in my room after breakfast to finish a letter or two, which I wished to post at the earliest moment. Messrs. Rawson and Linton became a trifle impatient with me, and said they would go on and leave me if I did not drop all at once and go with them. I finished my letter, and thinking they had gone I rushed out to overtake them, and hurried on to do so.

The fact is, they had not left the hotel and were waiting in Mr. Linton's room for me to join them. I rushed on, consequently we were separated, and I was alone, a perfect know-nothing of both the city and its language. I wished to buy some stamps and mail my letters. I knew not where to get the stamps or to deposit my letters. I wished to find Thomas Cook's office, and knew not where it was. I wanted to go to the Louvre, and knew no more where it was than the man in the moon. By pantomime, pointing, and sundry ejaculation, I found out that the stamps were sold in a tobacco store. I held up my fingers to let the seller know how many I wanted. I gave a two franc piece in payment and let the madamoiselle give back such change as she pleased. I found Cook's office rather by accident. Then I wished to set my face toward the Louvre, that most magnificent of all places. When I saw a person with a benign countenance, and to whom I dared to appeal, I would approach him, raise my hat, and simply speak the word Louvre with a sort of interrogation point at the end of it, to imply that I wished to know where it was. My pronunciation was so bad (for there is not a word in the entire French language that an American can speak correctly until he learns how) that he could not comprehend my troubles. I continued to say appealingly, Louvre. Some of the more astute and kind-hearted comprehended the desire of my heart, that I wished to find the Louvre, and gave me the general directions—very clear to themselves, doubtless—how to go there, but not being able to understand a word of the inimitable French, I could only take the direction they pointed to and go on till I ran out of instructions, when I made another appeal to another kind-hearted person, woman or man, as the case might be. It seemed to me they gave me conflicting directions—they certainly pointed in different ways, and I pursued devious ways, but at length I reached the haven of rest I was looking for. It is probably about a mile and a half from the place I started from, but owing to the multiform directions in which the streets run, the diversity of instructions I received, and my stupidity in understanding them, I am sure I walked three miles in reaching the Louvre. But I entered its palatial halls, marched through miles of its resplendent galleries of paintings, statuary, antiquities, and innumerable curiosities, and being wearied in more ways than one, had seated myself to rest and read some New York dailies I had received that morning, when Messrs. Rawson and Linton arrived with a guide. I received them with all the dignity I could command under the circumstances, and told them I had examined the Louvre, was much pleased with it, and was about to buy it if the price could be agreed upon. They had felt very uneasy about me, and had given me up for lost. They had the benefit of a guide, but I had the felicity to retrace my steps with

(Continued on page 616.)

Communications.

Some Bible "Facts."

HALIFAX, N. S., Aug. 29, 1880

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: As we both are truth seekers and free thinkers, only in different directions, pardon my addressing you. I happened to get hold of a copy of your paper one Sunday morning by the merest chance from a friend who is a subscriber to it. I hav had the loan of several copies of it, and now wish to write a few words for mutual information.

Frederick the Great once asked his chaplain for a proof of divine inspiration or revelation. The chaplain replied, "The dews, your majesty." Now, brother Bennett, I want to ask you, and all your brethren and sisters, my question or questions, which are open to all to answer, it, them, or me. The Israelites, to the number of seventy souls, or living persons—breathing frames, the word soul in the Hebrew language simply meaning a living, breathing frame, composed of flesh, blood, bones, sinews, nerves, breath, or everything that constitutes man—emigrated to Goshen, in the land of Egypt, where they increased to a very great multitude. There is no denying this fact, or facts, for facts are stubborn things; even a single fact is a stubborn thing to contend with. They were driven out of Egypt in great haste after celebrating the Pasch or Passover; and under the leadership of Moses, or the first Washington, came down to the brink of the Red Sea, flanked with mountains. If I am not mistaken, from the geography of the country, the sea before them, and a hostil enemy in hot pursuit, no corps of engineers to throw pontoon bridges over the waters, this was a very trying situation for Moses to be in with a helpless multitude; but the Israelites had a general with them equal to the emergency. En avant! (forward) and the order was obeyed, both in the spirit and in the letter. The Israelites passed over—how they got over I shall not say—but the Egyptians were drowned. You can no more deny this than the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers upon the barren rocks of Plymouth, on December 21, 1620. With the utmost respect to your brethren and sisters, I defy and challenge refutation.

The Jews exist to this very day. They were fed in a remarkable manner. There was no food for them in the desert, and they could not receive supplies or renewals from the adjacent countries. The provisions they brought with them out of Egypt were soon exhausted, and the "manna," or "what is it," the name they gave it, ceased on the morrow after they had eaten of the old corn of the land of Canaan, that year. A pot or omer of the manna or angels' food was preserved as an evidence or witness for future generations, and never putrefied nor bred worms—the punishment of disobedience of orders. That which was ordered to be kept until the Sabbath day did not putrefy nor breed worms—the result of obedience of orders. The Israelites did not fast forty years like Dr. Tanner fasted forty days.

Brother Bennett, how will your brethren and sisters deny or disprove these facts; the Jews are a living proof of it to this very day. You might as well deny that the Yankees eat brown bread, pork, and beans, as to try to deny that the Hebrews ate manna and quail in the wilderness. I only wish I could shake hands with you upon the subject, and I would become a Freethinker myself according to your own view or views, for I am totally disgusted with the Christianity of the nineteenth century. Both church and state are rotten. With us it is fiddle to me and I will dance to you. Rogues preach, and fools believe. I entertain nothing but the most supreme, unmitigated, and ineffable contempt for the clergy of all denominations. Catholics hav burnt Protestants, and Protestants hav burnt Catholics, and then called it auto da fé, an act of faith. Jesus Christ, as a philosopher, viewing him in that light, and his twelve disciples, never did burn any one who did not agree with them. Witness the horrible massacre of St. Bartholomew. The saint must hav been very fond of blood when the priests ran through the streets with a crucifix in one hand and a dagger in the other to encourage the murderers to more blood and murder. Look at the capture of Beziers. "Kill all!" was the command; and the Catholics as well as the Protestants were all put to the sword, the cry being, "The Lord will know his own." Look at the martyrdom of John Rogers by Queen Mary, commonly termed the bloody Mary. The spot is marked where the old hero perished. Look at the martyrdom of Michael Servetus by John Calvin, sometimes termed the Robespierre of Geneva, and yet both Catholics and Protestants cry, "Our holy religion," and hav the cheek and assurance and impudence to ask us to join their blood-thirsty systems and unholy organizations. We hope they do not think we are fools and rogues like themselvs. Our clergy, with a few honorable exceptions, are the most greedy for money of any of the professions; and it will be a glorious day for the human family when their accursed system shall be swept from the earth and secular creed become the order of the day. Equality, liberty, and fraternity will then be triumphant, and the great desideratum for the afflicted sons and daughters of our race shall at last hav become realized, and crowd human nature's temple gates with songs of prayer and praise. The wisdom of the clergy, which is only folly, will be proved false.

The great French Revolution of 1793 was one of the noblest attempts on the part of the people to disenthral the public mind. The French army having returned from America to Europe, soon manifested itself as an American party in French politics. The kingdom was overthrown and a republic established. Seven titles or orders of nobility were abolished and the reign of terror was established. One good act they did to the descendants of the Houghnots, or Huguenots, who had been most cruelly massacred in the civil wars. The National Assembly, having repudiated their former name of the States General, or the three estates of the kingdom, declared all Frenchmen who were not Catholics to be eligible to all offices, civil, military, and naval. This was only an act of justice to the heirs of their murdered ancestors and brothers-in-arms, who had fought for liberty, equality, and fraternity in the war of the Dragonades. The cruelties, sufferings, and hardships endured on that occasion will always liv in the memory of Frenchmen as a fearful memento of bygone days of kingly tyranny and priestly rule. I hav stood at my mother's knee and heard her talking of the reign of terror. The people addressed a pamphlet containing an alarming and spirited address to the inhabitants of Great Britain, entitled, "Popery Always the Same," which Voltaire, the brilliant Frenchman, and his school of philosophy, had been endeavoring to overthrow and destroy. The church miscalled it Christianity, just as if the philosophy of Jesus Christ and his followers—I am only speaking of Jesus Christ and his followers as historical characters—had the remotest affinity to that of Sodom and Gomorrah or Egypt. The chapels or churches were shut up; the superstition of the day was abolished. The clergy were destroyed and their Christianity was abolished and declared an imposture, and death an eternal sleep. Their eucharist or sacrament, the real body and blood of their cannibal view of the subject, rammed down the throats of donkeys or asses, the fit and proper place for it. You will pardon me for saying that I am a firm believer in the simple elements of bread and wine as a keepsake or a memento delivered by the great philosopher to his followers—a sort of a first declaration of independence that he came as a mighty reformer to reform the Jewish state, politically and ecclesiastically, especially as I accord to you and your brethren and sisters equal rights and privileges.

GEORGE FITZ.

REPLY.—Our friend seems to think he has propounded some "posers" for the consideration of Infidels, but it does not seem so to us. Frederick the Great must hav been very easily satisfied if he accepted his chaplain's proof. How the fact that dew gathers on leaves and grass proves a divine revelation is what we, skeptical heretic that we are, cannot see. Dew is a natural phenomenon, and no more proves that God wrote the Bible than does the fact that water runs down hill. When we see water of its own accord run up hill we will look around for the cause of the miracle, but dew is no miracle, any more than rain. When the temperature of the atmosphere is lowered to a given point a quantity of aqueous vapor is set free and forms what is called dew. Vegetable fibers are radiators of heat, and are cooled soonest, consequently the dew is deposited upon them first. It is a natural phenomenon, easily explainable, and known to every schoolboy. It does not by any means prove that the Red Sea divided and let the Israelites over dry-shod, while the pursuing Egyptians were drowned.

Just how these Israelites did get over, our friend does not like to say, but he is very certain that the Egyptians got drowned. These points he dares us to deny and refute. Now, with all deference to his ipse dixit, we do deny them. We are just so perverse. Our friend finds in an old book a very improbable story, supported by no outside evidence, and then says it is undeniable and challenges us to deny it. It seems to us that the common sense rule would be for him to prove that it is so. He, or his Bible, makes the assertion; let him and his Bible prove it.

Seventy people went into Egypt, staid there 215 years, and when they came out had 600,000 men of war, counting all the different branches of arms in the service. This necessitated a population of something over 3,000,000, which is, our friend must allow, an unprecedented increase. Since the Revolution the population of this country has doubled about four times. To do this it has drawn hundreds of thousands from the older countries. The Hebrews did not gain any from foreign immigration, being sort of anti-Chinese people, yet they had 42,859 and a fraction times as many people in 215 years as they started with. After a hundred years the United States has only about 18 times as many as it started with. Statistics, which we believe it is admitted are a little more accurate now than in the time of Moses, show that population, under the most favorable circumstances, doubles about once in 25 years. According to all decent ciphering, at the end of 215 years they would hav had 28 672 people, or 571,328 less than the number of the men of war. When the Jews counted noses—and a Hebrew nose is so easily counted that we shouldn't think the district enumerators could hav made mistakes—there were 22,273 first-born males. Now in Massachusetts the females exceeded the males by some 45,000, so we will say there were as many first-born females as males, which would make the number 44,546 first-born children. Naturally there were as many mothers as first-born children. If there were only that many mothers, each one, to get up a population of 3,000,000, must hav borne 67 children and a fraction apiece. As the child-bearing period in a woman's life only extends over about 30 years, they must hav borne a child once in a little less than six months, and kept it up steadily for 30 years, which would be very trying to their health.

Now, having got all these people, who were kept slaves to the Egyptians, the Lord, through Moses, undertook to get out of Egypt. He had a good deal of trouble with Pharaoh, whose heart he hardened, to get him to let them start, and some remarkable feats of prestidigitation were performed. Perhaps our friend will challenge us to deny that these miracles were worked, but still we do. We do not believe that a stick was ever changed into a serpent, and more proof than we hav at hand will be necessary to convince us that the rod Aaron cast down before Pharaoh became a snake. But one night they got out of their beds—3,000,000 of them—and took all the jewelry and raiment they could lay their hands on, and started, with their flocks and herds, which were so numerous that at one time they sacrificed 150,000 lambs. Although all the horses had been killed, Pharaoh, when he awoke in the morning and found them gone, took 600 chariots and went after them. How he expected to bring back 3,000,000 of the people, or overcome 600,000 men of war with 600 chariots is not explained by holy writ. The Hebrews must hav been the greatest cowards alive to let him do it. But they were afraid and cried out to Jehovah to protect them. And right here comes in the wonderful feat which we are dared to deny. The Lord divided the Red Sea and the waters stood up like a wall. The Israelites went over, and the Egyptians, on attempting to follow, were drowned. This, our friend says, there is no more occasion to doubt than that the Pilgrim Fathers landed in this country. We wonder if he depends for his proof upon the story that a sailor once lost his anchor in the Red Sea by its getting foul of one of Pharaoh's chariot wheels. The wheel was never brought to light, but the story is all there is to corroborate the scripture. If there is any more evidence we respectfully call upon our friend to bring it forth, otherwise we imagin the story will still be doubted.

Now the Jews, having increased from seventy to three millions, having got out of Egypt with their neighbors' jewelry and clothing, having got across the Red Sea, the hosts of Pharaoh having been drowned by a merciful God, having got through all these difficulties, were in the wilderness with nothing to eat and only bitter water to drink. But "it came to pass in the morning the dew lay around about the camp; and when the dew that lay was gone, behold, upon the face of the wilderness lay a small round thing, small as the hoar-frost upon the ground. And Moses said unto them, this is the bread which the Lord hath given you to eat." And then for forty years, as some say, the Jews had manna for breakfast, dinner, and supper. It must hav been a monotonous diet, as bad as Beecher's "bread and water for breakfast, water and bread for dinner, and good bread and water for supper." After a while the Jews "kicked" and called for meat. So the Lord sent them quail on toast—at least he sent them quails, and Moses could easily hav got the toast. They had the quails for a month, but they got sick of them, for while they were eating them God struck them with a plague. Our friend says the Jews lived on manna and quails, but it seems, according to the only authority on the subject, that to say they died on them would be nearer the truth, for the Lord, after promising them a land flowing with milk and honey, fed them on dry manna, stinking quails, with bitter water to drink, till they died. If the Lord keeps his promis of heaven no better than he did that of the promised land, the Christians, after wandering through the world, will, like the tramps from Egypt, hav to leave their bones in the wilderness with none but the Gentiles to giv them burial. And we would like to get a glimpse of that omer of manna which was preserved as a witness for future generations. Where is that omer now? if it is not irreverent to inquire.

We do not think it necessary to believe all these monstrous absurdities. In fact, we cannot believe them. To be the chosen people of God was a national misfortune for the Jews. All sorts of punishments were visited upon them. No one who reads the Pentateuch can help feeling that it is untrue. Such impossible things are recorded, so much that is horrible is written, that we cannot find it in our nature to accept it. It is repulsiv to our heart and repugnant to our reason. There is nothing outside of it to support it, and within itself it falls to the ground. One chapter destroys the preceding one, and almost every verse giv the lie to another. It is false in all its explanations and theories. If such a character as Moses ever lived, it is impossible for him to hav ever written it. No man ever wrote an account of his own funeral, and no man ever accurately described events that occurred a few hundred years after his own death. The man who wrote the book of Joshua could hav known little of astronomy, and the writer of Genesis cannot be called a strictly scientific person. The Old Testament is a crystallization of barbarous ignorance; the New the outcome of an aspiration for a better life common to all people. It is not original, and is no improvement on systems hundreds of years older. It is unsatisfactory, illogical, and some of it bears internal evidence of having been written by men who had gone stark staring mad by dwelling on their future prospects. If Aaron did change a stick into a serpent—which he didn't—it would not prove that Christ was begotten by the Holy Ghost, or that the world was made in six days. A shower of quails—which never occurred—does not prove the reality of heaven, the existence of hell, or that a merciful God ever perpetrated such monstrous barbarities as are recorded in the Bible. And last of all, our Nova Scotian friend's affirmation is not by any means conclusiv evidence that the wonders told of the flight from Egypt ever took place. The impossibilities of the story stamp it a lie, and all Christendom—aided by all the commentators who ever wrote—cannot make it appear other wise.—ED. T. S.

Rev. J. H. Burnham.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Permit me, through your paper, to speak a good word for the cause of Liberalism by calling attention to the services and abilities of Rev. J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw City, Mich. This act of justice to him and the good cause I hav long meditated. I believe in my very soul no abler advocate ever stepped upon the rostrum, and when H. L. Green wrote a short time ago that in his judgment Mr. Burnham was the equal of Ingersoll, he said what thousands in Michigan will testify to who hav heard both. His researches in science and history he has pushed to the uttermost. He goes to the bottom of every subject he handles, startling his audience with the originality of his thought and methods, moving them by the power of his logic and eloquence, like the great master that he is. No man or woman who loves knowledge, purity, and truth can listen to Mr. Burnham and not be progressiv. He has helped me more to sort and sift my education, get rid of more errors, and helped me to more real progressiv knowledge than any man I hav ever met.

The title of "Rev." still clings to him because of his connection with the church years ago; the creeds, dogmas, bigotry, superstition, hatred of progressiv truth, and black bloody history of which (the church) he loathes and spurns with all the powers of his great heart. Mr. Burnham is too diffident. He lacks those peculiar gifts which would bring him to the front as a great lawyer. With all the shrinking sensitivness of a child, with a heart ever overflowing with sympathy, kindness, and love, yet possessing the wonderful attainments of the great scholar and orator, he moves in the world above all suspicion, loved and respected by all who know him. Mr. Burnham should no longer be cooped up in Michigan. His loyalty and love for family and home must no longer be permitted to hold him within the narrow circuit which he has hitherto so ably filled. If the Liberal public knew him as I do, he would be compelled to compete with Ingersoll before his grand audience for the high honors and laurels which he now so imperially wears.

One object of this article is to call attention to the singular course taken by the Lansing Republican in reference to Mr. Burnham during the camp-meeting just held at Lansing. That paper gave a daily report of the meeting, and its reporter, a Mr. Clark, persisted in reporting Mr. Burnham's remarks and speeches just the reverse of what he said, and when expostulated with gave the most trivial, evasiv, and unsatisfactory reasons for his course. It was exceedingly annoying to Mr. Burnham and his friends. I regard it as a piece of newspaper impertinence which should not go unrebuked. Mr. Burnham is theoretically a Spiritualist, although he never yet has proclaimed his belief. Practically he is not a convert, because he as yet lacks the personal evidence. He says, "I would be glad to know it is true." His labors are confined to the dethroning of the God of orthodoxy and the promulgation of science.

Lowell, Mich. E. A. CHAPMAN.

Is Cremation Best in all Cases?

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In common with many of your readers, I doubt not, I enjoyed a thoughtful study of an instructiv article on "The Proprieties Which should be Observed on the Occasion of Birth, Marriage, and Death," in your issue of Aug. 21, 1880, and hasten my acknowledgments. The subject matter could hardly fail to interest, as the animus of the thinker and the logic of the writer contributed to that end, making the ministrations of art and science alike necessary to the best uses of life and death. The outlook was critical and the analysis practical, but the conclusion was constructiv in spirit and fraternal in results.

In making these acknowledgments I exercise the freedom of a "truth seeker." and ask such questions as may aid in bringing out the larger and more reliable conclusions of an ultimate philosophy, knowing that the logical sequence in sociology must cover all cases before there can be a social science broad enough and good enough to educate all classes of mind and to construct the usages of society.

In the present instance I so generally approve of the conclusions of "Rusticus," on the proprieties to be observed on the occasion of birth and marriage that I will omit further notice of those departments of the essay, confining what follows to the answering of the question, Is cremation best in all cases? realizing that what is offered will show plainly enough how much need there is for other methods than cremation in dealing with the dead. And even here there is so much to approve that what I offer may be additions rather than corrections, although I cannot at present see how the ends of art and science are to be served by the universal use of cremation, to say nothing of the saving of human life in cases of catalepsy and trance. In fact, it is the weak point in all the discussions of cremation I hav read, that no attention or provision is given or made for that class of phenomena now generally known as "trance," and that there is such a need, I submit the following brief but significant statement of facts. They were originally given to the English reading public in London by Henry Belinaye, Esq., "Surgeon Extraordinary to Her Royal Highness the Dutchess of Kent," in support of the hygienic conclusion that the homes of the living should be freed from the "effluvia of dead bodies," a conclusion fully and forcibly made plain by the essay under review,

Mr. Belinaye says, "Before we show that accidents of this nature ('torpor' or 'trance') probably still occur in England, we may advert to the many instances on the continent of persons sacrificed by a premature opinion of their being dead."

From Bruhier alone we learn the following facts: "Out of one hundred and eighty examples of persons erroneously supposed to be dead fifty-two had been buried alive, four had been opened after supposed death, fifty-two had spontaneously revived after being put into their coffins, seventy-wo more discovered to be alive after having been deemed dead" (The Sources of Health and Disease in Communities, etc., etc. Boston edition, 1833, p. 98).

Should this statement appear to the reader more startling than convincing, an additional item from the same authority may deepen conviction and suggest the need of further investigation. He says: "Surgeons hav, through inadvertance, opened bodies which hav only parted with life on the application of the scalpel; this occurred to Vesalius. Again, in 1763, a clergyman, supposed to hav died from apoplexy, emitted a groan at the first incision of the knife by a surgeon deputed to investigate the cause of his death. LaPlace, being informed of the circumstance, and asked what was to be done, replied, 'Gemir et se taire' (Lament and conceal it)." (Ibid, p. 99.)

A full consideration of all phases of these phenomena would make this article longer than is desirable at present, so I submit this extract from the same authority by way of conclusion. He says: "So deeply and awfully hav some people been impressed with the horrors of premature interment that in one of the old imperial towns of Germany a plan has been devised and adopted as a security against this as well as all other evils we hav enumerated. Every person after death is carried to a well-ventilated room constructed for that purpose near the church. The corpse is warmly covered and laid upon a table, the hands connected with strings communicating with bells suspended in an adjacent room, where a watchman is constantly on duty. To insure his vigilance he is compelled every quarter of an hour to advance the finger of a dial which will move only at that interval of time. . . . Two persons were saved by this expedient" (Ibid, pp. 101, 102).

The logical bearing of these phases of experience shows that we are likely to make similar mistakes, not knowing how to detect the presence of life where and when all resemblances unite in a "supposed death;" and that in all cases of "torpor," "trance," or "catalepsy," when cremation is used we learn our mistake only when too late to save the subject from suffering, or such hellish torture as waits on being burned to death. With such possibilities in any case, natural or educed, the most earnest advocate of cremation would shrink from the consequences and giv the subject in all cases the benefit of the doubt.

After this circumstantial statement, the issue in few words is human life vs. cremation, and must remain so until it can be made certain beyond the possibility of mistake that the apparent dead are really so and not in trance or torpor. The growth of science may remove this objection to cremation, but for the present, and until a perfected philosophy of life and death hav so educated the doctor, the surgeon, and other experts, to say nothing of the "common people," the question that heads these few lines must be answered in the negativ, and all the more as art, science, and the "law" hav each something to urge against cremation as a general custom. Of these anon. Fraternally,

Chelsea, Mass. J. H. W. TOOHEY.

Bible in the Schools.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Allow me to call the attention of Liberals to the following plan which we hav adopted to suppress the Bible and religious instruction in our public schools. It is an outrage upon our rights to compel our children to receive instruction against our wishes in the Christian superstition, and the only consistent way for us is to call on the government to make good its pledges of equal rights. This government is the supreme power and will be till the Christians get God in the Constitution, and then good-by liberty, justice, and all our forefathers fought for one hundred years ago.

Christians are bound to steal away our rights, and we must not forget, when such cut-throats are around, that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." We published the following cards, one in last week's Journal, the other in this, and hav now received a proposition to hav the Bible read to those who desire it out of the regular school hours. A good beginning, Liberals. Go thou and do likewise.

Lowell, Mich. E. A. CHAPMAN.

A CARD.

Editor Lowell Journal: The following will explain why the question in reference to the use of bibles and the practice of religious ceremonies, which was laid on the table one year ago, was not called up at the annual school meeting Monday night:

We, the Liberals of Lowell, hav ascertained on the very best authority that it is a violation of law and the Constitution of our government to make religion a branch of study in our public schools contrary to the wishes of any individual who pays taxes and is a citizen of the United States. The Constitution guarantees equal rights, both civil and religious, and no law ever has been or can be established which will permit government employees or any other individuals to force against the wishes of the people the religion, Bible, or God of any sect upon ourselvs or children.

Therefore we announce it as our unalterable determination to prosecute any teacher or individual who reads any bible or givs instruction in any religion in our public schools. We will no longer beg for rights which this government guarantees. LIBERALS OF LOWELL.

ANOTHER CARD.

Editor Journal: We desire through the Journal to make a candid, respectful statement of facts and motivs in reference to our proposed action in the matter of imparting religious instruction in our public schools. We shall try this question on the principles of justice and equal rights, and not on the merits of any bible, sect, or creed. This government, we believe, is the supreme power, and stands solemnly pledged to protect all people of all denominations and beliefs in their equal, civil, and religious rights. No man, woman, or child is obliged to hav a religion or to indorse any creed, belief, or bible. We can believe in one, all, or none, as we please, and no man or power has the right to compel us or our children to accept any against our wishes. The Constitution says "no law shall ever be enacted regarding the establishment of any religion."

There is a wide diversity of beliefs in regard to religion and a future existence. There are many bibles and many beliefs. The government never has decided and never can decide which is right. Therefore when school boards or teachers, who are officers and employees of this government, decide which is right, they do it without authority and contrary to law.

The government has provided a school system in which the children of all sects can be educated—Atheists, Infidels, Spiritualists, Catholics, Protestants—and all alike pay taxes for the support of the same. Three-fifths of all the taxes are for the support of the schools. Those who desire their peculiar beliefs taught should, like the Catholics, start separate schools, and then the taxes should be divided. The schools are a part or arm of the government; the church is not, and never can be, till the Constitution is changed. James A. Garfield, in his letter of acceptance, says, "The separation of church and state should be absolute in all matters pertaining to taxation," and that "no public money should ever be appropriated for the support of sectarian schools."

We do not want the matter of religion decided by nor for our children till they are old enough to reason and decide for themselvs. It is unjust and not according to law for our neighbors or the employees and officers of this government to decide for and to force upon our children their peculiar beliefs, against our wishes. We do not propose to withdraw our children from the schools, as the Catholics hav done, to keep them from being instructed in what we regard as errors.

The question is not who is right or who is wrong, but it is right, it is justice. If we want our children to believe as the Methodists or Catholics do we will send them to their meetings or Sabbath-schools. Our firm belief is that they should not hav these matters decided for them. Wait till they get old enough to decide for themsevs. Teach them to be pure and "do right;" develop their reason, giv them knowledge, and then they will be able to choose the right without adopting the errors. "Do right" is the religion that should be taught in our public schools. If all would harmonize with this grand principle, this world would be far better. Jesus Christ taught it, Ingersoll teaches it, and it should satisfy all friends and followers of the "Golden Rule." All we ask is justice. We giv all we ask. We would deprive no one of their rights. We are doing as we would be done by; and knowing that we are right, that this government will sustain us, with "malice toward none" and friendship and justice for all, we again announce our fixed determination to hav this matter settled, and for all, by the tribunals of this government. Few people know that fifteen minutes of each day amounts to one twentieth of the entire school term. Yet it is a fact, and we think, when the matter has been duly considered, no one will be so unjust as to require this of our children against our wishes.

MANY LIBERALS.

"What Is Thought?"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In a recent number of THE TRUTH SEEKER I noticed an article with the above heading from the pen of our good Spiritual friend E. A. Chapman, whose articles on Liberalism I think are sound in the main, while his essays on Spiritualism are less interesting to me, though I read them all. Modern Spiritualism, like other isms, is taken by me for just what it is worth, and no more. I was a student in this school for about ten years, but failing to find anything in it that was a help to me, I dropped it, as I did my faith in the Christian scheme of salvation—though I think now that Spiritualism is a good long step out of that old superstition. What we want, it seems to me, is more unfoldment of thought from the region of causality and comparison; in other words, from the intellectual powers in front. Not that I would wish to undervalue spirituality, veneration, and hope, on top, but if we don't bring them under the leadership of those faculties in front of them they will most surely lead us into the fog. Therefore in order to build up to ourselvs a good, sound, healthy, and intelligent manhood, on which to base our Liberalism, we must think and reason for ourselvs individually, and thus get knowledge, and then be wise in the use we make of that knowledge; and this is the direct road to human progress and human happiness and a broader Liberalism.

But to return to my text—What is thought? Our friend Chapman says thought is simply a manifestation of intelligence. I guess our friend Chapman must look over this subject again, and see if he will not find that thought is simply a function of the brain, and always comports with the faculties that gave it birth. If it has its parentage in the intellectual, then, to the extent that those faculties hav been cultivated and unfolded, the thought will be a manifestation of intelligence, and no further. If they hav their origin in and from the back brain they may be everything else but intelligent. And so of the various divisions of the brain. Much of friend Chapman's thought, when writing on Spiritualism, has its parentage in those faculties I hav spoken of in the top head, without those in front being consulted sufficiently.

We will agree with Mr. Chapman that thought is not substance. Now comes his next proposition, that "intelligence is always identified with, therefore a part of, substance." Is this indeed true, that intelligence is substance—that is, matter—or is it truly and properly speaking a property of substance or matter?—the same as he says of walking, that it is a manifestation of the physical man, and is not substance.

In the winding up of this part of his article he says: "We are compelled, then, to conclude that within man is an individualized intelligence which is composed of substance, and we choose to call this the spirit, or real man, dwelling within its tabernacle of flesh. . . . Having now proved that man is a spirit, and that spirit is substance, we will now build on this, and show how the spirit manifests itself or produces thought." Now it may be that friend Chapman has made out his case, and proved that man is a spirit, and that spirit is a substance, but we fail to see it in just that light. I can understand his logic in regard to thought being simply a manifestation of matter, and is nothing in and of itself. On this he reasons like a scholar, which I reckon he is, and thus he has the advantage of his humble critic.

We take the same position in regard to intelligence, soul, spirit, and mind that our friend does in regard to thought, viz., that they are all void of matter or substance in and of themselvs, and like thought, as established by our friend Chapman, they are merely terms used to express a function of the brain. It is now a well-settled proposition by all well-informed and sound thinkers that the brain is the organ of the mind; that mind, spirit, and soul are synonymous terms; and that they all mean, as far as they mean anything, simply a function of the brain—the same as sight means the function of the eye, or as hearing means the function of the ear, or as walking means the use of our lower limbs. So we can see that walking is nothing of itself, as our friend truly says, but simply a term of speech we use to express the action of the lower limbs; that hearing is nothing of itself, but that it is a word we use to express the function of the ear; that light is nothing in and of itself, but is simply a word we use to express the function of the eye.

And just so with soul, spirit, and mind; they are all terms we use to express the function of the brain in its different unfoldments and manifestations. S. D. MOORE.

Adrian, Mich., Sept. 1, 1880.

W. S. BELL'S address is 38 Upton st., Boston, Mass.

(Continued from page 613.)

them to many of the halls and rooms and galleries I had visited and point out many of the marvels of beauty and art I had so much admired. I must confess, however, that I that morning had occasion to realize and regret that my early education had been so much neglected that I had not been taught a word of French. I truly envied the little street urchins who knew so much more than I did, that they could spin out yards of the coveted language.

On that occasion, as well as others, I deeply sympathized with the Englishman who once upon a time yielded to a daring spirit of enterprise, and visited Paris alone, without knowing a word of French. His sorrows were innumerable. He could find out nothing he wanted to, nor could he make his own miseries known. He many times bewailed his unhappy condition, and thought he must leave the country and go where he could understand and be understood. He thus mourned through the day, and thought many times how glad he would be could he only meet a person who could speak English. He also bewailed his unhappy condition in the dead hours of the night, when nearly every thing was still around him, and he felt even more lonely than through the day. "Oh," said he "I must leave this country where I can find no person who can speak the English language or where I can be understood; I must haste away to my own land, for I will surely die here of grief and vexation. Oh, that I could once again hear the English language spoken! how it would happify me! how it would soothe the anguish of my breast! I must take me at once to my dearly loved isle, where the only language in the world fit to be spoken is used. Yes, I must go where I can again hear English spoken." Just at that moment two cats on a roof in close proximity to his window broke out in the unearthly concerts or social caterwaulings for which the feline species are noted. It may well be supposed it was terrible to hear; but not so with that hapless man from Albion; he fairly leaped with joy. "Thank God," shouted he, "there is one being in this country that can speak the English language. Those sounds are familiar to me; I have heard them before. Yes, thank God, there is something here that can speak English."

I could easily hav taken a cab, said "Louvre" to the driver, paid him his franc and a half, and he would have set me down at the door, but I wished, Yankee fashion, to kill two birds with one stone—reach the Louvre and see the city also. I accomplished my purpose.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

An Appeal to the Freethinkers of Nebraska.

The time for action has arrived. In Kansas, Iowa, and Colorado the Liberals are wide awake, and organizing activ Leagues. In Kansas they hav a Liberal organization in each county and a Liberal League, while we hav but three Leagues in the state. Many Liberals ask, "Of what use to organize Liberal Leagues?" We answer, To preserve the religious freedom which you now possess; to transmit to your children this precious liberty, which was obtained for you with so much difficulty; to organize the Liberals in our state while society is yet new and progressing, and consequently making it much easier to organize now than it will be after the lines hav been drawn, and the people hav been committed on one side or the other of religious questions; and to be prepared to take part in deliberations of the National Liberal League Congress, which meets in Bismarck Grove, Kan., next Autumn.

The enemies of Freethought are well organized. They use your money to build churches and support their preachers; they tax you to carry on a work which you believe to be demoralizing; they denounce you as Infidels, and use every effort to make your children as superstitious as themselvs. Unless we are organized they will succeed and fasten upon us the chains of a religious despotism. They spend time and money to secure control of schools, society, and politics, and to make Nebraska an orthodox state. Will you wait till they succeed?

The National Liberal League is engaged in separating church and state; guaranteeing freedom of thought and speech; freeing the schools from sectarian control; taxing church property, and committing the nation to free thought. Do you think such a work needless? Note the attempt to pass a God-amendment to the United States Constitution; sectarian instruction in our public schools; the arrest of Freethought editors; the attempted suppression of Freethought journals; the attack on the Liberal regents and professors of our state University; and the rapid accumulation of untaxed church property.

The danger from religious despotism is no imaginary, but real danger. Organize before it is too late. See your Liberal friends, and, if possible, organize a Liberal society in your town. All can do something toward forwarding our grand movement for the regeneration and up-building of society. Send the names of all the Liberals in your county to any member of the State Executiv Committee. Those that cannot contribute money can spend time to forward the movement, and vice versa. Above everything else send any amount from twenty-five cents upward to L. W. Billingsly, Treasurer, to do necessary organizing work with.

Clayton F. Woods, Palmyra; Wm. E. Copeland, Omaha; L. W. Billingsly, Lincoln; V. C. Utley, Syracuse; Z. Shed, Fremont; Executiv Committee of N. L. L. of Nebraska.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE CONGRESS.

Its Fourth Annual Meeting, Held in Chicago.

The Fourth Annual Convention of the National Liberal League began its labors on Friday, 17th, at Hershey Hall, in accordance with a resolution adopted at the meeting held a year ago. By actual count there were 138 delegates present, among whom were the Hon. Elizur Wright, of Boston; Parker Pillsbury, of Vermont; A. L. Rawson, of New York; F. F. Follett, of Rockford; J. P. Mendum, editor of the Investigator, Boston; T. B. Wakeman and T. C. Leland, New York; Mrs. Amy Post, Rochester; Mrs. Lucy N. Colman, Syracuse; E. C. Walker, of Iowa; J. H. Burnham, Detroit, Mich.; and R. C. Spencer, Milwaukee.

Owing to the failure of some of the officers of the League to reach the city in time for a morning session, the formal gathering of the Convention was postponed until the afternoon.

The Congress was called to order at three o'clock in the afternoon by the Hon. Elizur Wright, who said:

The hour has arrived to which the League adjourned. This morning I was unhappily prevented from being present to greet you by a detention of the train. It is a great pleasure now to greet this assembly—to welcome them to the Fourth Congress of the National Liberal League. This association is one of perfect human liberty. Various as our opinions may be on a thousand subjects, we are united here in a League to make practical the self-evident truths on which the government of our republic is founded. [Applause.] It is for us to show that human charity of opinion only can make this world worth living in. [Applause.]

We must hav freedom of thought. On that all virtue, all human happiness, is founded. [Applause.] The slave can never be happy—whether it is merely his physical frame that is in bondage or his soul. His mind, the center of his consciousness, is really him or her, and every individual should hav the right of thought; and it is for the right of thought that we assemble here. And the first thing for us to consider is to accord to others all that we ask for ourselvs. [Applause.] I need not remind you of the great object for which our League was organized, nor of the means by which we expect to realize that object. It is the separation of church and state. In nine propositions we say distinctly what we mean; and when we go abroad and meet the leaders of the political parties we present to them these nine propositions, every one of which is founded in reason, appeals to the conscience; however we may differ from them or they from us in other things, on this they must agree with us if they are honest and free. But they are, unhappily, enslaved. Mental liberty is a thing which is only just spreading in this country, which has only just budded; and it is for us to develop the great germ till it becomes an overshadowing tree. [Applause.] On a later occasion I may wish to address you a little more at length, but I can't well do that until we complete our organization. We must hav in an assembly of this kind some definit order or we shall not get through with our business; we shall effect nothing.

In closing, the President suggested the appointment of Committees on Credentials and Business, in order that the League might know who were properly authorized delegates and proceed with whatever it had to do in an orderly, business-like manner.

Mr. T. B. Wakeman moved the appointment of a Committee on Credentials and Members, and that, on its report, the League further appoint Committees on Order of Business, Nomination of Officers, Platform and Resolutions, and Future Business. He also moved to add to the committees thus to be appointed the President of the League and "our well-known well-wisher and friend Col. Ingersoll [applause] as advisory member thereof."

The motion prevailed, and the President appointed Messrs. A. L. Rawson, H. L. Green, and F. F. Follett a Committee on Credentials.

The President said there were doubtless ladies and gentlemen present who were in the habit of addressing auxiliary Leagues and other assemblies in behalf of the League, and inquired if Mrs. Lake or Robert C. Spencer was present. Neither responded.

There were loud calls for Mr. T. B. Wakeman to make a speech, but he declined the invitation.

Mrs. Lucy N. Colman, of Syracuse, N. Y., hoped that the time would not be wasted, but that somebody would open the ball. She thought it impolitic for the Convention to call upon her, for she was a perfect firebrand, and always starting trouble. She believed the mission of the League was not only to proclaim freedom, but to act; not only willing to sacrifice others, but themselvs, on the altar of liberty. The Convention met to settle the question that men and women could say what they pleased and send through the mail just what they pleased. [Applause.] There should be no subject so sacred, so delicate, that men and women could not write upon it, and, having written on it, they should hav the right to send it where they pleased.

There was a woman present in the Convention who had written a book for which her publisher was put in jail, as was Bennett, their friend and co-worker. When the speaker was a girl the question of the sexual relations was kept concealed from her. It was left entirely alone to the discussion of the men. But times had changed. Women were discovering these things because they were the mothers of America, and, so far as she was concerned, she would talk on the subject when she pleased. She had been mobbed, but that made no difference. She would persevere in the exercise of her personal liberty. Look at the jails, poor-houses, hospitals, and other public institutions. They were what the preachers called the outgrowth of Christian civilization. She was glad they called them Christian, and she hoped they were filled with Christians.

But a new era had come. When she was a girl she read the Bible, and one text she always remembered, "It is not good for man to liv alone." She would amend it by making it read: "It is not good for men nor for women to liv alone. The one was necessary to the other." She was glad that the laws as they existed were the work of men. She was glad that no woman had a hand in making them. She did not believe that women alone could make better laws than men. The experience of both was needed to make good laws. The question of the sexual relation was the question of the hour, and when that question had been determined by the law produced by the j int labor of men and women, there would be an end of the obscenity laws. This law to put down the right to speak and write would then pass away. Many of those present undoubtedly remembered when the temperance movement began to denounce what is called alchoholic intemperance. Thirty years or so ago it was shocking for a church to open its doors to a temperance lecturer. Now they gloried in it and did it every day. But we had to encounter a greater evil than alcoholic intemperance. It was the evil of sexual intemperance. This was the question of the hour, and as soon as the horrible extent of the evil was understood then would come the beginning of the time when obscenity would be no more.

The speaker at this juncture called Mrs. Amy Post, of Rochester, to the platform and introduced her as the "original Abolitionist, woman suffragist, Spiritualist, Liberal Leaguer, and everything else."

Mrs. Post: Except speaker.

Mrs. Post was the recipient of many cheers.

H. L. Green, Chairman of the Executiv Committee, was called upon. He sympathized with the League and its objects. Said he:

The fathers intended this to be a free country, but it took a long war to make it free. Now there is another tyranny to be gotten rid of—the union of church and state. Churches are exempt from taxation, and the taxes thus lost are thrown back on the people. Protestants are thus compelled to support Catholic churches, and Freethinkers to support all kinds of churches. More than that, the Bible and the Lord's Prayer are introduced into the public school and I and all others are compelled to pay taxes to support this mummery, for it is nothing else. Church and state are also united in war, as was seen in the late Rebellion, where the people on one side paid the chaplains to pray for Jeff Davis and on the other side for Abe Lincoln, while the same chaplains skulked in the rear, abstaining from fighting, but coming out strong on the praying business.

While the hobbies of the members of the League are many, they can all unite on the one great and pressing question of freeing the country entirely from the dictation of the church, leaving every man to worship or not worship, pray or not pray, read this book or that book, go and hear whom he pleased, and giving perfect mental liberty to everybody. My own sister, for instance, holds and promulgates views with which I hav no sort of sympathy. But on this great subject of separation of church and state we are all united. Its justice is so apparent that nobody can oppose it, and it will cut alike on all classes. Christians argue that where they are in a majority they hav a right to hav the Bible read in schools. The Freethinkers, on the other hand, might claim with equal force the right to hav Paine's "Age of Reason" read in places where they were in the majority every morning on the opening of school. The only justice lies in entirely separating church and state and placing all on an equal footing. But it is said that the churches are God's property and ought not be taxed. Shouldn't God Almighty pay taxes on his own property, if that be the fact, just as well as the poor man? What we want is simple justo all, injustice to none.

The remarks were highly acceptable to the audience, who applauded vigorously.

Mr. Rawson, from the Committee, reported that representativs of eighty-two Leagues had passed in their credentials, but there were others present who were withholding the documents because they expected other delegates. He had also received twenty-five proxies. Some fifty Leagues had requested him to supply proxies, and he would be glad if persons willing to serve would report to him. There were in all two hundred and nine Leagues; about one hundred were represented.

The President announced the following committees:

Resolutions—T. B. Wakeman, Parker Pillsbury, Mrs. O. M. Hechtman, S. B. McCracken, Mrs. Amy Post.

Order of Business—T. C. Leland, Matthew Farrington.

Nominations—H. L. Green, E. C. Walker, Mrs. H. S Lake, Lucy N. Colman.

Future Work—R. C. Spencer, J. P. Mendum.

Messrs. Elizur Wright and Robert G. Ingersoll were appointed advisory members of all committees.

Mr. Woodhouse, of Iowa, moved to reconsider the vote by which Col. Ingersoll and President Wright were added to all the committees. While he had great respect and esteem for the gentlemen, he was entirely opposed to the principle of their being put as advisers to every committee.

Mr. Wakeman said there was no such thought or purpose; the object was, on the contrary, simply to honor those who had been serving them.

H. L. Green believed the President was capable of giving good advice. As Chairman of the Convention, he could not be one of the Committee, but he could giv it the benefit of his long experience. This same was also true of Col. Ingersoll. Both were towers of strength, and it was just and proper that they should be given the honorable position.

Mr. McCracken did not believe in making lords of any one. But Col. Ingersoll was recognized throughout the country as one of the leaders of free and progressiv thought, and for this reason he hoped the reconsideration would not prevail.

The President stated he would be glad to giv whatever advice he could. Had Col. Ingersoll been present, he would hav put him on the most important committee.

E. C. Walker, who fought the appointment of Col. Ingersoll on any of the committees on the ground that he did not want any advice until he asked for it, made a "big kick," and ordered the Secretary to erase his name as a member of the Committee on Nominations.

Mr. Leland announced that Mrs. Lake, of Iowa, would address the Congress in the evening on "After Liberalism, What?" and that she would be followed by Parker Pillsbury.

Mr. Green said he thought it would be well before adjourning to hav a kind of benediction. [Laughter.] He saw on the platform a reformed Methodist preacher from Michigan, the Rev. Mr. Burnham, and moved that, after hearing from him, the Congress take a recess until 8 o'clock in the evening, which was done.

FRIDAY EVENING SESSION.

The President called the Assembly to order at 8 o'clock. Mrs. H. S. Lake, of Iowa, was introduced, and said that the subject of her address was "After Liberalism, What?"

PARKER PILLSBURY.

Mr. Parker Pillsbury was the next speaker, and opened his speech with a graceful tribute to Mrs. Lake's address, in which he quoted largely from the Bible, particularly those passages describing how the young women engaged in the work of prophesying. After this he drew from his pocket a roll of manuscript and began to read.

The subject of the lecture was "Evolution in Morals and Politics," as illustrated in the history of the United States. The essay was devoted to the two themes of "Woman's Rights and Female Suffrage" and "God in the Constitution."

After a brief allusion to the doctrin of evolution, as described by Darwin, Huxley, and other philosophers, Mr. Pillsbury said there was in this country a National Board of Health which was trying to vaccinate the Constitution [laughter]—to inject a cowpox into it with the hope of eradicating imaginary evils; but the actual evils existing under the Constitution this National Board of Health studiously avoided. Although it was claimed to be a government of the people, for the people, by the people, yet one-half of the inhabitants, and the best half at that, were denied the right of suffrage and kept in a state of serfdom. Suppose women were people, a part of the people mentioned in the Constitution, why were they not elected as well as electors? [Cheers.] Women paid taxes and were liable to be hung, but they had no voice in the making of the laws. The doctrin of liberty said no taxes should be levied unless with the consent of the taxed. Had the consent been asked? Women were sometimes diabolically divorced as they were sometimes diabolically married. Women made no divorce laws. In some countries there were laws regulating houses of prostitution, to which many poor women were unwillingly driven because they could not earn enough to liv upon. These women were registered, but were their male visitors registered at the City Hall? In the city of Hamburg there were ten thousand licensed women of the town, yet they were obliged to produce certificates showing that they regularly attended church and partook of the sacrament. [Laughter.] These women of the town were subjected to occasional surgical examinations, but their male visitors were exempt.

Why was it that women were so treated? The hod-carrier got twice the salary of the skilled housemaid. The woman who suffered the pangs of maternity without the rites of the church was never forgotten. The man whose wife died could marry and use the funeral baked meats for the wedding feast. The woman whose husband died could not do so without being made the subject of satire and scorn. Women were taxed, but they had no voice in determining the amount of the taxes to be raised. If the Smith sisters of Glastonbury had the moral support of a Lafayette, as in the days of the Revolution long ago, would the tyrant man hav found his Lexington? [Cheers and laughter.]

Dr. Cummings, one of these doctors of divinity (and God help such divinity), had said that some Infidels had set up a claim to the right of protection in their belief. The good Doctor denied any right to such claim, and was in favor of crushing any such fellows attempting to overturn society like a viper. [Cries of "Shame!"] The viper-crushing had already begun. One victim had gone to Europe, he was sorry to say—sorry, because a trip to Europe reminded him too forcibly of the proverbial ministerial sore throat, of which he had never heard of so desperate a case but that a trip to Europe would cure it, provided the parish paid the expenses and supplied the pulpit during the minister's absence. [Great laughter.]

But why this talk about God in the Constitution? Certainly in fact, if not in form, he was already there; and woman, he supposed, by the grace of God and Garfield, was to be kept out, if possible. [Loud laughter.]

Mr. Pillsbury next turned his attention to the question of church taxation, pointing to the fact that in his own nativ state of Massachusetts one-eleventh of the entire taxation of the whole commonwealth was placed on the women of the state. What did the church know about hard times? God was rich, and his children seemed to be heirs to the estate quite before their father's death. [Great laughter.] Christianity ruthlessly plundered the people and picked their pockets of millions and millions of dollars every year for its own exclusiv use and benefit. Forty years ago this very month he began publicly and privately to warn this nation against impending peril as a just punishment for the crimes and cruelties of Southern chattel slavery. No word of his, no thunder tone of Garrison, no mellow eloquence from the golden lips of Wendell Phillips, no softer persuasion of woman's heart and voice availed. The church, the priesthood, both the then great political parties, every public religious denomination, every college and university, and especially every well-endowed theological seminary, was committed to slavery, and welcomed slaveholders to its pulpits and sacramental feasts, as well as to the public civil offices in the gift of the people. But the flash of cannon and columbiad, the peal and the appeal of millions of musketry, and the blood and the groans of hundreds of thousands of dead and dying young men availed at last and converted at least the North. Then who was right? Garrison, who was denounced as an Infidel all those thirty years, was he right or was he wrong?

"Do you remember," continued the veteran agitator, "when he appealed for a spot to stand on to plead the cause of the oppressed, and was denied every place available, and when he advertised that he would address the people from Boston Common? Do you remember who it was that sent him word, 'We hav a little room; it's a humble place, but the best we hav, and if you will accept it it is yours for anti-slavery lecture.' It was Abner Kneeland who made that response. [Great applause.] And Garrison and Kneeland from that day until slavery was abolished were only known as Infidels. God be thanked for that." [Great applause.]

But now the people were asleep again, and a worse than Southern slave power was clutching at the national heart-strings. [Applause.] Senator Edmunds, of Vermont, who was not long ago one of the aspirants for the Presidency when there was such a flood-tide of patriotism, and whole platoons of them were ready to come forward and serve the country for $50,000 per annum, introduced an amendment to the Constitution in 1878 favorable to the God-in-the-Constitution society, which indorsed him by resolution at its next meeting, and declared that the adoption of his amendment would settle forever the Christian character of the Constitution. That amendment was lost in the Senate by only four votes, all the votes against it being Democratic, and all in its favor Republican- [Applause] "You needn't tell Gen. Hancock and Gen. Garfield anything about this," continued the speaker, "because that might express a preference for one or the other of them." [Laughter.] The saints presumed that the sinners had no rights that they were bound to respect. Their authority, as they asserted, reached up to the great white throne. But it was time the people took the part of plaintiff, and he, for one, proposed to commence a suit forthwith.

Was it not as great a sin to enslave ourselvs as to enslave anybody else? It seemed to him that freedom was as much a duty as was penitence or prayer. [Applause.] We were told ten thousand times that the negro didn't know enough to be free, but the white voter to day didn't know too much to vote himself a slave and execute the law of his own making. The state supported the church for votes, and the church ministered to the state when it wanted indulgences. Sunday legislation, Bible in the public schools, God in the Constitution, non-taxation of church and other religious property—in such mills the people were grinding themselvs to powder—in the name of a sorcerer called legislation, were grinding themselvs to powder in the name of religion and for the honor of their God. He spoke of the construction of non-church taxation laws. Men bought valuable city lots and reared on them cheap little shanty churches, which, by the solemn mockery of a dedication to God, were exempted from the visits of the assessor and tax-gatherer; holding such property until the growth of the city and the rise of real estate enabled them to realize fortunes on the very smallest investments. He hoped a man from Milwaukee would tell about the acres upon acres there, where half a-dozen buried bodies kept all the devils and tax-gatherers off that holy ground. He spoke of Tremont Temple, which, however, since 1873 had been taxed for $100,000—only one-sixth of its appraised value, and not more than a tenth of its actual value. Adverting to a meeting of Abolitionists there, in honor of John Brown, he said that the death of Brown, executed by the government and religion, was more heroic than anything since the tragedy enacted at Mount Calvary.

Churches escaped taxation, while the humble homes of widows and orphans had to pay their share of the public burden, and some of them were sold every year by the tax-gatherers. Town, county, state, and nation must annually take their terrible toll of all available taxable property, from rich and poor, from men and women, all alike; yet lands and houses stamped by the Christians' signet, millions on millions in cash amount, were with few exceptions billeted toll-free, fare-free, tax-free, all down the ages, under the monstrous pretense that they all belonged to an invisible and unknowable God. But the hour for the people will come at last. They might wait long, but it would come. It came in France less than a hundred years ago. "Let the nations, let this nation, remember it well, for it knows not yet the full meaning of that dread catastrophe." If it did, it would not be so soon entering on a return to slavery. We never emancipated the slaves through justice nor through mercy. It was to save ourselvs. They were our forlorn hope. By their blood and their valor our nationality was healed. Jefferson, Washington, Patrick Henry, were less enslaved than was the wife of the President of the United States at the present hour. If our law-makers, whatever their party name, were such vassals to any foreign power as their wives and mothers were to them, they would wage warfare to be free, and deluge both hemispheres in human gore. And human blood might yet be the price of woman's emancipation, as it was of the emancipation of the slave. "Yea, and it may—I wish I did not feel impelled to say it must—be be the price of our deliverance, too, from the dominating despotism of a merciless religion and its remorseless priesthood. And blood will continue to be the lawful tender for liberty at every counter, till tyrants temporal and tyrants spiritual shall learn to know that the gods made the human soul volcanic; and wo to that tyranny that dares uncap its deepest fires!" [Applause.]

After the reading of several announcements the Convention adjourned till ten o'clock Saturday morning.

[A reliable report of further proceedings not having reached us in season for this issue, the remainder will be given next week.—ED. T. S]

Final Resignation of Mr. Chainey from His Church.

A temporary injunction restraining Mr. Chainey from preaching in his church till the September term of court, when arguments on both sides could be heard, was granted last July. At the term just held a perpetual injunction has been granted, and Mr. Chainey is now churchless. He has been driven by due process of law from Unitarianism into Rationalism. He now proposes to preach to the broad church of the world, which never uses injunctions, and will receive calls from all who wish his services. The following is his letter of final resignation:

Sept. 21, 1880.

To the Trustees and Members of the Church of the Unity, Evansville, Ind.,

DEAR FRIENDS: What was foreseen has come to pass. The church of the Unity is no more. Though hitherto the fresh, warm blood of progress and the breath of liberty filled it with life and painted it with beauty, so that it won the hot, passionate love of our hearts, it has now been touched with the icy hand of death. Buried in the cold, damp vault of a law court it has been resurrected a petrified orthodox corpse. The law may hav called for a pound of flesh, but the higher law of eternal truth and justice stood by and said, You must not shed one drop of blood. The court has been deaf to the cry awarding the pound according to its letter, and so become the murderer of a church. Our beloved, the pride of our hearts, cherished with our holiest enthusiasm, is dead. Many of us see no beauty in her that we should desire her any more. I hav no right to dictate to any one else, but my own conscience, were I simply a member, would compel me to be done with a church that had thus blindly made a compact with the grave. As a teacher I know that I would not occupy its desk if all the courts in the land should command me to do so while that decision remained in force, and as it is to be perpetual I suppose that means forever and the day afterward. You must bear with my earnest words. I call you to witness that whenever I hav stood in its pulpit I hav been in earnest, preaching that which to me appeared to be true, unmoved by any fear or favor of man, gods, or devils. I would ask you all to go over in your minds my relation with the society for the past three years. I came to you with the express understanding that I was to be entirely free. I hav stayed with you under financial embarrassment when far better support invited me elsewhere, simply because with you I thought I could be always true to my highest thought and noblest aspirations. You know that I hav always proclaimed sincerity to be the essence and shield of all virtue, public and private. I hav shown this to be the heart-blood of Jesus, Buddha, Confucius, and all the truthful, noble souls of history. From the beginning you that were members of the society when I commenced my ministry encouraged me to swell your numbers with those of all shades of opinion, extending them equal rights with yourselvs. Almost all who hav come to the church under my teaching believe in this principle. You hav violated the most sacred rights of hospitality and good faith by inviting them to a feast of life and then filling their plates with poisoned food. Luckily, the label has slipped into the dish and they are warned in time. You hav, in spite of the request of a majority, obtained a decision from a court of law that makes it a crime for me to continue their teacher save with the sacrifice of the property they hold in common with you. The decision of the court that the members be forever restrained from altering the constitution, while the constitution givs them that right, renders the whole proceeding a farce. Any action after that was unnecessary. You all know that I would never consent to be for a moment the pastor of an orthodox church. Orthodoxy is a principle. It means stagnation. Unity church by being made stationary has become a stagnant pool of death. I hav, ever since I first became your pastor, done my level best to destroy every orthodox church. I hope to liv to see them become heaps of confusion—a shame and a reproach to all who sustain them—houses of intellectual and moral ill-fame that blast with their pestilence and poison all who go near them. Hence I hope the church of the Unity will be numbered with them.

I write these words hissing hot out of my heart to help on the good work. I shall be more than glad to see any effort to maintain that a corpse is a live, healthy body prove a failure. I assure you that if ever you invite a man to play that fool's part my words will come back to you. They will echo from the silent walls, and gleam at you from the motto over the desk, "We seek the truth in love." Remembering them, his will sound hollow and heartless. You will say,

"Hark from the tomb a doleful sound."

O my church, the beloved of my heart and the object of three years of untiring and unstinted devotion, I could weep for you. It is most sad that you, too, after having borne the burden of the reproach for daring to be a real lamp of intellectual life, sending your bright beams far and near, must now go to join the already overcrowded ranks of the blind leaders of the blind. In these words, I wish to blame no one.

Orthodoxy is a disease. There is plenty of it in Evansville to make it catching. I remember with the warmest feelings of gratitude the unfailing devotion of all. It is none the less one of the tragedies of life that this curse of orthodoxy, no matter in what form it appears, whether Catholic, Methodist, or Unitarian, does blast many of the fairest flowers of friendship in our garden of love. Having been loyal to you under fear of want, you hav yet in your blindness called me traitor, turned all my honor into contempt, my unchanging, sincere dealing with you into fickleness, and thus you who were once to me noble hav in your narrowness and failure to see into the large spiritual meanings of life become ignoble. I speak this only of those who hav failed to see the mission and opportunity of Liberalism. To you who do see it I turn with the heart's and mind's full honor. I am unspeakably sorry that this blow will for a time suspend outward activity. It would hav been a great pleasure for me to hav labored with you in trying to turn this defeat into a victory. But duty to myself and a far larger opportunity to be useful calls me elsewhere. Where I hav spoken the word of life to one in Evansville I hope soon to be able to reveal it to a thousand.

Though I must now again tender my resignation, and this time beyond repeal, I shall stand ready to giv you any assistance in my power. I hope to come to you all constantly in the written word if no longer in the spoken. If fortune favors me I will do much to help to destroy the evil influence of this disaster.

If you would accept of my advice it would be to withdraw from a church where the words "freedom of thought and right of private judgment," as written in the constitution, hav become a fraud and a mocking lie. Strive together to adorn your lives with all truth, beauty, and goodness, and in the opportunities of social life and intercourse with others to do what you can to free them from the superstition of belief in the supernatural and the degradation of worshiping a phantom. Do not be discouraged. Theology, the barbarian's interpretation of the universe, must go down before science, the interpretation of the civilized man. Every sign of the times is hopeful. The eternal truth has ordered Christianity to quit some time since, and all the courts in the land cannot keep it from going when its time is fully come. The gods must go down and man come to his own, for the kingdom of man is at hand.

Though sundered by space, I shall still feel your love and truth, and shall ask for no higher joy than to do so. Our cause is the same, and so must our love and purpose ever mingle and flow together. The future will justify us. The years speed swiftly on, but many of us will see great things before the last sweet sleep of death shall smooth our couch with the soft hand of eternal rest.

Yours always and afterward, GEORGE CHAINEY.

Miscellaneous.

The Michigan Camp-Meeting.

The First Annual Camp-Meeting and Semi-Annual Convention of the Michigan State Association of Spiritualists and Liberalists was held at Lansing, on the Central Fair Grounds, commencing on Friday, August 20th, and closing on Monday, August 30th. No better location could hav been secured for holding a camp-meeting, Lansing being a central point and a convenient railroad center, and the Central Fair Grounds in every way arranged for the comfort and convenience of as many as might wish to attend. A rain on Thursday laid the dust and put the grounds in excellent condition, and on Friday and Saturday people were seen gathering from all parts of the state and adjoining states, and making such preparations as showed that they had come to stay.

Everything was done by the Committee of Arrangements and Reception Committee to make everybody comfortable and happy and feel at home. The large and commodious tent owned by the Association was erected and devoted exclusivly to the use of mediums. Another large tent was arranged expressly for dancing, where many feet beat time to the music afternoons, from four o'clock, and many evenings during the meeting. Refreshment rooms were provided on the grounds, also lodgings for all who preferred stopping on the grounds to going to a hotel. The Everett House seemed to be headquarters, and a free buss was kept running constantly to convey guests to and from the grounds.

The regular exercises commenced on Sunday forenoon, August 22d. The meeting was called to order by L. S. Burdick, President. The morning was fine, and the exercises were conducted in the grove. The exercises were opened with a song by Miss Agnes L. Slade, niece of Dr. Henry Slade, the world-renowned independent slate-writing medium. Miss Slade has a fine voice, which shows rare culture and great powers, and her music, both vocal and instrumental, was well executed, and added much to the harmony of the occasion. The hour for conference before the regular lecture was all occupied and made unusually interesting. The conference meeting is to the Spiritualists what the class meeting is to the Methodists, and givs such opportunities as are given in no other way for an exchange of thought, and are considered by many by far the most interesting part of the camp-meeting.

Bro. P. C. Mills, inspirational speaker, formerly of Massachusetts but of late pioneering in Michigan, gave the address in the morning, taking for his subject, "What Shall We Do to be Saved?" J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw City, gave the address for the afternoon, after the usual conference, taking for his subject, "Halfway Houses," which he handled in his usual interesting and instructiv manner. The evening session opened with a song by the Lansing choir. An invocation by Dr. Slade was followed by an address by Mrs. Sarah Graves, of Grand Rapids, taking, as she said, "that subject of all subjects, Spiritualism." She spoke with zeal and earnestness, and was attentivly listened to.

Monday forenoon was devoted entirely to conference. In the afternoon M. Babcock, of St. Johns, spoke upon, "The inconsistencies and adsurdities contained in the Bible." His style is peculiarly his own. His remarks called forth great applause.

Mrs. E. C. Woodruff arrived on Monday evening and addressed the audience on Tuesday morning, after the usual conference. C. H. Dunning, of Marcellus, having arrived, greeted the audience with a song, which closed the morning session. Dr. P. T. Johnson, of Coldwater, inspirational speaker, gave the afternoon address, and closed with a very fine inspirational poem. There were two sessions each day, morning and afternoon, and on Thursday, Friday, and Sunday there were evening sessions held. The other evenings were devoted to seances and dancing.

The speakers present who gave regular lectures were P. C. Mills, J. H. Burnham, M. Babcock, Dr. P. T. Johnson, Giles B. Stebbins, Charles A. Andrus, Dr. A. B. Spinney, Mrs. E. C. Woodruff, and Mrs. S. Graves. The weather was very unfavorable on Wednesday, and somewhat interfered with the exercises, but the time was occupied mostly by the mediums. Seances were held, and the day pleasantly and profitably spent. Thursday afternoon J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw, again addressed the audience, taking for his subject "The Relativ Value of Man's and Woman's Share in Life." The subject was well handled, and called forth frequent applause.

Giles B. Stebbins gave an address in the evening upon the same subject which Bro. Burnham spoke upon in the afternoon.

Friday morning Bro. Babcock of St. Johns again entertained the audience in his usual interesting and amusing style, after which he offered his picture "for sale at auction to the highest bidder for the benefit of the Association," which created considerable merriment.

Mrs. E. C. Woodruff, of South Haven, was the first for the afternoon after the usual conference, and was followed by Bro. Stebbins on "The Progress of Spiritualism."

Friday evening the rostrum was occupied by Dr. Henry Slade, the independent slate-writing medium. After a song and an invocation he gave an outline of his life and experiences from boyhood, relating many scenes and incidents relativ to his mediumship, which were both amusing and interesting, so much so that he spoke for an hour and a half, but no one seemed to note the lapse of time.

A portion of the conference hour preceding the Doctor's address was made very interesting by Rev. Mr. Wilbur, of Greenville, an Adventist, who came among us in the early part of the week. He said he was impressed to come to this camp-meeting, as he now firmly believed, by the spirit of his father. He was firm in his own belief, but thought he would come and see what the Spiritualists did teach and believe. After a few days, he said, "If the Spiritualists hav anything better than I hav I am willing to accept it." And, said he, "I am here to-night to tell to this audience that I hav found something better than my former faith, for now I hav knowledge, and I am here to testify to the proofs which hav been given to me." He said he had received test after test through different mediums on the grounds, and this afternoon he had been to see Dr. Slade, and, said he, "the proofs given me through him of the presence of my father and other friends now in spirit-life leave no room for doubt." He related how a lady in the room had her handkerchief tied in a knot by unseen hands, and after seeing that done he had made this mental request, "If my father's spirit is present, will he tie my handkerchief in like manner?" Very soon after, he said, "I felt a heavy hand placed on my knee, and, looking down on my knee, there lay my handkerchief; it had been taken from my pocket and tied as I had mentally requested;" and holding it up before the audience, he said, "There it is, and I shall never untie it." He said, "For the last few weeks I hav been at Fowler preaching against Spiritualism, and now the next thing I do will be to go back there and try and undo the wrong and injustice I hav done, for I am fully convinced of the reality of spirit communion and the truths of Spiritualism."

Saturday morning the friends were greeted by Giles B. Stebbins, who gave the first address, and was followed by Mrs. Hubbard, a medium and inspirational speaker, who gave a short address.

The afternoon was occupied by Bro. Babcock, after a short original poem by Mrs. Bird, of Lansing, on "Inspiration."

Saturday evening session was devoted to the mediums, trance, and inspirational speakers exclusivly.

Sunday morning, August 26th, after the usual conference hour, Bro. Stebbins gave the first address, and was followed by Charles A. Andrus, of Flushing, speaking from the subject, "What Are We? or, Physical and Practical Religion."

Sunday afternoon the usual conference was omitted. S. B. McCracken made a fifteen-minute speech, and Mrs. Woodruff followed on the subject, "The Question of Life and Death." Charles A. Andrus spoke on "Mental Science"—those three occupying the hour.

Bro. J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw, gave an address, taking for his subject, "The Church is Growing Better," a statement which, he said, would scarcely be accepted by the majority present, but which was clearly proved by his argument, which was deep and logical.

After Bro. Burnham's speech the audience was requested to present subjects for a poem by the Scotch poet, Frazier, given through Bro. Andrus. Two subjects were given, "The Universal Brotherhood of Man," and "The Life and Character of Thomas Paine." A poem was given on each subject, which called forth great applause.

Sunday evening Dr. A. B. Spinney occupied the rostrum, and gave the closing address. He was expected to be present and giv the opening address on Sunday morning, August 22d, but an engagement at the Cassadaga Camp-meeting prevented his doing so. He took for his subject, "What Are We, Whence Came We, and Whither Are We Going?" He spoke for over an hour, and the appreciation of the audience was shown by their marked attention, deep interest, and frequent applause. His discourse closed the regular lecture course.

A business meeting was held on Monday morning, at which the following resolutions were offered:

Resolved, That this Association will accredit one or more delegates to the Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League, to be held in Chicago, Illinois, on the 17th, 18th, and 19th of September, 1880; and that J. H. Burnham, of Saginaw City, M. J. Matthews, Detroit, and Mrs. E. C. Woodruff, South Haven, be appointed such delegates.

This resolution was adopted. It was also

Resolved, To hold a State Quarterly Meeting the last Friday, Saturday, and Sunday of November, at a place to be designated by the Executiv Board.

The place for holding the next Annual Convention was also left in the hands of the Board to decide.

At a special meeting of the executiv officers of the State Association, held in Detroit on Tuesday, July 20, 1880, said meeting being called for the purpose of considering the resignation of the President, Dr. A. B. Spinney, which was tendered July 1, 1880, there were present Dr. A. B. Spinney, President; Miss J. R. Lane, Secretary, Detroit; L. S. Burdick, Kalamazoo; Hon. J. H. White, Port Huron, Directors. On motion, the resignation of the President, Dr. A. B. Spinney, was accepted, and L. S. Burdick, the Director having the shortest time to serve, was thereby made President until the next annual election of officers in March, 1881. On motion, Dr. A. B. Spinney was appointed Director to fill vacancy till the next annual election of officers. The following committees were also appointed to serve each in their respectiv capacity until such time as the Board shall appoint others in their place:

Committee on Organization, Revision of Principles, Constitution, and By-Laws: Chairman, J. H. Burnham, Saginaw City; Daniel Earle, Plainville; E. Chipman, Nashville; Mrs. M. A. Jewett, Lyons; Mrs. L. A. Pearsall, Disco.

Committee on Literature: Chairman, M. Babcock, St. Johns; E. A. Chapman, Lowell; J. Straub, Dowagiac; Mrs. E. A. N. Rich, Jackson; Mrs. A. E. Sheets, Grand Ledge.

Committee on Publication of Records: Chairman, Miss J. R. Lane, Detroit; M. J. Matthews, Detroit; Mrs. H. M. Smeadley, Kalamazoo; A. A. Hitchcock, Battle Creek; Mrs. M. E. French, Greenville.

Committee on Resolutions: Chairman, J. M. Potter, Lansing; W. M. Wooster, Decatur; S. B. McCracken, Detroit; Mrs. C. M. Putnam, Nashville; Mrs. Amy Harding, Milford.

Committee on Finance: Chairman, Mrs. R. A. Sheffer, South Haven; Dr. J. V. Spencer, Battle Creek; Mrs. J. E. Corbett, Detroit; J. M. Haslett, Charlotte; Mrs. Gertrude Merrill, Lansing.

Committee on Memoirs: Chairman, Charles A. Andrus, Flushing; Frank J. Luick, Otisco; E. H. Crane, Colon; Mrs. S. H. Taylor, Buchanan; Mrs. S. Graves, Grand Rapids.

Committee on Seances and Mediums: Chairman, Giles B. Stebbins, Detroit; J. P. Whiting, Milford; Alfred Heyser, Kalamazoo; Mrs. H. Titus, Detroit; Mrs. Edwin Weston, Lapeer.

Committee on Delegates: Chairman, C. H. Dunning, Marcellus; N. P. Wadsworth, Lapeer; S. C. Allen, Flint; Robert Baker, Vicksburg; Mrs. Mary McCain, Milford.

Committee on Music: Chairman, A. A. Whitney, Battle Creek; Dr. A. W. Edson, Lansing; Levi Wood, Kalamazoo; Mrs. F. E. Spinney, Detroit; Mrs. E. Towers, Mattawan.

The Committee on Memoirs, C. A. Andrus, Chairman, reported on Sunday, Aug. 29th, the following Spiritualists and Liberalists who had passed to spirit life since the annual meeting in March last: Mrs. Belle Wright, Spiritualist, of Lowell, Mich., passed over in May. Mrs. Dr. Nesbit, of Ionia, a clairvoyant and magnetic healer, Spiritualist, passed away July 17th. Mrs. John Hall, of Carlyle, in July. Cooper Davis Caswell, Eaton Rapids, in April. Timothy Snow, of Battle Creek. Mrs. Jane Gooding, of Alpine. John Weston, youngest son of Edwin Weston, of Lapeer, July 3rd, aged 13 years. Mrs. Edgar, of Lansing, Spiritualist, passed away in June. Brother N. B. Starr, spirit artist, June 18th, from his home in Port Huron. John C. Dexter, formerly of Ionia, passed over from his home in Evart, July 21st. He was an outspoken Freethinker and worker in the ranks of Liberalism, also one of the earliest Spiritualists in Michigan. Mrs. Hattie True, daughter of John C. Dexter, passed over from her home in Evart, June 28th. John D. Zimmerman, of Union City, passed to the higher life but a short time since. Bro. Andrus made some very appropriate and feeling remarks relativ to the departed ones, dwelling at some length upon the noble, pure, and good Bro. Starr and his wonderful gift of mediumship. Bro. Stebbins followed with good words for all, but of Bro. Dexter he said he was a great and good man who to be known was to be loved, respected, and admired, one of the true and noble workers in the cause of Spiritualism, and what was true of him was also true of Bro. John D. Zimmerman. He paid a high and noble tribute to the memory of both departed brothers.

The exercises during the entire meeting were varied and very interesting. The music and singing was of a superior order. Miss Agnes L. Slade and C. H. Dunning, two very fine independent singers, were present during the entire meeting and sang whenever called upon, to the gratification of all who heard them. The Lansing choir also did good service and rendered some very fine music. Several volunteer singers also assisted in singing, among them was Mrs. M. Babcock, of St. Johns. She also gave some recitations, "The Death of Little Joey," and "The Gambler's Wife," which were well received. There were also several poems worthy of mention, especially those of Mrs. Bird, of Lansing, and Mrs. Bailey, of Battle Creek. Among the many interesting questions propounded and discussed during the conferences were the following: "What are we made of and what are we to be in the life to come, or the continuation of this life? If we are immortal, hav ever existed and ever will exist; do we in the future life retain a consciousness of this life? If so, why do we not retain a consciousness of the previous existence? What has Christianity done for the world? What has Spiritualism done for the world? What shall we do with our mediums?" They were responded to by brothers Burnham, Babcock, Butler, Mills, Woodworth, Bigelow, Wilbur, Mack, Stebbins, Andrus, McCarty, McPherson, Johnson, Marvin, Darling, Potter, Matthews, Harrison, Champion, and sisters Graves, Woodworth, Hubbard, Dunham, Parker, and others, in such a manner as to awaken the attention of thinking minds to these all-important subjects. Altogether the meeting was a very interesting and successful one; successful, notwithstanding the many predictions to the contrary and the very unfavorable weather which prevailed a greater part of the time, many persons in the immediate vicinity driving through a drenching rain to and from the grounds. There were good audiences from first to last, all parts of the state being represented in a greater or lesser degree, and a lively interest manifested throughout the entire meeting. The most perfect harmony prevailed, and as the friends separated the "good-byes" were said with the feeling that "a good time" was "the verdict rendered," by every one present.

MISS J. R. LANE, Secretary.

---

MR. THOMAS A. EDISON contributes an article to the October number of the North American Review, in which he states that he has succeeded in making the electric light entirely practicable for all illuminating purposes. He shows the advantages of electricity over gas, and explains how his system is to be introduced. He comments upon the unfavorable opinions that hav been passed upon his work, and says that similar judgments were pronounced upon telegraphy, steam navigation, and other great discoveries. Other articles in the October number of the Review are: "The Democratic Party Judged by its History," by Emery A. Storrs; "The Ruins of Central America," by Désiré Charnay; "The Observance of the Sabbath," by Rev. Dr. Leonard Bacon; "The Campaign of 1862," by Judge D. Thew Wright; "The Taxation of Church Property," by Rev. A. W. Pitzer; and "Recent Progress in Astronomy," by Prof. E. S. Holden.

A Mealy and Toothsome Sermon.

Dearly belubbed, highly perfumed, an' regenerated sinners an' sinneresses: I'se had pow'ful 'flictions rained on dis head since las' I 'spounded to you an' pounded de pulpit in de same strong breff—since I spoke ob de lamb an' lammed de hymn book out'n its kiver in de same sneeze, an' at las' worked way on to de tooty-toothy, an' out ob de sarmen, an' into de firstly class in de preparatory apartment ob preperspiration an' fevah. In de secluded bustle ob de parsonage I done wrassled wid dat fevah, an' wore him out, but den, alas! dar came a relapse in de shape ob dat deep set an' mechanical affliction—de lockjaw.

De way ob de transgressor am mighty rough, suah, as your belubbed pastor duly found out to his cost. When de fevah was a humpin ob itself into de dim pas', an' I was convalescing a gentle convalesce, a blue-backboned an' magenta-nosed Presbyterian he-pelican handed me a volume wherewith to beguile de weary hours.

Dat's de way he 'spressed it.

O, how I longs to beguile his weary hours wid a pick handle! But I am a wanderin' from de subjeck. I took dat book. I perused aloud. I red jes' a half page, an dar was only sixteen words on de whole page, an' dey was all in one sentence. I jes' got half ways froo de eighth word when crick! snap! crick! went my old jaw, an suah as glory, I done cotch de lockjaw a readin' dat 'ligious essay fur de young, by dat howlin' Boston dervish, Joe Cook. I thought it my bounden duty to 'splain de cause ob your pastor's absence.

Prob'ly dar aint much ob a moral to dis, an prob'ly dar am. In lookin' at it in de achin' light ob 'sperience I am led to reflect dese noble reflexes: Firstly, dat your pastor nigh a'most busted his jaw while tryin' for to read Joe Cook's telescopic words; an' secon'ly, dat if any ob my flock goes an' do likewise in de face ob dar pastor's sad 'sperience dey ought fur to hab dar backs busted. An if dat don't fix dem den cave in dar craniums, for dey's gwine to grow crazy suah, readin' sich trash.

Now, belubbed, skin your eyes up heah to de feed box, while your shepherd chucks out dis mealy an' toothsome tex':

"An' he call unto him his 'sciples, an'say to dem, Verily I say unto you, dat dis heah poor widder has slung mo' in dan all dey which hav slung into de treasury.

"For all dey done cast in ob deir 'bundance, but she ob her want did cast in all dat she had, even all her libin'."

Doan yon know, my guileless hearers, dat dis heah tex' has bin de corner-stone ob ebery one ob de hide-boun' Christian churches? Doan you know dat more misery and poverty spring from dis dan from all de laws 'nacted by civilized man? Doan you know dat de white chokered and livered, black-gowned and hearted wolves watchin' over Israel's superstition-stuffed an' soft-pated lam's think ob nuffin but takin' ob deir fleeces under de shade ob dis yer tex? Doan you know dat dey keep a watchin' de lam's eben down to deir dyin' beds, an' take deir las' cent for de Lord, an' let deir children run loose in de streets, to finally lan' in jails or de poorhouse, an' sometimes for which dese chosen ones ob God am 'sponsible—dey fly to etarnity, not on angel's wings, but at de end ob a rope? Doan you know all dis? Of course you duz. Ain't it monstrus! Jess think ob God's own son, one-third son, one-third father, dove-tailed togedder by de boss ghost—jess think ob dis immortal standin' by an' seein' a poor widow, a Judea washwoman, probably, giving up her last nickel to de gospel shop, an' he not only not stopping her, but wanting others to follow her example an' go broke on de gospel game. An ain't it a shame to know dat for nearly 2,000 years de gospel sharpz hav been playin' de same ole game on Zion's flats wid dis ole widow tex' invariably turned up for trumps. See de different combinations enterin' into de game: Fust dey try de ole mite dodge by passin' de sasser or sendin' de sisters 'roun', or perhaps de boss sheppard hisself will tackle dem outright for a cash donation. Den dey luf up on dem for a few days, when up dey springs a dance for de church, but dey calls it a fair. Den cums festivals for de Lord, Jarley's wax works for Jesus, Mother Goose for the Sunday-school, tableaux for God, lawn parties, donation parties, candy pullings, maple sugar shindigs, strawberry fiascuz, peanut barbecues, etc., etc., for de young man wid de knock knees, watery eyes, large feet, fifty cent spectacles, a hump-backed second Richard, another Uriah Heep in broadcloth and white choker, an' who is styled the sheppard of the flock.

They are not only fleeced, but if they remain in the pens of Zion any length of time they must also submit to de skinning process.

But, belubbed, de trail am growin' broad between Zion's tumble down shocks, an' dose whose eyes am bein' opened is a hoofin' it to de spacious and cool retreats in Liberal lan'. Let 'em come. We want all de good and pure, whether dey hav a million or only ten cents, and dat borrowed. Now, I must close, I reckon you all agrees wid me in de summin' up which is dat widout money de church falls. It is dar norf star, dar rudder, dar compass, dar eberything. In dis church de sassar aint a gwine to be passed roun' to-day, cause dar's no 'cessity for it. We is out ob debt, don't owe a cent, an' consekently don't want to beg from you. We isn't got down yet to dat dirty lebel where folks take de very last kale seed a poor lone woman haz an' den go roun' braggin' 'bout it. No, we isn't gwine to pass de sasser. So dose little boys who brought along money for de benefit ob dar pastor, can buy taffy wid it on dar way home, for it is better dat one boy keep his nickel for candy and gum, dan for free fousand young unz to come up to de contribushun sasser wid ole buttons, bankrupt beer tickets, an' broken brass candlestick shove-ups.

While your pastor is puttin' on his ulster an' a lookin' for an absent overshoe, you will please jine together in a singin' dat noble an' scrumptious ole hymn, startin' off as thusly:

Sweet hour of prayer, sweet hour of prayer.
When fust I heard ole deacon swear.
An' bid me at his canting throne
Lay all my hard-earnt kale seed down.
In seasons when I longed for beef.
He said the church must hav relief.
An' then I've heard him rant and tear.
Then lift his voice in sweetest prayer.

Sweet hour of prayer, my God I view.
. . . . . .
You's dismissed. I've found dat obershoe.

The Fable about Abraham and his God.

The false preaching about Abraham's faith has resulted in great harm to thousands of poor, pitiable, deluded creatures, who hav imagined that God desired them to giv some evidence of their faith in the God of Abraham. The case of Charles F. Freeman, of Pocasset, serves to illustrate the evil of preaching such nonsense. Freeman had heard a great deal about Abraham's bosom, and was told time and time about Abraham's faith. So he honestly imagined that God wanted him to sacrifice his child, the same as he wanted Abraham to roast Isaac. He determined to giv an evidence of his faith. So he takes his little child, believing that God would save it, just the same as Isaac was saved, by the cry of "Stay thy hand, for now I know that thou fearest God." (He didn't know before.)

Now if this account about saving Isaac is true, why, I ask, didn't God save little Edith by crying, "Stay thy hand, Freeman!" What a picture for a God to gaze at! A mother and father on their knees, praying and begging that God would direct them as to their duty, and that they might make no mistakes. Did God answer their prayer? and if not, why?

And there lay the innocent little child, unconcious of the terrible fate awaiting her. But where, oh, where were the guardian angels that are said to watch over sleeping little children? It would seem that they were off duty just at the time little Edith most needed them. There were no angels and no God to help that sweet little child. And yet we are told that God could hav saved this innocent little child just as easily as raising his little finger if he had wanted to. I don't believe it. And I don't believe that God ever saved Abraham's son in the manner described in the Bible.

After the prayer, the mother holds the lamp, and the father, grasping the knife in his upraised hand, stands ready to strike the fatal blow. But he waits and waits, to see if God wouldn't say to him, as to Abraham, "Stay thy hand, Freeman!" But God refused to call. He preferred the work to go on; so the father plunged the cruel knife into the heart of his little innocent babe. She opened her eyes and said, "O papa!" and placing her little hand over the wound she died almost instantly.

Now I want to say right here that I hav no respect for any God or being who, having the power to save that little child, refused to do it. I would prefer a God, if there is any such God, who has the power and the will to help a fellow when he needs help in this world. We are told that God said to the Jews, "I will send hornets before you to drive out the Canaanites." But why didn't he send some hornets and inspire them to do their level best, and attend strictly to business, until they had driven Freeman out of the house? Well, I'll tell you why. The hornet story, like the story about Abraham, is untrue, for if it be true, the Christians' God must be worse than a demon.

M. Babcock.

[From Truth.]

A Poor Defense and a Bad Defender.

The Freethinkers' Convention, lately assembled at Hornellsville, deserves great credit for the wonderful patience they exhibited in listening to the Rev. F. Egbert's address to them in defense of the orthodox faith.

We shall not attempt to rescue from the mass of illogical verbiage in which he imbedded them the few points which Mr. Egbert endeavored to make. But the wilfully false statements of fact of which he was guilty we will attempt to nail.

Mr. Egbert says that "there are two opposing systems professing to be true, namely, Christian faith and Infidel faith." It may be that Mr. Egbert has never heard of the other systems professing to be true, or it may be that, with the calm conceit of the Christian clergy, he thinks them unworthy of Christian notice. But the Jewish faith, the Mohammedan faith, the Buddhist faith, are all entitled to respectful consideration in any discussion of religion—that is, at the hands of competent debaters. While these facts remain, the Christian faith cannot claim to hav been vindicated, even if it prove the "Infidel faith," as Mr. Egbert calls it, utterly false.

Mr. Egbert asserts that the "foundations of Infidel faith are moral chaos and corruptions of individual opinions." This is a clerical fiction long since exploded. In the year 1876 more than thirty ministers were publicly arraigned for infamous crimes and misdemeanors, including adultery, pecuniary dishonesty, and drunkenness. Will Mr. Egbert name a small fraction of as many teachers of the "Infidel faith" whose lives hav given evidence of a similar "moral chaos?"

Mr. Egbert says: "Bind the criminal statistics of the world into one ponderous volume, and you will hav the aggregated logical fruits of Infidel faith; and on the other hand, the lives of the saints and holy men, deeds of goodness, justice, charity, and mercy, into another volume, and you hav the same of the divine faith."

This is a lie.

This is the only way to characterize it. The statistics of crime prove it to be a lie. The experience of every prison official in the country proves it to be a lie. Far from improving the moral condition of the people, the Christian church everywhere makes it worse. It is in the Christian city of Brooklyn that the most flagrant social immorality flourishes; it is in Christian New England that the vilest crimes are committed; it is in Christian Sunday-schools that the seeds of sexual crime are scattered, and it is in Christian church circles that they bear fruit. Christian statesmen, like Schuyler, Colfax, O. O. Howard, and James A. Garfield, hav corrupted our political life. Christian merchants, like Wm. E. Dodge and Lloyd Haigh, hav imported leaden statues and forged notes into our commerce. Christian philanthropists, like Shepherd Cowley and Pastor Robertson, hav made charity a cloak for crime and benevolence a cover for brutality. Devout Christians support Comstock. And pious Christians own the buildings used as houses of prostitution in New York, as shown by the report of the Assembly Committee on Crime.

Christians contribute not only more than the Infidels to the criminal population, but they contribute immeasurably more than other religious sects. Thus, of 1,037 convicts whose cases were investigated by the Prison Association in 1876, there were 605 Catholics, 424 Protestants, and eight Jews.

The Jews number between eighty thousand and one hundred thousand in this city, or about ten per cent of the population, and yet, according to these figures, they contribute less than one per cent to the criminal classes, leaving to the two Christian sects more than ninety-nine per cent.

Mr. Egbert says, "Contrast the fruits of Infidel faith today ruling proud, licentious England with those of the divine supreme in the oppressed and persecuted land of saints—Ireland."

Really, in the two countries there is little to contrast. The established church in England has not prevailed to prevent the people from becoming (at least so far as the lower classes are concerned) a nation of drunkards and wife-beaters. In no other country will you find drunkenness so common among women, brutality so frequent among men, and bestiality among both, as in England. The Catholic church in Ireland has been the curse of the land. The priest-ridden people hav sunk to a level below that of any people in Europe, excepting, possibly, the equally priest-ridden Spaniards. The Catholic church in Ireland has not prevailed to prevent the crimes of murder and drunkenness, which hav rendered the land a waste-place and its name a by-word.

What Mr. Egbert means by "the Infidel faith ruling proud, licentious England," we cannot imagin, unless by the word Infidel he intends to designate all non-Catholics. Nowhere is Christianity stronger than in England to-day; nowhere has its influence been more persistently exercised or more woefully felt than in that land.

The Liberal party is to be congratulated upon the possession by the orthodox church of an Egbert. If Egbert will continue his defense of orthodoxy, the Liberals can rest for a time from their labors, for his defense is, in effect, a better attack than many of the Liberals themselvs hav yet made. Still, let them not envy the church this useful man. He is more useful to them in the church than he would be out of it, and besides, we are commanded in Egbert's Bible, "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor his"—Egbert, for instance—"nor anything that is thy neighbor's."

Music at Hornellsville.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: A distinguished feature of the Hornellsville Convention was the congregational singing, led by Prof. Suffern of this city. The "Liberal Hymn Book" was used throughout the meeting; several hundred copies were in the hands of the audience, who sang with a will the familiar tunes of "Sweet By and By," "Hold the Fort," "Auld Lang Syne," and others, to the sensible and Liberal sentiments contained in the 31st, 32d, 55th, and accompanying songs. At the beginning of the meeting Mr. Chainey read the 38th hymn, beginning,

"My faith looks up to thee,
Light of the living free,
Science divine."

He said the lines of that hymn sounded the key-note of the Liberal movement. They were sung with animation to the well-known tune "New Haven."

On the last evening of the Convention Mr. Wakeman stepped forth on the platform with the hymn book in his hand, to deliver his profoundly logical and thought-awakening lecture on the "Church of the World," and he indicated the singing of that very appropriate song, No. 71, entitled, "A New Faith." Even the Christian evangelist, that Catholic brother, who tried so hard to persuade the Protestant Infidels and Freethought Infidels present alike to return to the Roman sheepfold, bought a "Liberal Hymn Book," and it is to be hoped that the perusal of its pages convinced him that the morality of Liberals, as therein set forth, is as pure as any so-called Christian morality.

The example thus set at Hornellsville should be followed generally at Liberal meetings. The religion of humanity must be practiced as well as preached. Grand and noble thoughts can be fixed in the minds of people by marrying the words which express those thoughts to pleasant music. And let those who cannot sing still memorize these Liberal songs and hav their children memorize them, encouraging the little ones to do so by suitable rewards. Then will just and true sentiments make constant melody in the souls of men and women, and attune their lives to harmony with nature's laws and to the rythm of the universe.

Eliza B. Burnz.

Where, oh, Where?

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Lost, somewhere between the heaven of "culture" and the "hell" of reason, the National Liberal League of America. Can you tell us of its present hiding or shouting place?

Princeton, Mass., Sept. 6, 1880. Ezra H. Heywood.

Letters from Friends.

BART, PA., Aug. 21, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: I hav received Volume II. of "The Gods," and am much more pleased with it than with the first volume. It is a work of great value—and so marvelously cheap! I was never much of a believer in miracles, but if the compiling and getting up of this work is not a miracle, it comes the closest to a real, genuin miracle of anything I hav yet seen.

Here I must say a good word for a little book called "John's Way" that I hav lately read, by Elmina D. Slenker. If this little work could be generally read, especially by the young, I think it would do more to open people's eyes to the delusions of Christianity than many a larger book. Every Liberal should get this little book—it is only fifteen cents—and lend it to his friends and neighbors.

The political question, it seems, is waxing warm in THE TRUTH SEEKER. Well, let it rip; it will, perhaps, do some little good in the way of lessening the bigotry and prejudice of politics, for there is a vast amount of bigotry and prejudice in politics as well as religion. It is no wonder that friend Bennett is going to make use of every means in his power to defeat the Republicans. That is not only clearly his right, but it is his duty to hurl from power, if possible, the authors of the outrages that hav been heaped upon him and others.

I say amen to making use of the Democrats to knock the brains out of the Republican party, and then, if the Democrats are no better than the Republicans, turn about and knock the Democrats all to smithers—if all this can be done, but here is the rub.

Mr. Leland's plan is a good one if, in practice, it will only work well. I am afraid we poor Liberals and Infidels will get tired of wielding the club over the heads of these two old parties before we knock into them any rights that they are bound to respect in us. I am thinking there will be a great clatter and a great many clubs worn out over these two old parties before we school them sufficiently to allow us to graduate and get our rights.

Although these two old parties hate each other politically, and could cut each other's throats, in religion they are in most perfect harmony. If the Democrats are less religious and more Liberal than the Republicans, I hav not discovered it.

It is said Hancock is a Liberal. Don't he say in his letter of acceptance "with divine favor" he will do so and so? No true Liberal, or, in other words, Infidel, could talk that way. If he should be elected (but that is not likely) he will appoint thanksgiving days and go into partnership with Providence to run the government just like all the former Presidents, with the exception of Jefferson. I tell you, gentlemen, there is little difference between these two old parties.

I don't profess to understand this financial question, but it seems to me the Greenback party is pretty near on the right track. The Greenback party is the workingman's party, and is deadly opposed to the great aristocratic money power.

I shall from this out hav nothing to do with these old parties that deny men's rights on account of difference of opinion on the one hand and difference of color on the other, but will vote the Greenback ticket if I vote at all. Brother Infidels, go and do likewise, or do as you please.

J. KING.

---

MODESTO, CAL., Aug. 28, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I am highly pleased with the contents of your noble seeker after truth this week more than usual. In fact, every week seems to improve on the previous one. Such a diversity of opinions touching the questions of politics, Materialism, and Spiritualism!

I say, Hurrah for Sally Ann! I like and admire her tone and temper. I believe a woman should hav every right a man has; and, in fact, I don't think it is fair for a man to hav the good things of this world that a woman can't share with him.

I am inclined to believe, and, in fact, subscribe to, the theory of Materialism, but really hope that I am in error and that our Spiritual friends hav found the true philosophy. There must be something eternal. The first cause of all effects, or God, duration, and space, exists of philosophical necessity, and that space was eternally filled with primeval matter. When I say that they exist of necessity, I mean that the contrary of space and duration cannot possibly be conceived. If infinit space were filled with an infinit globe it would be space filled. If that globe were struck out of existence it would be space empty. Filled or empty, it would still be space. As space exists of necessity, it is absolutely and positivly eternal, and hence could never hav been created nor changed. The same is true in relation to duration. Duration must hav rolled on, even if there had been no revolutions of suns and worlds to mark its periods. The contrary cannot possibly be conceived, hence duration and space both exist of philosophical necessity and are absolutely eternal. Endless duration is the age of the first grand cause, or Jehovah, and space is the empire in which it dwells and reigns. This space was also eternally filled with mind and invisible matter in its original state. They both exist of philosophical necessity. Hence matter is eternal, because if there ever had been a period when there was nothing in existence, as it regards matter, then nothing would now hav been, for nothing cannot create itself into something. The same is true in relation to mind. If there ever had been a period when there was no mind in existence, then no mind could now hav been, for mind could not hav created itself, as this would be admitting mind to hav acted before it existed. Hence mind and primeval matter are both co-existent and co-eternal.

The most important question at issue is, What constitutes the testimony sufficient to substantiate the fact that man will enjoy a second life? Our Christian friends say that they will enjoy this boon to the exclusion of all the rest of the world; but the idea is a fallacy on its face. In my humble opinion, it will be very fortunate for the masses of so-called Christians that their theory of faith proves to be a sounding brass and a tinkling symbol.

I hav heard of one Liberal among the clergy of Christendom. As pastor of a Presbyterian church in Missouri, he invites Liberals of all shades to communicate with his paper. Success to liberty. Yours truly,

C. C. LUTHER.

---

CAMPTOWN, PA., Sept. 7, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: I am sixty-five years of age. My first two votes were given for President Harrison; for the next sixteen years I voted with the Abolition party. When the Republican party was formed they confiscated every plank in our platform. I was for Fremont, for Lincoln all the way through, and for Grant once, but he was not smart enough to fool me the second time. Since then I hav been a Greenback Liberal. Greenback first, Liberal second. Why? Because Greenbackism pertains to bread, and Liberalism is the outgrowth of a full stomach.

Don't talk to me of the Liberal growth of our people, or of the evolution of our nation to a higher plane of humanity, when our national government is robbing the whole mass of our honest laborers of the largest share of the products of their own toil to pay a tax on bonds and interest on national bank note paper. It does not take a very wise head to see the influence of this policy. It reduces our laborers to poverty, poverty reduces them to ignorance, ignorance to vice and brutality.

Don't talk to me of Liberal growth under such conditions. Hav our millionaires ever thought of this? Hav they ever read of the Revolution in France? of the guillotine, where the heads of thousands of the would be influential citizens were severed from their body? Do they know of the large landed estates of France before this epoch, and the small farms and happy homesteads since? And do they know that France stands at the head of civilization to-day? and if the pope of Rome would take his oppressiv finger from off the nation that it would speedily eclipse all others? And why? Because France protects the laborers in the right of the fruit of their own toil.

I yet hav the privilege of the ballot, and with that I can enter my protest against this governmental robbery. I want it recorded where it can be seen of all men, and especially by the robbers; and if brothers Bennett, Leland, and Wakeman can convince me where I can appropriate my vote to better advantage, I am at their services; but don't ask me to drown or obliterate this sacred privilege in the filthy pool of Democratic or Republican politics, where it can never see the light again.

An honest, intelligent man is the highest development of earth, but a policy man is an arrant hypocrit. The honest man acts from principle, has a rule of life and a line of duty, and hews to that line regardless of where the chips fall; but the man of policy has no line; his blows are haphazard, with the foolish notion that the chips may fall into his chipyard, which they never do. It is not in the history of chipyards that chips of any value ever fell from a policy axe; but there is a trite saying that "a blow for revenge always rebounds hardest on the head of the giver."

When men tell me they are Greenbackers at heart, and all their sympathies are with the party, and then say they are going to vote with either of the old rotten parties, I hav to exclaim, "O Consistency, thou art a jewel!"

I think the times are ominous in future events. Is not our country big with labor? and is not something to be brought forth in the near future. If so, I elect the Greenback party as midwife. And if it should be a new birth of freedom, they would be the most interested and competent to protect and cherish the new savior; and if it should prove to be a monster of despotism they would be just the fellows to shut off its wind before it should giv the first yell of "Down with the traitors," which has always been the familiar cry of despots. Yours respectfully,

J. S. THOMSON.

---

THE PRO TEM. EDITOR TAKEN TO TASK.

ROSE, N. Y., August 18, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: THE TRUTH SEEKER is a splendid paper, and I am sorry to see it leading politically in the wrong direction, into the camp of "the unterrified Democracy." Perhaps it is not surprising, in view of the late experience of its chief, but it appears to me that your last issue givs evidence of your zeal having outstripped your discretion. In your reply to R. P. Lewis you use these words: "As for the outrages upon the negroes, if there are any genuin ones, they are fully offset by the disfranchisement and arrest of a thousand or more Irishmen in this city by Johnny Davenport, United States marshal." Whether or not the practical disfranchisement of a large proportion of the voters of the South was accomplished without any "genuin outrages upon the negroes" we will not now discuss, but I wish to be more fully informed in regard to the outrages perpetrated upon those Irishmen in your city by Johnny Davenport.

In order to get a correct understanding of the case it is necessary to go back to the year 1868. In that year the Democratic party determined to make a desperate effort to regain control of the government. Tweed was then in his glory, and Tilden was chairman of the Democratic State Committee. An immense number of fraudulent naturalization papers was issued in the city of New York, chiefly through Judges Barnard and McCunn, by means of which the will of the people was overborne and the great state of New York—in a political sense—lay bound and helpless at the feet of Wm. M. Tweed and his coadjutors, and John T. Hoffman was installed as governor, and the electoral vote was given to Seymour and Blair. Horace Greeley often declared that Grant and Griswold received a majority of the legal votes of the state. So much for Democratic regard for "the right preservativ of all rights."

It was useless for the people to attempt, through state action, to arrest this monster evil of fraudulent voting, as the officials who only had power to apply the remedy were parties to the crime. At length the general government came with necessary laws to our assistance, and appointed John I. Davenport chief supervisor of elections in your city. His business was and is to hunt this fraudulent element from the polls. How well he has performed it let Democratic howls answer.

Now, Mr. Editor, assuming as you do that Mr. Davenport has disfranchised a thousand or more legal voters in your city—no persons except legal voters can be disfranchised—I most respectfully ask you to giv the names of those voters, and also the number that hav been killed, because the outrages inflicted upon them being fully an offset to the outrages upon the negroes, a large number must hav suffered death. If Mr. Davenport has disfranchised and arrested a thousand or more legal voters, and inflicted outrages upon them equal to the outrages upon the negroes, he deserves to be "damned to everlasting fame," and if there is any stronger damnation he deserves that too, together with the party that sustains him. But if, on the other hand, he has punished only the miscreants that hav preyed upon "the right preservativ of all rights," he deserves the thanks of all honest men.

Mr. Editor, I hav endeavored to be perfectly respectful, but I felt that in your reply to Mr. Lewis you had assumed a wrong position, and I hav toiled to make it apparent. I hope I hav succeeded in doing so. As this is a free conference I trust you will giv all sides a fair hearing.

Yours for mental liberty, CHARLES LYMAN.

---

BARRE, MASS., August 25, 1880.

MR. BABCOCK: The receipt of your "Open Letter to the St. Johns School Board" should hav been acknowledged before and a word said in its favor. I wish every person in favor of retaining the Bible in schools was compelled to giv it a thorough reading, under the penalty of forfeiting a seat at the right hand of God if they resisted. It is strong, logical, and convincing. Success to you!

"Why Don't God Kill the Devil?" came on the heels of the other, being a clincher to the former. My improper answer is that he would kill him, if he was a sensible God, to expedite matters, rather than by the slow conversion of sinners to place them above his reach. But with a little forethought, as a wise designer, he would never hav made him; but he must hav become fatigued, and therefore not accountable for making a devil in his weariness. Your cuts are refreshing, and must to the Christian, illustrate their God with a vengeance. Yours truly, ELLA E. GIBSON.

---

DENVER, IOWA, Sept. 1, 1880.

TO ROBERT G. INGERSOLL AND OTHERS: You profess, as we understand, to be in favor of the success of Garfield and the Republican party. You profess opposition to the Comstock act, and the proposed "God in the Constitution" amendment. You profess sympathy for D. M. Bennett, who fell a victim to the cursed Comstock act of 1873. Now did not that act pass both houses of Congress while those houses were strongly Republican? and receive the approval of the Republican executiv, Gen. Grant? Is not Judge Benedict a Republican? Is not Anthony Comstock a Republican? Could he hav received or held the appointment had he been otherwise? Can you conceive of an act more emphatically Republican, in its modern acceptation?

Again, when Senator Edmonds, of Vermont, a Republican, introduced the proposed "God in the Constitution" amendment to the Republican Senate of the United States, in 1876, did not every Republican senator therein, entitled to vote, vote in favor of such proposition? Can you conceive of a more contradictory position in which a man can place himself than to profess Liberal principles while working for the continued domination of a party marked with the most shameful acts of oppression that ever disgraced this nation since the establishment of African slavery? Would it not be proper to place on the tombstone of such a man:

"With one hand he put a penny in the urn of poverty,
And with the other took a shilling out?"

M. FARRINGTON.

---

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: I hav heard most of our female Spiritualist and reform speakers for forty years, but I hav not heard one who can both charm and convince as can Mrs. Parry. Her mental organism is a happy and harmonious blending of the intellectual, spiritual, and intuitional. Her discourses on Sunday, on "The Evolution of Thought and the Progress of Ideas," was a masterly chain or fabric of logic, impregnable and irrefutable. Like a wise builder, she clears away all rubbish, and lays her premises on a firm, immovable basis of nature. Her clear, precise definitions, her pertinent facts and illustrations, her rigid and unsparing analysis of old, absurdities, assumptions, and dogmas, her pointed, emphatic, earnest, most impressiv manner, at once convince the intellect and inspire and thrill the spirit of the developed and impressible hearer.

If she is not now a Spiritualist, she is spiritual, or refined, which is more than can be said of many who call themselvs Spiritualists. If she doubts a spirit world, she has one in her own organism and life, and her far-seeing mind sees the infinit possibilities of nature to make the "summer land" on earth by human evolution, growth, and refinement. If you want a "feast of reason and a flow of soul," hear Mrs. Parry. May she be constantly employed in her great humanitary work! J. H. COOK.

---

IOWA CITY, Aug. 16, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Please find inclosed $5.00, $3.00 of which are for subscription, the other $2.00 for your expenses to Brussels, $1.00 from Jessie Strawbridge, and $1.00 from myself. I think brother T. C. Leland's arguments are good and timely, and should be well considered by every well-thinking Liberal, but I see there are some in our ranks that call themselvs Liberal who hav not outgrown the coat they wore when a child.

Yours in truth, J. J. DIETZ.

---

PORTSMOUTH, O., Sept. 10, 1880.

DEAR FRIENDS OF TRUTH AND LIBERAL THOUGHT: Nothing givs me so much assurance of your liberality as the manner in which you hav given the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER to those who wish to discuss the religious and political questions of the day.

I am not a subscriber to THE TRUTH SEEKER, but for a long time hav bought it as regularly as I take my meals, and thereby not only help the publisher, but also the man who sells it, and realizes that much more toward the support of a family.

I hav read about all of the interesting articles on the political issue since the two nominations were made, and take pleasure in reading the arguments on both sides, but hav until now withheld my say on the subject. To giv the reader some idea as to how I stand to-day I will tell them how I hav stood for the past twenty-five years. I became a voter in 1855, and voted the following year for John C. Fremont. This, I think, was my first vote. In 1860 I voted for Mr. Lincoln, and in 1864 I think I did not vote at all; in 1868 I voted for U. S. Grant, and in 1872 and 1876 I did not vote at all, so that in six presidential elections I have voted three times and hav helped make but two Presidents, Lincoln and Grant.

And now as the two great political parties seem to be getting us Infidels all tangled up, I hav thought that it might be of some interest also to know how I stand religiously as well as politically, and how I hav stood for the past twenty-five years on that question.

I think all who hav known me from my boyhood will bear me out in saying that I hav always been friendly to any move having a tendency to better the condition of earth's inhabitants. The church holds, and always has done so, that there is no moral teaching outside the church unless the same was stolen from the church, and like many others I was fool enough to believe it. But when I commenced to investigate for myself the scales fell from my eyes and I began to see things in their true light. And now when I turn my eyes back to the church and see the millions of misguided beings who do not allow themselves to think, act, or even hope for themselvs, I thank my God that the Infidel portion of this world is waking up and offering something far superior to old theology to the sons and daughters of man as food for the hungry soul.

When we see the hypocrisy, vanity, and evil doings of the priesthood and their dupes of to-day, it reminds us that every church spire is but an index to an unknown world where they expect to find a visionary God with whom they can compromise for their diabolical intrigues.

These things hav made me sick at heart, from which I found no relief until I became an Infidel and a Spiritualist, and even now, when I read of the devilish doings of these hypocrits, it brings on a sudden attack of palpitation.

And now as to the political pot from which either of the leading parties are ready to dip up pottage to the voter, in exchange for which he is expected to surrender up his birthright, and in many cases his manhood also, I hav just this much to say. I hav never before voted for a Democratic candidate for the position of high cockalorum in the White House. And how now? How about Garfield? did he take the back grab of the salary pay? He says, No. Then how could he offer to donate the five thousand dollars of your money and mine to a Campbellite college at Bethany, in West Virginia—the very thing we are opposed to, being taxed to support theological colleges and churches. But here is a case ten times more aggravating, for the money was stolen directly from you and me and offered to Bethany College. What was their answer to Mr. Garfield? They were more honest than he was, for they said that they could not accept money that was not honorably obtained. How can the Republican party find fault when their enemies accuse him of taking the back pay when his friends said that he had no right to the money, and that they could not accept of it? Can I, as an Infidel, support a man that robs me of my money and givs it to a church?

We find fault with Mr. Hayes for refusing to pardon our standard-bearer, Mr. Bennett; then I ask my brother Infidels, What can we expect from a man like Garfield, whom I consider to be the very worst enemy we would hav to contend with? Mr. Garfield can in no way exonerate himself from the back-pay grab. If he did not take it, how in God's name could he offer to donate to Bethany College? And if he did take it, and considered that there was nothing wrong in taking it, why does he leave it in the treasury?

Now, my friends, I am called a sorehead, and I accept of the term; I hav it bad, so very bad that I am becoming bald-headed, and if we fail to elect Hancock I fear I will lose every hair in my head. For if we are to be ruled by stealing preachers, who donate the spoils to churches and theological colleges, and to support such men as Comstock to mind other people's business, then we Infidels might as well throw up the sponge and go in sackcloth and ashes, and then the less hair we hav the better.

But what surprises me most is that Mr. Ingersoll can ignore all that has been proved against Mr. Garfield, and yet support him when he knows that he is one of the most dangerous enemies to our Liberal cause.

With malice toward none but a knave, and charity for any who may steal to subdue hunger, I am, respectfully,

W. A. Faze.

---

Pike, N. Y., Sept. 18, 1880.

Editor Truth Seeker, Dear Sir: I hav just finished reading Mr. Chainey's report of the Hornellsville Convention, and I want to congratulate the many readers of The Truth Seeker who were deprived of the privilege of enjoying that rare intellectual and social feast upon being favored with so fair and impartial a report of it as the one furnished by the pen of our gifted and newly-converted brother.

As our reporter was too modest to mention his own contributions to the interest of the occasion, I was very glad of Mr. Thomas' "Corroborativ Testimony" on that point, to which it is not necessary for me perhaps to add a single word, yet I will simply say that Bro. Chainey's numerous gems of thought and truth, presented in their marvelously beautiful word settings, were a treat to every cultured and esthetical ear that listened. Those of us who had made Mr. Chainey's acqdaintance through The Truth Seeker found him "all our fancy painted him," and well may the church mourn over the loss of so able a champion. Now that his quest of truth has led him into the Liberal ranks, I hope he may be activly employed, and his services to the cause of Freethought and human progress be thoroughly appreciated and generously remunerated, and that neither himself nor his noble wife, who declared herself willing to liv on a crust rather than hav him preach what he did not believe, may never regret having cut loose from the old ties and associations. Remember, friends, that 'tis these brave men and women that are publicly fighting for freedom of thought, speech, and conscience who are the targets for the enemy; and do not fail to stay up their hands with cordial sympathy and substantial support. While you remain in your shops, warehouses, and on your farms quietly reading your Liberal books and papers, or holding a friendly discussion with a neighbor, it makes very little difference with the current of your daily lives whether you are Christian or Infidel, but the moment you step on to the rostrum or take up your pen and publicly espouse an unpopular cause, you are made to feel the difference in its full significance. Yet even such a transition as this cannot, I think, test one's courage and loyalty to truth and duty as much as the one which brothers Bell, Burnham, Chainey, and many others hav hav made from a popular to an unpopular cause.

Having been shut off the temperance platform, where I had earnestly and honestly wrought for nearly three years to advance the cause of morality and physical purity, because I chose to publicly announce myself a Freethinker, I think I can speak intelligently upon this subject. And though many of my Christian friends marvel much that I can "affiliate with the coarse and vulgar blasphemy of R G. Ingersoll," I do not feel at all disgraced, but consider myself honored in having the warm hand of fellowship extended to me by the noble men and women whom I met at Chautauqua and Hornellsville. And though this great Freethought movement may attract to it some who are not true exponents of its principles, until the Christians hav cleared their ranks of every discreditable individual they should be less lavish with the opprobrious epithets they apply to us.

I want also to say "Amen" to Mr. Chainey's suggestion in regard so paying Mr. Green a salary. Ever since coming to understand the amount of labor performed by him in behalf of Liberalism, I hav felt that his dependence upon voluntary contributions of societies and individuals was precarious and inadequate. I sincerely hope every League member will take a personal interest in the matter and see that at least the sum suggested by Bro. Chainey is raised for him during the present year. Six dollars annually is a small sum for any live League to pay, the pockets of whose members are not depleted by a few cents or contributions to foreign mission societies, and if we hav any dead ones in the country, let me advise them to engage the services of some live Liberal speaker and proceed to the work of resurrection at once. "Honor bright," Mr. Editor, I am not speaking "two words for myself," as I am not as yet a competitor in this great field of honor and usefulness.

Please find inclosed $1.00, for which send me a copy of Ingersoll's "Gods and Other Lectures," one of the "Pocket Theology," and one of Paine's "Age of Reason." I want them to lend.

Marion Slusser.

---

Toronto, Ont., Sept. 9, 1880.

Mr. Editor: What can a fellow do when his letters go astray? On your (our) side if they do not go into the hands of thieves they go to the Dead Letter office, and are opened and returned if found valuable. Maybe my letter containing a small remittance for a few tracts will yet turn up. In this I wish to say that I accepted Mr. Jamieson's challenge, and urged him to fix the time and place for the discussion, and that this proposition stands good for all coming time unless sooner accepted. And you will please say also that arrangements hav been consummated for a public debate to take place in this city on the 26th, 27th, 28th, and 29th prox, between a distinguished defender of Christianity from Scotland, by the name of H. A. Long, and myself. The resolutions to be debated are:

Resolved, That the universe and all that in it is were created by a personal, omnipotent, omniscient, and benevolent being whom we call God. Mr. Long affirms; Dr. Taylor denies.

Resolved, That the universe and all that in it is are the result of natural causes. Dr. Taylor affirms; Mr. Long denies.

Resolved, That the Bible, King James's version, is the infallible inspiration of God and of absolute authority as a rule of faith and practice. Mr. Long affirms; Dr. Taylor denies.

Resolved, That the Bible, King James's version, is of human origin, and therefore of no authority only as sustained by collateral facts and modern observations. Dr. Taylor affirms; Mr. Long denies.

After this discussion is over he proposes to meet me at Buffalo for the purpose of defending the orthodox God-book in that city as well. I shall take pleasure in measuring swords with him at any point he may name this side of Hades. Respectfully, T. B. Taylor, M.D.

---

Solebury, Pa., Sept. 1, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: Permit me, if you please, to say a few more words in your valuable paper as a reply to G. W. Chapman's query in his open letter to Charles E. Townsend, in your issue of Aug. 21st.

Not being given to much formality, I will say, unacquainted brother-man, let the immortal mind of man soar aloft above the sublunary things of time brought forth by invisible power in the ethereal regions of endless space, as insects germinate in the element of water according to the ever immutable, self-existent, mathematical, chemical laws of science, God inherent in the constitution of nature.

Now it must be conceded that there can be no such thing as nothing, and that all visible things come from invisible substance in endless space, governed by those specified laws propelled to action by invisible force or power that permeates the universe of endless space and which is the original, great, first, activ, effectiv cause of all subsequent causes that occur in the constitution of nature; hence we see the non-necessity of an individual god in nature, and one outside of nature would be impossible, for nature includes all that is; consequently, to sum up the argument in as few words as possible, the great first cause of all causes is force or power, which is the cause of all action, which is the cause of all life—manifested as motion in the mineral kingdom, life in the vegetable kingdom, sensation in the animal kingdom, and intelligence in man—the keystone of the arch of progress from nature up to nature's gods, as written in the eighty-second Psalm, "I hav said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the Most High"—destined to hav dominion over all the creatures of Father Science God and Mother Nature, the great parental cause from whence contingent causes flow.

The world it moves, all nature, too,
In vast, unbounded space:
The old must succumb to the new,
In time's eventful race.

As mighty orbs go rolling round
In vast, unbounded space,
With scientific, mighty power
To keep them in their place.

Mathematical chemical science,
For evermore the same
Great ruler of the universe,
We call it God by name.

Its ever-activ, mighty force
All nature must obey.
From good to better and to best
It works its onward way.

From good to better and to best
All things in nature run.
Until the right comes uppermost,
And justice shall be done.

Respectfully, E W. Allen.

The Freethinkers' Convention.

The following resolutions drawn up by our distinguished friend, Lewis Masquerier, for the Freethinkers' Convention, I would like to hav published in The Truth Seeker.

H L. Green.

Whereas, A religious and political priesthood are in a universal conspiracy throughout Europe and America to extinguish all free thought in religion and government; they are suppressing all Liberal presses, books, societies, and institutions; they are extorting enormous contributions, taxes, and rents to be squandered in exorbitant salaries that pauperize the people, produce famine, increase standing armies and police to fight for dynasties, to depredate on unoffending nations, to hold the balance of power and to force one-half of the people to slaughter the other half whenever they rise to redress their grievances;

Resolved, therefore, that the religious sentiment in its frantic worship of unknowable gods and deluding hope of a future life, can only engender bigotry and persecution, or hypocrisy. It sits like an incubus upon humanity, extorting millions of contributions for the support of the clergy in their ignorance and false pretenses in pretending to convert its so-called own and foreign heathen, instead of dedicating its churches as lyceums, museums of Freethought and instruction.

Resolved, That all office-holding governments, whether hereditary or electiv, are but different forms of the usurpation of the sovereignty of the people, which never has been, nor ever can be, delegated or represented, any more than volition, eating, sleeping, or reproduction can be done by proxy. In voting, therefore, for a so-called representativ or officer the voter only confirms, instead of delegating his sovereignity, which is already alienated by the institutions of society and government. And accordingly all constitutions provide for the election of officers more than for the establishment of the thorough rights of man.

Resolved, That all landlordism and monopoly of the soil beyond a proper share are merely legalized robbery, and should be restored to the landless and producing masses, declared as inalienable during life, held in individual and equal shares, and guaranteed free from all traffic, debt, tax, mortgage, wills, communism, etc., but may only be exchanged with each other for emigration, but never sold for money or other moveables any more than the bodies of men, for the soil and appurtenant elements of air, water, and light are man's outside body.

---

[From the Banner of Light.]

New Publications.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. By D. M. Bennett, editor of The Truth Seeker, author of the "Champions of the Church," etc. Vol. II. New York: D. M. Bennett, 141 Eighth street.

We hav received the second volume of this large and comprehensiv work, the first having been noticed by us some time since. It contains 957 pages, from which it may be inferred that the author has brought together a vast number of historical facts in furtherance of his purpose to supply all information possible to be obtained relating to the gods and religions of all nations and tribes of men, from the most remote period to the present. Commencing with the earliest known form of religion, fetichism, the worship of stocks and stones, bones of animals, shells, pieces of wood, plants, etc., in the belief that they were endowed with life and a sort of divinity, the long and broad panorama of strange, cruel, and grotesque religious beliefs passes before the reader, showing to an observant and thoughtful mind that they possess, in greater or less degree, one thing in common pointing to a common origin for all. So long as these beliefs cling to earth and partake of an earthly nature they are grossly material, and hang like millstones on the necks of the people. Those religious beliefs are the highest that contain the most of the spiritual, and the further removed they are from "stocks and stones" the more closely are they related to the life and the spirit.

The various forms of primitiv religion being considered, the work passes to a complete review of the religions of the Hindoos, Persians, Chaldeans, Chinese, Egyptians, Assyrians, Phœnicians, Grecians, Romans, Teutons, and Druids; then follow Mohammedanism, Judaism, and Christianity, nearly the entire latter half of the book being devoted to the latter—which being the form of religion most known and worshiped by those most likely to become the readers of the book, the author considers of primary importance in his work. A very thorough investigation into its origin is instituted, and such historical testimony as is obtainable respecting it is brought to light. Its rise and progress are then shown, likewise its teachings and the influence they hav exerted upon the progress of mankind. Comparisons are made between these and those of other religions, especially Buddhism, Mohammedanism, and the doctrins of Confucius. As the main features of all religious systems are given, and a sufficient number of extracts from the sacred books of each presented, the reader is enabled to be his own judge of their respectiv merits, independent of the views held by Mr. Bennett. For this reason the work is a valuable one, and cannot fail to be appreciated by all who are not bound by creed or shackled by prejudice, but desire the truth, and the whole truth, come whence it may.

---

Mr. Stevens's New Book.

"Faith and Reason" is the name of a remarkable book which is entitled to a more worthy and extended notice than the limited space in our columns will permit. It is the result of laborious investigation and earnest inquiry concerning the Christian religion and all the prominent systems of religion which hav preceded and followed the advent of Christianity.

It will be a surprise to many believers to learn that thousands of years before the birth of the Savior not less than ten different systems of religious belief had so possessed the human mind as to impart an immediate significance to the question, "Canst thou by searching find out God?" The earnest longings of the human soul to penetrate the mysterious future is indeed coeval with the human race.

The followers of Confucius, Brahma, Buddha, Zoroaster, and Moses, as well as Mohammed and later enthusiasts, built their doctrins on the Christian corner-stone, "What shall I do to be saved?" as did the apostles of Jesus of Nazareth, but the practical results therefrom are but little known except by contrast, and to the professed theologian.

This little volume of less than four hundred and fifty pages constitutes in its condensed form a perfect encyclopedia of the religious beliefs of the human race from "the beginning." The author is one who believes in the free interchange of opinions, and in the right to interrogate without timidity any religious system in which the handiwork of man overrides the injunction, "Deal justly, love mercy, and walk humbly before God."

To those who pursue the old beaten pathway, and whose ideas of the future state are derived from association and contact, and not from patient investigation and research, this volume will be especially interesting. Its author, like Mr. Beecher, believes in the firm maintenance of everything which leads to good works, promotes love, mercy, and truth, or in any way increases the happiness and stimulates the human race.

The preparation of the work has involved a prodigious amount of labor, undertaken under sore affliction and disappointment. The author is possessed of erudition, modestly but independently expressed. The acuteness of his remarks and his clear and concise method of putting forth his views convey the impression that he is indeed an earnest seeker after truth. We regret our space does not permit copious extracts to illustrate his object.—Newburgh Daily Register.

The author of the work is Halsey R. Stevens, of Newburgh, N. Y., and it is for sale at this office.—Ed. T. S.

---

A. L. Rawson arrived in this city, from Europe, the 15th.

Abigail, King David's Victim.

BY ALHAZA.

She rode with careless grace upon a milk-white beast,
Her jeweled bosom trembled 'neath the gleam
Of evening's light; her ripened, sun-dyed arms,
Disdained her robe empearled, her scarlet vest;
Her eye, a memory, steeped in tender flame,
Her voice was mellow as a Southern dream.

He came; a stolen crown adorned his brow.
Nor from her beauty moved his greedy eye;
"Such is the glowing fruit that falls to me,
Thy drunken spouse must be as naught to thee.
No power shall snatch thee from me, high or low;
And for his small dominions what care I?"

He bowed his head with kingly, barbarous grace;
The wild wind sweeping by them gave a moan
As the foul villain kissed her lovely face,
Tearful and pale, how could she bear her grief?
The scented passing breeze brought no relief,
She knew her husband's heart would turn to stone.

The shrieking wind woke Nabal from his sleep;
He wildly staggered, heard the bitter tale,
Then sobbing, hid his wretched, bloated face.
"My Abigail, my beautiful, for thee I weep;
Drown me, Jehovah dark, in deathful sleep."
He reeled and fell mid golden cup and vase,
His treasures rich were withered, black, and stale.

THERE was an article in the North American Review recently from "a striker" in which capital is thus warned: The capitalist must not gamble with the bread of the workingman, or if he does, let him regard where that speculation led France one hundred years ago, when financiers made a corner in flour and the people broke the ring with the ax of the guillotine.

A New and Important Work, entitled

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.

BY F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.,
Graduate of the Hygeio-Therapeutic College and the New York Phrenological Institute.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. As a chart it will be found fuller and more complete than any other work of its size on this subject. It contains in addition to the "Table of Developments," one of "Adaptation to Different Pursuits," and one of "Conjugal Adaptation." These tables being perfectly easy to understand, are calculated to render the work at once both interesting and useful. The work contains also full and clear descriptions of the temperaments, the nutritive functions, health, etc., and all the faculties and powers of the mind in seven different degrees of development, along with excellent rules for health and self-improvement. Its explanation of the principles of phrenology, etc., and its other important remarks will be found well adapted to the needs of students and others who may desire to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology with as little outlay of time and labor as possible. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT.
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

| | |
|---|---|
| Thomas Paine, | F. E. Abbot, |
| Paine's Bust. | Frothingham, |
| Paine's Monument. | Wendell Phillips, |
| Voltaire. | Emerson, |
| Rousseau. | Garrison, |
| Humboldt. | Henry Bergh, |
| Goethe, | Peter Cooper, |
| Schiller. | D. R. Burt, |
| Aug. Comte. | S. P. Andrews. |
| Heine, | Walt Whitman, |
| Alex. Pope. | Froude, |
| John Milton, | Max Muller. |
| Goldsmith. | Warren Chase. |
| Shelley. | Jas. Parton, |
| Byron. | Wm. Denton, |
| Burns. | Dr. Slade, |
| Washington. | A. J. Davis. |
| Franklin, | Foster, |
| Jefferson. | J. M. Peebles, |
| John Adams. | Frances Wright, |
| J. Q. Adams. | E. V. Wilson, |
| Madison. | G. L. Henderson. |
| Jackson. | Prof. Fiske, |
| Lincoln, | Fred Douglas, |
| Lincoln's Monument. | N. P. Banks, |
| Gerrit Smith, | P. V. Nasby, |
| Henry C. Wright. | Beecher, |
| J. S. Mill. | Tilton, |
| Sumner. | Moulton, |
| Edgar A. Poe. | G. W. Curtis. |
| Greeley, | Th. Nast, |
| Castellar, | J. G. Bennett, |
| Tennyson. | Chas. A. Dana, |
| Darwin | Phoebe Carey, |
| Tyndall, | Alice Carey, |
| H. Spencer. | Elizabeth C. Stanton, |
| Huxley, | Susan B. Anthony, |
| Proctor. | Lucy Stone, |
| Draper. | Julia Ward Howe, |
| Bradlaugh. | Chas. Cheney. |
| Holyoake, | Paulina Davis, |
| Ingersoll. | Mary F. Davis, |
| Underwood. | Emma H. Britten |
| Mendum. | Lizzie Fowler. |
| Seaver, | Mrs. Sienker. |
| L. Colby, | Susan H. Wixon. |
| Dr. Hare, | D. M. Bennett. |
| Judge J. W. Edwards. | W. S. Bell, |
| Lizzie Doten. | J. C. Bundy. |
| Mrs. J. Conant. | S. S. Jones. |
| Dr. Mary E. Walker (full figure). | Asa K. Butts, |
| Geo. Francis Train. | W. F. Jamieson. |
| H. L. Green. | Kersey Graves. |

10 THRILLING NEW DIME NOVELS for 25 cts. (silver). J. C. Keen, Salem, Me.

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. : : $1.00.

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

SUPERSTITION;

THE RELIGION OF

"Believe or be Damned."

OPEN LETTER TO THE

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL BOARD.

BY

M. BABCOCK.

This book contains an inspired PHOTOGRAPH of the GOD that's being worshiped at the expense of the district in our public schools; the God that "overshadowed" Mary; the God that's wanted in the Constitution; the gentleman that owns some three billion dollars' worth of untaxed church property; the "so-help-me" God that makes a lie the truth in court; the God that governors besought to stop the yellow fever, which he didn't do. The picture is worth the price of the book. Price, 25 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, New York.

LADIES!!

"SALEM, OR., July 17, 1880.
"S. H. PRESTON, Dear Sir: Please send me by express, C. O. D., to Portland, Or., $100,00 (one hundred dollars) worth of that "Comstock" Syringe. I mean business.
"DR. MARY SOLANDER."

Only sixteen had been sold when

COMSTOCK

set out to suppress it. Now orders come as above. Grand jurymen buy it for their wives. It is SIMPLE, SAFE, INFALLIBLY RELIABLE, necessary to HEALTH and personal purity, and is pronounced by patients and physicians to be the greatest

GODSEND TO THE SEX

gotten up in this generation. Sent securely boxed, with private instructions for special use. Confidential terms to agents. Price $5 00; improved, $10,00. Address SAM. H. PRESTON, tf32 209 West 34th st., New York.

"SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES"

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This volume is printed on toned paper, in clear, bold type, and handsomely bound in muslin, containing 275 pages, 12mo. Price, $1.25.

This book contains the principal points that Mr. Ingersoll has made against the Pentateuch in all his lectures on that subject. The pamphlets that hav been surreptitiously issued are incorrect, filled with mistakes, and consist of only about fourteen or fifteen pages, while there are two hundred and seventy-five pages in the book just issued. The book is unanswerable in its facts and logic, inimitable in its style, and filled with wit, satire, eloquence, and pathos.

Busts of R. G. Ingersoll,

By the celebrated sculptor, CLARK MILLS.

Cabinet size, price $2.50.
Small Busts, on Pedestal (mantel ornament), price $1.25. Neatly packed and boxed ready for shipment. Every admirer of this great Apostle of Liberty should hav at least one.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll.

By SARONY, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

| | |
|---|---|
| Imperial or large size . . . . | 40 cents |
| Photo or card size . . . . | 20 " |
| Life-size Lithograph, 21x27 . . . . | 50 " |

Postage paid.

D. M. BENNETT.
141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK

Call.

A lady, who is free, about forty years of age, of average mind, health, and means, wishes to correspond with a gentleman of like or similar qualifications, who believes that divine law is more important than human, but would, notwithstanding, conform to the latter if possible, in such a manner that it should at the same time be a protest against it. Address,
8t37 LEGAL, care THE TRUTH SEEKER office.

THE

Anonymous Hypothesis OF Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by
D. M. BENNETT. 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.
D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., N.Y

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address

DR. J. M. MOSELEY,
13t27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth: price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER.

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

NEWBURYPORT MASS., Sept. 23, 1878.
To Miss Anna Knoop, Dear Madam:
The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.
JAMES PARTON.

Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot and Power Presses. Die Work of all kinds.
Perforating Dies a Specialty.
E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N.Y.
13an1.

MODERN THINKERS:

What They Think and Why.

By V. B. Denslow, LL.D.,

With an Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The work contains critical essays upon Emanuel Swedenborg, and the origin of the Christian ideas of heaven, hell, and virtue; Adam Smith, founder of the school of Economists; Jeremy Bentham, the apostle of law reform and of utilitarianism in morals; Thomas Paine and his relations to the Declaration of Independence and democracy in America; Charles Fourier, the philosopher of passional harmony and co-operativ association; Herbert Spencer, a review of his theories of evolution and of morals; Earnst Haeckel, the demonstrator of the doctrin of evolution; Auguste Comte, founder of the Positive philosophy and pontiff of the "Religion of Humanity;" and an essay on the authorship of Junius as a sequel to the critique on Thomas Paine.

This volume consists of 384 pp., 12 mo, and is illustrated by portraits of each of the eight great thinkers, and opens with an introduction from the pen of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

Cloth, $1.50. Sold at this office.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19, 1880.

I wish to notify the public that a Mr. Baldwin, of Chicago, also Rhodes & McClure, of the same place, are publishing pamphlet editions of my lectures. All the lectures published by them are grossly inaccurate—filled with mistakes, horribly printed, and outrageously unjust to me. These men are simple literary thieves and pirates, and are obtaining money from the public under false pretenses. I take this course to warn the public that these publications are fraudulent. The only correct copies of my lectures are published by C. P. Farrell. All others are published by people who are willing to steal from me and defraud the public vender. These wretches hav published one lecture under four titles, and several others under two or three.

3m31 R. G. INGERSOLL.

All of C. P. Farrell's editions of Col. Ingersoll's works, and none others, are sold at this office. D. M. BENNETT.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructiv work. In cloth, $3 per vol, the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4.50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

LECTURES OF

R. G. INGERSOLL.

THE PEOPLE'S EDITION.

Paper Covers.

Vol. I. "The Gods, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thos. Paine," "Individuality," "Heretics and Heresies." Price, 50 cents.

Vol. II. "The Ghosts, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Declaration of Independence," "Farming in Illinois," "Speech at Cincinnati," "The Past Rises Before Me Like a Dream." Price 50 cents.

Both volumes bound in one, price, $1.00.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll, by Sarony, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

Imperial, or large size..... 40 cents.
Photo, or card size..... 20 cents.
Life-size lithograph, 21x27..... 50 cents.

Postage paid.

Either of the above Volumes handsomely bound in cloth, $1.25.

Address D. M. BENNETT.
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings —May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrins, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

Radical Newspaper.

The undersigned desires to get a loan of $5,000 or a business partner with such a capital, for the publication, in the city of St. Louis, Mo., of an independent, radical weekly newspaper, devoted exclusivly to American affairs.

J. G. HERTWIG,
Fox Creek, P. O., St Louis county, Mo

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT. 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract.

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind.

Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. By COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2.00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo. 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 68 pages; price, 25 cents

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 180 pages. Price, only 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Forms for Organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-Laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected, for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Over 580 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents, in cloth.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A New Scripture from an antique manuscript (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL, in conjunction with A. HOOK, Esq. Very amusing. Price, 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Freethinkers' Convention, held at Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878. A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. George W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, and several other persons. Price, cloth, $1.25.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound Volumes I., II., III., IV., and V. These volumes, containing over 520 pages each, are made up of over one hundred Truth Seeker Tracts, with some additional kinds. They embrace a variety of subjects by different authors, written in a terse, trenchant, and spicy style. They are offered at the extremely low price of 60 cents per volume in paper covers, and $1.00 in cloth; or 50 cents each in paper, and 75 cents each in cloth if the whole set is taken.

Sepher Toldoth Jeschu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First English translation of the ancient Jewish story of Jesus, who was born at Bethlehem about the year 106 B. C., being the son of a betrothed maiden named Miriam (Mary) by Joseph Pandera. How and why the Romans changed "Kepha" to "Petros." Startling evidence that Paul flourished before the middle of the first century B. C., contemporary with the aforesaid Kepha. Price, 20 cents.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, curate of a Romish church in France in the eighteenth century, whose views upon theology were not published until after his death, and are now for the first time presented in English. Very radical and able. Price, 25 cents.

Influence of Christianity Upon Civilization. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Revised edition. One of the most able treatises upon the subject ever written. Price, 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Revised edition. In this treatise the two systems are fairly and ably examined from a historical standpoint. Price, 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in the Place of Christianity. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Price, paper, 10 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus; His Character and Doctrine. A chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief." By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Price, cloth, 60 cents; paper, 35 cents.

Resurrection of Jesus. By W. S. BELL. Revised and enlarged edition. Price, 25 cents.

Religion not History. An able examination of the morals and theology of the teachings of the New Testament. By W. F. NEWMAN. Emeritus Professor of University College, London. From the London edition. Price, 25 cents.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker," and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED, of Moravia, N. Y. Proposition discussed: "Jesus Christ is not only divine, but is the Lord God, creator of heaven and earth." Teed affirming: Bennett denying. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Blakeman's Two Hundred Poetical Riddles. (For children and youth.) Embracing a great variety of subjects. This work is new and interesting, and affords a great amount of amusement in the family circle, as well as in gatherings of children and older people. Price, 20 cents.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR. Delivered at Steinway Hall, New York, in the winter of 1875-76. 1. Growth of Worlds; 2. Life and Death of Worlds; 3. Other Worlds than Ours; 4. Other Suns than Ours; 5. The Great Mysteries of the Universe; 6. Religion and Astronomy. 65 pp. Paper, 20 cents

Beyond the Veil. A Spiritualistic work, said to be dictated by the spirit of PASCHAL BEVERLY RANDOLPH, aided by Emmanuel Swedenborg and others, through the mediumship of Mrs. Frances H. McDougall and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. It gives minute and interesting descriptions of life in the spirit world—its location, intermediate state, landscape, habitation, food, clothing, industrial interests, etc. It contains a steel engraving of P. B. Randolph. A neat volume. Price, $1,50.

Gems of Thought.

WHEN people are hopelessly ignorant of a thing, they quarrel about the source of their knowledge.—Prof. Clifford.

THE misery of man proceeds, not from any single crush of overwhelming evil, but from small vexations continually repeated.—Dr. Johnson.

ONE pungent saying, one compact axiom that proves itself, is better than pages of laborious demonstration. Demonstrations we forget, but wise and witty sayings we remember. They sear themselvs in the brain.—Dr. F. H. Hedge.

FROM all we hear to the contrary from the greatest thinkers, the deprivation of food is a small thing; indeed as compared with the great spiritual struggles of noble minds, and the doubts that beset them as to the supreme government of the universe, it seems hardly worth mentioning.—James Payn.

ELECTION, conversion, day of grace, coming of Christ, hav been pawed and fingered by unctuous hands for now two hundred years. The bloom is gone from the flower. The plumage, once shining, with leaves direct from heaven, is soiled and bedraggled. The most solemn of all realities hav been degraded into the pass words of theology.—Froude's Bunyan.

TO CATCH dame Fortune's golden smile;
Assiduous wait upon her;
And gather gear by every wile
That's justified by honor;
Not for to hide it in a hedge,
Nor for a train attendant;
But for the glorious privilege
Of being independent. —Burns

DRUNKENNESS undermines the health, enfeebles digestion, and reduces its unhappy votary to the level of the brutes; it deprives him of the distinctions [attributes] of humanity, which his Creator had given for his guidance, rendering him equally unfit for business and unworthy of trust; and, making him quarrelsome and unreasonable, it fills his home with misery and disorder.—Spurzheim.

GOETHE complained of people treating as if the most inconceivable, sublimest of beings were their equal. Otherwise they would not say the Lord God, the dear God, the good God. He becomes to them, especially to the priests, who hav him daily in their mouth, a phrase, a mere noun. If they were duly impressed by his greatness, they would be mute and refrain from naming him out of reverence.—Hayward.

SOME things I hav said of which I am not altogether confident. But that we shall be better and braver and less helpless if we think that we ought to inquire than we should hav been if we indulged in the idle fancy that there was no knowing and no use in searching after what we know not—that is a theme upon which I am ready to fight, in word and deed, to the utmost of my power.—Jewett's Plato.

HAD Jesus said, "Blessed are both the poor and the rich, for both will enter the next world on the same terms," the remark would hav been one which nobody would hav had an interest in propagating. But, by withdrawing the benediction from the rich, the poor, who are by far the majority, acquired an interest in propagating the implied censure on wealth and its possessors.—Van Buren Denslow.

FOR deeds doe die, however noblie donne,
And thoughts of men do as themselvs decay;
But wise words, taught in numbers farther runne,
Recorded by the muses, liv for ay;
Ne may with stormy showers be washt away,
Ne bitter-biting windes will harmful blast,
Nor age, nor envie, shall them ever wast.
—Spenser.

WHAT can it profit any mortal to adopt locutions and imaginations which do not correspond to fact, which the most orthodox of mortals can only, after infinit and essentially impious efforts to put out the eyes of his mind, persuade himself to believe that he believes? What is incredible to thee thou shalt not, at thy soul's peril, attempt to believe. Go to perdition if thou must, but not with a lie in thy mouth; by the eternal Maker, No!—Carlyle.

THEOLOGY is in no sense a science. As to any knowledge of infinit will, the being and attributes of God, all men are, and forever will be, on the dead level of absolute nescience. The highest priest, pope, or Pontifex Maximus knows no more of what is outside of nature than the babbling infant. They only imagin more. . . . When priests commit themselvs to the wings of imagination they should do it with the modesty of not pretending that they know more than others, or that they can soar beyond the atmosphere of the finite.—Elizur Wright.

THE Christian says, "Even if my belief be false what can it harm me?" I suppose it was no harm for the Jews to worship a golden calf, or Baal, or any of the gods of the nations around them. Perhaps it is no harm for the savages of Africa to worship the brass gods that are made and sold right here in the land of Christians. It is only a waste of time and a degradation of the intellect. If that be harm, then is it not equally a harm for the Christian to waste his time and degrade his intellect by worshiping the old Mosaic God and the Bible myth called Christ? Is it no harm to teach falsehood and fiction to the world, and perpetuate it on through the ages? Ah, my Christian friend, it is beyond thy power to compute the vast and immeasurable harm and wrong thee is doing to thself, to thy friends, and to the whole present and future generations of man, by teaching this old mythological, dogmatic superstition called Christianity!—Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

"FIGURES do not lie." Then figures never edited a political newspaper.

DID you ever know a man who talked much of himself who did not hav a poor subject for his conversation?

A MAINE school teacher captured thirty-three cuds of gum from her pupils in one day, and it was a rainy day at that.

"GOOD morning, Mr. Brown; you're first at last; you used to be behind before, but I notice you hav been early of late."

A CITIZEN of Davenport who prevented a girl from committing suicide, was arrested for assault and battery and fined ten dollars.

THEODORE THOMAS says that the Cincinnati College of Music must add a lager beer saloon before it can expect to become a success.

IT is said that the oyster is poor and thin. This comes of spending their season at the wateribg places. Nearly everybody is poor after sojourning at one of these resorts a few months.

THOSE who hav a few feet of land, such as is by courtesy called a garden, should improve these cool summer nights by agricultural pursuits. It is the right time to plant cats, and he who delays will regret it after he has depopulated his chamber of the small articles which come in useful for throwing.

"WILL you be so kind, my little friend, as to tell your grandmother that the man who is taking the census would like to see her?" said an up-town census taker yesterday to a young miss of seven summers. The little one hesitated an instant and then replied, "Yes, sir; I'll tell her, but I don't believe she has any."

A HIRED man who had been employed on a farm in this country for several months entered suit against his employer the other day for balance of wages, amounting, as he claimed, to $32. The suit was on trial in Justice alley the other day, and it looked at first as though the plaintiff had a clear case. He gave dates and figures in a straightforward way, and seemed a very honest young man. When the farmer took the stand he said:

"I claim an offset for that $32. No man need sue me for what I honestly owe."

"What is your offset?" asked the lawyer.

"He's an unbeliever."

"In what?"

"Why, in the Bible."

"What has that to do with your owing him $32?"

"It has a heap to do with it. I had six hands in my employ, and we were rushing things when I hired this man. He hadn't been with us two days when they stopped the reaper in the middle of the forenoon to dispute about Daniel in the lion's den, and in three days we had a regular knock down over the whale swallowing Jonah. The man who run the mower got to arguing about Samson and drove over a stump and damaged the machine to the extent of $18, and the very next day my boy broke his leg while climbing a fence to see and hear a row that was started over the children of Israel going through the Red Sea. It wasn't a week before my wife said she didn't believe that Elijah was fed by the ravens, and hang me if I didn't find myself growing weak on Noah and his flood. That's my offset, sir; and if he was worth anything I'd sue him for a thousand dollars besides."

The court reserved its decision for twenty-four hours.

A LITTLE round-shouldered man with a large beak nose and long black hair stood before the railing of the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday in a pair of shoes which had recently been introduced to each other. The prisoner was informing a court-officer that the country roads were in good condition for walking, when his remarks were interrupted by Justice Smith.

"Richard Tub, who are you?" asked his honor.

"Well, Jedge," said the little man, "I might be a wire puzzle peddler or a boss millionaire, but I ain't. Who d'ye s'pose I am?"

His honor gave it up.

"Why, I'm Dick Tub, a wanderin' tourist, wot hain't got nothin' to do but travel for my health. I worked in Chicago for a while, but made so much money I had to stop so's I could spend it."

"You must be getting rich?"

"That's where your head's level. I've been collectin' the dust in heaps right along. My clothes are full of it. Why, I've walked all the way from Oil City to New York by way of Erie."

"Took a roundabout way, didn't you?"

"Kinder. You don't get me in Jersey if I know myself. I would not be caught there for a good deal. I'm too well posted on the law. Cold wittles and sleepin' in a hayloft suits me well enough 'thout runnin' myself in a Jersey jail for six months. P'r'aps the melons ain't good, and maybe I hav'nt prospected so's to know where they're getting 'ripe.'"

"Studying farming, no doubt?"

"That's just it, Jedge. I never see a man like you. Why, yer seem to read my thoughts like a book. Yer orter hear the insinevations of some jedges."

"Oh, then you hav been in court before?"

"Only a few times."

"Richard, I'm afraid you're a hard case," said Justice Smith. "What hav you to say to the charge of drunkenness and vagrancy?"

"I'm N. G. for sure,"

"So I thought. You can prepare to devastate the melon patches for fifteen days on the Island."

As the prisoner was led away he muttered mournfully, "That's just the way. We ain't got educated men on the bench. Any man orter now that N. G. stands for not guilty."

Truth Seeker Tracts.

Revised List.

| No. | | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 2 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft. " | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. | 3 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. " | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. " | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 2 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | 2 |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. | 2 |
| 32. | The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 3 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. " | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 3 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 3 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. | 3 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite. " | 3 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 3 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 3 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 3 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate, Underwood. | 3 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 3 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 5 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. " | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus, D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 2 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 3 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 3 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 80. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 5 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 1 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 2 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 5 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London. | 2 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 10 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 2 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 3 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 2 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 92. | The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 5 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 1 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 5 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 10 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 2 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Sciota. | 5 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 102. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 1 |
| 103. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 2 |
| 104. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 10 |
| 105. | Decadence of Christianity. Cappharo. | 2 |
| 106. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 107. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 108. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 2 |
| 110. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 1 |
| 111. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 112. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 2 |
| 113. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 114. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 1 |
| 115. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 2 |
| 116. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 117. | Constantine the Great. Preston | 3 |
| 118. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 5 |
| 119. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 3 |
| 120. | The New Age. Bell | 10 |
| 121. | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 2 |
| 122. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 10 |
| 123. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 124. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 125. | German Liberalism. Clara Neymann | 2 |
| 126. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 10 |
| 127. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 5 |
| 129. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 2 |
| 130. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 5 |
| 131. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 3 |
| 132. | My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson | 1 |
| 133. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | 5 |
| 134. | Talks with the Evangelists | 5 |
| 135. | Is there a Future Life? | 3 |
| 136. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett | 3 |
| 137. | Christian Love. C. L. James | 3 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper. | |
| 139. | Massacre of St. Bartholemew. Preston | 5 |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | 2 |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142. | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wan Ho. Eli Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 145. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D. | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off, on two dollars' worth, 20 off: on five dollars worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Stinson & Co., Portland, Me

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

$72 a WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. True & Co., Augusta, Me.

THE

Cause and Remedy of the Present Financial Condition of the Country.

A lecture delivered at the Courthouse, Albion, New York,

BY MRS. A. H. COLBY.

Price 10 cents. For sale, wholesale and retail, by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

BULLION IN THE CAMPAIGN OF 1880;

OR,

SHYLOCK IN VERSE.

A Pamphlet on the Issues in Finance.

It will be sent to any address on receipt of fifteen cents, or in lots of 10 or more, at the rate of six cents each. Address, A. B. BROWN, Worcester, Mass.

Mrs. Besant's Tracts.

Prices Reduced.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion, | 5 |
| The Fruits of Christianity, | 5 |
| Constructiv Rationalism, | 5 |
| On Eternal Torture, | 5 |
| On Prayer, | 5 |
| The True Basis of Morality, | 5 |
| The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought, | 5 |
| Is the Bible Indictable? | 5 |

ALSO

| | |
|---|---|
| The Law of Population; Its Consequences and its Bearings Upon Human Conduct and Morals, | 40 |
| Marriage; As it Was, As it Is, and As it Should Be, | 40 |

The last two contain a fine steel-plate engraving of Mrs. Besant.

There is no clearer, better writer in the English language.

IN ADDITION.

| | |
|---|---|
| The Church and Education, | 5 |
| On the Religious Education of Children, | 5 |
| Government. An Essay. By Charles Moran. | 10 |

Sold at this office.

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

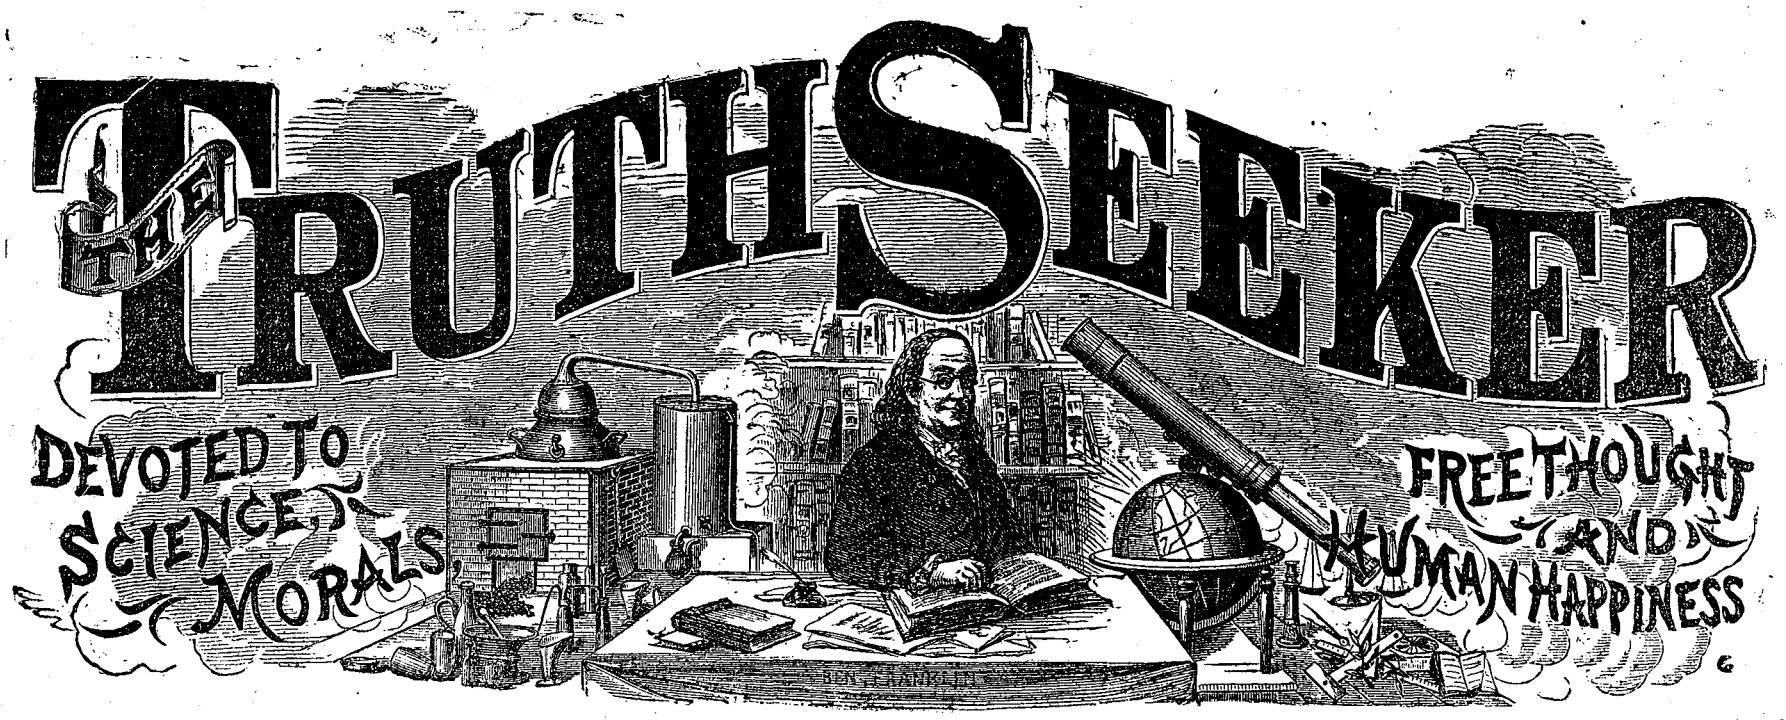
A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familiar tunes. Designed for Liberal Leagues and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00; twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3.00. Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.



AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

Vol. 7. No. 40. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT. } New York, Saturday, October 2, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Rev. Benjamin F. Cooley, an Episcopal clergyman at Chelmford Center, Mass., has been sued for damages by the father of a boy, whom he, it is said, induced to get drunk.

BROTHER WILLIAMS, who used to exhort and pray most fervidly in the Broad street church, Columbus, Ohio, has gone to the penitentiary. He was caught stealing from the contribution box.

THE Vicar of Tarwin, England, has caused considerable commotion in that town by seizing and distraining upon the goods of an incoming tenant for arrears of tithes due from the outgoing tenant.

A LEADING religious organ, speaking of the conduct of some meetings, says that in former days it was a miracle for an ass to speak; whereas it now seems to be a miracle for one to keep quiet in meeting.

LOTTERIES having been resorted to by certain chapels in Wales in order to pay off burdensome debts, the government has interfered in the interests of morality and announces that persons concerned in such schemes will be prosecuted.

THE bishop of Manchester, at a recent art exhibition, remarked that he did not consider it a desecration of the Lord's day for such an exhibition to be opened on Sunday afternoons. People were not made saints necessarily by singing songs about heaven.

THE Methodist says that "Calvinism is hunting with a double-barrelled gun, a college barrel and a pulpit barrel. The college barrel is loaded with predestination, and the pulpit barrel is loaded with free salvation," and it asks if the divinity students are not taught one thing in theory and told to do another in practice.

FATHER KEMPER, in East St. Louis, undertook to organize a Catholic school, and James L. Bracket, also a Catholic and teacher of the village school, took great offense at what he considered an interference with his privileges. On meeting they had some words, when the teacher spit in the priest's face. Excommunication of the teacher followed, but the trouble is not ended.

WHILE the Burials bill was pending, the Bishop of Lincoln, one of its most activ opponents, was asked to consecrate an addition to a graveyard. He replied, "No, excuse me; I cannot now. If the Burial bill passes, consecration would be a mockery, a nullity." He said subsequently that he feared the House of Commons would be ready shortly to disestablish bishops, priests, and deacons.

AT Pala, in southern California, the anniversary of Saint Louis is celebrated by religious ceremonies and bull fights, all under the auspices of the monks belonging to the mission of San Luis Rey. This year a great concourse of Spaniards and Indians gathered. After each day's mass for the week there was bull fighting in the churchyard. These encounters did not amount to much, but a fight between a bull and a bear proved more interesting.

THERE has been another outbreak of Roman Catholic fanaticism in Mexico against Protestants. On a Sunday appointed for the opening of a Protestant church at Salatidian, near Guadalajara, a mob, headed by the curate, attacked the congregation and killed several persons. The curate generously offered to confess the dying and save their souls. The curate and his associates in the crime will probably be punished.

THE sum voted yearly for the Catholic clergy in France is 51,000,000 francs. Of this sum 45,000 francs goes to the Archbishop of Paris and 20,000 francs to the Archbishop of Algiers. Sixteen other archbishops get 15,000 francs each, and sixty-nine bishops each 10,000 francs. Toward the expenses of diocesan visitations 97,000 francs are contributed. The Vicar-General of Paris receives 4,500 francs, eighteen metropolitan vicars-general each 3,500 francs, and 167 other vicars-general each 2,500 francs. Minor grants, varying from 2,400 francs to 450 francs, go to canons, cures, and other members of the ecclesiastical body. Pensions and aid to infirm and aged priests amount to a total of 887,000 francs.

PROF. SILVESTRI, of the Observatory, Etna, has recently made an ascent of that vast volcano. He finds that the edges of the central crater hav undergone considerable change, and the core last formed has diminished no less than 36 feet The circumference of the crater was about 1 300 yards previous to the eruption of last year, but it has now increasd to 1,800. Many other interesting alterations in the conformation of the mountain were also apparent. It was visited by the Italian Alpine Club from Catania on the 15th of September.

A GOOD story comes from our neighboring city of Newark. The German Lutheran congregation being short of a minister, an occasional brother would supply the pulpit. So it came the turn of a prominent ex councilman of the second ward, whose characteristics as a speaker are more forcible than refined. After entering the pulpit he rummaged his pockets over and not finding the sermon he had prepared for the occasion, unconsciously broke out in good "square Dutch," "Vat in ter tevil did I do mit dot tam sermon?"

AT the coming "Church Congress" in England the question of the communion of saints is to be discussed by five clergymen. Two of these are of the variety known as evangelical, and the other three are high churchmen, who hardly consider the evangelicals as worthy the name of saints. These three gentlemen would limit the privilege of saintship to a select few. Dean Close, of Carlile, says that it is a strange thing that such a subject should be discussed by men of three parties, neither of whom would allow either of the others to preach in his pulpit.

THE Presbyterians who are holding their convention are awake to the fact that the Rationalists and scientists hav made great inroads upon the faith of Christendom. The ablest among them. Dr. Watts, was chosen to uphold the plenary inspiration of the scriptures. The delegates seem to be anxious to carry the war into the ranks of the scientists, and it is to be hoped that they will put forth some of their number to meet the Rationalists in debate. It is plain that the attacks upon the inspiration of the Bible are felt by the Council to be severe, and that unless warded off they would undermine the very foundation of the church.

GEORGE B. WENDLING, preacher, prayist, and blatherskite, and who believes that the universe and all that it contains was made in six days; that all the people of the earth, Caucasian and Negro, Mongolian and American, all sprung from a single pair; that fair girl and boy were seduced by a snake which walked upon its tail, and because of said seduction ninety-seven per cent of said people are condemned to eternal misery, says to the editor of the Topeka Commonwealth that he favors the election of Garfield, not Hancock, as reported. Well, what of it, Mr. Wendling? Most of the ignorant preachers of your stripe do the same. It is fit and proper that they should. It is simply "birds of one feather."—Cloud Co. Blade.

I READ a few days ago that the bishop of Cincinnati had forbidden "banged" or "frizzled" hair to be worn in his diocese. A large confirmation was held lately in St. John's church (Romish) in this city. The young girls were told beforehand by their minister that the bishop would not lay his hand on any "frizzled" or "banged" heads. I am afraid in many instances the "banged" and "frizzled" heads disappeared only for the time of confirmation. Lately, too, the ecclesiastical potentate of Montreal issued an edict against the female members of his congregations appearing in church without a shawl or some kind of flowing drapery to screen their forms from public gaze. When we were in Rome in 1841 no lady was allowed to go without a veil over her face into any church where the Pope was to officiate. I remember one day in driving out we suddenly met the carriage of the "Holy Father," Gregory XVI., and found he was to hold some sort of a service in a neighboring church. We gave orders at once for our carriage to follow, but were respectfully told the "signora" (myself) could not go in without a veil, which appendage I did not hav at that moment. To rush to a shop and buy a strip of black lace and tie it on over my bonnet took only a few minutes, so that I was soon armed and equipped according to law.—Providence Journal.

THE parish priest of Montanaro, a village in Upper Italy, was very much in need of an altar for his church, but could not induce the male members of his flock to contribute to that end. He then resolved to experiment upon the softer natures of his female parishioners. Ascending the pulpit after high mass, one Sunday morning, he concluded an eloquent sermon by exhorting the women present to devote their hair to the sacred purpose he had so frequently and unsuccessfully recommended to the attention of their natural protectors. So saying, he produced from the bosom of his cassock a large sharp scissors, and retired to his sacristy, impressivly summoning matrons and maidens alike to follow him thither. No fewer than two hundred and twelve submitted their locks to his pastoral shears, and when the sacrifice had been fully accomplished the female population of Montanaro found itself as short of hair as a well-worn blacking-brush.

A RECENT Michigan decision bears pretty heavily upon Anthony Comstock's system of making crime. A lawyer who was being prosecuted, desiring to steal some documentary evidence against him from the court-room, asked an officer to aid him by leaving the door unlocked. The officer, to detect him, did as he desired, and the thief was caught in the act. One of the judges pronounced the course of the officer "scandalous and reprehensible," and another one said, "If we cannot prevent another from violating the law, we at least should abstain from any activ efforts in leading him into temptation." Comstock habitually does worse than this officer did. His whole business is to tempt men to get them into his clutches. And in more than one instance he has induced people to send him indecent articles who never thought of doing such a thing until seduced by his tempting offers. A promoter of crime and manufacturer of criminals may be a valuable appendage to the Young Men's Christian Association, but he is of very little benefit to the community.

A FEATURE of the Moody Prayer Convention hardly less remarkable than the prostration in the straw was the style of confession in which some of the brethren indulged. Some said that they had discovered themselvs to be exceedingly vile, others said that they had not up to that time known what bad hearts they had. Brother Moody himself made confession that he was dreadfully self-willed, and he said that Sankey knew it. Some admitted that they had not properly studied the scriptures. Brother Sankey said that he had at times wasted his talents in singing worldly songs, but that he would henceforward sing only the songs of Zion. The brethren who confessed their vileness and general badness did not specify the particulars of their iniquity, but only mentioned their shortcomings in a general way. No specific inquiries were made as to what sins these brethren had been committing, and no steps were taken toward instituting ecclesiastical proceedings against them in the churches to which they belong. Everybody was content to generalize, and as most of the brethren were on an even footing in regard to the grievousness of the sins confessed, there was no disposition on the part of any to call the others hard names.—Sun.

THE diary of a dollar:

I was once $1.

Subscribed by private charity for the Home of the Hungry, Friendless, and Needy.

But, in trying to get to the poor, I hav grown very poor myself.

| | |
|---|---|
| Thus, expense being collected | .10 |
| For salary minister in charge of Home of the Hungry I pay | .20 |
| For rent of Home of the Hungry I pay | .10 |
| For salary of Secretary I pay | .05 |
| For prospectus and yearly report of the Home of the Hungry I pay | .05 |
| For getting up the yearly dinner, celebrating the Home of the Hungry, I pay | .05 |
| For current expenses of running the home I pay | .05 |
| For baker's and butcher's bill, employees of the Home of the Hungry, I pay | .05 |
| For extra polish on knocker on big front door, I pay | .05 |
| For insurance and taxes on the Home of the Hungry, I pay | .05 |
| Total | .75 |
| Balance due in treasury Home of the Hungry, Friendless, and Needy | .25 |

Which may go to relieve the hungry, friendless, and needy, if not otherwise called for.

Events of the Week.

FOUR inches of snow fell on the 25 h, at Lookout Station, Wyoming.

A SMALL but genuin sea-serpent was recently caught in British Columbia.

EIGHT men were recently killed by the breaking of a cable in a Nevada mine.

TWO MEN were burned to death in a saloon at Buena Vista, Cal., a few days ago.

SOME of the heretofore stanch Greenbackers of Indiana are coming out for Hancock.

JESSE GRANT, the third son of the General, was married in San Francisco on the 21st ult.

THE Maine election has at last been decided in favor of the Democratic governor, Plaisted.

THE leader of the Greenbackers in Pennsylvania, J. W. Hughes, has come out against Weaver.

TEN bodies hav been recovered from the ingulfed Hudson River Tunnel thus far. Ten are yet to be found.

AN editor was shot and killed recently in Santa Barbara, Cal., by a politician whom he had attacked in his paper.

FIVE persons were poisoned—one of whom has since died—by an accidental dose of arsenic in their porridge in this city a few days ago.

THE Coney Island season closed on Sunday last, much to the regret of the steamboat and hotel proprietors and the delight of the festiv clam.

HAYES pardoned a Christian mail robber about two months ago. On Sunday last the pious thief was caught in the act of robbing the letter boxes again.

THE Irish anti-landlord movement is gaining ground in Ireland. Parnell, the agitator, recently addressed a meeting of twenty thousand persons at a land meeting.

LORD MOUNTMORRIS, an Irish landlord who was about to evict some of his tenants, was found dead, a few days ago, near his residence with six bullet holes through him.

THE Woman Suffrage State Committee of this state hav issued an address to the women requesting them to vote at the school meetings on the 12 h, as permitted by the new state law.

THE Pope has made a magnificent present to the child recently born to the queen of Spain; meanwhile the begging for the generous old gentleman goes vigorously on in this country.

GEN. HANCOCK denies all intentions of the Democrats to pay the rebel war claim in case he should be elected, and shows a statesmanlike comprehension of the duties of the government in his letter of denial.

A TWELVE-MILE swimming match, presided over by Harry Hill, was one of the religious exercises of this city on Sunday last. The prize of $100 was won by George Fearn, an English swimmer, in two hours and fifty-five minutes.

A COUNCIL of Presbyterian clergymen is in full blast in Philadelphia, and everything looks blue in the Quaker city. They are trying to determin how the Almighty wants the world run during the next twelve months. The revision of the Bible, religion and politics, the vicarious sacrifice of Christ, and future retribution are among the topics discussed.

THE Virgin Mary and several other ghostly personages are astonishing the natives of Ireland by suddenly appearing and disappearing in various out-of-the-way places. On a recent occasion the Virgin performed the rather difficult feat of appearing in two or three different places at once, and it was not a good day for such performances either. Several miracles are reported from England also.

A $329 fever has broken out among the Democrats. Garfield is accused of having received $329 as a dividend on his share of the Credit Mobilier stock, and now every Democratic small boy carries a piece of chalk and writes the unlucky figures everywhere. Sidewalks, curbstones, ash barrels, street doors, and even the backs of incautious Republicans, hav blossomed out with what threatens to seal the doom of the Republican party—$329.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1880.

Letter from Europe.—No. 6.—Continued.

But, my friends, I fear I cannot easily give you a fitting description of the Louvre, which, with the Vatican in Rome, contains the greatest collection of works of art in the world. Some authorities date the origin of the Louvre from the first French kings, whilst others say that it was erected in the center of a forest by Philip Augustus, in 1217. It is quite sure that the building was not considered as being within the town of Paris until 1385, when a new inclosure was made by Charles VI. It is said the palace was originally designed for the reception of foreign monarchs during their sojourn in the French capital. In 1528 Francis I. pulled down the old building to put in its place a new and finer edifice, which was finished by his son, Henry II. A part of the modern structure was erected by the order of Louis XIV.; and it was during the life of this king that the superb eastern colonnade was executed. This masterpiece of architecture yields in nothing to the most beautiful productions of antique art. The Louvre stands upon the banks of the Seine; the side facing it is decorated with most admirable carvings in stone, and the pavilions of Rohan and Lesdiguieres are marvelous instances of the power of the sculptor's chisel, while the innumerable monumental statues which decorate the building in great numbers are very attractive features to the beholder. We see nothing of the kind in our own country—a building having a total frontage or grand wall of magnificent architecture inclosing two grand and extensive squares, areas of some acres each of thousands of feet, with two tiers of niches in which are sculptured statues of kings, dukes, counts, generals, statesmen, together with the heroes and notables of antiquity. The entire building is of finely hewn stone; two galleries in hight all the way around and much of the way three floors, all well filled with the highest works of art in the way of large and beautiful paintings, by the first artists for the past five centuries, magnificent statuary, including great numbers of the Grecian and Roman gods, goddesses, heroes, warriors, statesmen, poets, classic and fancy pieces, etc., etc., besides very many distinguished persons of more modern date.

Among the thousands of the first-class paintings which line the walls for seeming miles very many deserve special attention, but that cannot be given here. I can only say the quantity and quality greatly excelled everything I have ever seen before. The treasures of this collection are distributed through one hundred and thirty rooms and many of them of great length. One gallery being a thousand feet in length, and the descriptive catalogue of which fills thirty bulky volumes. This will give some idea of the immensity of the collection. Many of the pictures are of very large size being forty or fifty by thirty or forty feet. Some are battle scenes, some landscapes, some ocean scenes, many life-size portraits of distinguished characters in all ages of the world, including kings, emperors, etc., etc., with great numbers of historical pieces; others in all branches of natural history and a far greater number of religious subjects, giving the sad-looking Jesus in all conceivable conditions and circumstances; the same of the Virgin, and the whole category of the dismal saints before alluded to, who neither want to be happy themselves nor suffer anybody else to be so. The ceilings of many of the galleries are richly and exquisitely decorated by beautiful paintings by celebrated artists; even if there were nothing else in the galleries where these decorations appear, it would well pay the visitor to walk through them and admire.

A very important feature of the Louvre collection is the antiquities. They fill several extensive galleries, and embrace Egyptian, Indian, Chinese, Chaldean, Assyrian, Phœnician, or Carthagenian, Etruscan, Grecian, and Roman rare and beautiful antique curiosities, embracing of course the gods and idols of the various nations, ancient sculpture, Egyptian sarcophagii of immense size, weight, and elaborateness of sculpture, coffins of wood and papyrus, highly decorated with hieroglyphics, paintings, etc. Some of the Assyrian antiquities of large size are the originals from which copies were made which are now in the South Kensington Museum in London. These mythical godly antiquities are of immense value.

On the third floor are several galleries filled with elaborate models of ancient and modern boats, sloops, ships, and steamers of various nations, and everything that pertains to the maritime service. It is wonderful how so much could be produced and collected. All this was most curious and interesting. There were also in the same rooms large bird's-eye or topographical views of different cities and countries, showing the relative altitude of hills, mountains, buildings, etc.

On the first floor are the paintings of various schools, enamels, and bronzes, showing the progress of the naval art through many long centuries. America is also represented in the antiquarian department, especially in the sepulchers and mummies from Peru, Bolivia, Mexico, etc. A vast amount of interesting matter could be written about the curiosities and wonders of the Louvre, but it is not my purpose to undertake it. I must hurry on to the mention of other interesting places and other collections of works of art, but will say that the Louvre contains one of the most wonderful collections in the world, and that within its walls are thousands upon thousands of the most valuable and interesting works of art, sufficient to occupy and interest an observing student for weeks and months together. A person cannot begin to do it justice in a single day or the part of a day.

The floors of the Louvre are of oak, composed of short pieces, running only from one joist to another, and laid diagonally and changing with each course. The floors are polished or waxed, and are so smooth that one could easily fall if he was not a little cautious. The surroundings of the Louvre are interesting, and the views from its windows are beautiful and interesting as one looks out either on the river, the bridges which span it, the beautiful grounds in the vicinity, or the thousands of people hurrying in all directions. Take it all in all, the Louvre is one of the most remarkable places in the world. Issuing from it, after having peeped through its glorious and boundless wealth, one finds himself in a large square known as the Place du Carrousel. The magnificent pile of buildings which surrounds it is formed by the conjunction of the Louvre with the wings of the Tuileries, and presents an architectural ensemble hardly equaled in Europe. Before us stands the Arc de Triomphe du Carrousel, erected by order of Napoleon I., in 1806, in imitation of the Arch of Severus, at Rome, and at a cost of 1,400,000 francs. On the colored marble columns stand eight statues or soldiers of the first empire, in the uniform of their different corps; and on the four faces are marble reliefs, representing battles of the imperial period. The arch, forty-eight feet in hight, is surmounted by a bronze group by Bosio, designed to represent the restoration.

The Palace of the Tuileries, which occupied the ground beyond the triumphal arch, was built by Catherine de Medicis in 1564, and the celebrated Philibert Delorme was its architect. On May 22, 1871, the Communists set fire to the Tuileries with the aid of petroleum and gunpowder. The conflagration soon assumed the most terific dimensions, and the whole building was reduced to ruins after burning three days and nights. The walls, however, are still standing, and are about the only ruins left by the excesses of the Communists, and, by a cursory examination, it would appear that they might again be utilized and the magnificent palace be again restored. But as France has now no crowned head, the palace is no longer required as a home for emperor, king, or queen. In due time it is presumed that the damages of the fire will be replaced by refilling the standing walls or removing the whole and erecting new buildings in their place.

The discovery of the papers concealed in the Tuileries in September, 1870, stripped the imperial despotism of its tinsel and revealed the vile and contemptible arts by which a great and gallant nation had been enslaved. The government of Napoleon III., as Mr. Gladstone said of that of Bomba, was perhaps a negation of God upon earth. His counselors were bold, bad men, ever plotting against each other, and uniting alone in a common conspiracy to grow rich at the expense of their country. The Tuileries was the El Dorado of pimps and parasites and wantons. For eighteen long years Louis Napoleon retained the power which he had acquired through perjury and violence, by pandering to the baser passions of his subjects and by an organized system of fraud, mendacity, and espionage. Beneath his blighting rule French women only sought to surpass each other in reckless extravagance, and Frenchmen lost the courage which had half redeemed their frivolity. Honest citizens there were, indeed, who protested against these saturnalia of successful villainy and rampant vice, but few listened to their warnings. What were the consequences of all this vice and extravagance? The armies of France were scattered to the winds; the man who knew not how a Cæsar should die, taken prisoner; his despera-does enjoying their booty in ignoble ease, not having the courage or manliness to fight for the country they had basely betrayed. The gay crowd took to itself wings, and Paris, the vaunted ornament of civilization, abandoned to the iron grasp of the German legions and the culpable designs of the reckless, maniacal Communists, sunk to a state of humiliation and deep distress. Such is the legend of the Tuileries.

The Jardin des Tuileries are the most beautiful grounds I ever saw. They extend west of the Tuileries as far as the Place de la Concorde. I should judge the grounds contain nearly fifty acres, a goodly portion of which is most beautifully laid off in grass plots, beds of beautiful plants and flowers grandly interspersed with a profusion, along the walks, of marble and bronze statuary. Here I noticed my old friends Jove, Mercury, Hercules, Apollo, Venus, Bacchus, Minerva, Esculapius, Leda, the muses, the graces, and many others of those mystical conceptions. Conspicuous among them was poor Prometheus, chained to the rock, undergoing the severest sufferings for the good of mankind. I viewed the figure with interest, and while I remembered that the legend had been modified—chaining him to the rock in place of his being crucified—I could see there one of the sources whence the idea of the crucifixion of Jesus—the Judean Prometheus—was obtained, the representation of which I have seen over and over again in the cathedrals, churches, picture galleries, etc., etc. Thus are myths and superstitions handed down from age to age; thus are falsehoods perpetuated and venerated until they are looked upon as the most sacred of all things and the salvation of the world is thought to depend upon accepting and believing them.

Among the beautiful plants and flowers of this garden were a hundred orange trees about fifteen feet in hight, uniform in size, and the tops carefully trimmed in the shape of a globe. These were in large boxes and are taken in when cold weather comes, as are also many others of the tender ornamental plants now so beautiful and luxuriant.

The Garden of the Tuileries was designed by Le Notre, a distinguished landscape gardner, in 1665, but it has undergone various modifications since that time, as it originally was an orchard. The bands of the various regiments quartered in Paris play here every day through the summer when the weather will admit from 5 to 6 P. M. They were playing when we passed through the garden, and we estimated ten thousand persons were present, the greater portion of whom were seated immediately around the band. It was a pleasant afternoon and it seemed a very rational species of enjoyment. This is in the very heart of the city, and here every day large multitudes gather to take the air, to exercise, and to hear the fine music dispensed. Here in snug corners and retreats, sheltered from the rude winds, delicate invalids, prattling childhood, and tottering old age bask themselves in the genial sunshine and renew the pleasures of life and health. Lovely Jarden des Tuileries!

The Place de la Concorde is in close proximity to the garden, and is said to be the finest and most imposing square in Europe, and is the culminating point of the splendor of Paris. Here is erected on a beautiful pedestal the celebrated obelisk of Luxor from Egypt, entirely covered with prominent hieroglyphics and inscriptions, erected in its present site under Louis Philippe in 1836. This obelisk ornamented the palace of the kings of Egypt at Thebes not less than fifteen hundred years before the Christian era, and was a gift of Mehemet Ali, Pacha of Egypt, to the French government, at the same time he gave a similar one (Cleopatra's Needle) to the English, which I saw standing by the banks of the Thames. The obelisk of Luxor, a monolith of solid reddish granite, is seventy-six feet in hight, besides the pedestal; it weighs 500,000 pounds, and cost to remove it from Egypt and place it where it now stands 2,000,000 francs. The pedestal on which it stands is a single block of gray granite, weighing 240,000 pounds, upon the northern side of which is represented the apparatus employed in the removal and embarkation of the beautiful Egyptian relic, and on the opposite side that used in raising it into position.

On either side of this magnificent monument is a large, beautiful, elaborate, and expensive bronze fountain. Above an elevated basin, fifteen feet from the ground, are figures from which streams of water are sent forth into the basin. Under it are several large figures sitting in seeming repose. In the main fountain below were female figures with the tail of a fish, holding a fish in their arms, from the mouths of which shot upwards into the basin a generous stream of water. They are the prettiest fountains I ever saw, and must have cost large sums of money.

Around the place are eight statues, representing the chief cities of France—Lyons, Marseilles, Bordeaux, Nantes, Rouen, Brest, Lille, and Strasburg. At the entrance of the Champs Elysees are the famous Chevaux de Marly, the two equestrian groups by Guillaume Coustou, which were brought from Marly Le Roi by order of the National Convention.

On the precise spot where the obelisk now stands, the guillotine was raised for the execution of Louis XVI. Here, also, many other distinguished persons were executed. Among those who terminated their career upon this awful spot during the Reign of Terror were Charlotte Corday, the beautiful and courageous patriot; Brissot, chief of the Girondists; Queen Marie Antoinette, a model of grace and beauty; Philippe Egalité, Duke d'Orleans; Madame Roland, whose dying words were, "O liberty, what crimes are pepetrated in thy name!" Herbert, editor of the famous Jacobin Pere Duchéne; Danton, the rival of Robespierre; Camille Desmoulins, and his young and noble wife; Chaumette; Madame Elizabeth, sister of Louis XVI; Robespierre himself, chief of the Mountain, and his friends Couthon and St. Just, besides upwards of three thousand nobles and royalists. Here a vast amount of human blood has been spilt. Here Thomas Paine would doubtless have yielded his life had not a fortunate though trivial circumstance saved him.

The Champs Elysées is called the promenade in Europe, and on every pleasant day is thronged with such numbers of carriages that London itself cannot equal it. It also presents a very gay appearance at night when brilliantly illuminated.

On the left stands the Palais de l'Industrie, which was used in 1855 for the great international exhibition. On the outside are busts of celebrated men of every nation, the French of course being in excess. About half way up the avenue is the Rond Point, where six fountains, conceived in a very original spirit, are usually playing. Not far from this place, in the Faubourg St. Honore, is situated the Palais de l'Élysée, erected in 1718, and inhabited in 1745 by Madame Pompadour, the mistress of Louis XV. This splendid mansion afterward became the property of the state. During the "Hundred Days," in 1815, it was occupied by Napoleon I. After the battle of Waterloo it was occupied by the Duke of Wellington and the Emperor Alexander.

The Arc Triomphe de l'Etoile must next be mentioned. It is the largest and finest structure of the kind in the world. It stands on a gradual eminence perhaps half a mile from the Place de la Concorde, and is visible from almost every part of the environs of Paris. It was commenced by order of Napoleon I. in 1806 to perpetuate the glories of his campaign, but was not completed until 1836. This noble monument of solid and beautiful masonry is one hundred and forty-seven feet broad, and seventy-two feet thick. It cost nearly 10,000,000 francs. On the two sides are elaborate conceptions of battle scenes and victories in relief, which rank high as works of art. The arch is double, having a passage way east and west, north and south. We ascended its two hundred and eighty-one steps, and from its top had a fine view of Paris and its environs. On the night of May 20, 1871, the Communists succeeded in raising, by steam power, heavy artillery on the top of the arch, from whence they bombarded, with murderous effect, the citadel of Mont Valérien, the most powerful detached fort around Paris.

The beautiful promenade of Bois de Boulogne is one of the most picturesque of the city. Before the hour of dinner (6 P. M.) all kinds of fashionable equestrians crowd to this favorite resort. Here are to be found shady and deserted alleys for those who prefer them to excitement and pleasure. Here the great military reviews and parades take place.

The Colonne Vendome, a beautiful bronze column 135 feet in hight and thirteen feet in diameter, rears its head at the end of the Rue de la Paix. It took its name from the hotel of the Duke of Vendôme. It was begun by Napoleon I. in 1806, to commemorate the successes of the French army in Germany, and completed in 1810. It stands in a perfect octagon 420 by 450 feet; it is in imitation of the pillar of Trojan at Rome. The pedestal is a masterpiece of composition twenty-five feet high and twenty square. On the top stands a figure of the hero of Austerlitz, sixteen feet in hight, and dressed in a Roman toga. The summit is reached by a winding staircase of 176 steps, and from it a good view is obtained. The column is covered with reliefs in bronze, composed of four hundred and twenty-five plates, made out of 1,200 cannons captured from the Russians and Austrians during a campaign of three months in 1805. There are over two thousand figures three feet in hight, and the total weight of the metal employed is 1,800,000 pounds.

The Communists, considering the column a monument of barbarism, a symbol of brute force and false glory, a negation of international law, a permanent insult cast by the victors on the vanquished, a perpetual attack on one of the great principles of the French Republic Fraternity, passed a decree that the Place Vendome should be demolished. On May 16, 1871, a dense multitude assembled to witness the prostration of the lofty column. The excitement was intense. Several ropes were fastened around the top and which communicated with a windlass and anchor in the Rue de la Paix. The tricolored flag of France was tied to the hand of Napoleon, and then at a given signal the insensate work of destruction began. Very soon the great mass tottered and fell, breaking, as it reached the ground, into a thousand pieces. Napoleon's figure had been separated from the lantern and lay a wreck, with the head severed from the body and one arm broken. The fragments of the column, however, were preserved, and ultimately the whole was resurrected nearly as beautiful as ever.

The Palais Royal was built in 1629 by Cardinal Duke de Richelieu, the celebrated prime minister of Louis XIII., who died in 1642. It was originally called Palais Cardinal. It is constructed in a parallelogram form, and a large garden occupies the center. On May 24, 1871, the Communists set fire to the Palais Royal, and the entire south wing became a prey to the flames. The garden of the Palais Royal is known over the habitable globe, though it is not so rich and beautiful as many more modern grounds of the kind.

The Hotel de Ville, or City Hall, is now being rebuilt, and will be a magnificent structure.

The Place des Vosges is a large, gloomy, and old-fashioned square. The center is occupied by an equestrian statue in white marble of Louis XIII. There are also trees and fountains. This nook preserves the exact appearance it did nearly three centuries ago. For generations it was one of the most fashionable resorts in the city, when plumed knights and gallants and masked ladies of high rank here fluttered in brilliant gayety.

Let us proceed to the Place de la Bastile, which, as its name indicates, was the situation of the famous prison of state, and where many unfortunates have unjustly suffered. The Bastile was begun by order of Charles V. in 1369 and finished in 1383. The darkest features of French history were stereotyped on the gloomy walls of the ancient fortress, and its name was long a terror to all classes of the community. The deeds of violence and injustice which were perpetrated within its walls during four centuries will ever serve to keep in abomination the term king in France. On July 14, 1789, the incensed people of Paris attacked the Bastile with such irresistible force and determination that the garrison soon yielded, and in a short time all that remained of the old state prison was a heap of shapeless ruins. Thus fell this formidable place of horror after a seige of three hours only—a fortress that the most experienced generals of the age of Louis XIV. had deemed impregnable. The fine bronze column at present standing in the Place de la Bastile is called the Colonne de Juliet, and was erected in remembrance of those who feel in defense of liberty in July, 1830. It is one hundred and sixty-five feet high, and the figure emblematical of liberty crowns it. On the sides of the monument are engraved the names of five hundred and four patriots whose remains are deposited in the vaults beneath. Two hundred and five steps take one to the summit, which commands a fine view of eastern Paris.

But, my friends, I perceive I will not be able to tell you all I want to about Paris in this letter, so, as this is quite long, I will close and write you another on the same subject soon.

I am doing well, and hope you all are engaged in a similar occupation. I am yours truly,

D. M. B.

Letter from Europe.—No. 7.

MORE OF PARIS.

PARIS, August 15, 1880.

MY DEAR FRIENDS: I will continue my imperfect descriptions of this beautiful city. One of the most interesting places I have visited within its bounds is the Palace of Luxembourg and Garden of Luxembourg in front and on one side of it. The Garden rivals that of the Tuileries, and it is difficult to decide which is the more beautiful of the two. The twenty statues which adorn the terrace represent women famous in history, among them Mary Stuart and Petrarch's Laura. The other statues are chiefly copies from antiquities. Those on the grass-plots near the large fountain are of Italian workmanship, of the sixteenth century. On the eastern side of the Garden is the beautiful Fontaine de Medicis, built by Desbrosses, and, as some say, designed by Rubens. Cafés and kiosks are interspersed in the western grove of chestnuts. The Rosary, situated in this direction, is the finest in Paris. Here invalids and elderly people may be seen basking themselves in the vivifying sun, while a very different sight is the open space before the orangery (where are scores of beautiful large orange trees) at the other end of the garden, where the gamins usually congregate and play with that life and animation so characteristic of the French nation. Bands of music often play here.

The Palace of Luxembourg was built in 1615–20, by Jacques Desbrosses, and served as a residence to Marie de Medicis, second wife to Henry IV. Here Rubens in 1621 painted the sketches of his series of large allegorical pictures now in the Louvre. Like other places in Paris, it has undergone not a few exciting transmutations in its time and at different periods has served as a palace, a prison, and a parliament house. Yet notwithstanding half a dozen names in which the palace at different times has rejoiced, it still continues to be called by that of the first party who, four hundred years ago, built a mansion on this site, the Duke d'Epinay Luxembourg.

The interior is divided into two sections, the Prèfecture de la Seine, or civil administration, and the Musée, or galleries of painting, open daily, free, containing the works of contemporary artists, or those who have not been dead more than ten years. After the Louvre the Luxembourg paintings are the most interesting in Paris, and as they are modern they look still more brilliant than many in the Louvre collection. We highly enjoyed our visit to this brilliant edifice. On the lower floor is a fine collection of statuary, including more of the old gods, whom, by this time, I begin to feel pretty well acquainted with. Both in this department and in the galleries on the next floor, the pictures are very noticeable for their fidelity to nature. There are numbers of figures and paintings in precisely the same condition that our first parents are supposed to have been in before they made themselves aprons of fig leaves. They are guiltless of drapery of any kind, and nothing is omitted from a feeling of squeamishness or mock modesty.

I do not know what Greene-street Comstock would do with himself could he see these statues of Luxembourg or should some of them be imported into the United States. It is well known that he has endured for years without taking the lockjaw or hydrophobia the vilest collection of infamous pictures and books in the world, without becoming any more contaminated and corrupt than he was before. But if the viewing of these statues and pictures would make him a decent, respectable man, I would willingly pay the expense of his passage over. Still the best of ladies and gentlemen, both of Europe and America, look upon these works of art with pleasure and propriety, and scores of scholars and students of both sexes daily throng these galleries and copy openly and innocently the very statues and paintings which Comstock would like to send people to prison for looking at or having in their possession—infinitely more objectionable than the copy of Hans Makart's picture of Charles V. entering Antwerp, which Comstock made such an ado about on Fulton street, New York, two years ago. It is very well for the city of Paris that they have not such a man as Comstock to poke his dirty nose into the art galleries in all parts of the city. It is to be hoped that the Comstocks and Collettes will not always be the ones to decide what pictures people may or may not look upon, and what books they may or may not read.

One of the features of the Luxembourg and Louvre galleries is the number of students, men and women, youths and gray-bearded veterans, who, mounted on scaffolding, or merely standing before a low easel, spend whole years of their lives in copying the countless masterpieces of the collections. Zealous Sabbatarians, also, might learn a profitable lesson from the aspect of the Luxembourg and Louvre on Sunday, where they could see hundreds of the humbler classes heartily enjoying the various works of art, and moreover frequently showing themselves capable of appreciating these beauties far beyond many of Puritanic proclivities. In this respect Paris is much in advance of London. An effort has been made in the latter city to have the museums and picture galleries open on Sundays, but it has not as yet been successful. There is no doubt that those who spend their Sundays in studying works of art pass the time far more innocently than the average classes who roam the streets or use the day in elongating their faces and playing the hypocrite generally. Indeed there is little doubt that the great superiority, as far as artistic taste goes, which the Parisian workman possesses over his London brother is owing to the facilities which the state places at his disposal for studying art in every form, from antique furniture in the Musée de Cluny to modern paintings in the Luxembourg. Even in walking through the galleries his eye becomes unconsciously educated as to what is or is not good taste.

Turning into the Rue de Vangiard, on the right, is the Odeon, one of the monumental theaters of Paris, largely patronized by students.

Another place of great interest is the Bibliothèque Nationale, the oldest, rarest, richest, and most extensive library in the world, founded by Charles V., a patronizer of literature. The three million books and two million manuscripts contained in this library would, if placed in a continuous line, extend to a distance of forty-eight miles. I was under the impression that the immense library in the British Museum is the largest in the world, but it appears I was mistaken; the Bibliothèque, in Paris, contains more than twice the number of volumes. The heart of Voltaire, that illustrious philosopher and prolific writer, is preserved here. The reading-room is still more splendid than the grand dome in the British Museum; instead of being under one plain dome, the overhead or complex arches are rich, beautiful, and finished in the most magnificent manner. Here we also saw many more antiquities and ancient manuscripts, inscriptions on stone, maps, etc. I saw there large globes ten or twelve feet in diameter, as well as much else that I cannot now call to mind and name. I will merely say, however, that the entire institution is a great credit to Paris and to France.

Between the Bibliothèque and the Louvre, on Rue Richelieu, on the corner of Rue Moliere, is the beautiful Fontaine Moliere. This monument was erected by public subscription to the memory of the man whose immortal names it bears. "The father of French comedy" is represented in a sitting posture in an attitude of deep meditation. Below are two allegorical figures holding scrolls, on which are inscribed in chronological order the name of all the works of this great genius. Moliere died in the house opposite in 1673. Then took place that famous supper when, together with Boileau, La Fontaine, and a few other boon companions, Moliere and his guests having extended their libations beyond the bounds of prudence, decided there and then to drown themselves in the Seine upon the plea that the greatest happiness is never to have been born, while the next is to die with as little delay as possible. On their way to the river, however, Moliere suggested that so doughty a deed should not be performed in the dark, but that it merited the blaze of noonday sun. "He is right!" cried his companions, one of whom, Chapelle, added, "Well, as we are not going to drown ourselves till to-morrow, let us go back and finish the wine."

I visited the Jardin des Plantes by myself. It is a zoological garden, a botanical garden, combined with most extensive anatomical, antiquarian, botanical, geological, and chemical museums. Among the animals are all that are procurable, from the elephants, lions, tigers, hippopotamuses, rhinoceroses, of Asia and Africa, down to the Guinea pig; from the largest ostriches, condors, eagles, pelicans, storks, cranes, flamingoes, down to cockatoos and quails.

The dangerous animals are in cages in a secure building, while the others are in lots of different sizes, surrounded by iron fences, in all parts of the grounds. The antelope and deer family were fully represented, there being many varieties of them; the same of bears and all other kinds of beasts and birds. The collection is most extensive. The monkey-house attracts great attention. It is a huge cage of wire perhaps sixty feet in diameter and two-thirds as high, with plenty of facilities for sportive exercise on the part of the active, comical animals. The snake house is a curiosity. The bear-pits, in which were black bears, white polar bears, grizzly bears, cinnamon bears, etc., also drew many observers; and the same may be said of the beautiful zebras and many others of the birds and animals.

The botanical garden is extensive and well arranged. The greenhouses and exotics are extensive, but neither the garden nor greenhouses excel those of Kew Gardens in London. Perhaps the botanical museum does not come up to those of Kew Gardens, but the geological and mineralogical collection is most full and extensive, containing tens of thousands of specimens of all forms and combinations of minerals, ores, sulphates, sulphides, sulpherets, carbonates, nitrates, chlorates, chlorides, acetates, oxides, ect. Here the genius, industry, and thorough investigation of Cuiver and Huay are manifested, and fine marble statues of them are in the museum. The anatomical and antiquarian museums far excelled anything of the kind I ever witnessed. There are thousands of anatomies, from the mammoth saurians of thousands of years ago, forty feet in length, with a head and jaw six or eight feet across, down to the tiniest animals. There are probably a thousand skeletons of the human race carefully wired together, and embracing all races and nations; also many hundreds of busts in some kind of composition, representing accurately every conceiveable variety and variation in the human race, embracing scores of the African, Asiatic, European, and American types of humanity, affording an excellent opportunity of studying ethnology. The Hottentot Venus, life size, fell very far short of the Venus of Milo. The Hottentot article has very few attractions for a connoisseur of European nations.

The collection of monstrosities, or lusus naturæ—children born double in all conceivable forms, with two heads, four arms, four legs, joined at the back, at the sides, in front, and in all kinds of positions—went far beyond anything of the kind a person could possibly conceive of. There are scores upon scores of them, and in nearly all cases the identical subjects that were really brought forth, and the same preserved in alcohol. I saw there, also, numerous doubles of a similar character in the animal kingdom. I was struck with the numerous mistakes which nature has apparently made. But in every instance of this kind there was a sufficient cause or reason which produced the result, and nature was not really to blame for it. The library contains 60,000 volumes of scientific works, which may every day be consulted by those who desire to do so.

In 1626 Guy de la Brosse, a physician of Louis XIII., prevailed upon the king to establish a garden for the cultivation of foreign plants, the superintendence of which passed into several hands, until 1739, when the direction was confided to the immortal Buffon. Under Napoleon I. the collection was much enlarged. The garden is open free all day, and is visited by thousands. It is a most commendable arrangement to make institutions of this kind free to the public, as thereby every person who chooses can visit and obtain the most valuable information. America has yet considerable progress to make in this direction before it will equal what has been done by the leading cities of Europe.

During the seige of 1870–71 the various animals contained in the Garden des Plantes were sold by auction at fabulous prices. Bread was plentiful for the first two months, but after that time it became terribly scarce, and the daily allowance was only ten ounces per head. Only one kind was manufactured, and very poor stuff at that, dark in color, heavy, pasty, and gritty, with very little grain in it fit to eat. Horses, donkeys, and mules averaged fifteen francs per pound. Horse flesh is said to be excellent, and with the exception of being a little sweeter than beef is otherwise much like it. The flesh of the donkey is said to be perfectly delicious, much the color of mutton, firm and savory. A leg of mutton could not be obtained in the city at any price. In the cellar of the British Embassy, however, were three live sheep. Never did the rich man lust more after the poor man's ewe lamb than many of the Parisians lusted after these three sheep. It is said they went to look at them frequently, much as a London Arab goes to smell at a cook shop. Kangaroo, a decided luxury, currently sold for twenty-five francs per pound. A goose cost 250 francs; a fresh egg six francs; a pint of milk four francs; fresh butter eighty francs per pound; a ham weighing four pounds 200 francs. Elephants, bears, camels, hippopotamuses, giraffes, lions, and tigers were sold at the rate of twenty-five francs per pound. The trunks of the elephants brought forty-five francs per pound. They were tough, coarse, and oily, and could not be recommended as a diet except in cases of great necessity, as in the case alluded to. Elephant meat will hardly be much used for food so long as beef or mutton are procurable. Some 50,000 cats, called rabbits, were also sold for food, a good fat one bringing seventy-five francs, minus the skin. All were eaten, save those so wild they could not be caught. Cat is said to be a great luxury, especially when nothing else can be had. It is said the cat, as a viand, occupies a position equidistant between the squirrel and the rabbit, with a flavor peculiar to itself. As cats have philoprogenitiveness 7 plus, with a decided tendency to large families, possibly nature designed them as an article of food for the human race. A common rat cost two francs; if from the drains and sewers three francs. Dogs were marketable all the way between twenty francs and two hundred francs, according to size and species. Epicures in dog flesh most solemnly assert that a slice of spaniel is by no means to be despised, and is in fact most excellent when no other meat can possibly be procured; bull-dog, however, is said to be rather coarse, tough, and strong. It was thought dogs during those hungry days had some means of communicating with each other, and that when old friends wished to devour them they grew extremely suspicious and growled fiercely when any one looked at them longingly. There is a story that a man was followed for a mile by a party of hungry dogs, barking continually at his heels. He could not think why they should thus pursue him, until he remembered he had eaten a rat for dinner. It is also said that another man who had partaken of a dog by the name of Rover felt an irresistible impulse to jump up whenever any one whistled or called "Rover."

At No. 1 Rue de Beauve, at the corner of Quai Voltaire, stands the house in which Voltaire resided some time previous to his death. The life of this great and remarkable man is full of interesting actions, varied incidents, and trying vicissitudes. He wrote history, poems, dramas, and works on anti-theology amounting to nearly a hundred volumes, and of such characteristic ability that no one who has written since has equaled him. At the age of eighty-four, yielding to the importunities of his niece, Madame Denis, who grew sick of the dull monotony of Ferney, where he had passed over twenty years in almost unbroken application to literary work, he once more visited Paris, and his whole journey and his reception in the city was one continued splendid triumph. Crowds attended upon him; he occupied the director's seat in the Academy, was crowned at the theater, and then exhausted by the excitement and want of sleep he took opiates, and after much suffering fell into a lethargy, and quietly passed away in this house, May 30, 1778. His apartment upon the first floor was kept closed afterward, out of respect to his memory, and was not reopened till he had been a century in his grave. His masterly works will continue to be revered so long as men value talent, erudition, and unquestioned ability. It is my wish within the next six months to bring out a large octavo volume of Voltaire's theological writings that have never yet been published in English.

"His land is one vast monument
Bearing the record high
Of a spirit in itself content,
And a name that cannot die."

It will hardly answer for one to visit Paris without going to the Champs de Mars, a space of ground in front of the Ecole Militaire, or Military School, commenced in 1752 for the education of the sons of gentlemen without fortune, and completed in 1763. The entrance is ornamented with sculptures of a beautiful character. The entire building occupies an area of 1,408 feet by 797. The Ecole Militaire now serves as a barrack for a garrison of six thousand soldiers in various branches of the service. The Champs de Mars measures 3,084 feet by 2,290, and is chiefly interesting on account of the grand ceremony which was performed here in 1804, when Napoleon I., surrounded by his newly-created marshals, distributed eagles to the whole army. This immense site was covered by the Exhibition buildings in 1867–68, which renders the Champs de Mars not only illustrious to posterity as a spot where the world's shows were held, but as a sacred soil where the enmity of nations first gave way to friendly emulation.

A very short walk along the Avenue de Tourville (on the left) takes one to the church of St. Louis des Invalides, located at the back of the Hotel des Invalides. This edifice was commenced in 1680 and finished in 1706. The dome—one of the most conspicuous landmarks of Paris and distinctly visible from almost every part of the environs—pierces the air to the hight of 345 feet. It was regilt in 1861 by the electro-plating system at a cost of 1,800,000 francs. All parts of this building are superlatively beautiful and grand. The courtyard in front; the ascent; the portico, with its statues of Charlemagne and St. Louis, its Doric and Corinthian columns, and its triangular pediment; the attic and its colonnade, and the dome, with its lantern and spire, crowning the whole, afford a very august and surprising prospect. In surveying this stupendous monument the imagination is filled with a lofty kind of admiration which no structure of less elegance and majesty can excite.

Here are the tombs of Jerome Bonaparte, his eldest son, his second wife, Henri de la Tour d'Auvergne, Viscount de Turenne. There are in the chapel many fine paintings by Louis Boulogne. On descending the white marble staircase, to the left of the magnificent altar, is the tomb of the great Napoleon. On each side stands a colossal bronze statue, emblematical of civil and military honor, by Duret. Opposite is seen, through a glass screen, the chapel of the Invalides, not accessible from here. And here are the tombs of Marshals Duroc and Bertrand. The first was killed at the battle of Wurtzchen in 1813. Napoleon wept over him on his death-bed, and perhaps he never had to lament the loss of a more faithful friend or braver soldier. The second would have earned a bright name on the page of history merely by his military achievements were not those achievements cast comparatively in the shade by the steadfast fidelity with which he clung to Napoleon. Aiding him to gain some of his most splendid victories; covering him when in retreat and peril; following him to Elba; returning with him to share all the perils of the "blood-stained Waterloo," he, the brave and steadfast Bertrand, feared not the terrible imprisonment of St. Helena, and abode there until his sincerely-worshiped human idol had breathed his last. Honor to fidelity! Further on is the tomb of Marshal Sebastian Le Prestre de Vauban, one of the greatest of military engineers, and inventor of the present system of fortification. He had the conduct of fifty-three sieges, was present at one hundred and forty battles, erected thirty-three fortresses, renewed the works of three hundred old ones, and left no less than twelve folio volumes of manuscript memoirs. He was, besides, the most upright, simple, true, and modest man of his age. The last chapel contains the monumental tomb of Joseph Bonaparte, king of Spain, the elder brother of Napoleon.

The dome is profusely decorated with frescoes and sculptures by Jouvenet, Nicolas Coypel, Bosio, and Cartelier, and the cupola contains a most elaborate composition by Charles de la Fosse, St. Louis presenting to Christ the sword with which he conquered the Infidels. Beneath the dome, a circular balustrade in Italian marble encircles a depression nineteen feet deep, in the center of which stands the tomb of Napoleon, an imposing sarcophagus in phorphyry from Finland, weighing 135,000 pounds. Visconti, who was charged with the erection of this tomb in 1840, had a great difficulty to contend with in order not to spoil the effect of the work of Mansart. His scheme does not intercept the view of the altar. The sepulcher was inaugurated in 1851 and cost 9,000,000 francs. On the mosaic pavement are inscribed the victories of Rivoli, Pyramids, Marengo, Austerlitz, Jena, Friedland, Wagram, and Moscow. Around the immense monolith wherein rest all that remains of the great warrior, twelve colossal caryatides by Pradier, symbolizing twelve chief victories, keep guard, while between these silent sentries hang fifty-four banners—trophies of Austerlitz. The vivid golden glare admitted from the monster canopy, mingling with the dark bluish tint from the colored glass, lends an additional sanctity to the majesty and grandeur of the scene. The visitor can scarcely look upon this sombre monument, and reflect upon the moldering dust of him who lies within, without experiencing some fitting emotions. Napoleon, "The Corsican Usurper," with all his faults, and they were many, is yet the grandest warrior of modern times; and however his wanton ambition may be deprecated, with his insatiate thirst for conquest, we must still pause awhile to breathe a sigh of sorrow and compassion upon the soldier's grave.

In this connection it may not be amiss to restate what recently appeared in one of the New York dailies, that the statues and ashes of the Napoleons have suffered strange vicissitudes. Twice has the statue of the first Napoleon, which stands in the Place Vendome, been dragged to the ground, first by Royalists, then by Radicals, only to be re-erected, while his ashes were restored to France on the demand of another dynasty, to be respected even during the Commune. Louis, the ex-king of Holland, removed the remains of his father from Grenoble to St. Lou, to which place his own ashes were in time removed from Italy. The oldest son of Louis, regarded by Napoleon as his heir, and who died when but six years old, was at first laid in St. Denis, but the Bourbons, when they returned to France, had the body translated, and the "little Napoleon" now rests in the same vault with his father and grandfather. Jerome reposes under the dome of the Invalides with his great brother; the ashes of the other Bonapartes lie scattered here and there, and are to be found at Rome, Florence, Vienna, and Chiselhurst, and somewhere in Calabria.

The cathedrals and churches of Paris are worthy of some attention, though they abound with the same old superstitions and follies which are so distasteful to me. Here we see the same grand extravagance in piling of massive rock in commemoration of the relics of paganism, and here the same saints and dying God with the same doleful countenances, more calculated to fill the beholder with gloom and horror than with any cheering rays of promise for happiness in the present or in the future for struggling humanity. Here the same extravagant outlay of wealth, which, if it had been expended in furnishing workshops for the idle, comfortable homes for their families, and schools for their children, would have been far more conducive to the welfare and happiness of mankind.

We first visited the Pantheon, a monster sample of modern architecture. It is the patronal church St. Genevieve. The first stone of the temple, constructed after the designs of Soufflot, was laid in 1764, and forty years were consumed in its construction. The cost of it amounted to 30,000,000 francs. The plan of the edifice represents a Latin cross, and is three hundred and sixty-one feet long, and two hundred and sixty feet broad. In the center rises a majestic dome, supported by thirty-two Corinthian columns, and surmounted by an elegant lantern sixty-six feet in diameter and two hundred and seventy-three feet in hight. The porch is approached by a flight of eleven steps and rests upon twenty-two columns, sixty-four feet high by six feet in diameter. The pediment above contains a magnificent composition of David d'Angers, ranging from groups of such citizens as Mirabeau, Voltaire, and Rousseau to sculptures of Napoleon and his republican and imperial soldiers. The form of the Pantheon is said to be like St. Peter's at Rome, the Capitol in Washington, and St. Paul's in London.

The church of St. Genevieve was hardly completed before the outbreak of the Revolution, when the National Assembly decreed that it should be called the Pantheon, and serve as a sepulcher to those citizens who had deserved well of their country. Hence the inscription upon its frontispiece, Aux grands hommes la patria reconnais sante. Whether, however, it be considered a temple of fame or church, Pantheon or St. Genevieve, the monument is one of the handsomest with which the eighteenth century endowed Paris. The interior presents a cold though grand appearance. The frescoes are worthy of scrutiny and praise. The apotheosis of St. Genevieve, which decorates the cupola of the dome, is the work of Baron Gros. It was executed in 1824, and cost 100,000 francs. During the siege several shells, fired from the Prussian stronghold of Chatillon, pierced through the dome—sixteen kilometers, or ten miles. The lantern is reached by four hundred and twenty-five steps, and affords a magnificent panorama of the huge sea of houses in the city below.

Here are buried the remains of François Marie Arouet de Voltaire. The sarcophagus bears this inscription: Aux manes de Voltaire. Poëte, historien, philosophe, il agrandit l'esprit humain et lui apprit qu'il devait etre libre. Il defendit Calas, Sirven, de la Barre, et Montabilly; combattit les athées el les fanatiques, il inspira la tolerance, il reclama les droits de l'homme contre la servitude de feodalité. Here also reposes the ashes of another of our great writers and one of humanity's great lights, Jean Jacques Rousseau, the great philosopher and Freethinker. Upon his tomb is this epitaph, Ici repose l'homme de la nature et de la verité. In view of what these men have done for their kind, it is almost worth a journey across the Atlantic for the privilege of standing beside their tombs and meditating upon their moral bravery and great worth. In the vaults beneath the Pantheon are deposited the bones of other distinguished personages, but as their names do not possess the same interest to us as do those given, they may be omitted here. On the north side of the Pantheon stands the Bibliothequa St. Genevieve, founded in 1624, and comprising 160,000 volumes, 3,500 manuscripts, and 6,000 engravings.

We also visited the world-renowned cathedral church of Notre Dame, the most remarkable of ecclesiastical monuments of Paris. About the year 250 of our era the inhabitants of Paris are said to have put to death St. Denis, on Montmartre, for attempting to convert them to Christianity, but in 365 a cathedral church was erected on the extreme eastern part of the Isle of LaCite, on the site of the temple of Jupiter. When, however, Clovis, the bloody victor of the Talbiac, made Paris the capital of his kingdom, the cathedral came to be considered too insignificant for so important a see, and in 555 his successor, Childebert I., built on the northern side of the island a magnificent edifice dedicated to St. Etienne, which long shared the title of cathedral with the original church. The latter, however, was never actually superseded. It was at the high altar at Notre Dame that Fredegonda, the wife of Chilperic, claimed and obtained refuge after murdering her husband. In 1160 Archbishop Maurice de Sully determined to unite the two cathedrals in one, and in 1163 the first stone was laid by Pope Alexander III., then a refugee in France. It was not till 1236 that the cathedral was completed. For five centuries the building remained unchanged. In 1699, however, Louis XIII., in execution of a vow, began a series of alterations and additions which greatly changed the original appearance of the cathedral—some said for the worse. In 1793 it suffered from the excesses of the Revolution, the statues being removed and the cathedral transformed into a temple of reason, while in 1801, it being feared that the spire endangered the safety of the edifice, it was removed. In 1843 Montalembert urged that the cathedral should be completely restored, and Viollet Le Duc, the talented architect, was charged with the work, which was completed in 1864, in May of which year the dedication of Notre Dame, which in the middle ages had never been formally performed, was celebrated by Archbishop Darboy. Victor Hugo vividly describes this grand old edifice with two towers in his "Notre Dame de Paris," and immortalized it.

The interior of the Cathedral fully justifies the expectations aroused by the external appearance, and is well calculated to arouse a feeling of awe in the visitor, whether he has faith in the dogmas of Christianity or not. The memories connected with the old edifice, combined with the stateliness of the surroundings, are conducive to this.

Notre Dame is built from stone cut from quarries in the neighborhood of Paris, and notwithstanding its enormous weight, rests on piles; the river running underneath. It is 416 feet in length, 164 feet in width, and 111 feet in hight of vaulting. It contains twenty-six lateral chapels and is capable of holding 21,000 persons. The towers are 223 feet high (or 388 steps). The great bell in the southern tower weighs 16,000 kilos or 36,000 pounds. The organ is one of the best and largest in Europe, and includes eighty-six stops, 5,246 pipes, twelve registers, and twenty-two pedals. High mass is performed here Sunday at 10 A.M.

The relics of Notre Dame must be mentioned. Fifty centimes are required to see them. Among the treasures accumulated here are the crown of thorns, purchased by St. Louis from Jean de Brienne, king of Jerusalem, and his son-in-law, Baudoin II., emperor of Byzantium, for the sum of 2,000,000 francs (bogus of course); a piece of the true cross, one of the nails used to fasten Jesus to the cross (bogus again). Besides these there are many other relics and mementoes, consisting of articles owned by noted kings and bishops, which I will not take the time to repeat. Great is Notre Dame.

The church of St. Augustine is one of the holy ornaments of Paris. It is of the bold style of architecture and stands at the head of the Boulevard Malesherbes. It is surmounted by four octagonal towers flanking a huge central cupola 164 feet high. In front are three entrances, above which rises a large circular window, crowned with a gable. The interior is elegant and contains many fine paintings by Bougereau.

There are also many other fine churches in Paris which we did not visit, but among them are St. Ambroise, St. Chappelle, St. Clotilde, St. Eustache, St. Francis Xavier, St. Paul, St. Louis, St. Sulpice, and a dozen or twenty more saints equally well provided for. The saints may be considered fortunate in having such elegant churches erected for their use, though they do wear such doleful countenances. Many of these churches cost from 3,000,000 to 6,000,000 francs each.

The Tour St. Jacques la Boucherie is a handsome square gothic tower 187 feet high, the sole remnant of a church which was destroyed in 1797. It occupies the center of a small square where hundreds of the victims of the Revolution of 1871 were interred. It is an exquisite specimen of architectural beauty. It is visited by every stranger visiting Paris.

Paris has a splendid opera house of comparatively recent construction, having been commenced in 1861 and finished in 1875. It was estimated that it could be built for 16,000,000 francs, but it absolutely cost over 60,000,000. It stands on one of the principal boulevards and at the head of Avenue de l'Opera, one of the most magnificent streets in Paris; and the fine edifice is most conspicuous for a distance of half a mile. I have seen no statement of its dimensions, but it is a large, magnificent structure—a truly wonderful monument well worthy of the artistic purpose to which it is devoted. Its exterior is profusely decorated with marble busts of celebrated composers, bronze statues, and four elaborately-sculptured groups, executed in the most magnificent and artistic manner. The figures look most animated and life-like, though "they neither breathe nor stir." I was not inside, but the interior is said to be of such a grand and sumptuous character as to absolutely baffle description, the effect being almost magical. I think it is not the opera season now. When I return here I may venture to enter it and regale my organs of sight and sound with the perfections that abound in that temple of beauty and art.

We were much interested by a visit to the Trocadéro, or the palace which crowns the summit where the last World's Exhibition was held, the buildings of which are still standing. The palace is a most imposing structure, and is the great work for which Paris strained every nerve in order to insure success. It was commenced by Davioud and Bourdais in September, 1877, and was completed in the short space of ten months—an accomplishment without precedent in the annals of architecture, and may be said to bear some resemblance to the mythical feat of old Jove when he struck his head and Minerva came forth in full perfection and glory. The palace has two beautiful towers, between which rises a huge dome, crowned with a bronze statue of Mercié, emblematical of Renown. The towers are 229 feet in hight (437 steps). The rotunda adds materially to the grandeur and beauty of the structure. It has circular wings from the exterior of the palace and ending in domed pavilions, somewhat in advance of the front of the palace. The rotunda is 1,312 feet long. Four smaller pavilions intervene between the central portion and the large terminal pavilion. To stand in front, a few hundred feet away, the view of the entire edifice is of the grandest conceivable character. The view is imposing in the extreme. One can easily imagine that he is in dreamland, and that the beauty and grandeur before him can hardly be a reality. The facade opposite Pont d'Iena and Champ de Mars forms the rotunda, composed of the two superposed galleries, with a series of arcades, fully arched, surmounted by an outside gallery, decorated with thirty colossal statues representing arts, sciences, and trades. The interior of the palace fully corresponds in magnificence to the exterior. This great festival hall is a marvelous conception and is capable of containing more than 5,000 spectators. The organ is of monumental proportions and immense power, and ranks immediately after that of Notre Dame. The decorative work throughout the building is truly remarkable, the chief material employed being mosaic. The grounds in front of the palace are of the same magnificent and beautiful description. The cascade must be acknowledged as a masterpiece of tasteful art. It cost over 650,000 francs. Starting from the center of the palace which commands the summit, it descends from thence, step by step, into the vast basin at the foot of the slopes. The angles of this basin are occupied by enormous gilt figures—the ox, horse, elephant, and rhinoceros. A profusion of beautiful flowers are luxuriating in the beautiful grounds in front of the large basin. The entrance to the exhibition building is guarded by immense equestrian statues in stone. The Trocadero palace cost 12,500,000 francs. It is not singular that it was the grand attraction of the exhibition of 1878.

Upon the palace grounds, or rather under the grounds, is a beautiful aquarium. Though artificial it presents the appearance of a beautiful natural grotto with columns of apparent stalagmite or stalactite, forming pillars to sustain the roof. It is laid off in avenues and streets, like a minature city, those fantastic columns being the divisions. Near the entrance is a beautiful cascade, and all along the walks or streets are the resevoirs or deep basins with heavy plate glass in front, giving an excellent view of the fishes inside. Thus it may be understood that the whole thing is a series of aquariums, in each of which is a variety of fish different from the others. In one were trout, in another pickerel, in another salmon, in others fishes of other kinds, and in one compartment were a hundred eels, and it was curious to see them gather together in clusters and entwine themselves almost into one big knot, while a few were swimming around for diversion or on a voyage of discovery. Eels seem to be of a very friendly, social character.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

Communications.

A Shameless Editor.

The editor and proprietor of the daily Washington Post is Mr. Stilson Hutchins. Successful as an editor, he aspires to high office, and has just missed a Democratic nomination for Congressman in New Hampshire. In last Sunday's paper appeared an editorial article headed, "A Free-Thinking Confederation," from which I extract a few sentences:

"The Free-Thinker is not an easily definable quantity. He is about as near a myth as anything possessing the entities of flesh and blood possibly can be. There are alleged 'Free-Thinkers,' of course, who do no thinking at all, but there is a multitude of others who think a good deal and in a multitude of diverse, conflicting ways. This is abundantly shown in the Brussels Congress.

"There were those who upheld the wildest schemes of revolution, others who would cut loose from the restraints of society and set up a saturnalia of self-license in its place. . . . The only point of harmony around which they all seem to revolve was the slip-shod morality of the free-thinking and obscene English woman, Mrs. Besant."

On reading the above I sat down and wrote to the editor as follows:

"SIR: The ignorance of the writer of the editorial on Free-thinking, in to-day's Post, is surpassed by his malignity and calumny. Freethinker is one word, not two, as he writes it (see Webster). But his ignorance is betrayed throughout his article; he deals it out wholesale and embitters it with the grossest calumny. Shame on the man who styles the scholarly and refined Mrs. Besant an 'obscene English woman.' Surely you, Mr. Hutchins, cannot hav written or even approved of such language. And if you are not devoid of magnanimity you will, in justice to that philanthropic and persecuted woman, print her letter, which I subjoin, to a slanderer who flourishes a 'Sir' at one end of his name and an 'M.P.' at the other. VICTOR A. OSBORN."

The subjoined letter of Mrs. Besant to Sir John D. Hay, M.P., I cut from THE TRUTH SEEKER of September 11th, as follows:

"OATLANDS, Aug. 2, 1880

"To Vice-Admiral Sir J. D. Day, M.P., Sir: A friend has sent me two papers, in one of which you, in the coarsest language, accuse me of conduct which would entitle Mr. Besant to a divorce, and in the other you admit the language and make a sort of clumsy apology.

"You are aware that a man is not legally punishable for slander, however vile, provided he do not impute an indictable offense. There is, however, a court of public opinion before which such slanderers may be brought. I shall be glad to know from you, first, whether you think it the act of a gentleman to accuse a woman who is a stranger to you of adultery; secondly, whether you consider it the act of a gentleman to make such an accusation without a shadow of evidence; thirdly, whether you will write to the papers which hav printed your cowardly falsehood, admitting that you slandered a woman who had never injured you?

"I see that you object to Mr. Bradlaugh characterizing your language as cowardly and untruthful. But would any one, save a coward, attack a woman who had never wronged him? And if the statement be false, as it is, why should it not be stamped as untruthful? If Mr. Bradlaugh alleged that Lady Hay had been guilty of the same crime, would either you, or the gentleman implicated, hesitate to characterize the slanderer as a coward and a liar? Yet the accusation would be as justifiable as the one you hav made.

"I know that Christians and Tories care little for honor and truth when Radicals are to be injured, but I did not dream that an English officer could stain his lips with language so foul as you, unprovoked, hav used against myself. No apology can atone for the offense, but before taking any steps toward punishment, I wait to hear your excuse.

"Obediently, ANNIE BESANT."

No notice being take of my communication nor any apology being made by the editor, I sent him the following successiv postal cards:

"Sept. 20.

"I see no apology this morning for the editorial slander of Mrs. Besant in yesterday's Post. V. A. O."

"Sept. 21.

"Again I look at the Post and see no apology by its editor for calling Mrs. Annie Besant an 'obscene English woman.' V. A. O."

"Sept 22.

"No apology nor any attempt to prove that Mrs. Besant is an 'obscene English woman.' Shame on the editor of the Post. V. A. O."

And so, dear TRUTH SEEKER, I shall keep on sending the cards day by day, despite Saint Anthony and all the pious or impious powers that be. V. A. O.

History Boiled Down.

"History is not one of the exact sciences." So said the great Napoleon."

Fragmentary as it is, history furnishes prima facie evidence that in all ages and countries an ecclesiastic dynasty has run, or tried to run, the government machine.

In Judea, under Roman rule, the democratic idea began to germinate. Too early in the world's history for a republic, the people wanted a king, a man of their own choosing. Casting about for a candidate, they lighted upon a Nazarene. His name was Jesus. They mounted him on a donkey, rode him into Jerusalem, and with what eclat they could muster, hailed him "King of the Jews."

But alas! before they had time to anoint him, to pour the oil on his head to make him a Christ Jesus—a savior, to save the people from the everlasting hocus pocus legerdemain—the reverends were down upon them with such a hoodle-um-loo, in the name of treason, that poor little Pilate, against his own convictions and contrary to the council of his better moiety, let the reverends crucify the King of the Jews.

Time rolls on. The reverends watch the popular current as is their wont—to avail themselvs of it, take the ghost of the crucified, make him into a God—the very God—place him on a throne heaven-high above human perception, make a stalking-horse of him, get behind him, and run, or try to run, the government machine.

Behold, the day cometh, has come, that shall burn as an oven. Humanity, especially the better moiety, will be so intellectually developed that the sovereign people will be able to say to the reverends: "Much obliged to you, gentlemen, for services graciously vouchsafed in our ministry. Having attained a majority, we hav the honor to say to you, gentlemen, your paternal guardianship is no longer needful."

Good bye, PRENTISS.

Weed and Ingersoll.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: When Thurlow Weed's letter against Ingersoll first appeared, I was disappointed at not seeing the whole of it in your paper with appropriate criticism. Probably you thought Ingersoll could take care of himself, and undoubtedly he can, but as he has not condescended to answer Mr. Weed, and as the orthodox, not content with scattering the veteran journalist's words all over the country under the name of news, hav got to circulating them as a tract, I feel moved to do my little best toward exposing the transparent fallacies of this now famous letter. Mr. Weed begins by saying that there is nothing in the religion of our day to provoke antagonism. Clergymen do not now preach about the damnation of infants a span long. I should like to know why they don't.

The execrable, infernal doctrins of infant depravity and everlasting torture either are in the Bible or they are not. If they are, there is no reason why infants should not be damned (always supposing the Bible to be true). If they are not, then the church, which for eighteen centuries preached this horrible aggravation of the deepest among human afflictions, should repent in sackcloth and ashes her enormous blasphemy and inhumanity. Does she do so? Not a bit of it. Infant damnation was a useful doctrin in its time. It is worse than useless now, because, owing to the progress of Infidelity, it is more likely to excite indignation or ridicule than terror. The church accordingly dodges this logical consequence of her fundamental dogmas, but she has never formally repudiated it. And yet Christians hav the brazen impudence to talk of the consolation their horrible superstions bestow on the bereaved and dying.

What, says Mr. Weed, would Col. Ingersoll offer to comfort some dying friend or relativ? Probably not much; neither can any one else. But it would be easy to say what Col. Ingersoll would not offer. He would not tell a dying mother that her baby was roasting in hell-fire within sight of the heaven to which she hoped to go. He would not even tell her, like a modern Catholic, that it was shut up in the dark where she would not hear it cry. He would not tell her that her son, whose life had been rather censurable, or her father, who, though blamelessly virtuous, was not pious, had gone to a place of awful and eternal suffering over which she would be required to rejoice; or if she had any fears of the dark valley for her own sake, he would at least not aggravate, if he could not, as he perhaps could, allay them.

No act or word of Jesus, says Mr. Weed, can be tortured into hostility to the welfare of every member of the human amily. I think no torture is necessary to obtain unadulterated fiendishness from such of Jesus as the following: "Many are called, but few are chosen;" "strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it;" "he [Jesus himself] shall send forth his angels, and they shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth;" "he that believeth not shall be damned." I hav not quoted half the diabolical sentiments of the meek and lowly Nazarene, but the above are enough to show that he proposed to take a fearful vengeance on his enemies, and that among these he included all who did not believe in him, and all who did believe but did not serve him faithfully, and these a great majority of mankind.

The asssertion that Christianity is the cause of modern civilization is utterly false. Science under the pagan Roman empire had entered upon a promising career. Christianity entirely crushed it, and produced the Dark Ages. When secular learning revived among the Spanish Mohommedans, Christianity opposed it stoutly, and to the present day has fought it point by point. The breaking to pieces of the Christian church by the Reformation is the cause of the rapid progress which has taken place since. Where the church is still united and powerful, she is quite as great an impediment to progress as Brahmanism could be; and that, I admit, is saying a great deal. This disposes of what Mr. Weed says about humanitarian efforts in the Five Points and elsewhere. It is modern civilization that dictates these efforts. Christians hav borne a very honorable part in them, but certainly not any more so than Infidels. The majority of the Abolitionists were skeptics, and Mr. Kneeland was the first proprietor of a hall who would allow William Lloyd Garrison to use it. I hav heard something of Mr. Weed's record in this connection, which perhaps it would be unkind to revive. Nor is the comparison of Paine and Wesley very fortunate, for Paine created the American republic, which Wesley did his utmost to destroy.

Eau Claire, Wis., Sept. 15, 1880. C. L. JAMES.

Trouble in the West.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: A member of our church was requested by a country brother to send him a book by mail, as was supposed. Our good parson took interest enough in the matter to send it. Ere long our parson was indicted for sending the book. It seems a spy had sent for it and not a brother. Our parson was tried for the crime of sending this book by mail. The book is one we all think is good, except that it has some verses occasionally that are smutty. But what are those few verses to page on page of some poems and stories everybody buys, sells, and reads, such as "Decameron," "Heptameron," "Yahoo," "Don Juan," etc., etc.? Yet nobody was ever molested for it But would anybody believe me when I say that while our good parson was tried he was not allowed to show what book it was or even the chapter? No! The prosecuting attorney marked a few verses; thus he marked verse 12, chap. xxxvi. of the book of our holy prophet Isaiah; also some verses of Solomon's Song; also a repetition of the excellence of the prophet in 2 Kings xviii, 27; Job xxxi, 10; Genesis xix, 30–38; also Numbers xxi, 1, 18, 32, 35, and 40; Matthew i, 18, 19, and Luke i, 26, 27, 28, 34, and 38. Now when our parson desired to show that the book these marked verses are in is the Bible of Christians, and that by the context these texts marked, though extremely obscene and indecent, are not intended for lewd, lascivious purposes, do you believe me? he was not permitted to do so. No: he had to stand or fall by the verses marked. O angels and ministers of grace, defend us! The fact is these officers were determined to imprison our good parson.

But the worst of it was he was dragged several hundred miles for trial, and for every witness he subpenaed he had to advance railroad fees to go and come. Each witness cost him fifty dollars, and the government advanced liberally large sums to hunt up and board at first-class hotels those who were designated as witnesses against him. As to the jurors, grand and petit, they fairly trembled when the judge in broken English, spoke louder than usual. This judge, like necessity, knows no law, although his face shows him to be deeply red. As the Grand Jury is the highest tribunal in the United States while it legally sits, I hav wondered why this man did not tremble instead of his grand juries.

HOLT.

An Open Letter to George Lynn.

FRIEND LYNN: I, too, "hav read with a great deal of pleasure many things from thy pen," and am pleased that thee deems my humble efforts at the world's enlightenment worthy of criticism either for or against.

My opinions as to a future life may be "weak," but they are founded upon what, to me, seem truth and common sense.

The mind and soul are something of a mystery to us all; but as we hav no memory or proof of a pre-existence, and as all that has a beginning must hav an end, it is the most direct conclusion that we can arrive at that death ends all. I think that by and by the mysteries of clairvoyance, clair-audience, mesmerism, psychology, together with all the phenomena of Spiritualism which are developed upon them, will be explained on simple and natural principles and be found to be outcrops of this life alone. How these things are produced is an unsolved question, but that they are caused by the agency of the departed I very much doubt. A clairvoyant was near here with a circus last week. She could tell any person's age, what they held in the hand, what the pocket contained, and what the amount of several figures multiplied by several others was, and also the number and position of any figure in the sum, and yet she saw none of the work herself, as a go-between was between her and the audience, and too far from her to convey to her the replies. Thaumaturgists hav performed seeming miracles in all ages, but never one has yet brought the dead to life or proved that they who die liv again.

I do not claim to giv "new arguments" on any subject, but only to tell my readers how things appear from my standpoint.

On this question of sexual intemperance I am as yet only a learner; but as fast as I learn and feel assured it is truth, I feel impelled, by an irresistible impulse, to impart the facts for the benefit of others. If I make one false or untrue statement, I'll gladly greet the argument that upsets my position. I want truth, and hope to teach "only that and nothing more."

Nor do I wish to "blot out the sexual feeling," for I prize every part of the human being, and none more than the reproductiv functions of the race. The love that culminates in the sexual embrace is a pure and holy thing. I do not plead for less love, less affection, less friendship, or even less pure and holy passion, for these are all beautiful and desirable things. But I want a love that leads us higher than mere animal passion and self-gratification. I want man to think more of woman than he has ever yet done. I want him to treat her as a full equal, and let her decide always as to whether she wishes to become a mother or not.

I am well aware of the "divine" injunction "to increase and multiply," but if this was ever necessary, it is not so now. "Fewer and better children" is the cry of the present. And I think a little reflection will convince thee that "to beget a child is really a loss of vital force in the parent."

Many a plant and many an insect sacrifices all its vital force in a single begetting of offspring. Clip the seed-pods from flowering plants and they liv and bloom much longer than if allowed to produce their kind! Fewer apples and better is a well-known saying. Less stock and better cared for is the rule of good farmers. The law of compensation often makes the loss of one sort a pleasure of another, so all is not loss. Suppose a man has some three hundred wives and begets a child daily, would he not soon begin to show a lack of vitality? True, also is it that all excesses are injurious, while a temperate use of a function is generally healthful and pleasing. I, too, believe, that under proper conditions the married life is most natural, happy, and healthy. Yet as social customs now are I think more married die than single. Of one hundred men and women selected from the strong and robust and middle aged, let fifty marry and fifty liv celibate lives, and the latter would produce the greater number of aged persons.

Mr Preston, in his excellent article, "Fewer Children and Better," in the September number of the Physiologist, says that of parturient women, even when they hav the best of care, "about one in twenty-eight die;" and of the twenty-seven who liv, how many enjoy even passably good health? I don't know that during my eight years' residence here I hav ever heard a woman say, "I am well." Ask, "How are you?" and the reply is generally, "I am tolerable," and the exceptions are full of "misery in the back," "misery in the head," "misery in the breast," and misery all over, and ninty-nine one-hundredths of this comes from sexual intemperance in the persons themselvs or their ancestors. Many who ridiculed the idea when I first began to broach it, now acknowledge that I am right.

Shaker life is unnatural, and in some respects austere, and yet Shakers hav far more aged people among their ranks than hav any other class. If they would be free, frank, cordial, and loving, one sex with the other, and mingle together as boys and girls do, and taste the pure bliss of friendship between the sexes, even were there no sexual commerce, they would be far better, happier, and more long-lived than they now are. But one cannot hav all the good out of all the sects and so build up one perfect community that has no bad in it. But we can each do a little toward searching for the best, learning it and teaching it, and thus giv the car of progress one shove after another till we reach such sublime hights of goodness and purity as the race has never yet dreamed of.

Yes, do the work; it shall succeed
In thine or in another's day;
And if denied the victor's meed
Thou shalt not lack the toiler's pay.—Whittier.

Snowville, Va. ELMINA D. SLENKER.

The Right of Women to Discuss the Sexual Question.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The different articles upon the sexual question, and the criticisms upon them, hav been read with interest by one who has long considered this question as the most important which can engage the attention of thinking men and women. One criticism by "A. M." I cannot forbear noticing, although it is scarcely nothing, its absurdity is so very manifest, still it might hav some weight with those who hav thought little or only superficially upon this subject. I should like to ask a few questions and make a few comments upon some of his statements. He says a woman should not dabble with this sexual affair. Does "A. M." know of any one that the sexual question concerns more than it does women? Why should the other sex hav the monopoly of this question, when it is a subject in which both are mutually concerned? Not until God and nature intrusts the sexual powers and manifold interests and burdens involved in the bearing and rearing of children to man alone, will it be proper for him to decide upon this question regardless of the voice of woman. Such an obsolete argument and from a "Liberal!"

So Mrs. Besant has lost much of her popularity by her course in this matter. Did "A. M." ever know of any one who advocated a cause in advance of the time to stand quite so high in the opinion of those who pander to the popular prejudices of society? Is that any reason why reformers should not giv to the world the divine truths with which they are inspired? Had such an argument prevailed, where would hav been the Liberal cause to-day? The human mind would now hav been enslaved by bigotry and superstition equal to that of the dark ages. Does the "father of a family of grown-up daughters," who is obliged to cut out said articles. ever expect them to become wives and mothers? If so, why should he object to their learning something of a subject with which they may soon hav to deal. There must be some mistake. Old Dame Nature must hav made some dreadful blunder. Now if "A. M." would only invent some new patent process by which the race could be propagated, what a blessing it would be, thus doing away with all necessity of the sexual relations and consequently all discussion of them! But seriously, when will the false ideas of modesty be done away with and a common sense view be taken of this subject as well as any other other? This is a delicate subject, not because of its being indecent, for in the right use of any function of mind and body there is nothing to be ashamed of. The power by which a human being is brought into existence is one which should be treated of with respect, yes, even with reverence.

There is no more important subject than the right relation of the sexes and the proper generation and rearing of children. It is one that lies at the foundation of all reform. We may try to improve the race in other ways, but it will amount to very little. Until we begin at the foundation, and lay that well, we shall never hav a perfect social structure. The very subject which most vitally concerns every human being is the very one of which we are the most ignorant. Look abroad in the world and behold the disease and misery and crime, the broken wrecks, the blasted hopes, the wasted lives, caused by the violation of sexual laws.

I hav no theory to advocate, but I do declare not only the right but the necessity of women to write and speak upon this topic. And the ones who dare to discuss this subject and seek to find a solution of this great question, are among the benefactors of mankind, and posterity will "rise up and call them blessed." MATTIE C. MITCHELL.

Jackson, Mich.

WHEN you hav occasion to utter a rebuke let your words be soft and your arguments hard.

IT is with our good intentions as with our days; to-morrow is but too often the hash of to-day.

Christian vs. Natural Marriage.—No. 2.

BY A. C. STOWE.

Christian marriage is that relation of the sexes adopted by and existing among Christian people and nations—a system said to hav been ordained of God. According to the Jewish scriptures, which Christians accept, marriage was first instituted in the Garden of Eden. After looking over and contemplating the work of his creation, God discovered that he had made a mistake—the animals he had created male and female, but man he had made after his own image and likeness, male. He saw that it would not be good for man to be alone, that it would be difficult to people the earth with his own creations as he had already exhausted the material. And no doubt he looked down the vista of the future and saw that without woman there would be no transgression, and hence no need of a plan of salvation nor of a priesthood to expound its intricate mysteries—no need of begetting himself in the person of his son in the womb of a virgin—or perhaps in a spasm of wisdom and goodness he saw that t would be utterly impossible without woman to raise man above a state of barbarism. It would be a pleasing reflection to believe that such noble and benevolent considerations was the motiv that actuated this God in the creation of woman, but subsequent events in his curse upon her show that everything he did was in the interest of the priest. At any rate he concluded she would be an indispensable "helpmeet" for man, and he chloroformed Adam, took from his side a rib, out of which he formed the woman. The presentation of this last, best work, the afterthought of God, this rib bone which has ever since been a bone of contention among men, is said to be the origin of marriage. But this is not all of it, though this much conveys the idea which has ever since borne fruit in the enslavement of woman, namely, that man was first and superior, that she was taken out of the man and dependent upon him; but the crowning act in this God-ordained institution is in the closing scene in the ceremony.

God knew that if man had knowledge, was intellectual and educated, he would delve into the mysteries of his creation, ascend the hights of knowledge and wisdom, and perhaps aspire to the very throne itself, as formerly a portion of the inhabitants of his heavenly kingdom had done; therefore he took the precaution to prohibit the man partaking of the fruit of the tree of knowledge. But the woman became restless in such listless ignorance, and desired to be wise; not having herself been forbidden, she boldly reached forth and partook of the fruit and gave it to Adam also, and their eyes were opened, they became as gods, knowing good and evil, just as the serpent had told them. Here is exhibited in the woman a noble ambition and aspiration quite in contrast with that of the man. He no doubt would be toiling yet in blissful ignorance that he needed even as much as a fig leaf to cover his nakedness but for her, and I am sorry for my sex to be obliged to say that he acted the mean coward when his guilt was discovered—and he alone was guilty, for he alone had been forbidden to eat the fruit. When God confronted him with the charge of disobedience he said, "The woman whom thou gavest to be with me she gave me of the tree and I did eat," instead of saying in a brave and manly way: "Yes, sir, I hav taken the responsibility to partake of the fruit. Satan, who appears to be wise and learned, said to Mrs. Eve, 'Ye shall not surely die, for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil.' And she saw the tree was good for food—she has to prepare my meals you know—and that it was pleasant to the eyes and a tree to be desired to make one wise. She gathered a little for our evening meal. But, please, Mr. God, if any one is to receive punishment, let it fall upon my head. Spare the woman, for I alone hav disobeyed." But alas! Adam was unequal to such nobility of character, and shielded himself behind the woman.

For this transgression God curses the three—the serpent above all cattle, to go henceforth upon his belly and eat dust, the man to eat his bread by the sweat of his face and to toil amid thorns and thistles. But the woman he cursed with a malignancy and severity characteristic of this God, and this curse is the closing act in the God-ordained Christian marriage: "I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband and he shall rule over thee." Italics are mine. The serpent and the man, though cursed, had their liberty. The serpent could crawl where he pleased and hav his choice in the dirt he ate. The man also could choose his thorns and thistles, and sweat and eat bread where he pleased: but the woman was abandoned by God to man's power and unbridled lust, and doomed to multiplied sorrow, conception, and child-bearing in perpetual bondage to her husband. This is the infinit indignity to womanhood and motherhood! The crowning infamy of Christian marriage!

It matters not whether this story is true or false, it is believed by all Christendom, and the effect is just as pernicious if false as if true.

In this marriage in its origin and practice through all the ages woman has no choice but submission, she cannot even choose the man who shall rule over her—her lord and master. She merges her individuality into his, and after his death she is but his relic.

Let us examin this curse institution and see the underlying principle. The woman's sorrow and conception were to be multiplied. How could God execute this decree except he make her a submissiv slave to man, to administer to his sexual demands? He should multiply her conception and her sorrow. He could at his pleasure impose upon her undesired maternity.

God knew—or his priests did—that if woman was free multiplied conception would not be her lot, that desired maternity only would be accepted, and sorrow and all the evils resulting from woman's enslavement would not curse the world, and hence there would be no need of the plan of salvation, priests, etc.

In the enslavement of women to man's inordinate passion and lust, Christian marriage becomes a monster evil that poisons the very fountains of life, and spreads its virus throughout society, generating crime, intemperance, disease, and death.

Christian marriage is the assumption of the priest that he is ordained of God to hold the key to man's and woman's sexual nature, and until this is unlocked by him its exercise is a crime. Christian marriage makes it a virtue for the licensed pair to cohabit together, however incompatible they may be, though no love, no conjugal union or affinity, exists, though all the laws of harmony, sexual attraction and adaptation, of true or natural marriages are outraged, and to continue this unhallowed relation until death shall separate them, with no power of release from the unholy alliance except for adultery on the part of one of them. The divorce laws dissolving the matrimonial bonds for other causes are an Infidel innovation and are the result of the demands of natural marriage. Christian marriage makes it a virtue for this pair to reproduce themselves ad libitum, for the man to multiply the conception and sorrow of his wife. Though the result be a criminal, diseased, imbecil, or idiotic progeny, though the multiplied sorrow and conception consign the wife to a premature grave, it licenses the husband to monogamously appropriate as many editions as he has virility or vitality to dispose of in the same way.

The sexual morality of Christian marriage makes a small sum of money stand between a great virtue and a great crime—the marriage license fee. If it does not make it a virtue, it certainly does not make it a crime for men to sow their wild oats, even though the sowing bear a crop of "soiled doves" and ruined lives, and permits society to open its arms and receive the seducer to its bosom, while it drives his victim into the street and to suicide. It winks at and apologizes for the sin in the man, and condemns and stones the woman. Its verdict is, "The man is innocent, but the woman is guilty!" Christian marriage makes the brothel and house of assignation public necessities. Indeed, they are auxiliaries to the God-ordained institution, its safety-valves, indispensable to the protection of "our wives," and in many a Christian city they hav a legal existence by means of licenses granted them by the municipality. And as they are patronized largely by married men, the plea of their necessity is well taken. Christian marriage, then, is that divinely instituted and authorized relation of the sexes which before entered into must hav the sanction of the priest, God's vicegerent on earth, a relation that exacts no conditions except that the parties entering it shall be male and female and of proper age, and pay for the license and the priestly blessing, no matter how unfitted for each other, nor how diseased and tainted with scrofulous and syphilitic tendencies, nor how much their blood is poisoned with alcohol and tobacco, which they will surely transmit to their children. No matter how intemperate, drunken, or even bespotted they are if sober while receiving the divine sanction. No matter what the immoral and criminal tendencies or practices are, this divine institution opens its arms to receive them and binds them in perpetual bondage to each other without hope of release, however hateful, repugnant, and abhorrent the bondage may be, except through the door of adultery or death.

Christian marriage enforces prostitution within its sacred limits and makes it a necessity outside of it; it makes woman a slave to man's lust; it imposes upon her undesired maternity and peoples the world with beings, one-half of whom die before five years of age, and the other half go through life cursed with some inherited disease. Its command is, "Increase and multiply." Quantity, not quality, is its demand. As in matters of religion, it repudiates all reason, judgment, and common sense, and giv no heed to nature's laws either in mating or in the propagation of the race. Its devotees, no doubt, pay great regard to the improvement of horses, cattle, and hogs. No time nor expense is spared to select the best breeds and the best specimens of the best breeds. The laws of nature are interrogated and science is applied to produce the best results, but man is taught that nature and reason are carnal and wrong as far as they relate to religion or its ordinances, and he must look to revelation through a book and the priest for his instruction; but neither the book nor the priest teaches anything upon the subject except to marry (paying the usual fee to the priest, of course) and increase and multiply.

The people are bound up in indissoluble matrimonial chains with no knowledge of themselvs nor the relation they hav entered into, for Christian marriage is at war with all investigation and punishes with severe penalties all who dare investigate and teach the true nature and science of the relation of the sexes, and hence the people hav no alternativ but to shut their eyes and go it blind. And this is Christian marriage!

Each soul must accept as a mate whom parents, society, fashion, passion, or some other interfering providence shall select; and superstition, inordinate passion, and lust take the helm and guide the family ship over the stormy sea of life, while love, true, conjugal love, sweet bird, if she ever nestled in their bosoms, or perched upon the family altar, has now flown to a warmer climate, never to return.

Let not the reader infer from the foregoing that the writer is opposed to marriage. He believes in marriage—in natural marriage—a relation as much above Christian marriage as heaven is above the earth, or virtue and purity are above vice and prostitution, as his next will clearly show.

FORTUNE does not change men; it only unmasks them and shows their true character.

Editorial.

The Liberal League Congress.

The fourth annual session, which closed September 19th, was in some respects the most valuable for practical work of any that has yet been held. The only thing which any Liberal can regret is that Col. Ingersoll should hav deemed it incumbent on him to resign as Vice-President. The expulsion of one Spencer, of Milwaukee, was, in view of his insulting resolution, the only means the League had of maintaining its dignity, and was a very proper and prompt rebuke to the fellow's insolence. It will be a lesson not soon forgotten by illiberals of his ilk. As to Mr. Green's defection, we do not know what to make of it. He is in favor of repealing the Comstock laws, and told several members of the League while the discussion was in progress that though he should vote to lay the resolution over, yet if it came to a vote on the resolution itself he should vote in favor of repeal. To now resign because the League has done precisely as he would hav voted for it to do is slightly inconsistent. He ought to rise and explain why he changed his mind. If, alone and unaided, he is unable to do it, perhaps Col. Ingersoll can help him.

When the League magnanimously laid the resolutions regarding the Comstock law over at Syracuse it was felt by the majority to be an evasion of the expression of the League's opinion for a short time only. It was done that the Liberals of the country might become more familiar with them and their workings, and be more competent to express an intelligent opinion upon them. At Cincinnati last year they were again laid over out of deference to some of the members, who, while they denounced the acts committed under their sanction, thought that the general government had a right to regulate the moral tone of the literature conveyed by the mails.

At this session, the case of Mr. Barter being fresh in the minds of the delegates, it was impossible to longer delay an expression of the League upon these laws, and the Committee on Resolutions reported one urging their repeal, which was passed by the League.

It was, in view of all the circumstances, an eminently proper thing to do, and we congratulate the members upon their determined stand in favor of depriving the church of the censorship it is exercising over the mails.

The real reason why Col. Ingersoll could not sanction this resolution is not because he believes the League to be in favor of licensing obscenity, but because his ideas of government are radically different from those of a majority of the members. He is a Republican, and is drifting with his party toward centralization and a "strong" government. The difference between him and the other members is that he believes that the government should run the people, while they think that the people should run the government. On this question we are emphatically in favor of the last proposition. That the government derives all its just powers from the consent of the governed is an axiom of the people of this country. Officials are nothing but the administrators of the people's will, and should be their servants, not their masters. The federal government is composed of men who are chosen by the people to make and execute such laws as are in accordance with the Constitution and guarantee the perpetuation of civil and religious liberty. That literature which is in no sense obscene, but which advocates opinions opposit to the views of the religionists, has been deprived of the privileges of the United States mail is a fact no one can dispute. The League declares as its opinion that the laws under which this has been done are at variance with our Constitution. Col. Ingersoll believes that these laws, in so far as they suppress real obscenity, are good, and does not care whether they are Constitutional or not. In this the League differs with him, and because it does he has seen fit to withdraw. He has a most undoubted right to do this as has any other member, but we regret that he should hav used the threat of his displeasure and resignation as a reason why the League should not pass the resolution. We should not hav expected it of him.

This question of government is bound to come up in this country sooner or later. The indorsement by Garfield of the Hamiltonian theory that senators should hold their office for life and that the governors of the states should be appointed by the president shows whither his party is tending. The attempt to nominate General Grant as the only safe man to intrust the reins of government with is another straw indicating the direction of tide of opinion within the party. The resolution passed by the League was urged on political grounds. The majority of the members contend that, however beneficial a law might be, the church is not the proper authority to enforce it. Geneva was a theocracy and the result was that Servetus was burned. The church has enforced the Comstock law and the outcome was the imprisonment of Bennett, Heywood, Lant, and the arrest just now of Barter. Col. Ingersoll's point that because some men had been unjustly convicted of larceny we should not urge the repeal of the laws against theft was well met by Mr. Wakeman's saying that though he might be in favor of punishing murder by hanging he was not in favor of the church being the executioner. No member of the League is in favor of crime of any kind, but no one wishes to see the church the punishing power. This is the place where the ways of Col. Ingersoll and the League divided. He says if the church is doing a good thing he is with her. So are we if it is her province to do it, but when she exercises the powers belonging only to the civil government then we are unalterably and eternally opposed to her. The church must forever be an intruder in the halls of justice. She has no right there, and if she be admitted it must be as a spectator and not as the prosecuting attorney. She has no right in the district-attorney's office before the trial and no right in the prison after conviction. But this law of Comstock's puts her in the jury-box and on the bench, makes her prosecutor and punisher, and it is from these places the League is trying to expel her. That it cannot hav the powerful aid of Colonel Ingersoll's broad shoulders makes the struggle longer perhaps, but no one man is essential to the cause founded on eternal right. What the individual members of the League lack in strength will be made up in numbers; and at the ballot box, where this battle must be fought out, numbers count. We do not imagin the League will lose any of its power for doing good by the defection of the gallant Colonel, for it still has leaders just as able if not as eloquent. Wright, Wakeman, Pillsbury, and hosts of other determined spirits, are foemen of which the church may well be afraid. There is no danger of the work slacking or being less vigorously prosecuted in the future than in the past.

Pay Up.

We hav been looking over our list and we find too many of our friends are in arrears for their paper. The summer is a very dull time in the newspaper business, and our receipts for the past two months hav been less than the expenditures. This state of things cannot continue, and we hope our subscribers will at once pay up. We need these little sums, and hope we shall not hav to ask twice.

Communications.

Mr. Wakeman's Replication.

Mr. T. B. Wakeman takes exception to my statement that he cross-examined Anthony Comstock and made the opening speech in the Bennett trial. I was misled by Mr. Bennett's report of his trial.

Mr. Wakeman says that "Mr. Bush undertakes to make me indorse all of the recent Comstock state legislation in Massachusetts, but I do not and did not." After quoting from his Faneuil Hall speech, he says, "This is no indorsement of the Comstock laws since surreptitiously (as I am told) passed in Massachusetts."

He is not careful of his facts. He should hav given the date of those recent Comstock laws, and the changes made by them. I find no statute in reference to obscene publications later than the revision of 1873, which contains the "old and sufficient laws" of 1860 on obscene publications. Section 15, chapter 165, general statutes, is as follows:

"Whoever imports, prints, publishes, sells, or distributes any book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper or other thing containing obscene language, or any obscene prints, pictures, figures, or descriptions manifestly tending to the corruption of the morals of youth, or introduces into any family, school, or place of education, or buys, procures, receives, or has in his possession any such book, pamphlet, ballad, printed paper, or other thing, either for the purpose of sale, exhibition, loan, or circulation, or with intent to introduce the same into any family, school, or place of education, shall be punished by imprisonment in the state prison not exceeding five years, or by imprisonment in the jail not exceeding two years, and fined not exceeding one thousand dollars."

To do Mr. Wakeman complete justice I hav examined his references to the postal laws, and the laws and regulations, and cannot agree with him that they place all postal matter, letters and printed matter, "within the control of the postal officers and agents, to do their own sweet will with them, without any let or hindrance, or any punishment whatever."

1. Under the act of July 12, 1876, no letter or postal card is declared unmailable on account of obscenity except those "upon the envelope of which, or postal card upon which indecent, lewd, obscene, or lascivious delineations, epithets, terms, or language may be written or printed."

Does Mr. Wakeman deny the right of the government to exclude such letters?

2. The law does not authorize the examination of any postal matter subject to letter postage. Section 24 of the postal act of March 3, 1879, provides that "no package the contents of which cannot be easily examined shall pass in the mails or be delivered at less rate than for matter of the first class."

Section 3,882, R. S., authorizes postmasters at the office of delivery alone to "remove the wrappers and envelopes from mail matter not charged with letter postage."

The postal regulations provide:

"Section 434. First-class matter not to be held unmailable on mere suspicion.—Postmasters are specially warned that they hav no right to detain first-class matter on the mere suspicion that it contains articles forbidden to be sent in the mails. Neither will they under any circumstances be justified in breaking the seal of any letter or package to ascertain whether or not unmailable matter is inclosed."

"Section 530. Sanctity of seals inviolable.—The several enactments of law defining crimes and offenses against post-office establishment to which reference should be frequently made by special agents admonish every person in the employ of the department that the law-making power intends to throw around the privity of correspondence the solemn sanctity of its protection. One of the highest obligations of the department to the people is to preserve by all the means in its power the absolute sanctity of a seal. The enactments referred to are entirely explicit. Special agents are required to impress on postmasters and their subordinates, at all times, that the postmaster-general will visit with punishment to the full extent of the law any violation of the law in this particular."

Section 3,929, which authorizes the return to the writers of all letters sent to lottery dealers, or other persons engaged in schemes of fraud, provides, "But nothing contained in this title shall be construed as to authorize any postmaster or other person to open any letter not addressed to himself."

Section 4,041, for the return to senders of postal orders, concludes, "But this shall not authorize any person to open any letter not addressed to himself." This shows that all correspondence is carefully guarded from the spy system All matter which the government claims the exclusiv right to carry is neither subject to inspection nor to search.

The conveyance of newspapers, books, and merchandize in the mails is not exclusiv. They may be carried by private carriers on such terms as those carriers may impose. The government competes with them on certain classes, and refuses to compete on other classes. If it has the right to engage in this class of commercial business, it may adopt its own rules and regulations. It can exclude matter which is openly obscene as well as liquids and poisons, live insects and reptils, and provide for the disposition of such matter.

Obscene prints and books are by the customs laws, and by the laws of most of the states, denied the right to be classed as property. They are liable to seizure and destruction as published contrary to law. It is no invasion of the rights of property to exclude them from the mails. It is absurd to contend that a man who violates law in publishing an obscene book shall hav the sanctity of the mails to aid him in his illegal traffic. The United States adopts the old common law rule of the courts, We will not assist an illegal transaction in any respect.

I hav shown that the law and the regulations carefully guard the privacy of first-class matter; that the government is a common carrier as to other kinds of postal matter, and is thus engaged in commercial business; that under the power to regulate commerce it prohibits the importation of obscene publications; that its power to regulate commerce gives it full power to establish the terms on which it will carry the matter other than first-class matter; that it has power to regulate the mails as incidental to its power to establish post-offices; that it has provided for no examination of mail matter except to detect frauds upon the revenue by mailing first-class matter at lower rates than letter postage. The examination of letters in the dead-letter office, which Mr. Wakeman fears destroys the privacy of the mails, was authorized in 1810. The examination under the sections authorizing postmasters at the office of delivery to examin mail matter other than first class was authorized by the law of March 3, 1863 (12 Stat. U. S., p. 707). They are no part of the so-called Comstock legislation, and do not infringe the freedom of the press. Neither Heywood, Bennett, nor Barter hav suffered through these provisions.

It is useless to follow the misrepresentations of Mr. Wakeman in his replies to my articles. I stand by what I hav written, and not by his pettifogging statements. He has proved the truth of Channing's remark, that "there is nothing that will lie worse than figures, unless it be facts."

W. S. Bush.

Our Proofs.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In The Truth Seeker of June 26th, W. F. Jamieson renews his challenge to debate the proofs of Spiritualism. He says, "Convince them in any way they hav no proofs, and they will join the Materialists in making the world pleasanter." Now, if we are in error, if our proofs are "imaginary effects," if we are deluded and deceived, if annihilation is pleasanter than continued existence, if the "death-ends-all" theory will make people happier and better, by all means let us be convinced as soon as possible. I for one want the truth divested of all error. But I respectfully decline to be convinced "in any way" but that which appeals to my reason. He may declare from now till doomsday, as he did in Lansing at the Liberal convention, that "a fact may be a lie," and I cannot believe it The "exact science" of his logic in his illustration of the above, "as for instance when a man commits perjury," will not answer my purpose. Neither will it serve his purpose to tell us as he did that we are "intellectual blanks." We are rigid investigators of science. We do go to nature, the original fountain of all truth, notwithstanding Mr. Jamieson's assertions to the contrary. But no Spiritualist has ever yet, to my knowledge, in this world or the next, become so profoundly wise as to discover that "a fact may be a lie;" and we advise him, unless he has something better to offer, to desist, for with such arguments he certainly will fail "to convince us." I hav waited, hoping debate would not be necessary. If Materialism of the "death-ends-all" kind "will make the world so much pleasanter," and if he can so easily demolish our proofs, he should, if he is a true reformer, proceed to do it without waiting for debate. Most assuredly if I could place such men as Zoellner, Crookes, Wallace, Victor Hugo, Sargent, Buchanan, Tuttle, and Kiddle under obligations to me by "convincing them they hav no proofs," that they are blindly groping after an ignis fatuus, I would do so very quickly. If friend Jamieson will do what he promises millions will bless him, and his name shall be emblazoned in letters of living light on the imperishable monument erected to the wise and good of earth. Fearing, however, that this Jesus of Nazareth will pass by, and the golden opportunity be lost forever, I hav resolved to do all I can to secure the "falling mantle." No one shall truthfully accuse me of being a stumbling-block in the way of erring mortals. And now, before I proceed with my task, let me quote from God's Holy Bible a most fitting text or passage—1 Cor. iii, 18, 19: "Let no man deceive himself. If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool that he may be wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." Mr. Jamieson is assured that the above quotation is not intended for Materialists or Spiritualists, but Christians; furthermore that personalities will not be offered by us or accepted as arguments, therefore if he will follow our example we shall get on very harmoniously. If he should, perchance, reduce our science to zero, should call us "intellectual blanks," or "brainless vacuums," we shall pass them by as being the technical terms of Materialistic science, not yet found in our vocabularies.

The proposition which I now ask Prof. Jamieson to disprove is, Spiritualism is a demonstrated fact, or, Spiritualists hav absolute proofs of spirit communion and future existence, therefore "death does not end all."

Now, in arguing this question I should not offer my mind as the ultimate standard, nor shall I permit Mr. Jamieson to decide a point by saying, "To my mind this is not evidence or absolute proof." That would be no reason or argument whatever. If he cannot demolish my facts or proofs by others more convincing, then mine must stand.

The world does not care how a fact may strike his mind or mine. The world wants facts, and if he thinks he can wipe out Spiritualism by demolishing our facts and substituting his, he shall now hav the opportunity.

Now, I affirm that Spiritualism is a demonstrated fact, that we hav absolute proofs of spirit communion, and the existence of our friends in spirit life; therefore, because our friends liv beyond death, we shall liv also.

The universe is divided into the visible and invisible, the ponderable and imponderable. All scientists admit that by far the greater portion of the material of which the universe is composed exists in so refined and ethereal a condition that the five senses can take no note of it whatever. All matter has been at least once invisible, and may be so again. The two conditions are interchangeable. Matter is not a result or effect. It never had a cause, but every change or new condition must hav a cause, and all causes are invisible. It will not be denied that the universe is made up of the visible and invisible; and those who attempt to fathom, define, or limit the boundless realms of the invisible need more facts than science has ever yet furnished the world.

Intelligence, the result or effect of which is knowledge, belongs to the invisible universe, and we always judge intelligence by the knowledge it manifests. This we can do as absolutely and unerringly as we can calculate the existence of invisible worlds, and we think no man can successfully refute it.

The visible and invisible are interblended everywhere in and on this earth. The essences, life-forces, and properties of matter are never seen. Man is both visible and invisible. We see the flesh, but not the spirit. We think, but no mortal eye has ever seen a thought. Knowledge, intelligence, thought, magnetic and life-forces are all invisible. No mortal eye has ever seen them or the power which conserves, creates, or generates them.

Spirits, therefore, both in the flesh and out, belong to the invisible world, and must, under all circumstances, use the same means to identify themselvs to each other. There are and can be but two means of proving existence and identity, to wit, the physical and intellectual; by sensation, the visible, or, by intelligence, the invisible. Here we identify ourselvs not so much by sensation as by what we know. Physical tests are good, but, except by scars, birth-marks, etc., are unreliable. Intellectual tests are by far the most convincing. They satisfy when all others fail.

Throughout life the body is continually undergoing transformations. From childhood to old age the variations are infinit. People often resemble each other so much that they are taken for each other. Wives hav been imposed upon by impostors through resemblance, when, by rigid intellectual tests, the fraud might hav been detected.

It is only by knowledge—what we know and others know we know—the result of intelligence, that we are able absolutely to identify ourselvs to our friends and our friends to us. Strangers cannot identify themselvs to us, because they cannot giv facts which others may not know. Only those who hav been intimately acquainted can ever absolutely identify themselvs to each other, and then the only way it can be done with absolute certainty is by the knowledge they possess. Again, people can prove their existence absolutely by giving facts which no others possess and then having them subsequently verified.

This is precisely what spirits do in proving their existence and identity; and if this has not and cannot be done, then it is impossible for people here yet in the flesh to prove their identity or existence, and very much of what the scientific world to-day accepts as absolute knowledge must be called by another name. People can identify themselvs by letters so as to be absolutely certain of identity. If this is not true, then identity is incapable of proof, and of course Spiritualism, so far as it rests on intellectual tests, must go down.

With these premises, I shall now consider some of the proofs which millions of intelligent people, many the wisest of the race, hav accepted as absolute proofs of our existence beyond death. I shall ask Prof. Jamieson to visit Rochester, the birthplace of modern Spiritualism, where occurred for the first time, thirty-two years ago, the celebrated "spirit rappings" in the presence of the "Fox girls." These rappings hav since occurred in the presence of millions, and are to-day heard all over the world. No mortal has ever yet been able to tell how those rappings were produced. People sometimes attempt to tell how they are not produced, but everything that has yet been offered has been assumption or speculation. The secret never yet has been divulged to mortal man. If Prof. Jamieson can explain how they are produced, and if he will do that, and explain the process so that others can also produce them, then we shall consider this proof of Spiritualism disposed of. But another difficulty will here present itself to friend Jamieson. Those rappings are invariably accompanied by intelligence as marked and positiv as messages that are received to-day over the telegraph wires. Those messages purport to come from people dwelling in the invisible realm of spirit life, and are spelled out just as the operator spells out messages which come to him over the wires. If there is another operator at the end of one line then there must be at the other. Messages in both instances hav to be verified, and many times hav little or no significance to the operators but to the person receiving them are of deep significance.

Those Rochester rappings, those little telegraphic signals, spelled out a message, explaining that the person communicating was murdered and the exact locality in the cellar where the body would be found pointed out, all of which was verified. Search was made, the body found, and the message proved absolutely correct. Now those rappings did occur, accompanied by a knowledge which could come from no other than an unknown, invisible, organized intelligence, and I demand that Prof. Jamieson prove that they did not occur, or if they were not produced by spirit power, prove how they did occur, what caused them, and where the intelligence or knowledge came from which accompanied them, or for ever hold his peace.

Prof. Jamieson has twice begged to debate the proofs of Spiritualism. Now let him answer this, and I will favor him with another trial. He says, "Convince them in any way; they hav no proofs, and they will join the Materialists in making this world pleasanter." E. A. CHAPMAN.

Lowell, Mich., July 22, 1880.

[From Truth.]

Orthodox Unfairness.

Here is a specimen from the usually fair Christian at Work:

The misnamed Freethinkers are to hav their little convention at Hornellsville, Pennsylvania [sic], when the September breezes blow. We say they are misnamed Freethinkers because in reality every man and woman and child in the world is free to, and does, think exactly what he pleases. The world is a free-thinking world. But in truth Freethinkers they are not, but free-doers. Hence they would abrogate all laws restraining the free action of the individual except so far as it trespasses on life or property. The Freethinkers believe in free vice with a vim; they would dissolve the marriage tie, open the door to free licentiousness, free rum, free blasphemy, and make the post-office a government express company for the circulation of licentious literature. They will miss, though, some of their principal speakers and co-religionists, who just now are doing the state some service behind prison bars.

At last the orthodox hav come to recognize that "Freethinker" is not a term of reproach. It is not ten years since Freethinker and Infidel were synonymous terms to the religious community, and in its estimation all who professed to be either were consigned to everlasting perdition. Now, however, we learn for the first time that the world is a free-thinking world. The Christian at Work, we presume, is a Freethinker; Dr. Hall is a Freethinker; Dr. Crosby, Dr. McCosh, Elder Love-God-and-be-blessed Smith, and Deacon Refuse-to-believe-and-be-damned Jones are Freethinkers.

Now our contemporary must not misunderstand us. We do not claim that a man must think as we do to be a Freethinker. It is a part of our religion that a man may be a conscientious Catholic, Protestant, Mohammedan, Jew, Spiritualist, or Infidel, and yet be a Freethinker. The designation does not refer to the conclusion at which the mind arrives, but to the process by which the conclusion is reached.

He who givs full play to his reasoning faculties, considers every fact bearing upon the question before him, takes nothing for granted that is not strictly axiomatic, and thus arrives at a result, is a Freethinker as well after he has come to a conclusion as while he is searching for it. But he who takes his creed from others, who believes because he is told to believe, who will not reason because to reason is wicked, who would commit murder as soon as he would merely inquire into the divine origin of his faith, is not a Freethinker, and it is a mangling of language to call him one.

Now, is that part of the world which is found in the church a free-thinking world? We shall consider the Protestant church, because it is that to which our contemporary is attached, but all the other churches are the same.

Faith is the great requirement of church fellowship. Unquestioning faith in the divine origin of the Bible, in the fall of man, in the atonement, in the immaculate conception, in a physical resurrection after actual death, and in a heaven for the believer and a hell for the unbelivers, is the beginning and end of the Christian religion; and but for the fact that to meet emergencies it has gradually allied itself to an approved system of morals, it would already be a thing of the past.

Will the Christian at Work make a rational inquiry into the alleged divinity of the Bible, into the traditional fall of man, into the doctrin of the atonement, into the miraculous birth and resurrection of Jesus, or into the doctrin of heaven and hell, throwing aside educational bais, and regardless of the result at which they may arrive, seeking only truth?

No.

Nor will any of the churches it represents. They all shun investigation, thought, and reason, making blind faith their foundation, and preachtng that salvation comes through faith alone.

Then so much of the world as is in the church is not a freethinking world.

The slur that so-called Freethinkers are but free doers is a libel which would be unworthy reply did it come from a less respectable source. So is the assertion that Freethinkers believe in free vice, that they would dissolve the marriage tie, and open the door to free licentiousness and free rum.

The body of Freethinkers will compare more than favorably with religionists. They are not found in our state prisons (unless we except Bennett, who was sent to prison because he was an unbeliever, for any unprejudiced mind familiar with the facts will concede that the pretense of his imprisonment was false); our jails are free from them, and none hav ever graced our scaffolds. But Christians and even clergymen hav kept the machinery of the law from rusting because of their crimes, which range from petty larceny to capital offenses.

Let us refer our contemporary to a few statistics: In 1873 in England among 100,000 Catholics, 2 500 were criminals; among 100,000 of the Anglican church 1,400 were criminals; among 100,000 Dissenters 150 were criminals, and among 100,000 Freethinkers 6 were criminals. Thus, of 300,000 believers over 4,000 were criminals; while the proportion of unbelievers who were criminals was as 18 to 300,000. Eighteen against four thousand makes a bad showing for the believers.

Again, in 1858, of 2,000 abandoned women in the city of New York, 1 937 were children of believers, 1,949 were trained in the Christian religion, and 1,909 professed the religion in which they were trained at the time the statistics were made up. Rather bad again for believers.

The conclusion of the paragraph we quote, to the effect that some of the principal speakers of the Freethinkers will not be at the Convention at Hornellsville, because they are in prison, is a lie. We know that is an impolite expression, but none other will so appropriately characterize the assertion.

We hav devoted this space to the unfair and in some respects false statements of our religious contemporary, not because Truth cares about the matter one way or the other; but because the article is a libel upon a large class of the better part of the community which seldom intrudes itself upon public notice, and in whose interest the Convention at Hornellsville will be conducted by men and women whose intelligence and virtue it does not lie in the mouth of an organ of that branch of the community from which our jails, prisons, brothels, and scaffolds are almost exclusivly supplied to impugn.

God Pickles a Woman in Salt.

Unlike the bosom of Abraham, the bosom of Mrs. Lot is located in this world. When Lot's wife died she didn't turn to dust, but turned to salt.

Mrs. Lot was not a righteous woman. They didn't hav many righteous women in those days. The righteous were mostly men. There was righteous Lot, who got so righteous drunk that he didn't know whether he was a married man or not. But God saved him, and killed his wife, and salted her on the spot. And when all dust shall rise again, Lot's wife, being salt, will remain undisturbed at the sound of Gabriel's horn.

According to promis, God got up a big roast in Sodom and Gomorrah, but Lot being righteous, he sent two dirty foot-angels to save Lot, and as a special favor he also concluded to save the girls and the old woman.

Lot didn't know that the angels were angels, and noticing that their feet were pretty dirty, he told them to go in and wash their feet. And the angels went in and washed their feet and took supper.

The account doesn't say if the angels took a little something before eating to help their digestion or not. But as Lot was very fond of taking a little something himself, it is presumed that he at least advised that the angels "take a nip" as a sort of regulator. It would seem that the villagers had mistrusted that something was going on in Lot's house, and as Lot had two daughters, they determined to see the two tramps that they might know more about them. Lot went out, and, being a righteous man, he offered them his two daughters, and said they might do unto them as they liked if they would not insist on seeing the strangers.

Well, in the morning, just as God was about to burn the city, "the angels took Lot and his wife and the girls and told them to flee for their lives and not look back." But as Lot's wife thought of the terrible fate of her friends, her bosom swelled with emotion; and when she smelt the brimstone, she turned back and gave a look of sympathy, pity, and sorrow at her old home and the thousands of men, mothers, and innocent little children who were being burned alive. For this manifestation of her noble heart God got mad and pickled her on the spot—killed her and turned her into a pillar of salt. This salt arrangement, no doubt, was very nice for the sheep and cattle, but it was a little tough on the woman. If the account is true, it shows God to be a heartless monster who has neither love, mercy, nor reason in his composition.

At the outset God might hav made the world better by killing the devil. But he preferred to drown his children as a means of removing wickedness. Next he tried fire and brimstone on the children of Sodom and Gomorrah, and as this great, grand roast proved no better than the water experiment, he concluded to get up a cross between himself and the human family. The cross was a good one, for the child was a great improvement on God the Father. And although the son believed in damning a man on account of his honest opinions, he never, like his father, made use of fire and brimstone in this world; he only threatened its use in the next world. M. BABCOCK.

Suspended.

We are in receipt of the following card, the facts stated on which fill us with sincere regret. We trust that after politics hav subsided the Appeal will flourish more than ever:

DETROIT, MICH., Sept. 26, 1880.

Dear Sir: The Rational Appeal is under suspension at present. I hope to resume it after the Presidential election.

Very truly, S. B. MCCRACKEN.

PEOPLE seldom improve when they hav no other model than themselvs to copy after.

BY taking revenge a man is but even with his enemy; but in passing it over he is superior.

Letters from Friends.

TREMONT, O., Sept. 18, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: It is now nearly one year since I first subscribed for THE TRUTH SEEKER, taking it most of the time under considerable embarrassment by reason of my moving around, but now that I am settled I intend to be a constant subscriber to it so long as it is ably conducted, as it is at present and has been. I would be lost without it and it never was more interesting than now.

I hav been much interested in the expressions on politics through its columns. In this state it is greatly mixed. The Republicans claim it of course, but it seems more and more, from the way I view it, uncertain, and I cannot help believing that each succeeding day injures the chances of Garfield. I hav always been a Republican, i. e., as a choice between the two parties, but I am so thoroughly Liberal I am always ready to throw my vote in behalf of reform and right, even though the effect be to crush the Republican party, although it is not with a happy heart nor any relish that I vote for a Democrat to do it. Yes sir, it is hard, and not that I hav such love for the old hulk of a once grand party, but that it is necessary to join hands with such undesirable company—as a party. And if I should vote for Hancock, as it is likely I shall, it will be with many regrets that such a step is necessary. This is the home of President Hayes. There is but little warmth of feeling here for him among his Republican friends. He ignored them after his election, and now, sir, it is a fact that when he comes home, it is oftener than otherwise that there are none at the depot to welcome him. His hold upon the hearts of the people is slim indeed.

Yours in fullest sympathy, E. B. WILLIAMS.

---

ALTOONA, PA., 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: I hav been away and spent a week at the Hornellsville Convention. It was the first time that I ever had the pleasure of attending a meeting of Freethinkers' and it was to me a source of great joy as the meeting was of the greatest interest from the time it commenced until it closed. The speakers we had were all stars, but I was pleased much better with some than others. The very first person whom I met and had the pleasure of taking by the hand was the Rev. George Chainey, of Evansville, Ind. He is an elegant speaker and still a very young man, and I sincerely hope that all his future years may be bright and prosperous so that he may do a noble work in the cause of Liberalism. I do not think that a better person could be chosen as chairman than Dr. T. L. Brown. He always kept the audience in a good humor and his opening address was a very able effort. I was very much pleased with the female speakers, but thought that the address of Miss Marion Slusser was superior to any. The Rev. Mr. Burnham, of Michigan, is a regular thunderbolt. On Sunday afternoon we enjoyed the pleasure of listening to the most brilliant orator of the age, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, who for two hours and thirty minutes kept the audience almost spell-bound by his inimitable lecture, "What must we do to be saved." On Sunday evening we had the pleasure of hearing one of the ablest addresses of the Convention by T. B. Wakeman, I had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. H. L. Green, who is a very earnest worker in the cause of Freethought, and Mrs. Burnz, the compiler of the "Liberal Hymn Book." I was also very glad to see present that handsome little lady, Miss Josephine Tilton. We had a choir of five young ladies assisted by a very able musician who rendered some excellent music during the meeting. On Saturday we had an address by a man who styled himself a Christian evangelist and whose name was Egbert F. Cleve. This same man, Cleve, lectured in Altoona last winter, his subject being "Why I Became a Catholic." He was denounced by the Episcopalian minister at this place as being an apostate of the Episcopal church and a dishonorable man. A controversy at last arose between them through the press, in which the Catholic priest took part and defended Cleve, but he was not allowed to lecture in the Catholic church, and many of the Catholics are opposed to him, claiming that he will do almost anything for money. I think it is very seldom that he encounters such an intellectual giant as Parker Pillsbury.

One morning while Mrs. Amelia Colby was delivering one of her eloquent orations, and as I was about to express my feelings by stamping of the feet, a dog which was lying under one of the chairs rushed out and bit me severely. I, at first, thought that the "tiger was unchained," but I think it was only an orthodox dog, that perhaps, belonged to the Young Men's Christian Association. And now, in closing, I will say that New York is a grand state and Hornellsville a very beautiful town. The people there are not so bigoted as in my own state, and I was treated very kindly during my short stay; and as I look back to the years gone by, and turn with pleasure memory's pages, I shill never forget the happy days I spent at the Hornellsville Convention.

W. J. BURNS.

---

WAYLAND, N. Y., Sept. 12, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The only way to get such independent people as the Liberals are to act together for any purpose is to convince their judgments. This and the discussion of the political situation in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER has not been without salutary effect.

I was a Republican before I was old enough to vote. Since then I hav acted with that party, believing that under its guidance the union, for which I hav bled and still suffer, was most secure. Uninfluenced by the opinions of others, I reached the conclusion not to vote for Garfield, for the following reasons:

1. A candidate for the highest office in the world should hav a clean record. The charges made against him hav not, in my judgment, been successfully answered.

2. For several good reasons I am not in love with the Ohio ring, with Hayes at its head, and hav no reason to suppose that it will be any better with Garfield at the front.

3. Garfield being a "brother in the Lord," and a sympathizer with the objects and aims of the Young Men's Christian Association, it might well be worse.

4. When Gen. Grant returned home through the South he spoke highly of the patriotism of the people of that section. There can now be no good reason for keeping alive the dying embers of a war that ended fifteen years ago.

5. It is no longer necessary that the Republican party should be continued in power, but it is important that every portion of our common country should enjoy peace, tranquility, and prosperity, and cultivate charity and fraternal love.

6. Power too long continued in the hands of one man or one party or set of men breeds corruption. This is but too evident this fall in the expenditure of vast sums of money wrested from the people, and the intimidation of employes by employers and of debtors by creditors, for the purpose of continuing in power a set of corrupt politicians.

I believe that free institutions, securing individual liberty, can only be maintained where elections are decided by pure and intelligent voters. The most important political question of the time seems to me to be how best and quickest to take the balance of power between the two great parties out of the hands of a class of men who can be bought or intimidated. As long as such men hold the balance of power, their votes being necessary to the success of either party, the political aspirants will use money or undue influence—the only means to get such votes. In corrupting others they corrupt themselvs. They dare not do right if they would. In cases like the imprisonment of Bennett they are the tools of the men whose votes are necessary to secure party success. No considerable body of men of principle hav as yet cut themselvs off from party fealty, as it has become the study and aim of the leaders to secure the votes of unprincipled men by doubtful methods.

To vote for a third or fourth or fifth candidate is to draw alike from both parties without weakening or alarming either. Such votes are wasted. To make our votes count we must choose between the two leading parties. If the party in power does not do right, vote with the other. Change often. The Liberals in this way would soon be strong enough, by acting together, to defeat either party. Soon both parties would begin to ask what they must do to be saved Conscientious voters instead of commercial voters would be estimated in the doubtful column. The era of corruption would be over, for officials would hav to stop stealing, and the votes that tell the story could not be bought up. The era of bulldozing would end, for Liberals are not easily frightened. The era of great promises would be ended, for Liberals hav little faith. The era of religious persecution would be over, for neither party would care to commit suicide. No religion or class would be favored, for liberal-minded, intelligent, and conscientious men and women would control the supply of bread and butter.

The Republicans hav proved unworthy. Our first and wisest move is to elect Hancock—an eminently safe man. If after four years' trial there should not be the improvement that would naturally be expected, then giv the other fellows another chance.

The parties, like young pigs, are both hungry, no doubt, but by first restraining one, then the other, we can soon teach them so they can take their rations without jeopardizing the rights of people who stand aloof from unseemly scrambles for party favor, and who are earnestly working for the elevation and happiness of the human race.

G. W. MOREHOUSE.

---

CORDOVA, ILL., Sept. 13, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Dear Sir: The editor of Mind and Matter, in his issue of the 28th ult., in his article on "Critics Answered," published the so-called Comstock law, and boasts that the opponents of the law hav not dared to do the same.

There are other evidences besides the above that Mr. Roberts has just awoke from a long and profound Rip Van Winkle sleep. THE TRUTH SEEKER long ago published the act on sheets which were scattered all over the country. It was to this fact more than anything else that made it so easy to get signers to petitions for its repeal. I always carried the act with me when I solicited signers to petitions for its repeal. Nearly every one who read the act comprehended the Jesuitical character and intent of the thing, and would most willingly sign petitions for its repeal.

But again he says, "The petty personal squabble between D. M. Bennett, Judge Benedict, and Anthony Comstock has no proper relation to this statute, so far as its general scope and operation is concerned." Can it be possible that Mr. Roberts is sincere in calling that a personal squabble, when the United States, through its agents, does what has been done to Mr. Bennett for no crime, and for no other reason than that he is a Freethinker? The inception of this act was for the suppression of Freethought.

In the neighboring town of Le Claire, Mr. Barter, editor of the Le Claire Pilot, has been arrested and imprisoned under this same act, but it too, I presume, was only a personal squabble, and has no relation to the general scope and operation of this act. He, too, is a Freethinker, and bigots invoke the power of the United States to suppress him. It has come to that. The obscenity dodge is too thin; it is aimed at heretics and heretical opinions, Mr. Roberts to the contrary notwithstanding. He says, "The law is a most proper and beneficent one, and should not be repealed," and those who are in favor of its repeal are loco-foco Liberals. There is no bigotry about that. Oh, no! If you believe as I do you are a good fellow; if not, why then you are a loco-foco. The other bigot says, if you believe in God, Jesus, and the Bible, you are all right; but if you don't, why then you're damned. Yours, J. HOKE.

---

BLOOMFIELD, N. J., Aug. 24, 1880.

TO THE LIBERALS OF THE UNITED STATES: So the bigots of the church are trying to wipe out a Freethought journal at Le Claire, Iowa, another persecution for opinion's sake. Let us rally to Mr. Barter's support, and show these religious bigots that he and his opinions hav friends all over the country. Money will enable Mr. Barter to publish his paper in spite of them. If each Liberal will send from 50 cents to $2, he will be enabled to make a creditable defense and come out best in the end. I send him $2 by this mail. Don't neglect this duty, for we are all concerned in this prosecution. H. B. SHEARS.

---

BURR OAK, MICH., Sept. 15, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: Mr. M. K. Wilson, of Auburn, Ind., has been giving us some lectures here in our rural district upon the "Origin of the Bible," and in our opinion the multitude of facts which he has collected from ecclesiastical history in relation to where, when, and how the Bible came into being, and the character and ability of the men to whom we are indebted for all we know of its origin, should be more generally understood by Liberals in general, and to all Christians this knowledge would be invaluable. Mr. Wilson makes no quotation from any other than Christian authors, and from such Christian authors as were never accused or suspected of heresy, and all Christians who hear these lectures will learn many important facts which they will not be likely very soon to learn from their own chosen guides and instructors; and one of not the least important facts which they will learn from these lectures is this, that all the historical knowledge Christians hav of the origin of their religion is on the testimony of the priests or Christian Fathers of the first three centuries, every one of whom hav been impeached and convicted of practicing fraud and deception for the purpose of making proselytes to their superstitions; and the undersigned members of the Burr Oak Liberal League, No. 167, wish to say through the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER to all Liberals everywhere, Giv the people a chance to hear those lectures. And we would further say that Mr. Wilson will make his terms so low as to be within the reach of all Liberal organizations, and will speak when desired on any other subject connected with the cause of Liberalism. Mr. Wilson can be addrssed at Auburn, Ind. M. P. Thurston, M. A. Dexter, Huldah Dexter, Anna Hoyt, J. O. Warren, A. H. Thurston, Chas. Washburn, and others.

Respectfully, M. P. THURSTON.

---

CLINTON, IOWA, Sept. 12, 1880.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: The Marshalltown Convention is a thing of the past, yet as the report in your issue of the 11th is so meager, I take the liberty of adding that it was a success, owing to the fact that Profs. Jamieson, Phelps, and Mrs. Parry were on the platform to enunciate the principles of Liberalism and the League, W. F. Peck was there to sing their truths into the hearts of the people, and E. C. Walker was on the ground, early and late, and everywhere present.

Mr. Walker is not a large man, neither was the immortal Napoleon; but if anybody was ever called to conduct a campaign for the honor of the state and the glory of principle, E. C. Walker is the man, and Iowa ought to be counted out in the great fight coming if she does not march up and follow the lead of this, her most valiant son. The worker is the hero. Most of us can talk, but he who can do is the strong staff upon whom to lean.

As for talk, if you want it in one continuous, limpid, silvery shower, just sit under the ministrations of Prof. Jamieson. Those who hav heard him for these many years do not need to be reminded of his magic voice, the smile like a sunbeam, the keen, clear-cut sentences, unsparing logic, eloquence, and power with which he holds his audience. His presence in the Convention was enough to insure its success, and his appearance was always the signal for a hearty outburst of applause. Long may he liv to combat with merciless sarcasm and inimitable courtesy the enemy spoiling for a fight!

One of the events of the Convention was the lecture of Prof. Phelps on "The Garden of Eden." It would be natural to suppose that this subject would, at the present day, be considerably dull to a body of Freethinkers, but if you could hav seen, Mr. Editor, the hundreds of people convulsed with laughter who sat and listened to his sallies of wit, if you could hav heard the spontaneous yells and cheers which rose in the throats of the people as, one by one, the Professor drove home his arguments against the need of such a garden and such a gardener, you would hav been glad that such a story had been invented to furnish food for such a mind.

No Ingersollian wit can excel the side-splitting humor of Prof. Phelps, and his grave thought is of the very best and most impassioned quality. When we take into consideration the fact that he has marshaled Kansas into line with her many Leagues, he should be heard in every state in the Union.

The good people of Marshalltown were not very friendly when the Convention began its work, but ere the closing session thought was up to the boiling point; and on the last evening (Sunday) Mrs. Parry had a large and interested audience to listen to her able lecture on "The Religion and Church of the Future." As a speaker she is dignified and logical, and held, with ease, the attention of her many listeners.

Not a little praise is due to Mr. W. F. Peck for the enlivening of the sessions with songs, humorous and pathetic, sung in excellent voice, and stirring the people with the enthusiasm which music always produces. Most of the songs and music were original and well adapted to the needs of liberty-lovers.

Altogether the Convention, as I said in the beginning, was a success, as a State League was organized, your correspondent, T. C. Leland, having, by his scholarly and comprehensiv arguments, early set before us the necessity for a work of this kind; and on the 17th the Iowa delegates will swell the ranks of the National League Convention and add their Western slogan to the cry for repeal and no compromise with bigotry. Yours, etc, MRS. H. S. LAKE.

---

CAWKER CITY, KAN., Sept. 14, 1880.

EDITOR TRUTH SEEKER: I had hoped that in your discussion with Mr. Mair he would be able to show some tangible proof, if not historical, that such a person as Jesus Christ once lived. In his "Fifth Letter," as continued in THE TRUTH SEEKER of September 11th, there is, to use a Western phrase, a complete let-down. The spiritual discernment he speaks of, that worldly minds cannot comprehend, is the very argument used by Mormons when you get a clinch on them. What is the use to lie to old liars? A man of good judgment ought to know that in these times such sophistry is equivalent to yielding the point.

Mr. Mair claims that God is the author of the story as told by Matthew that God is the only infallible being in existence. Now, if this is true, it seems a very easy matter for him to tell the story twice alike. He has failed to do it in more instances than one. Here, in my mind, hangs the whole story Such an imperfect history of so much import could not come from a perfect source. I do not believe God has created this world, with all it possesses, without being able to giv a correct history of it. The God that created this world has but one way of corresponding with us; we are learning day by day through works of nature the language he uses.

I used to honestly believe there were good, honest, well-informed men that were sincere in their Christian profession, but I am all over it now. I hav failed to find one when put to the proper test. The proper test is this: Take him away from everyone, then pump all his hypocrisy and cant out of him (which you can do if your pump is steel-lined), and ask him if he honestly believes the Bible to be the word of God. They do not in their heart believe it; the ignorant may, but the learned do not. If it were not for the money and other pleasures sought by the clergy the old ship of Zion might go to bedlam for all they would care.

I am glad truth, so long crushed to earth, is rising in its might, and ere long the human mind will be free.

The great theologian, Mr. Mair, is a failure. I read the debate between Ditzler and Jamieson, which was very interesting, and made Freethinkers by the thousand. As the subject matter between Mr. Mair and Bennett was of such vast importance to orthodox believers, I looked for more light than has yet been thrown on the subject. I hav, as usual, been disappointed. The old fountains from which they draw their arguments are drying up as intelligence advances. Why do they hate Voltaire, Paine, Ingersoll, Bennett and other Infidels if their doctrin is true? It hurts no good man to slander him; but yon twit a man on facts, and then he kicks at once, the same as Christians do. They do not want their little pet scheme of having a good time interfered with. Respectfully, T. F. H.

NATIONAL LIBERAL LEAGUE CONGRESS.

Its Fourth Annual Meeting, Held in Chicago.

SATURDAY MORNING SESSION.

League opened at 10:20 at Hershey Hall, the Hon. Elizur Wright presiding.

In calling the gathering to order the President explained that he had lost a little time in meeting Col. Ingersoll, who would be with them in the afternoon.

A DEFENSE COMMITTEE.

Reports of committees were called for, and Mr. Green proceeded to deliver that of the Committee on Nominations. The first recommendation was that Prof. A. L. Rawson, of New York, act as Chairman of a Defense Committee, whose duty, as defined by the Constitution of the League, is "to defend through the courts, by the combined efforts and means of the Liberals of the country, any American citizen whose equal religious or moral rights are denied, or who is oppressed on account of any opinions he may hav held or expressed on the subject of religion or morals."

The Committee further submitted a list of officers for the ensuing year—Elizur Wright for President, Col. Ingersoll for senior Vice-President, and Mr. T. C. Leland for Secretary.

The report was accepted and Mr. Wright was re-elected.

Prof. Rawson, of New York, gave an account of the Confederation of Freethinkers, which met at Brussels in August, and of the progress of Liberalism on the Continent.

Louis Wilhelm, of Chicago, read an address to the League from an organization known as The Union of Radicals. It demanded separate political action on the part of Liberals in opposition to the two great political parties of today, and a thorough breaking away from old party practices, to the end that the people at each election might divide on certain principles or issues, instead of on the questions of persons and spoils. Such a party, it was asserted, would, after a few defeats, soon draw into its ranks the most intelligent, moral, and patriotic men of the nation. The organizations set down as ready to assist in forming this new party of progress were the Liberal Leagues, the Turners, the Woman Suffrage Associations, the Freie Gemeinden, the Free Religious Associations, the Union of Radicals, and the various Labor-Reform organizations, provided the latter were ready to desist from attempts to force Communism into the platform.

Mr. A. J. Grover read a paper on the duty of the League, as it appeared to him. It was a very able document, and we regret that we hav not room to print it in full.

He was succeeded by Mr. McCracken, of Michigan, who presented the report of a Liberal Congress held at Detroit.

After some further speeches by the delegates the Congress took a recess for lunch.

On reassembling, Mr. Spencer, from the Committee on Future Work, reported that it should be—

1. The total separation of church and state, to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, including the equitable taxation of church property, secularization of the public schools, abrogation of Sabbatarian laws, abolition of chaplaincies, prohibition of public appropriations for religious purposes, and all other measures necessary to the same general end.

National protection for national citizens in their equal civil and religious rights, irrespectiv of race or sex, to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, and afforded through the United States courts.

Universal education the basis of universal suffrage in this secular republic, to be secured under present laws and proper legislation, and finally to be guaranteed by amendment of the United States Constitution, requiring every state to maintain a thoroughly secularized public school system, and to permit no child within its limits to grow up without a good elementary education.

It was, said the Committee, the duty of the National Liberal League and auxiliary Leagues to direct their efforts toward carrying out these needed reforms by seeing to it that such men were elected to the Legislatures, and Congress, and other offices, executiv and judicial, as favored them and had the ability and the courage to maintain them in their several capacities; that existing laws favorable to these objects were properly enforced; that suitable pecuniary and other means were provided in case of need to defend citizens who were unjustly subjected to prosecutions and other injuries and annoyances on account of exercising rights reserved to the people; that auxiliary Leagues were multiplied as rapidly as responsible, intelligent, judicious, and earnest persons could be found who would assist their organization and carry them forward in a manner consistent with the importance and dignity of the reforms demanded; that it should be the purpose of the National and auxiliary Leagues to consistently maintain absolute neutrality as to theological opinions; that they should neither seek to pull down nor build up any form of religion or irreligion, but confine themselvs in this matter strictly to eliminating from the government whatever was of a religious or anti-religious character, to the end only that the government should be limited in the exercise of its powers solely to secular purposes; that the Leagues should do what they could to protect the freedom and purity of elections, and to cultivate a sacred regard for the rights of suffrage.

They recommended that the Executiv Committee be instructed to invite, as soon as possible after the fall election, all kindred organizations and all independent men and women who are dissatisfied with the old parties, to attend a National Convention for the purpose of forming a new party: that no Presidential candidate be nominated this year.

Action was deferred until the Committee on Resolutions had reported.

President Wright then read a paper, in which he reviewed the history of the Republican, Democratic, and Fiat parties, saying that none met the wants of the Liberals, who could vote as they pleased, or put up a ticket of their own.

Five-minute speeches were called for, and Mrs. Woodruff responded, pleading for more light everywhere; also Mrs. Severance, who deprecated getting stirred up because some one expressed his honest thought. Addresses were also made by several others. Two of them were devoted to masonry, the speakers having withdrawn from the lodge because it was too religious—one, also, because women were excluded. Several others were in favor of female suffrage.

The Committee on Resolutions then came in.

Col. Ingersoll moved that in all votes upon the adoption of any resolution, the roll be called and the vote taken by yeas and nays of delegates or regular proxies.

Mr. Green moved that the subject be laid over until the evening session.

The motion of Col. Ingersoll was agreed to.

Mr. Green renewed his motion, but did not press it on account of the opposition.

Mr. Wakeman, from the Committee on Resolutions, submitted their report, saying he hoped it would be received in the spirit of compromise in which it had been necessary to make it.

Appended is the platform:

We reaffirm and declare the main purpose of the National Liberal League to be the realization in the states and general government of the objects stated in its standard platform, to wit:

[For No. 1 see report by Mr. Spencer from Committee on Future Work]

2. We claim it to be the duty of every citizen, man or woman, to extend to all others every right and liberty that he claims for himself; that there should be, therefore, no legal, political, or social disabilities, discriminations, or ostracisms against any person on account of religious belief, or of any absence of such belief; that all laws of the states or general government making any so-called religious tests, in order to qualify any person to vote, or to hold office, or to testify, or to sit on a jury, or to do any public or governmental act, should be repealed as relics of barbarism, and that all laws in regard to marriage, which should be a civil contract, and in regard to divorce, births, and burials, should be placed on a purely secular and scientific basis, and hav their justification only in their use to society.

3. We deem it expedient for the Liberals in all portions of our country to act, or to co-operate with others, as a political organization for the accomplishment of the objects of the above platform, and to nominate candidates for office for that purpose as soon as they hav organized in sufficient numbers, and hav developed sufficient political agreement to do so effectivly; that such nomination should be first made in Assembly, and Congressional districts, and that we hope and urge that four years from this time we shall hav a Presidential ticket in the field. In the mean time we mutually pledge each other that we will cast our votes and use our political influence for such candidates for office as we honestly believe will most effectivly further the objects of our League.

4. In the spirit of our platform we also demand such state and United States laws as will securely guard the freedom of the press and of speech, and the inviolability of the mail, and will allow free circulation, by mail or otherwise, of all books, pamphlets, papers, and letters, irrespectiv of the religious or other views they may contain, so that the literature of science and general knowledge, and thought and the expression of thought, may be placed in no restraint except to answer for any abuse or injury done by it before regular courts and juries of our people.

5. While we demand equal rights for all, and the consequent freedom of the press and of speech, and the inviolability of the mails, we do not do this to aid, abet, or encourage obscenity, lotteries, financial frauds, bogus medical diplomas, nor any form of immorality, crime, or wrong-doing whatsoever; on the contrary, we are utterly opposed to the dissemination through the mails, or by any other means, of obscene literature, whether inspired or uninspired, and hold in measureless contempt and disgust its authors and disseminators, and we therefore call upon the so-called Christian world to expunge from the so-called sacred Bible every passage that cannot be read without covering the cheek of modesty with the blush of shame, and until such passages are expunged we demand that the laws against the dissemination of obscene literature be impartially enforced. But we are in favor and guarantee our efforts and influence to enforce reasonable and effectiv laws in aid of the common law against obscenity, lotteries, bogus diplomas, financial and other frauds; but we believe that such offenses should be and can be effectively punished and repressed in the same way that other offenses are, that is, by the common criminal laws and the courts, aided by police and detectiv officers, who shall be responsible to the people or their elected officers, and not to churches or amateur theological criminal societies.

6. Upon the grounds before stated we are unable to approve of the so-called "Comstock legislation," in either the state or general government, and we believe the results hav proved it to be fraught with serious danger to the equal rights and liberties of our people:

The incorporation within the several states of amateur semi-criminal, semi-theologic societies, and the employment of their agents in no way responsible to the people to make accusations and arrests under laws enacted at their instigation, is an exhibition of theologic assumption and governmental interference hostil to the impartiality and equality of secular and popular government, which should be of the people, for the people, and by the people; that such laws and administration of criminal affairs practically deprives the citizen of his common law right of liberty until he injures another person, or property, or is accused in the first instance by a grand jury of his peers.

The general government as the agent of the states and people in providing the postal service holds in time of peace substantially the relation of a common carrier; that to admit its right to discriminate as to the meaning of matter which it will carry would be to admit a power that may be used arbitrarily for the suppression of particular classes of thought on political, religious, social, and moral subjects, and would, therefore, be inconsistent with the total separation of church and state, which is the prime demand of the National Liberal League.

We, therefore, urge the repeal of the present United States postal laws known as the Comstock laws, for these, among other reasons:

That, in the view of many whose judgment we respect, such laws are unconstitutional; they giv to the United States a criminal jurisdiction, dangerous and unlimited, extending to every offense as to which it may be claimed that the post-office may hav been misused in its commission; such laws make the employment of decoy letters, deceit, and espionage a necessary and recognized process of our criminal law, and so break down all confidence in the inviolability of the mails, and in the public morality of the government and the people; under such laws printed and other matter may be condemned and confiscated before publication and without trial; that thus practically a postal censorship is constituted which violates the freedom of the press and speech as well as of the right of property; that by the trick of getting a letter or paper sent through a post-office, even within the same state, the agent, under these laws, gets jurisdiction in the United States Court over common law offenses, so that a trial is had before a judge appointed for life and not responsible to the people, and a jury who are not practically the peers nor of the vicinage of the accused, and where the definition of the court may leave the jury no alternativ but to convict. That while therefore we do not approve of any offenses that may hav been committed by Lant, Train, Dr. Foote, Heywood, or Bennett, or others, we regard their accusations and convictions as outrages that far exceed in enormity any offenses charged upon them. We regard such cases as attacks upon our common law and constitutional rights and liberties, which must be resisted hereafter to the uttermost, and we recommend the appointment of a special Defense Committee of this League, under Article III, Section 4, of its Constitution, to which all questions of this kind, and all others within the meaning of that section, may be referred.

We also demand a change of the administration of the law in regard to such cases, so that the jury, and no judge or censor, may make and apply in each case the definition of obscenity, and so that the jury may be the judges of both the law and the fact in all cases of obscene libels, as they are now in all other cases of libel; that all laws necessary in regard to these subjects be enforced by officers responsible to the people and to the secular government only; that all special amateur societies above referred to shall be abolished, and that Anthony Comstock and similar agents should be dismissed and hav no pretense of legal sanction and protection in the course of inquisition, falsehood, and outrage.

This League upon the invitations heretofore received, heartily affiliates with the National Secular Society of England, of which Charles Bradlaugh is President, and Annie Besant and Edward Truelove are Vice-Presidents, and also with the Federation of Freethinkers which lately held its session at Brussels in Belgium. That we join hands with them because we believe that although those societies may hav other special objects, yet they seek to accomplish substantially the objects of our League, and we hereby authorize our Board of Managers to attend any meetings of those bodies as delegates in their discretion, or to appoint other delegates thereto, who may act with the delegates which may also be sent by any of the auxiliaries of this League.

When the reading of the platform was concluded Col. Ingersoll arose from his seat, holding a paper in his hand, and was about to speak when a dozen shouted "Platform," and a score or more applauded him. When he reached the platform he said:

Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer the following resolution in place and instead of resolutions numbered 5 and 6:

Resolved, That the Committee of Defense, whenever a person has been indicted for what he claims to hav been an honest exercise of the freedom of thought and expression, shall investigate the case, and if it appears that such person has been guilty of no offense, then it shall be the duty of said committee to defend such person if he is unable to defend himself.

Now allow me one moment to state my reasons. I do not, I hav not, I never shall, accuse or suspect a solitary member of the Liberal League of the United States of being in favor of doing any act under heaven that he is not thoroughly convinced is right. We all claim freedom of speech, and it is the gem of the human soul. We all claim a right to express our honest thoughts. Did it ever occur to any Liberal that he wished to express any thought honestly, truly, and legally, he considered immoral? How does it happen that we hav any interest in what is known as immoral literature? I deny that the League has any interest in that kind of literature. Whenever we mention it, whenever we speak of it, we put ourselvs in a false position. What do we want? We want to see to it that the church party shall not smother the literature of Liberalism. We want to see to it that the viper of intellectual slavery shall not sting our cause. We want it so that every honest man, so that every honest woman, can express his or her honest thought upon any subject in the world. And the question, and the only question, as to whether they are amenable to the law, in my mind, is, Were they honest? was their effort to benefit mankind? Was that their intention? And no man, no woman, should be convicted of any offense that that man or woman did not intend to commit. Now then suppose some person is arrested, and it is claimed that a work written by him is immoral, is illegal. Then I say let our Committee of Defense examine that case, and if our enemies are seeking to trample out Freethought under the name of immorality, and under the cover and shield of our criminal law, then let us defend that man to the last dollar we hav. But we do not wish to put ourselvs in the position of general defenders of all the slush that may be written in this or any other country. You cannot afford to do it. You cannot afford to put into the mouth of theology a perpetual and continual slur. You cannot afford to do it. And this meeting is not the time to go into the question of what authority the United States may hav over the mails. It is a very wide question. It embraces many others. Has the government a right to say what shall go into the mails? Why, in one sense, assuredly. Certainly they hav a right to say that you shall not send a horse and wagon by mail. They hav a right to fix some limit; and the only thing that we want is that the literature of liberty, the literature of real Freethought, shall not be discriminated against. And we know now as well as if it had been perfectly and absolutely demonstrated, that the literature of Freethought will be absolutely pure. We know it. We call upon the Christian world to expunge obscenity from their book, and until that is expunged we demand that the laws against obscene literature shall be executed. And how can we, in the next resolution, say those laws ought all to be repealed? We cannot do that. I hav always been in favor of such an amendment of the law that by no trick, by no device, by no judicial discretion, an honest, high, pure-minded man should be subjected to punishment simply for giving his best and his honest thought. What more do we need? What more can we ask? I am as much opposed as my friend Mr. Wakeman can be to the assumption of the church that it is the guardian of morality. If our morality is to be guarded by that sentiment alone, then is the end come? The natural instinct of self-defense in all mankind and in all organized society is the fortress of the morality in mankind. The church itself was at one time the outgrowth of that same feeling, but now the feeling has outgrown the church. Now, then, we will hav a Committee of Defense. That Committee will examin every case. Suppose some man has been indicted, and suppose he is guilty. Suppose he has endeavored to soil the human mind. Suppose he has been willing to make money by pandering to the lowest passions in the human breast. What will that Committee do with him then? We will say, "Go on; let the law take its course." [Applause.] But if, upon reading his book, we find that he is all wrong, horribly wrong, idiotically wrong, but as up our minds that he was honest in his error, I will giv much as any other living man of my means to defend that man. And I believe you will all bear me witness when I say that I hav the cause of intellectual liberty at heart as much as I am capable of having anything at heart. And I know hundreds of others here just the same. I understand that. I understand their motiv. I believe it to be perfectly good, but I truly and honestly think they are mistaken. If we hav an interest in the business, I would fight for it. If our cause was assailed by law, then I say fight; and our cause is assailed, and I say fight. They will not allow me, in many states of this Union, to testify. I say fight until every one of those laws is repealed. They discriminate against a man simply because he is honest. Repeal such laws. The church, if it had the power to-day, would trample out every particle of free literature in this land. And when they endeavor to do that, I say fight. But there is a distinction wide as the Mississippi—yes, wider than the Atlantic, wider than all the oceans—between the literature of immorality and the literature of Freethought. One is a crawling, slimy lizard, and the other an angel with wings of light. Now, let us draw this distinction, let us understand ourselvs, and do not giv to the common enemy a word covered with mire, a word stained with cloacs, to throw at us. We thought we had settled that question a year ago. We buried it then, and I say let it rot.

Mr. Leland: We buried it then, but there has come up a new case—a new arrest here recently of an editor.

Col. Ingersoll: If a case has come up, we here are not well enough acquainted with it to say whether the man is innocent or guilty, and, if my resolution is adopted, the Committee of Defense will examin that case. And that Committee, having the facts before it, will do what in their judgment is right; but if we commit ourselvs to the case before we understand it, it may turn out that the man is guilty, and then the whole world will say we were in favor of upholding immorality.

The President: I would remind my friend that if there is anybody guilty it is a woman, and such is the iniquity and idiocy of this law that under it you can get hold and punish perfectly innocent persons.

Mr. Leland: I hav written a report of that case, which I will submit to the Convention.

Col. Ingersoll: I am willing to help defend that case.

This question is of great importance. It is the most important one we hav here. I hav fought this question; I am ever going to, and I will not allow anybody to put a stain upon me. This question must be understood if it takes all summer. Here is a case in point. Some lady has written a work which, I am informed, is a good work, and that has nothing wrong about it. Her opinions may be foolish or wise. Let this Committee examin that case. If they find that she is a good woman, that she had good intentions, no matter how terrible the work may be, if her intentions are good, she has committed no crime. I want the honest thought. I think I hav always been in favor of it. But we havn't the time to go into all these questions.

Then comes the question for this house to decide in a moment whether these cases should hav been tried in the state or federal court. I want it understood that I hav confidence in the federal courts of the nation. There may be some bad judges, there may be some idiotic jurors. I think there was in that case [of Mr. Bennett]. But the Committee of Defense, if I understand it, supplied means for the defense of that man. They did, but are we ready now to decide in a moment what courts shall hav jurisdiction? Are we ready to say that the federal courts shall be denied jurisdiction in any case arising about the mails? Suppose somebody robs the mail. Before whom shall we try the robber? Try him before a federal judge? Why? Because he has violated a federal law. We hav not any time for such an investigation as this. What we want to do is to defend free speech everywhere. What we want to do is to defend the expression of thought in papers, in pamphlets, in books. What we want to do is to see to it that these books, papers, and pamphlets are on an equality with all other books, papers, and pamphlets in the United States mails. And then the next step we want to take, if any man is indicted under the pretense that he is publishing immoral books, is to hav our Committee of Defense well examin the case; and if we believe the man to be innocent we will help defend him if he is unable to defend himself; and if we find that the law is wrong in that particular, we will go for the amendment of that law. I beg of you to hav some sense in this matter. We must hav it. If we don't, upon that rock we will split—upon that rock we will again divide. Let us not do it. The cause of intellectual liberty is the highest to the human mind. Let us stand by it, and we can help all these people by this resolution. We can do justice everywhere with it, while if we agree to the fifth and sixth resolutions that hav been offered I say we lay ourselvs open to the charge, and it will be hurled against us, no matter how unjustly, that we are in favor of widespread immorality.

Mr. Clarke: We are not afraid of it.

Col. Ingersoll: You may say we are not afraid. I am not afraid. He only is a fool who rushes into unnecessary danger.

Mr. Clarke: What are you talking about anyway?

Col. Ingersoll: I am talking with endeavor to put a little sense into such men as you. [Applause and laughter.] Your very question shows that it was necessary that I should talk. [Applause] And now I move that my resolution be adopted.

Mr. Wakeman moved that it be added to that portion of the sixth resolution which recommended the constitution of the Committee of Defense.

Col. Ingersoll: I cannot agree to the sixth resolution. I think nearly every word of it is wrong in principle. I think it binds us to a course of action that we will not be willing to follow; and my resolution covers every possible case. My resolution binds us to defend every honest man in the exercise of his right. I can't be bound to say that the government hasn't control of its morals—that we cannot trust the federal courts—that, under any circumstances, at any time, I am bound to defend, either by word or money, any man who violates the laws of this country.

Mr. Wakeman: We do not say that.

Col. Ingersoll: I beg of you, I beseech you, not to pass the sixth resolution. If you do I wouldn't giv that [snapping his fingers] for the platform. A part of the Comstock law authorizes the vilest possible trick. We are all opposed to that.

Mr. Leland: What is the question?

Col. Ingersoll: Don't let us be silly. Don't let us say we are opposed to what we are not opposed to. If any man here is not opposed to putting down the vilest of all possible trash he ought to go home. We are opposed to only a part of the law—opposed to it whenever they endeavor to trample Freethought under foot in the name of immorality. [Applause.]

Mr. Wakeman: You hav heard Col. Ingersoll at great length without regard to the ten minute rule. Now let me say a few words.

First, We do not oppose the punishment of obscenity. There is no issue between the Colonel and me or you about that. We differ only as to the ways and means by which it should be done. We are opposed to the course of the churches in practically taking this kind of offenses out of the ordinary courts and officers of the law and by trick and device putting them in the hands of church committees for punishment through agents for whom a legal or legislativ sanction has been obtained. We are going to hit this church impudence, and will, and the Colonel should let us alone until he understands us.

Col. Ingersoll: I am in that hitting business myself. [Laughter.] We are made to say in the first place in these resolutions that we are a little down on the federal courts—that we do not want to trust the United States courts. Now we turn right around and say we are opposed to the state societies. Now, if you are also opposed to what the state societies do, that covers pretty nearly the whole ground. Don't it? [Applause.]

Mr. Wakeman: No; Col. Ingersoll don't understand us. We are willing enough to trust the states, their laws, courts, and officers, to punish these offenses, just as they punish murder and other crimes and offenses. But we are not willing that special Comstock societies should be incorporated in the several states under church influences to take charge and investigate the punishment of any class of offenses. This is a plain case of the union of church and state in the most dangerous and offensiv form. [Applause.] It is these state Comstock societies and their doings that we oppose in the states. We say that those offenses should be punished by secular laws administered and enforced by officers and judges responsible to the people only, just as they were punished for one hundred years before this Comstock legislation was begun in either the states or the general government. Let us hav the regular officers, courts, and juries of the country. We are ready, and we guarantee in the fifth resolution to help the states and the common law officers to punish these offenses effectivly. I hav as much at stake in this matter as Col. Ingersoll. I will do all I can to make the common and state laws effectiv against these offenses as I would against murder or any crime. But if, after all possible effort, it cannot be done (which is ridiculous to suppose), I would not hand this delicate matter over to the churches or their minions. Let us rather hav a vigilance committee; anything rather than to abdicate the secular government and laws in favor of a church inquisition with such men as Comstock at its head in order that they may be used ostensibly for a good purpose, but really that they may hold it as a hetchel over the Liberal thought of the country for all time. [Applause.]

Col. Ingersoll: I don't know how any laws against vice can be held as a hetchel over us.

Mr. Wakeman: They can, because they put in the hands of the churches the power of instigating and controling these prosecutions instead of the common officers of the law, and because the instigation of such proceedings is practically ruin and even death to the victim. The churches can use this instrument to bring down a Liberal editor whenever they wish, and they do it. It is simply astonishing to me that Col. Ingersoll should stand here and ask us to submit to it. [Applause.] It is as a threat to Liberal thought; and the churches are having these Comstock societies incorporated as fast as possible in the several states from Massachusetts to Iowa. They are all wrong, against the common law and the spirit of the institutions of our country. We are not equal before the laws as long as we hav a semi-clerical aristocracy to punish whom they please and let alone whom they please. We are equal when the common law is impartially executed by secular officers. Consider a moment how effectiv in punishment and yet how careful of liberty the common law is. If a person injures person or property he may be arrested at once and held to bail. If he has committed such an offense and is liable to escape he may be arrested upon warrant obtained upon affidavit before a magistrate. But in all other cases the charge against any one must be presented in the first instance before a grand jury who are sworn to secrecy, and if they find it unnecessary to make an accusation by indictment the matter drops and no injury to the accused is done, and the innocent is thus wisely protected. If they find a true bill the trial is had before a petit or trial jury of the neighborhood who are the equals of the accused, and there is no great church influence to make a horror and a prejudice through the religious and secular press which generally overwhelms both court and jury.

The experience of ages has proved this to be the wise, safe, effectiv, and only true way of punishing crimes and offenses of all kinds. In case of libels, obscene or other, the jury should be the judges of the law and the fact and of the definition of obscenity. For there can be no absolute definition of such a relativ word. The jury must decide what it is and apply it in and according to the nature and necessities of each case. A cast-iron definition like that of Judge Benedict will work unspeakable hardship, wrong, and mischief.

A return to this American state secular administration of the law is called for in the fifth and sixth resolutions. It is sound, just, effectiv, and healthy—in accordance with the immemorial usage of our ancestors and the constitution of every state and of the United States. The question is, Shall we substitute a Comstock theocracy in the place of it? Your Committee on Resolutions say they will not consent to do it. [Applause]

Now let us pass to the second part of the 6th resolution, which refers to this Comstock legislation in the United States or general government. These resolutions are drawn so as to carry their reasons with them, so that a child can understand them if he reads them carefully and honestly. This was done so that if any one chooses to misrepresent us and say that we were in favor of these offenses instead of saying that we were against Comstockism, then these resolutions would tell him and the world that he is a liar and a slanderer, and that the truth is not in him.

Now, notwithstanding all this care, my learned friend Colonel Ingersoll seems to be in a sad state of confusion. There is no question but that the mails are to be run by the general government—but what for? I answer, For postal purposes only, and not as a censorship of the press or of morals or of politics. My friend asks, Can't the federal government do what it pleases with its own post-offices? I answer, No. They and the whole government belong to the people under the Constitution. He asks, Can't they send a horse and carriage by mail if they choose? I answer, They cannot, because it is impractical, inconvenient. But they cannot refuse to send Paine's "Age of Reason," because that would be unconstitutional, unequal, unpostal, and contrary to the spirit of our republican democratic government. [Applause.] Just as soon as you admit of postal discriminations as to the meaning of what is mailed, your liberties are lost. [Applause.] There is no power granted by the Constitution to the federal government which allows its officers to do what they please with the post-office without regard to the liberty and equality of the people or the freedom of the press. Our friend speaks as though the federal government owned the post-offices as private property—as theirs. He has let some bad law and bad politics get hold of him. There is no safety for Liberals and a free press under such views as he has expressed. The resolutions name but a few of the editors who hav been stricken down under his version of the Constitution. Indeed who is safe? Is Mr. Mendum or Mr. Underwood? Now here in the West the United States courts hav Mr. Barter in charge, and who next? [Applause.] There was much sense in that speech of Mr. Grover this morning about the return of our Republican leaders to the centralizing traditions of Hamilton and the old Federalists in regard to what they call the Nation. They want to make the federal government the supervisor and censor of the morals and literature of the people through its post-office. We must not follow our friend there. We must remember the lessons of Thomas Jefferson and Thomas Paine. The general government is to be made no stronger than the Constitution made it, and the people are to be made self-reliant in executing their laws, so as not to need its censorship or espionage either in the mails or out. Politicians talk as though the people and states were merely the appendages of the federal government, and everything should be committed to it. That is a dangerous tendency. [Applause.] Let me take an example not affected by the disgusting subject of obscenity:

There was a few weeks ago a "Dr." Buchanan charged with running a bogus medical diploma college at Philadelphia. Now who is in favor of bogus diplomas? Not I nor you, not a bit more than we are in favor of obscenity or lotteries or financial frauds, but I believe that the way in which he was broken up was worse than his diplomas and will in the end do more harm. Was there not iron enough in the great state of Pennsylvania to make a pair of tongs large enough to put this wretch into the Delaware? It seems not, for that great state had to abdicate its criminal laws in favor of the United States. Even they had to proceed indirectly, by authorizing through these U. S. Comstock postal laws, an "agent" of one of these church societies to decoy the "Dr." to send a bogus diploma through the United States mail in Philadelphia, and then he was arrested, not for his real offense, but for a "misuse of the United States post-office," and held to bail for trial in the sum of $10,000, by a United States commissioner.

Was there ever anything more absurd or ridiculous? or in its final results as a precedent were dangerous? [Applause] Now let them howl that I am in favor of bogus diplomas, because I would hav had this man detected and punished squarely and honorably for his real offense by the state in which he lived and by its secular law detectivs, courts, and juries. We all want him punished if guilty, but there are some ways of punishing an offense far worse than the offense itself, and this church trick of extending unlimited federal jurisdiction over common law offenses is plainly one of them. [Applause.]

Then again we are opposed to the sending of decoy letters. This must necessarily be resorted to by these United States church agents in order to get this federal jurisdiction. That should not be the process of the law in any free and decent country. It makes the accused commit the offense and then furnish evidence against himself. It is in every way debasing. It makes us feel, and we are justified in feeling, as I hav proved in late numbers of THE TRUTH SEEKER, that there is no safety in the United States mails. We demand laws that shall make the mails inviolable, even against the postal officials and the churches. There is no such thing as freedom of speech or of the press until that is done. It is time to look out for the safety of our press. That one woman who sits among us and whose publisher is in jail under the ban of these clerical bloodhounds appeals to us with a much higher eloquence than ever fell from the lips of our gifted friend. [Applause.] I hav shown that the laws now on the statute book with the Supreme Court interpretation of them leave it to special agents and officials of the post-office to open and discriminate as to the meaning of mailed matter and to refuse to forward it upon their own judgment and inspection if contrary to this legislation, and thus to confiscate it and destroy it without any knowledge of the party sending it.

Such legislation was never thought nor dreamed of as possible or constitutional under our government until this theological coterie recently introduced it into the laws of the states and the Union. We shall never be men until we take those laws out, and return to the equality of the common secular law. We must say to the churches, This sort of trickery, inequality, and espionage—this impudence of yours—must stop now and forever, in this secular republic. [Applause.]

Now turn to another point. By this post-office trick the accused is thrown into the United States courts. Is that safe or right? It is a cheap thing for lawyers to compliment the federal judiciary. Many of them hav been and are doubtless good, learned, and honorable men, but their irresponsible power is the anomaly in our republic. He alone never has need to think of the people. His office and pay are for life. He cannot be impeached except by a process that can't be successfully gone through with once in a century. Need we wonder that, as the fact is, the greatest outrages hav been perpetrated by such judges?

Then the juries in those courts are the minions of its marshal and clerks selected from a large extent of territory, in no sense the peers nor of the vicinage of the accused. Neither he, his family, nor condition nor motivs are known to them. He is a mere victim, a sacrifice. For under such circumstances the church influences are simply overwhelming. The jury not being judges of the law or of the definition hav nothing to do but to record the verdict practically made for them. That is the general result in the federal courts. Comstock justly boasts that he never is defeated in those courts, and why should he be?

Need I go further? Need I say that such irresponsible societies and agents hav unlimted opportunities for blackmail and terrorism, and they practice them both?

Now, if you take Col. Ingersoll's proposition as a substitute instead of an amendment, as I offer it, what do you do? You are made to approve of Comstockism from root to branch. All of these Comstock societies, this abandonment of the common secular law and the states, all of the trickery jurisdiction of the federal courts, all of this censorship, decoy, and espionage, in short, this whole enormity becomes yours! You are asked to father it all, and simply ask the position of becoming a critic over it, when it may take up an innocent case.

I don't want to compete with Comstock as a judge or censor. I want him to return that business to the officers, courts, and juries, those to whom it legally and constitutionally belongs. I say to him, Your legislation is wrong in principle. Go back to the common law and its secular administration by officers of the people. Let them pull up the offender, and if he is found guilty by a jury let him be punished; let him go to hell where he belongs.

A lady: What right has a Liberal to send any one to hell?

Mr. Wakeman: Let him go to the bad—the eternal bowwows if you prefer.

What I mean is that if a person is properly convicted of these offenses by the secular law and its jury I am the last one to object. They are the final umpire as to such offenses in all popular government. But I will not vote to hav this League indorse Comstock and his legislation and influence and methods, and then set up a committee of defense simply to hold him in check. I don't propose to admit church government in criminal affairs and then see if we can't limit it to punishing the guilty only. I insist upon rooting out the upas tree root and branch. [Applause] The effect of Col. Ingersoll's substitute is to make us a Comstock society. I don't say that he means it, but he does it effectually. Do not vote for his substitute unless you want to sustain Comstock, his churches, and their dictation, as your accuser and censor instead of the law of the land. [Applause.] This is not a question of eloquence or personal influence or admiration. It is a question of statesmanship, of duty, and of right. The consequences may reach far into the future. The friends of liberty will stand firm. [Applause.]

Col. Ingersoll: You know as well as I that there are certain books not fit to go through the mails—books and pictures not fit to be delivered.

Mr. Wakeman: That is so.

Col. Ingersoll: There is not a man here but what is in favor when those books and pictures come into the control of the United States of burning them up when they are manifestly obscene. You don't want any grand jury there.

Mr. Wakeman: Yes, we do.

Col. Ingersoll: No, we don't. When they are manifestly obscene burn them up.

A delegate: Who is to be judge of that?

Col. Ingersoll: There are books that nobody differs about. There are certain things about which we can use discretion. If that discretion is abused, a man has his remedy. We stand for the free thought of this country. We stand for the progressiv spirit of the United States. We can't afford to say that all these laws should be repealed. If we had time to investigate them we could say in what they should be amended. Don't tie us to this nonsense—to the idea that we hav an interest in immoral literature. Let us remember that Mr. Wakeman is sore. He had a case before the federal courts, and he imagins, having lost that case, you cannot depend on them. I hav lost hundreds of cases. I hav as much confidence in the federal courts as in the state courts. I am not to be a party to throwing a slur upon the federal judiciary. All we want is fair play. We want the same chance for our doctrins that others hav for theirs. And how this infernal question of obscenity ever got into the Liberal League I could never understand. If an innocent man is convicted of larceny should we repeal all the laws on the subject? I don't pretend to be better than other people. It is easy to talk right—so easy to be right that I never care to hav the luxury of being wrong. I am advocating something that we can stand upon. I do not misunderstand Mr. Wakeman's motivs. I believe they are perfectly good—that he is thoroughly honest. Why not just say we will stand by freedom of thought and its expression? Why not say that we are in favor of amending any law that is wrong? But do not make the wholesale statement that all these laws ought to be repealed. They ought not to be repealed. Some of them are good. The law against sending instruments of vice in the mails is good, as is the law against sending obscene books and pictures, and the law against letting ignorant hyenas prey upon sick people, and the law which prevents the getters-up of bogus lotteries sending their letters through the mail.

Mr. Green moved to lay the substitute on the table.

Parker Pillsbury moved to adjourn until 8 o'clock, and the motion prevailed.

---

EVENING SESSION.

The evening's session opened with singing. After this introduction Mr. Green got up and made a plea for toleration and harmony, and in favor of laying on the table the firebrand resolutions which had disturbed the peace of the afternoon's session—those in relation to the Comstock business, together with the amendments thereto. The motion to table was lost by a vote of 58 to 25. Col. Ingersoll then withdrew his amendment, offered at the afternoon session, and moved to lay on the table resolution No. 6. On that resolution he called for the yeas and nays.

"I am going to do what I can to keep this League from destroying itself," said Col. Ingersoll. "We hav 1,050 votes, and are endeavoring here to-night with 25 yeas and 58 nays to saddle upon 1,050 votes a doctrin that may be of infinit importance."

The motion to lay on the table was lost by a vote of 62 to 26. Many delegates charged Col. Ingersoll with "filibustering."

"I am not filibustering," said Col. Ingersoll, "and I now move to strike out of resolution 6 the words, 'We therefore urge the repeal of the present United States postal laws,' and insert therein, 'that we appoint a committee of five to examin said laws and report to a future Congress wherein they should be amended so that perfect freedom of the press and of conscience shall not be endangered.' And on that motion I call the yeas and nays."

But the question was a debatable one, and the discussion which followed was lively. Mrs. Dr. Severance, of Milwaukee, had something to say against filibustering and in favor of voting on the resolution as it stood.

W. B. Jarvis, of Chicago, denounced the movement to flood the mails with the stuff which the vilest scoundrels were writing and printing. He had daughters, and objected to anybody sending them any of this sort of stuff.

George Lynn, of Rockford, wasn't afraid of being contaminated by an association with a bad man or a bad woman, and informed the Convention that his girls were equally strong minded.

Mrs Colman told the Convention that if Mr. Jarvis would take care of his sons, his daughters would take care of themselvs. The thing to do was to let the girls read the scientific literature about themselvs — obscene, as some called it—that they might take care of themselvs.

Prof. Rawson said the church couldn't afford to destroy obscene literature. It reaped a harvest out of it. The fact was that the Comstock laws, instead of destroying this class of literature, were used as a means of oppression against Freethinkers.

The Rev. Mr. Burnham, of Michigan, asked the very practical question what difference it would make to gods or devils whether the resolution was adopted or not, and intimated that it would be good sense to unite on essentials and let the hobbies go.

Mrs. Lake wanted to know what all this talk about separation of church and state amounted to unless they took a decided stand against the church and its favorit Comstock laws. It was well enough to meet and talk year after year, but it was time to do something toward actually separating church and state.

Mr. Hall, of St. John, Ill., didn't care what the newspapers or anybody else said about him. He was opposed to Comstock and Comstock's laws, the church, and about everything else, including the Republican party.

W. Gorsuch, of Baltimore, wanted anything and everything sent through the mails, no matter how vile and polluted it might be, and was everlastingly opposed to the Comstock laws because they were unjust, and were used as engines of opposition against such good and pure men as D M. Bennett.

Mr. McCracken, of Michigan, objected to that portion of the resolutions placing the League on the defensiv, and to the use of the word "obscene." The organization was not the advocate of immorality and obscenity, but the charge that it was could not be removed by resolution. It could only be removed by correct lives on the part of the Liberals. In conclusion, Mr. McCracken offered the following substitute for the sixth resolution:

Resolved, That we denounce all laws which, under the pretext of conserving the public morals, are placed as weapons in the hands of superstition, to be wielded by modern Protestant Jesuit inquisitors, their spies, and informers, for the suppression of Freethought; and that, as regards the so-called Comstock postal laws, while a large majority of the Liberals of the country believe them to be in conflict with the spirit of the federal Constitution, yet, waving that question for the time being, we demand that they be so modified as to remove all ambiguity as to their meaning, and that their execution be surrounded by such checks and guards as will protect citizens in their right of freely publishing their opinions and circulating them through the mails.

Parker Pillsbury objected to Col. Ingersoll's presence on the platform during the previous voting and to his alleged filibustering motions.

Col. Ingersoll rose and said, I wish to say one word in defense of my motion. I moved to strike out that part of the resolution No. 6 which calls for the repeal of the postal laws, and I wish to giv my reasons.

I am not in favor of the repeal of those laws. I hav never been, and I never expect to be. But I do wish that every law providing for the punishment of a criminal offense should distinctly define the offense. That is the objection to this law, that it does not define the offense, so that an American citizen can readily know when he is about to violate it, and consequently the law ought in all probability to be modified in that regard. I am in favor of every law defining with perfect distinctness the offense to be punished, but I cannot, I hav the cause of Freethought too much at heart, to say by wholesale these laws should be repealed. Neither will I consent to the repeal simply because the church is in favor of those laws. In so far as the church agrees with me, I congratulate the church. In so far as superstition is willing to help me, good! I am willing to accept it. I believe, also, that this League is upon a secular basis, and there should be nothing in our platform that would prevent any Christian from acting with us. What is our platform? And we ought to leave it as it is. It needs no amendment. Our platform is for a secular government. Is it improper in a secular government to endeavor to prevent the spread of obscene literature? It is the business of a secular government to do it, but if that government attempts to stamp out Freethought in the name of obscenity, it is then for the friends of Freethought to call for a definition of the word, and such a definition as will allow Freethought to go everywhere through all the mails of the United States. We are also in favor of secular schools. Good. We are in favor of doing away with every law that discriminates against a man on account of his belief. Good. We are in favor of universal education. Good. We are in favor of the taxation of church property. Good—because the experience of the world shows that where you allow superstition to own property without taxing it, it will absorb the net profits. Is it time now that we should throw into the scale, against all those splendid purposes, an effort to repeal some postal laws against obscenity? As well might we turn the League into an engine to do away with all laws against the sale of stale eggs. What hav we to do with those things? Is it possible that Freethought can be charged with being obscene? Is it possible that, if the charge is made, it can be substantiated? Can you not attack any superstition in the world in perfectly pure language? Can you not attack anything you please in perfectly pure language? And where a man intends right, no law should find him guilty; and if the law is weak in that respect, let it be modified. But I say to you that I cannot go with any body of men who demand the unconditional repeal of these laws. [Cheers.] I believe in liberty as much as any man who breathes. I will do as much, according to my ability, as any other man to make this an absolutely free and secular government. I will do as much as any other man of my strength and of my intellectual power to giv every human being every right that I claim for myself. But this obscene law business is a stumbling block. Had it not been for this, instead of the few people voting here—less than one hundred—we would hav had a Congress numbered by thousands. Had it not been for this business, the Liberal League of the United States would to-night hold in its hand the political destiny of the United States. Instead of that, we hav thrown away our power upon a question in which we are not interested. Instead of that, we hav wasted our resources and our brain for the repeal of a law that we don't want repealed. If we want anything, we simply want a modification. Now, then, don't stain this cause by such a course. And don't understand that I am pretending, or am insinuating, that any one here is in favor of obscene literature. It is a question, not of principle, but of means, and I beg pardon of this Convention if I hav done anything so horrible as has been described by Mr. Pillsbury. I regret it if I hav ever endeavored to trample upon the rights of this Convention.

There is one thing I hav not done—I hav not endeavored to cast five votes when I didn't hav a solitary vote. Let us be fair; let us be fair. I hav simply given my vote. I wish to trample upon the rights of no one; and when Mr. Pillsbury gave those votes he supposed he had a right to giv them; and if he had a right, the votes would hav been counted. I attribute nothing wrong to him, but I say this: I hav the right to make a motion in this Congress. I hav the right to argue that motion, but I hav no more rights than any other member, and I claim none. But I want to say to you—and I want you to know it and feel it—that I want to act with every Liberal man and woman in this world. I want you to know it and feel it that I want to do everything I can to get every one of these statutes off our books that discriminates against a man because of his religious belief, that I am in favor of a secular government, and of all these rights. But I cannot, and I will not, operate with any organization that asks for the unconditional repeal of those laws. I will stand alone, and I hav stood alone. I can tell my thoughts to my countrymen, and I shall do it, and whatever position you take, whether I am with you or not, you will find me battling everywhere for the absolute freedom of the human mind. You will find me battling everywhere to make this world better and grander; and whatever my personal conduct may be, I shall endeavor to keep my theories right. I beg of you, I implore you, do not pass the resolution No. 6. It is not for our interest; it will do us no good. It will lose us hosts of honest, splendid friends. Do not do it; it will be a mistake; and the only reason I offered the motion was to giv the members time to think this over. I am not pretending to know more than other people. I am perfectly willing to say that in many things I know less. But upon this subject I want you to think, no matter whether you are afraid of your sons, your daughters, your wives, or your husbands. That isn't it. I don't want the splendid prospects of this League put in jeopardy upon such an issue as this. I hav no more to say. But if that resolution is passed, all I hav to say is that, while I shall be for liberty everywhere, I cannot act with this organization, and I will not.

Mr. Wakeman: In a few minutes this discussion must close, for we cannot hav this house after midnight. Most of Col. Ingersoll's objections hav been ably answered by the friends who hav spoken on the amendments which hav been voted down.

His last speech has given us in substance a confusion and two threats. I call you to witness that not one of the arguments for the resolutions has been answered. The confusion, which he persists in, is that we want all laws against improper literature, lotteries, and frauds repealed. That is not so. Our resolution favors the repeal of Comstock legislation only. There are laws in every state on these subjects which, in the fifth resolution, we expressly guarantee to amend if necessary and to enforce effectivly. Those laws we do not ask to repeal nor wish to repeal. They hav nothing to do with this Comstock legislation. That legislation only it is which brings the church into the district-attorney's offices of the states as prosecutor, and into the post-office as a decoy and censor, and givs the United States courts jurisdiction over common-law offenses, in committing which it is claimed that the post-office has been "misused."

We are opposed only to these new fangled Comstock notions, and we mean to hav them checked and finally removed; but we are not opposed to proper and efficient laws on all these subjects.

If the Colonel cannot stand with us in our opposition to Comstockism, we must stand alone. He says we cannot afford to hav the League heralded as the champion of obscenity, though he admits the charge would be false. He cannot afford to hav his name smirched, even falsely, and so he must withdraw. But these charges are false, and he admits them to be false. How idle, then, are his final arguments, which amount to this: The churches and newspapers will abuse us, and he must withdraw?

Threats are the poorest arguments possible. He has mistaken the spirit of this League and the people before him. Certainly the storm of abuse and falsehood will come, and all the stronger if he withdraws, for that will be a pretext that will be used to justify an avalanche of obloquy. We know it all; but will that change one of your votes? It would be an insult to suppose so. Sunshine Liberals are of little use in this world. You are evidently not of them.

Let the storm rage; we will stand firm and look aloft! We can do no other way. We know that the sun of truth will not be extinguished by the clouds. Its day will come.

As to his withdrawal, it will be unfortunate to him, perhaps, to us certainly. But this question immeasurably transcends all personal interests and affections. Though we love this man as our brother, shall we hesitate a moment on this account? Would he respect us if we did? or, what is worse, could we ever after respect ourselvs? I am sorry he has presented the issue in this way. Ingersoll is great, but liberty, truth, and duty are greater. He has placed himself against fearful odds. We can stand it if he can.

But can he really withdraw from us? He agrees with us as to everything except our opposition to Comstockism. That is the chasm between us. But what can he do if he withdraws to the other side of that murky river? He can only run over there on a line parallel with us and having the same destination. But in doing it he and not we will be out in the dark and the cold. He will hav to call to us to know what of the night, and must regard us as allies, or else he must wander off into the bogs of theology. No; he will find us his truest and best friends after all. The eternal laws of truth and liberty bind us together. They are the basis of a union between us even he can never destroy. "Honor bright" is his motto and should be ours. I could wish that it had admonished him not to burden or influence us with this threat or announcement of withdrawal in this crisis. Had he quietly folded his tent and stolen away like the Arabs after the vote he would hav saved many of us a pang of personal grief, and left the result the same. Yet this laying aside of our dearest ties in devotion to the liberty that has called us together will unite, inspire, and raise us higher than ever. It is an ennobling consecration to sacrifice for the right. Let us, then, fearlessly make the risk of our good name and our friendship if need be—thankful that liberty, so often served by blood, demands no more terrible sacrifice from us.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask for the question upon the adoption of the report.

Mr. Green also threatened his resignation in case the resolution was adopted. The threat was greeted with derision and suppressed cries of "Good riddance" from the Iowa branch.

Mr. J. P. Mendum, of Boston, held that the Infidels had made their name respectable—more so than it was to be called a Republican, a Democrat, or a church-member. They were the young, Liberal America, and they would, when they got into power, ameliorate the legislation of the country. They were not licentious, as had been charged upon them, and they would not stoop their backs to receive the burden which the churches were trying to buckle upon them. The old Abolition party had been opposed as Atheists, but they stood up manfully against it, and the church to-day was reaping the benefit of their manfulness. And now they would not back down on account of anything which Comstock, backed by all the churches, chose to say against them.

The amendments of Mr. McCracken and Col. Ingersoll were lost, and the resolutions as reported by the Committee adopted almost unanimously.

(Continued on page 640.)

Jael and Sisera.

BY ALHAZA.

Worn and weary, loveliest maiden,
Almoned-eyed, sweet, let me in,
That with gold thy tent doth glimmer,
Burning jewels flash within."

Enter; now command thy servant,
I will heed thy lightest wish;
Here are grapes and choicest fatling,
Butter in a lordly dish.

Fragrant are thy robes with spices,
Like the night flowers, scent divine,
Take my head upon thy bosom,
Lull me with delicious wine.

Glorious forms seem hovering round me,
While this precious draught I sip;
Serpent woman, thou hast drugged it,
Let me die upon thy lip.

Now I sink and fall from heaven,
While the iron enters deep;
Smiling serpent, still caress me,
Dark Jehovah, bring me sleep.

Revelations of Antichrist

CONCERNING

Christ and Christianity.

"ANTICHRIST" proves from history that James Kepha (Cephas, alias Peter), and Paul, all lived before the Christian era, and so did Jesus Christ—indeed, many Christs and many by the name of Jesus.

The book contains 446 pages, with a full Index and tableof contents. Price, $2.00.

A New and Important Work, entitled

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.

BY F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.,
Graduate of the Hygeio-Therapeutic College and the New York Phrenological Institute.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. As a chart it will be found fuller and more complete than any other work of its size on this subject. It contains in addition to the "Table of Developments," one of "Adaptation to Different Pursuits," and one of "Conjugal Adaptation." These tables being perfectly easy to understand, are calculated to render the work at once both interesting and useful. The work contains also full and clear descriptions of the temperaments, the nutritive functions, health, etc., and all the faculties and powers of the mind in seven different degrees of development, along with excellent rules for health and self-improvement. Its explanation of the principles of phrenology, etc., and its other important remarks will be found well adapted to the needs of students and others who may desire to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology with as little outlay of time and labor as possible. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

LIST OF PHOTOGRAPHS

For Sale at The Truth Seeker Office.

| | |
|---|---|
| Thomas Paine. | F. E. Abbot, |
| Paine's Bust. | Frothingham, |
| Paine's Monument. | Wendell Phillips, |
| Voltaire. | Emerson, |
| Rousseau. | Garrison, |
| Humboldt. | Henry Bergh, |
| Goethe, | Peter Cooper, |
| Schiller. | D. R. Burt, |
| Aug. Comte. | S. P. Andrews, |
| Heine. | Walt Whitman. |
| Alex. Pope. | Froude. |
| John Milton. | Max Muller. |
| Goldsmith. | Warren Chase. |
| Shelley. | Jas. Parton. |
| Byron. | Wm. Denton. |
| Burns. | Dr. Slade. |
| Washington. | A. J. Davis. |
| Franklin. | Foster. |
| Jefferson. | J. M. Peebles, |
| John Adams. | Frances Wright. |
| J. Q. Adams. | E. V. Wilson. |
| Madison. | G. L. Henderson. |
| Jackson. | Prof. Fiske. |
| Lincoln. | Fred Douglas. |
| Lincoln's Monument. | N. P. Banks. |
| Gerrit Smith. | P. V. Nasby. |
| Henry C. Wright. | Beecher. |
| J. S. Mill. | Tilton. |
| Sumner. | Moulton. |
| Edgar A. Poe. | G. W. Curtis. |
| Greeley. | Th. Nast. |
| Castellar. | J. G. Bennett. |
| Tennyson. | Chas. A. Dana. |
| Darwin | Phoebe Carey. |
| Tyndall. | Alice Carey. |
| H. Spencer. | Elizabeth C. Stanton. |
| Huxley. | Susan B. Anthony. |
| Proctor. | Lucy Stone. |
| Draper. | Julia Ward Howe. |
| Bradlaugh. | Chas. Cheney. |
| Holyoake. | Paulina Davis. |
| Ingersoll. | Mary F. Davis. |
| Underwood. | Emma H. Britten |
| Mendum. | Lizzie Fowler. |
| Seaver. | Mrs. Slenker. |
| L. Colby. | Susan H. Wixon. |
| Dr. Hare. | D. M. Bennett. |
| Judge J. W. Edwards. | W. S. Bell. |
| Lizzie Doten. | J. C. Bundy. |
| Mrs. J. Conant. | S. S. Jones. |
| Dr. Mary E. Walker (full figure). | Asa K. Butts, |
| | W. F. Jamieson. |
| Geo. Francis Train. | Kersey Graves. |
| H. L. Green. | |

Was Christ a God?

Conclusions Drawn from Apostolic Writings.

BY F. MENSIGA.

CONTENTS.—Questionable Dogmas. Superstition and Religion, the Appearance of Christ, the Life of Christ, Comments and Explanations of Jude, James, John, Peter, Paul (all his epistles), Acts, the Four Gospels, Revelations, a Summary, Erroneous Theories of Deity, Heaven, Devil, Hell, the Author's Intuitions, Evolution of Life. A work of strength and merit.

An octavo volume of 253 pages. Price, $1.50. Sold at this office.

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

SUPERSTITION;

THE RELIGION OF

"Believe or be Damned."

OPEN LETTER TO THE

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL BOARD.

BY

M. BABCOCK.

This book contains an inspired PHOTOGRAPH of the GOD that's being worshiped at the expense of the district in our public schools; the God that "overshadowed" Mary; the God that's wanted in the Constitution; the gentleman that owns some three billion dollars' worth of untaxed church property; the "so-help-me" God that makes a lie the truth in court; the God that governors besought to stop the yellow fever, which he didn't do. The picture is worth the price of the book. Price, 25 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, New York.

LADIES!!

"SALEM, OR., July 17, 1880.

"S. H. PRESTON, Dear Sir: Please send me by express, C. O. D., to Portland, Or., $100.00 (one hundred dollars) worth of that "Comstock" Syringe. I mean business.

"DR. MARY SOLANDER."

Only sixteen had been sold when

COMSTOCK

set out to suppress it. Now orders come as above. Grand jurymen buy it for their wives. It is SIMPLE, SAFE, INFALLIBLY RELIABLE, necessary to HEALTH and personal purity, and is pronounced by patients and physicians to be the greatest

GODSEND TO THE SEX

gotten up in this generation. Sent securely boxed, with private instructions for special use. Confidential terms to agents. Price $5.00; improved, $10.00. Address SAM. H. PRESTON, t132 209 West 34th st., New York.

"SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES"

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This volume is printed on toned paper, in clear, bold type, and handsomely bound in muslin, containing 275 pages, 12mo. Price, $1.25.

This book contains the principal points that Mr. Ingersoll has made against the Pentateuch in all his lectures on that subject. The pamphlets that hav been surreptitiously issued are incorrect, filled with mistakes, and consist of only about fourteen or fifteen pages, while there are two hundred and seventy-five pages in the book just issued. The book is unanswerable in its facts and logic, inimitable in its style, and filled with wit, satire, eloquence, and pathos.

Busts of R. G. Ingersoll,

By the celebrated sculptor, CLARK MILLS.

Cabinet size, price $2.50.

Small Busts, on Pedestal (mantel ornament), price $1.25. Neatly packed and boxed ready for shipment. Every admirer of this great Apostle of Liberty should hav at least one.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll.

By SARONY, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

| | |
|---|---|
| Imperial or large size . . . . | 40 cents |
| Photo or card size . . . . | 20 " |
| Life-size Lithograph, 21x27 . . . | 50 " |

Postage paid.

D. M. BENNETT.
141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Stinson&Co. Portland, Me

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

$72 A WEEK, $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. True&Co., Augusta, Me.

THE

Anonymous Hypothesis OF Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by
D. M. BENNETT. 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

D. M. BENNETT. Publisher. 141 Eighth St., N.Y

An Occult Mystery.

WHO CAN SOLVE IT?

A new phenomenal means of curing the sick. Safe, reliable, astonishing, successful, available everywhere. Address

DR. J. M. MOSELEY,
13t27 141 South 8th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality, nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth; price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER.

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

NEWBURYPORT MASS., Sept. 23, 1878.

To Miss Anna Knoop, Dear Madam:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

JAMES PARTON.

Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.
D. M. BENNETT. 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot and Power Presses. Die Work of all kinds.
Perforating Dies a Specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N.Y. tJan81.

THE

CLERGYMAN'S VICTIMS.

A Radical Romance.

—BY—

MRS. J. E. BALL.

This pamphlet of over 100 pages is a pleasing animated, domestic story, presenting Liberal thought in an agreeable manner, and will be read by thousands where heavier, drier, and more philosophical and metaphysical works are not preferred. It is a good story to lend Christian neighbors to read. Price, 25 cents.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructiv work. In cloth, $3 per vol, the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4.50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

LECTURES OF

R. G. INGERSOLL.

THE PEOPLE'S EDITION.

Paper Covers.

Vol. I. "The Gods, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thos. Paine," "Individuality," "Heretics and Heresies." Price, 50 cents.

Vol. II. "The Ghosts, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Declaration of Independence," "Farming in Illinois," "Speech at Cincinnati," "The Past Rises Before Me Like a Dream." Price 50 cents.

Both volumes bound in one, price, $1.00.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll, by Sarony, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

| | |
|---|---|
| Imperial, or large size . . . . . | 40 cents. |
| Photo, or card size . . . . . | 20 cents. |
| Life-size lithograph, 21x27 . . . . . | 50 cents. |

Postage paid.

Either of the above Volumes handsomely bound in cloth, $1.25.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrins, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

WORKINGMEN, READ!

ALLEGORY.

UNCLE SAM AND AMERICUS.

A DIALOG ON

LAND, LABOR, AND REFORM.

By F. E. BOYD.

Outlines of a plan for a new American national land and labor co-operativ system, by which land and comfortable homes may be secured to the poorest classes of every race, without money or price, with the educational and social advantages of modern civilization. Designed to ameliorate the condition of the struggling masses; to equalize population; to prevent vice, crime, and pauperism; to prevent the recurrence of industrial crises and feuds, labor riots, and popular insurrections; to terminate Indian wars; to avoid or do away with an oligarchy of landlords and capitalists; and to preserve or restore the liberties of the people and the rights of self-government by bringing immediately together the two great elements of universal progress, land and labor.

"The land shall not be sold forever; for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me" (Lev. xxv., 23).

"Moreover, the profit of the earth is for all" (Ecclesiastes v, 9).

Price 10 cents. Sold at this office.

Correspondents Wanted.

A young man (a Liberal) desires a correspondence with a few young ladies interested in Liberalism and kindred subjects. Please address 1t C. BERCY, Bellaire, Ohio.

SAMSON:

A Myth-Story of the Sun.

The Gospel of the Kingdom According to the Holy Men of Old.

The author of these works finds the Bible largely mythical in its character. He presents us a number of copies to be disposed of in the interest of THE TRUTH SEEKER. All who purchase will therefore aid THE TRUTH SEEKER to the amount of their purchase, or add to the Bennett fund as they may choose.

Samson, 20 cents; Gospel of the Kingdom, vols., each, 30 cents.

THE MODERN THINKER.

Second number, 8vo, 160 pp. . . $1.00.

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS

is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. By COURTLANDT PALMER

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy Character of the origin of the religion of christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2 00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo. 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 63 pages, price, 35 cents

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 150 pages. Price, only 35 cents.

Truth Seeker Collection of Forms, Hymns, and Recitations. Forms for Organizing Societies, Forms for Constitutions and By-Laws, for Funeral Services, Marriage Services, Naming of Infants, Obituary Notices, Epitaphs, Wills, etc. Also, nearly 525 Liberal and Spiritualistic Hymns, original and selected, for Public Meetings, Funerals, Social Gatherings, etc. The whole supplemented by a fine selection of Recitations, comprising many of the finest poetical gems in the language. Over 580 pages, at the extremely low price of 75 cents, in cloth.

Chronicles of Simon Christianus. His Manifold and Wonderful Adventures in the Land of Cosmos. A New Scripture from an antique manuscript (evidently inspired) discovered by I. N. FIDEL, in conjunction with A. HOOK, Esq. Very amusing. Price, 25 cents.

Proceedings and Addresses at the Freethinkers' Convention, held at Watkins, N. Y., August 22, 23, 24, and 25, 1878. A volume of 400 pages, containing the speeches made during the four days' session by Dr. T. L. Brown, Prof. A. L. Rawson, Elder F. W. Evans, Elder G. A. Lomas, Prof. J. H. W. Toohey, Dr. J. M. Peebles, Dr. T. B. Taylor, Hon. George W. Julian, James Parton, T. B. Wakeman, Elizur Wright, T. C. Leland, C. D. B. Mills, Mrs. L. N. Colman, Mrs. P. R. Lawrence, Ella E. Gibson, Mrs. Mary E. Tillotson, Mrs. Clara Neymann, Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, W. E. Copeland, Horace Seaver, John W. Truesdell, and several other persons. Price, cloth, $1.25.

Truth Seeker Tracts. Bound Volumes I., II., III., IV., and V. These volumes, containing over 520 pages each, are made up of over one hundred Truth Seeker Tracts, with some additional kinds. They embrace a variety of subjects by different authors, written in a terse, trenchant, and spicy style. They are offered at the extremely low price of 60 cents per volume in paper covers, and $1.00 in cloth; or 50 cents each in paper, and 75 cents each in cloth if the whole set is taken.

Sepher Toldoth Jeschu; or, the Book of the Generation of Jesus. First English translation of the ancient Jewish story of Jesus, who was born at Bethlehem about the year 106 B. C., being the son of a betrothed maiden named Miriam (Mary) by Joseph Pandera. How and why the Romans changed "Kepha" to "Petros." Startling evidence that Paul flourished before the middle of the first century B. C., contemporary with the aforesaid Kepha. Price, 20 cents.

Last Will and Testament of Jean Meslier, curate of a Romish church in France in the eighteenth century, whose views upon theology were not published until after his death, and are now for the first time presented in English. Very radical and able. Price, 25 cents.

Influence of Christianity Upon Civilization. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Revised edition. One of the most able treatises upon the subject ever written. Price, 25 cents.

Christianity and Materialism. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Revised edition. In this treatise the two systems are fairly and ably examined from a historical standpoint. Price, 15 cents.

What Liberalism Offers in the Place of Christianity. By B. F. UNDERWOOD. Price, paper, 10 cents.

Amberley's Life of Jesus; His Character and Doctrine. A chapter from "The Analysis of Religious Belief." By VISCOUNT AMBERLEY. Price, cloth, 60 cents; paper, 35 cents.

Resurrection of Jesus. By W. S. BELL. Revised and enlarged edition. Price, 25 cents.

Religion not History. An able examination of the morals and theology of the teachings of the New Testament. By W. F. NEWMAN. Emeritus Professor of University College, London. From the London edition. Price, 25 cents.

Bennett-Teed Discussion. Between D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker," and CYRUS ROMULUS R. TEED, of Moravia, N. Y. Proposition discussed: "Jesus Christ is not only divine, but is the Lord God, creator of heaven and earth." Teed affirming: Bennett denying. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Blakeman's Two Hundred Poetical Riddles. (For children and youth.) Embracing a great variety of subjects. This work is new and interesting, and affords a great amount of amusement in the family circle, as well as in gatherings of children and older people. Price, 20 cents.

Six Lectures on Astronomy. By PROF. RICHARD A. PROCTOR. Delivered at Steinway Hall, New York, in the winter of 1875-76. 1. Growth of Worlds; 2. Life and Death of Worlds; 3. Other Worlds than Ours; 4. Other Suns than Ours; 5. The Great Mysteries of the Universe; 6. Religion and Astronomy. 65 pp. Paper, 20 cents

Beyond the Veil. A Spiritualistic work, said to be dictated by the spirit of PASCHAL BEVERLY RANDOLPH, aided by Emmanuel Swedenborg and others, through the mediumship of Mrs. Frances H. McDougall and Mrs. Luna Hutchinson. It gives minute and interesting descriptions of life in the spirit world—its location, intermediate state, landscape, habitation, food, clothing, industrial interests, etc. It contains a steel engraving of P. B. Randolph. A neat volume. Price, $1.50.

Col. Ingersoll then arose and asked, "Hav the present officers of the League been elected?"

"Yes," responded the Chairman.

"I hear that I hav been elected one of the Vice-Presidents of the Association."

"You were so elected."

"I differ with the League in this one thing, although in all others I am in harmony with them. It is with me a thing of so great importance that I cannot remain longer with the League. I do not wish them to be my enemy or me to be theirs; I simply wish to resign. I cannot act with the League on this account, and I hope some one will be elected in my place."

On motion, the resignation was accepted.

On motion, Mrs. Julia H. Severance, of Milwaukee, was elected Vice-President to fill the vacancy just made.

The meeting then adjourned until 9 o'clock next morning at Grow's Opera House.

SUNDAY MORNING SESSION.

The third day session was held at Grow's Opera House, on West Madison street. The morning session opened at nine o'clock, when, in the absence of President Wright, the chair was taken by Mr. Parker Pillsbury, of New Hampshire, but Mr. Wright soon came in and took the chair.

Mr. Spencer, Chairman of the Committee on Future Work, being called upon to report, made a somewhat lengthy speech, in which, after reviewing carefully the recent action of the League, he begged leave to report as to his own future work in connection with the Liberal movement, and for which he himself was responsible. He was prepared to subscribe to all the principles embodied in the report. As to the means most likely to be successful in carrying them out there might be some question.

Before he concluded his remarks he intended to use that freedom of speech in which they all believed. His connection with the organization had been for the purpose of advancing these principles, and in resigning from the society, which he intended to do, he would simply be carrying out these principles.

The Chair: Do I understand that the gentleman has withdrawn from the League?

Mr. Spencer: I hav not.

The Chair: I do not think that the gent'eman has any right to speak now that he has announced his intention to secede from the organization.

Mr. Spencer: I hav not so withdrawn from the organization.

The speaker went on to say that in preparing the report of the Committee on Future Work he had the best objects of the League in view, and now he was of the opinion that the means best adapted for the accomplishment of these objects are different than those believed in by many, and he would call the attention of the body in the direction of the methods in which that work must be done. He had made up his mind as to the course of action which he intended to follow.

The Chair ruled that personal explanations were out of order in speaking upon a report of a committee.

Mr. Spencer went on to speak, when it was discovered that the report, which was laid on the table on Saturday, had not yet been accepted. It was then, on motion, accepted, and the speeches on the question of its adoption were limited to five minutes' duration each.

Mr. Spencer went on to say that since the report was prepared he had changed his mind upon one of its points, and now opposed the calling by the President of a national convention for the purpose of starting a new party, and moved that the resolution recommending it be stricken out.

Mr. Spencer went on to say that he believed in his innermost heart that, if the proposed movement came from the present Association, the public would look upon it with such suspicion as to damn it from its birth.

A voice—"Why?"

"I hav my private reasons."

The speaker was urged to supply them, but he declined.

The report was adopted.

The following resolution was offered by Mr. Gorsuch, of Baltimore:

Resolved, That this Convention express its hearty sympathy with and through indorsement of all labor organizations whose object, aim, and intentions are the dethronement of capitalistic monopoly and the emancipation of the wage-workers from the galling chain of industrial slavery; and perfect religious freedom is an impossibility while the bodies of men and women are enthralled under the despotism of capital.

The resolution was supported by its presenter, and opposed by the Chair and Mr. Spencer, who both held that it went too far and took in organizations which had damaged the labor interests by being too impetuous in their attempts to ameliorate the condition of the wage-worker.

An amendment to the resolution was offered by Mr. Doerflinger, of Milwaukee, and lost, and the resolution was adopted.

On motion, a number of papers, consisting mostly of resolutions handed in by a number of members of the League, were referred to the Executiv Committee, and Mr. Doerflinger was added to the Committee for the purpose of advocating the principles set forth by the Wisconsin Radicals.

Mr. W. W. Hall, of St. John, Ill., moved the recommendation of the following amendment of the Constitution to the next Congress:

Resolved, That the members of the Executiv Committee and Vice-Presidents be admitted to vote in the future Congresses of the League.

The motion was carried, and the meeting adjourned until 2 P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Mrs. Julia Severance was elected to fill the Chair in the afternoon session, whose opening business consisted of the passage of a resolution instructing the Executiv Committee to draft a set of rules and by-laws for the guidance of auxiliary Leagues.

Mr. Spencer offered the following insulting resolution:

Resolved, That the Fourth Congress of the National Liberal League recommends to the consideration of the auxiliary Leagues and kindred organizations the propriety and wisdom of turning over the management and control of this organization to a religious sect of Spiritualists and to a squad of avowed and practical Freelovers.

The resolution failed of a seconder, but not of a liberal round of hisses, during which Mr. Spencer sat down.

Mr. Gorsuch, who was the first upon his feet of a dozen who rose with apparently the same object in view, moved that the meeting expel Mr. Spencer from the League.

Mr. Spencer asked for the indulgence of the meeting for a moment, but it was not accorded, and the cry of "Question, question," was only abandoned when Mr. Wakeman took the platform, and, much to the delight of the audience, treated Mr. Spencer to ten minutes of verbal castigation. He closed by seconding the motion for expulsion, which was carried unanimously. As soon as the result was made known, Mr. Spencer turned to the Chair, bowed, and with the remark, "I must respectfully retire," walked slowly from the room.

Speeches upon various Liberal topics were made by a number of speakers. Among them were Mr. Phelps, of Kansas; Mr. Woodhouse, Mrs. Amy Post, of Rochester; Mr. Walker, of Iowa; F. F. Follett, of Rockford, and Mrs. Maria L. Follett.

The meeting then adjourned until 8 P. M.

A full attendance was present at the evening session, The evening was passed in recitations and speech-making upon the popular Liberal topics of separation of church and state, protection of the coming generation, woman's rights, the vicious habits of the clergy, the shortcomings of the non-Liberal Presidential candidates and others. The Convention adjourned at about 10:30

SPEECH BY MRS. H. S LAKE, FRIDAY EVENING.

The subjoined speech by Mrs. Lake should hav appeared last week in the report of Friday's proceedings, but was omitted for want of room:

"AFTER LIBERALISM, WHAT?"

Mrs. Lake had two reasons for asking the question, the first being the absolute success of the cause and the second being the spiritual paralysis that many say is likely to follow. Suppose the community should change into one of Liberalism only; there would be no church; the Bible be laid on the shelf along with the Hindoo Vedas. Suppose the old superstitions and the Christian religion thrown overboard, then, "After Liberalism, What?" What then should we do? Did they ask for more than the enjoyment of physical pleasure? Did not the white-robed angel of thought beckon us on to an improved growth and culture?

"If so," she went on, "then we need thought, speech, converse, song, times, and places for growth and culture. [Applause.] And beyond this, hav we no obligations? Are there adulterated groceries in our markets? Do we keep any? Are there unsound fabrics, and are these articles of trade in our stores? Hav we shrewd and unscrupulous tradesman? Hav we any poor, sick, forlorn, or dead in our midst? Is every man's and woman's word as good as a bond? Hav we anybody in our jails? Is anybody hungry down the street? Are we conscious of even moderate indifference to the interests of our fellow-beings? If so, and these things are facts, if these exist with a Christian superstition swept entirely away, then I affirm without fear of contradiction that after the triumph of Liberalism, after your separation of church and state, of which we hear so much, there is work, honest, earnest, intelligent, persistent work for ourselvs and for others. [Applause.] We must cultivate by the impulse of association, honesty, charity, sympathy, friendship, generosity, justice, unselfishness."

She could not conceive of a worthier object upon which Liberals could bestow their attention than the pressing needs of humanity which were to be supplied by this brotherhood, this fraternity. These needs were the elimination from the world of poverty, of crime, of ignorance, of disease, and, possibly, of death. [Applause.] When a body of people engaged in this, they passed out of the old into the new era. The old era had taught from the pulpits that the ills which destroyed the harmony and perfection of the world must be endured, because, in the providence of God, they were never intended to be removed. [Laughter.] We had nowhere a pulpit in the land which taught the poor man anything else than that he must accept his poverty as a part of God's non-understandable beneficence.

It was to the Liberal tendencies of the age that we owed Socialistic, financial, eight-hour, and other Liberal reforms. [Applause.] To Liberalism we owed the recognized fact that the things of this world were not made more for the shrewd and the calculating, the close, and the dishonest, than they are for the good, and the true, and the spiritual, who, largely developed in this faculty, lack correspondingly in the organ of acquisitivness. And it was, she believed, to the last Liberal Convention at Cincinnati that they owed the first public proclamation that hereafter immense wealth accumulated and owned by one individual, or a few, would be considered by the intelligent not as a merit, but as a reproach and a crime.

The voice of the breadless, the voice of the houseless, in short, the voice of the majority, rose up against the voice of the minority, saying: "We can get nothing. What shall we take?" And it was for the Liberals to study and answer these questions. There was something in the demand, but not everything, to know when and where Infidelity had established and maintained hospitals. Where Christianity insulted the human race with charity, it was the ultimate purpose of Liberalism to substitute justice. Religion was responsible for most of the extremes at both ends of society, for it had ever cultivated charity and ignored justice. It reared churches upon which God paid no taxes, and pinched the poor to propitiate an angry Jehovah. It levied tithes on everybody and everything, making the poor poorer, and God, who owned everything, richer. [Applause.] Liberalism—Infidel morality, if anybody choose to call it.—emphasized man's obligations to man. It told men to build better houses, to obey the laws of health, and to liv cleanly lives, until man took his place as the recipient of favors hitherto bestowed upon God. The Liberal must carry his convictions into political life, and there was no principle that could be established in this country except through the ballot-box. Every Liberal who desired the elevation of the race would find himself face to face with the great question of the rights of labor as well as the separation of the church and state. [Applause.]

[From New York Truth.]

The full report of the circumstances under which Colonel Ingersoll resigned the Vice-Presidency of the Liberal League places his action in a different light from that in which it was presented by the meager telegraphic reports. The inference from these was that an objectionable element had crept in and got control of the Convention, making it a defender and protector of obscenity, from which it was the duty of all pure-minded Freethinkers to withdraw. Naturally, therefore, Colonel Ingersoll's supposed resignation from the organization commanded approval.

It appears, however, that so far from proposing to protect or defend obscenity, the very resolutions which Ingersoll condemned are unequivocally opposed to it, and that Ingersoll did not withdraw from the Association, but only resigned an office.

Ingersoll's opposition, too, was of a political nature purely. He is a centralizationist, believing that all power, even police regulations, should be concentrated in the general government. Therefore, he approves Federal laws for the regulation of public morals, and hence his opposition to the resolution which called for the repeal of the Comstock laws of Congress.

The resolutions adopted are a well considered proclamation, and we shall be better governed when their essense is incorporated into our laws, and become a part of our system of government in fact, as many of them already are in theory.

In the 6th resolution adopted by the Liberal League occurs a typographical error which alters the meaning of the language. As printed it reads, "That while therefore we do not approve of any offenses committed by Lant, Train," and others. It should read, charged upon, as the gentlemen named had committed no offense.

Acknowledgments by H. L. Green.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Since September 1st I hav received contributions to aid me in Liberal work as follows: J. T. Brown, $1.00; J. H. Northrup, $5 00; W. R. Cameron, $2 00; Mrs. A. Everett, 50 cents; Clara Thomson, and others, $1.45; Wm. McJilton, 25 cents; W. W. Wright, 25 cents; C. H. Berkdell, 50 cents; D. E. Pendleton, 25 cents; Thomas Lee, 25 cents; Emily G. Taylor, 25 cents; friend at Chicago Congress (name forgotten), $1 00; Wm. Chestnut, Sr., $2.60.

And allow me, Mr. Editor, to sincerely thank these kind friends for their donations, and more than that, allow me to say that the hundreds of warm friends that I hav made since I became connected with the Liberal League movement will never be forgotten. Their encouraging words and generous support shall be remembered so long as life lasts. It is with feelings of sadness that no words can express that I withdrew from the National Liberal League. H. L. Green.

The Stenographic Report.—Ways and Means.

Arriving not till to-day from Chicago and stopping-places by the way, I hav neither space in this Truth Seeker, nor time before its publication, to comment as I would like to do on the recent Congress of the League and the situation generally. I will write more fully for the next number.

I can only say now to the local Liberal Leagues that the stenographic report of the proceedings proves too full, too bulky, and too expensiv to print. It makes over two hundred and fifty foolscap pages, and will cost more than two hundred dollars to put it into book form. In my absence Mr. Wakeman and Mr. Macdonald hav made a clear and connected condensation of it for this number of The Truth Seeker, which will be sufficient to guide the Leagues in their action upon the proceedings of the Congress. Farther on in the season, with more money in the treasury, the full report, if there is a demand for it, may be published.

The first duty to which the newly-elected Treasurer, Secretary, and Finance Committee must address themselvs is to replenish the Treasury of the National Liberal League. Some money is necessary for the effectual conduct of its enterprises. We need to print documents, hold meetings, put agents into the field, and defend our friends and adherents against attack. Henceforth the secular work proper for the League to undertake will be one and not divided. All contributions, then, for defense, for the support of agents and workers, and for all other expenses of whatever nature, will go into the Treasury of the National Liberal League, to be disbursed therefrom in regular authorized ways, upon proper vouchers, for necessary expenses and for important objects and ends.

The central administration is dependent upon the local auxiliaries for the means to prosecute its work. Will they be kind enough to discuss among themselvs how best they can supply these means? There are now two hundred and ten auxiliary Leagues. Even so small a contribution as five dollars per annum from each would giv the National League a working revenue of $1,050. That would do more and better work than $10 000 in the hands of a missionary at Boori Boola Gha. T. C. Leland, Sec. N. L. L.

201 East 71st st, N. Y, Sept. 27, 1880.

Farewell!

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: At a called meeting of the Haeckel Liberal League the following resolution was passed, which please print in the next issue of The Truth Seeker, and much oblige, C. P. Farrell.

Washington, D. C, Sept. 23, 1880.

Whereas, The Fourth Annual Congress of the National Liberal League held at Chicago last week has pledged itself to the repeal of the postal laws against obscene literature, and denies to the United States the right to try offenders against its laws in its own courts, therefore,

Resolved, That we cannot longer remain as an auxiliary to the National Liberal League, and dissolve our connection therewith. C. P. Farrell, Pres.

Mrs. Colby and Mrs. Smith are engaged for October in Rochester, N. Y., at which place they can be addressed during that month.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC. NEW YORK CITY.

M. CONSTANTIN STERNBERG.
M. CONSTANTIN STERNBERG.

THE RUSSIAN PIANO VIRTUOSO.
THE RUSSIAN PIANO VIRTUOSO.

Will make his debut
ON THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 7.
ON THURSDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 7.
When he will perform
SCHARWENKA'S GREAT CONCERTO.
SCHARWENKA'S GREAT CONCERTO.
Assisted by CARLBERG'S
GRAND ORCHESTRA.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

DEVOTED TO SCIENCE, MORALS, FREETHOUGHT AND HUMAN HAPPINESS

Vol. 7. No. 4. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT } New York, Saturday, October 9, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

A CHURCH gallery in England has fallen, and several lives were lost. What would our pulpit orators hav to say next Sunday if it hed been the gallery of a theater?

THE Rev. A. A. Hoskin, who had been deposed by the Methodists for heterodoxy, was denied permission to perform a marriage ceremony in his former church at Milwaukee.

A RELIGIOUS maniac named Eggleston, residing at Rockport, Indiana, recently killed his infant child by dashing it against the wall, claiming the Lord commanded him to murder it.

"MA, has aunty got bees in her mouth?" "No, my dear. Why do you ask?" "'Cause Captain' Deanse said he was going to taste the honey from her lips, and she said, 'Well, make haste.'"

THE proportion of Infidels in France, Germany, and Scandinavia is greater than in any other countries on the globe, and the per cent of uneducated persons is less there than in any other country.

"CHRISTIANITY is a dead thing in this city," said the Rev. Dr. Platt of San Francisco, and some of the people are demonstrating the living force of their Christianity by being full of righteous indignation at him for saying so.

ALBERT GRAY, of Dallas, Texas, had lately been converted to Christianity, and, therefore, when William Young swore profanely in his presence, he was dreadfully shocked. He drew a revolver, implored the blasphemer to stop, and then shot him dead.

THE Bishop of Manchester says there are too many churches in Manchester not half filled. One of his clergy, who had a parish containing 1,233 houses, with a population of about 6,000 people, found from a house-to-house visit that out of 1,233 no fewer than 900 families professedly never attended any place of worship.

THE Christian Index believes in the doctrin of "poor preach, poor pay," and says that if a church pays twenty-five dollars a year for its preaching it will get a twenty-five-dollar man. This seems a very low price; and yet if such a church were vacant after having starved its twenty-five-dollar man to death, there would be a wagon load of twenty-five-dollar men applying for the vacant pulpit.

THE Mormons hold their own pretty well and more too. The Supreme Court out there has decided the law allowing women to vote to be constitutional, and the Gentiles are very much put out about it, as the decision givs the Mormons a clear gain of 10,000 votes in the territory. This assures the preponderance of Mormon influence in Utah for years to come, and will render the problem of the extirpation of polygamy a more difficult one than ever.

IN one of Comstock's lottery cases he lost the exhibits which he intended to use as proof against the prisoner. His maneuvering when he discovered the loss is highly characteristic of the man. Going to a friend of the defendant and assuming an air of compassion, he said, "I don't want to push this man to the wall. He is poor, and if he will plead guilty, I will consent to hav him only fined." True to his instincts he wanted a conviction—a sentence—and to get one in a case where he had no evidence, he clothed himself in the mantle of charity. His Godlike compassion was surpassed only by his assumption of omnipotence in respect to matters which are popularly supposed to rest in the conscience of the court. It has been alleged that an undue intimacy has arisen between Comstock and Judge Cowing, and this offer of Comstock to fix in advance the sentence which Judge Cowing would be called upon to pass givs color to the rumor. It is to be sincerely hoped, however, that Judge Cowing will not place an indelible blot upon an excellent judicial record by admitting to his confidence a man who sustains confidential relations with the noted professional blackmailer, Marcus Cicero Stanley; and before we believe that he has, we shall require something more than the pretensions of Comstock, whose uncontradicted testimony upon oath six jurymen out of twelve refused to believe in a trial before Judge Gildersleeve last winter.—Truth.

A MUSCULAR and splendidly energetic negro revival is now in progress in Little Rock, Ark. The preachers are really doing God's service, and in an original and interesting way. One of the ebony divines thus commenced his discourse: "I sees a good many ole tuffs in dis house, an' I wants 'em ter come up ter de mourner's bench right now. Dey's got ter come. De Lord doan say, I wish you would do anything, but says you's got ter do it. Firmness is religion. De rock of ages is made outen flint. Mr. Johnson," said the preacher, addressing a sinner, "come up an' put your head on dis bench. I'se played kyards wid yer, but you'se got ter reform. Come on. I tells yer! Is yer comin'?" "No, I isn't," said Mr. Johnson. "Den I'll fetch yer. You'se been standin' off de preachers long 'nough." The preacher left the pulpit, advanced to where Mr. Johnson was standing, and caught him by the collar. The two men began struggling, and confusion prevailed; but Mr. Johnson was finally dragged in triumph to the mercy seat.—Argonaut.

THE Public Prosecutor has under consideration a painful elopement case. James Ward, married, and the father of eight children, was well known in Sydenham, and he had been a prominent figure in religious matters in the neighborhood, belonging, as he did, to the Salvation Army. He became some time ago acquainted with a domestic servant living at Sydenham Park. The girl bore an excellent character, and attended the same services as did the man Ward. The girl, as arranged between Ward and herself, left service, informing her employer that she was about to get married. At the same time Ward left home, informing his wife that he was ordered to conduct religious services in London. He met the young woman, and they proceeded to Beckenham church, where the ceremony of marriage was gone through in the real names of both parties. From Beckenham the pair proceeded to Plymouth, where they sailed for Port Adelaide, and were due at the latter place on Saturday week. The girl must hav known that Ward was a married man, inasmuch as she had been frequently entertained at his house by Mrs. Ward. The girl's employer, who has received letters from the girl since her departure, has communicated with the Treasury and been informed that the matter has been placed in the hands of the Public Prosecutor.—English paper.

MR. T. B. WAKEMAN, of this city, and Mr. W. S. Bush, of Washington, hav been quite extensivly discussing the postal laws in the columns of THE TRUTH SEEKER. Mr. Bush, who claims to be a Liberal, seems to take grounds in favor of a modified postal law for the prevention of the circulation of obscene literature through the mails, while Mr. Wakeman stands out stoutly for the regulation of such matters by the state rather than national authority. There can be no question in the minds of the readers of this controversy that Mr. Wakeman seems to hav the best of the argument, so far as the unconstitutionality of these laws is concerned. Mr. Wakeman's argument at the Faneuil Hall Indignation Meeting has never yet been really answered, and everything which Mr. Wakeman adds in meeting his critics seems to fortify the position he assumed at that time. For the enlightenment of the public on these peculiar statutes injected into the postal regulations during the turbulent expiring hours of the 42d Congress, it would be well to publish this discussion in pamphlet form and giv it wide circulation. Mr. Bush seems to present the best that has been said on his side of the question, and by a careful perusal of the discussion it is not difficult to see that Mr. Wakeman has the advantage of his opponent in every instance.—Dr. Foote's Health Monthly.

THE Pan-Presbyterian Council at Philadelphia furnishes evidence of the growing disposition to question those hitherto accepted religious doctrins which hav so long constituted the groundwork of Christianity. Not that the reverend gentlemen are themselvs skeptical, but that they defend their faith with a controversial fervor that marks their recognition of the necessity for making a defense. It cannot be denied by any intelligent observer that the revelations of modern science hav seriously disturbed the convictions of many professing Christians, and widely influenced the views of the rising generation touching the supernatural authority of the scriptures. The number of young men who reject the idea of a personal God, who disbelieve in an overruling Providence, who discredit the miracles, and who even doubt the life beyond the grave, is on the increase, and it is this fact which accounts for the prominence given by the Presbyterian Council to considerations involving the relations of science and religion. The tendencies of the age are rationalistic. It is the fashion to question, analyze, and examin all beliefs, no matter how strongly intrenched, and to ask the why and wherefore of every creed. Dr. McCosh suggests a way of meeting this condition of things which is eminently characteristic of him. He would hav less dogmatism and more judicious instruction. Our religious teachers must accommodate themselvs to the altered circumstances which the intellectual activity of the age has produced. They must regulate their methods by the requirements of the new era, and win over the minds and hearts of their pupils by careful persuasion, rather than seek to compel them to submit to any inexorable standard. Certainly, the danger is imminent enough to demand the thoughtful attention of all Christians, and they cannot too soon address themselvs to the work which seems appointed for them to do.—Star.

THE last reverend worshiper of the golden calf who displayed his fantastic literary gymnastics in our pulpits, at one dollar admittance, has returned to his Eastern home with his bronchial tubes so much improved that he has been able to resume his business of misrepresenting the Pacific coast and its people. We quote from an Eastern journal: "The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage made a warm defense of the Chinese in his evening address in New York on the 19th of September, and said that, when he saw the anti-Chinese plank in the Republican platform, he wondered if the scepter were not departing." We comment leniently upon this clerical mountebank, lest we hurt the feelings of some good people in this city who still hav faith in this pious fraud. This blatant and fantastic pulpit-clown came to San Francisco for a speculation. He was billed and advertised like a prestidigitator. He was taken up by certain very good men, and in aid of his money-making scheme—as an advertising dodge—pushed himself into at least one respectable pulpit in this city. Finding that his repertoire of stale old lectures would not draw, he precipitated himself one night into the slums of the Chinese quarter, and came out with one dollar's worth of ready-made advice as to how to cleanse the nasty spot. He made an out-and-out anti-Chinese speech. It is true that it was senseless and absurd; it contained no germ of original thought; it was the flippant utterance of an empty-headed adventurer in search of coin. The question he did not understand. All we who oppose Chinese immigration admit that it is a two-sided question, and one upon which, from certain standpoints, a strong argument may be made in favor of Chinese presence among us. Talmage did not grasp the idea, and advanced no argument upon the subject, but, in a sort of Tom-fool way, catered to the anti-Chinese sentiment of the Sand-lot as expressed in the brutal formula, "The Chinese must go." When he returns to Brooklyn he becomes, all of a flop, a Chinese advocate, and finds in them virtues never denied them. Such business as this is a crime, and it must not be exposed the less because it is a crime of the pulpit. A class of itinerant quack preachers are spreading themselvs abroad in the land who are a reproach to their calling. Theirs is a sensational, clap-trap method of money-getting. We find but little favor for the traveling revivalist. We question whether any permanent good comes from the excitation of the sensational evangelist who goes up and down the land with song and shout to preach and pray. But, leaving this question an open one till Moody and Sankey demand our notice, we do not hesitate to denounce such men as Rev. DeWitt Talmage as hurtful. We say this, not in hostility to the pulpit, nor in disregard of the claims of those earnest, pious, and godly men who hav consecrated their lives to the preaching of the gospel. In the political parson, the ranting sensationalist, and the traveling showman of the church, we find nothing to commend.—Argonaut.

Events of the Week.

THE crops in portions of Texas are being destroyed by grasshoppers.

A RECENT steamer took 7,500 barrels of apples to Europe as part of her cargo.

GEORGE BANCROFT, the historian, celebrate his eightieth birthday on Sunday, 3d.

A MINER fell two hundred feet down a shaft, near Uniontown, Pa., a few days ago.

A BICYCLE tournament came off in this city on the 2d. There were sixty riders on the track.

A GIRL in Brooklyn, only fourteen years of age, is under indictment for three burglaries.

A MAN died in this city recently of hydrophobia caused by a dog-bite received twelve years ago.

ARCHIBALD FORBES, the famous English war correspondent, is on a visit to this country. He will lecture.

A COMET was discovered on the 29th ult. It is some distance off yet, and is not discernible by the naked eye.

THERE are six thousand horses sick with the epizootic in this city at present, and the disease is still spreading.

BISHOP CORRIGAN, of Newark, has been appointed coadjutor to Cardinal McCloskey, with right of succession.

No less than 350 lives were lost at the mouth of the Columbia River during the salmon fishing season just ended.

THE steamer Isaac Bell, with a valuable cargo, was destroyed by fire at the wharf at Portsmouth, Va., on the 2d.

A STATUE of Robert Burns was unveiled in Central Park, on Sunday last, in the presence of five thousand people.

MR. HAYES is earning his presidential salary by making speeches in Oregon, and they are not Democratic speeches, either.

THE publishers of six daily and those of three weekly papers in this city hav been indicted for publishing lottery advertisements.

THE driver of a bread wagon in Montreal has fallen heir to a fortune of $200,000 a year, left him by a deceased relativ in Ireland.

THE Chilian man-of-war Covadonga has been sunk by Peruvian torpedoes. The Chilian fleet has commenced for the second or third time to bombard Callao.

THE famous ironclad known as Stevens' Battery, which was bequeathed to the state of New Jersey by Mr. Stevens, was recently sold at auction, realizing $55,000.

DYER D. LUM, one of the secretaries of the National Committee of the Greenback party, charges Weaver with being in the pay of the Republicans to draw voters from among the Democrats.

THE Rev. Mr. Fulton, of Brooklyn, has stirred up quite a breeze in his church by dragging too much politics into the pulpit. Some of his congregation think he is working harder for Garfield than for God.

THE Oneida Community is undergoing great changes. In addition to the abolition of the complex marriage system and the adoption of the orthodox plan, the common property is to be turned over to a joint stock company.

THE pastors of the evangelical churches of the District of Columbia hav issued a call to all Christians for prayer to the Almighty, respectfully but firmly urging upon him the necessity of his taking a hand in the coming election.

THE great Presbyterian council in Philadelphia closed on the second. Business of much importance to the dead was transacted, but references to live topics were discouraged, and the revised edition of the New Testament as a subject of discussion was studiously avoided.

THE $329 fever is spreading rapidly over the country, and the Republicans are correspondingly depressed. Wherever there is a Democratic small boy and a chunk of chalk the mysterious handwriting on the wall, the mene, mene, tekel upharsin of the Republican party—$329—is sure to appear.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1880.

Letter from Europe.—No. 7.—Continued.

The day we spent at Versailles and in going to and from there was most agreeable. We took the tramway (horse-car) on a beautiful Saturday morning, and stopped at the old town of Sevres, some five or six miles from the city, on an excellent road, lined the whole way with river scenery on the one side, at a short distance, with residences and interesting sights on either side. We rode on the top of the car and had an excellent view of all around us. Sevres is said to have existed in 560. It is prettily situated on the Seine, where the hills close on each side. The first house on the left, across the bridge, is the one where Bismarck and Jules Favre held their interview for the signing of the armistice in 1871. We saw the room where the treaty was signed. It is now a wine-room.

Sevres is chiefly famous for its Manufacture de Porcelaines. In this establishment of world-wide renown we saw works of priceless value—tea and dinner services, vases of the largest and grandest description, cabinets, porcelains of every kind and name—fit presents for kings and princes. These are skilfully arranged in fine cases, and dispersed through large rooms and galleries. The tableware thus displayed was enough to be the envy of any housekeeper in the world. There are also many copies on porcelain of celebrated pictures; but the prices these works of art command are almost fabulous, and render the manufacture unproductive from a pecuniary point of view, the government making up the deficiency. There are some five or six hundred workmen employed in transforming clay into these beautiful specimens of porcelain ware. Many of the kings of Europe obtain their table sets from this establishment. Stained glass and mosaic are likewise manufactured here.

After punishing a bottle of vin ordinaire (ordinary wine), pain, and fromage (bread and cheese), we continued our ride to Versailles, about twelve miles from the center of the city. The road is all the way lined with cosy, old-fashioned residences, with a profusion of flowers, ivy-vines, grape-vines, etc., along. The people seemed to be in the enjoyment of happiness; though many were at work, none seemed to be toiling very hard. As we approach Versailles the beauty and interest increases. The avenue is fully two hundred feet in width, with two rows of elms between the road-bed and the capacious side, and there are walks on either side. The trees—the rows of which are twenty feet apart—are so trimmed that the branches touch, the opposite sides being trimmed even with the trunk, giving a beautiful and peculiar appearance. The town contains sixty-five thousand inhabitants, but is most noted for its palace, the former seat of government, its extensive picture galleries, its statuary, and its magnificent grounds, parks, etc. There is indeed a wonderful amount of beauty at Versailles—a marvel of creation. Truthfully has it been said, "Were Paris blotted from the face of the earth, leaving nothing behind it but the palace of Versailles, the journey to this fairy-like structure would alone well repay the visitor." It was originally a mere hunting seat of red brick, erected by Louis XIII., in the midst of a forest. It was his prodigal successor who, tired of his other residences, converted that small capital into the most magnificent palace in the whole world. Jules Hardouin Mansart was the architect, Le Notre the gardener; and though sometimes as many as thirty thousand soldiers were simultaneously at work, yet it took twenty-one years before this modern palace of another Sardanapalus was finished. When the labors were completed the cost was found to amount to such an enormous sum that even the profuse "Louis Le Magnifique" thought it advisable to burn the accounts in order to destroy all records of it, that it might not be known what the expenses had been. In 1681 Louis XIV. for the first time occupied his new residence. Then commenced that succession of splendid fetes which have spread the name of Versailles through every part of the civilized world as synonymous with magnificence and extravagance. But in due time, as with all other mortals, the gayety of this gay king was over. Old age and adversity came upon him, and he comparatively retired from the world, and soon to his grave. Here, also, Louis XV. was born and died; and here, too, Damiens made his attempt to assassinate this monarch in 1757. Louis XVI. resided here until 1789, when he was removed by force to Paris and finally executed. In 1715 the palace was pillaged by the Parisians. Louis XVIII. and Charles X. occupied it. In 1855 it was used by Napoleon III. for the reception of Queen Victoria. In 1870 it became the headquarters for the German army, and from here the king of Prussia wrote, in one of his interesting letters to his dear and pretty Augusta, as follows:

"I write you word, my dear Augusta,
We've had another awful buster—
Ten thousand Frenchmen went below;
Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

Versailles then formed the great center of the operations of the most remarkable war ever witnessed in the world's history, while a little later, when Paris was seized by the Communists, it became the seat of the legal government.

In front of the palace is the Cour d'Honneur, separated from the Palace d'Armes by stone parapets flanking a heavy iron railing richly ornamented and gilt. At the extremities of this railing are groups representing, on the right, France victorious over Germany, on the left, France victorious over Spain. In the court are placed two rows of colossal statues, to the right, Richelieu, Bayard, Colbert, Jourdan, Massina, Tourville, Deiguay, Trouin, and Turenne; to the left, Suger, Du Guesclin, Sully, Lannes, Mortier, Suffren, Duquense, and Condé, the great marshals and admirals of France. In the upper part of the Cour d'Honneur stands a colossal equestrian statue of Louis XIV., made of cannon brought from the Rhine. In front of this statue William of Prussia was proclaimed Emperor of Germany in the midst of his victorious generals and soldiery Jan. 18, 1871.

Our visit to Versailles was extremely enjoyable from the collection of historical paintings in its numerous rich and sumptuous galleries. Some idea of the extent of these galleries may be had when I state the fact that at a good walking gait it requires forty-five minutes to walk through them without stopping to admire, and consequently they must reach nearly two miles in extent. Many of the pictures are very large and many of medium size, being representations of noted battles, coronations of kings, life-size portraits of kings, queens, princes, generals, admirals, etc., etc. There are 5,000 of the paintings, which are said to have cost 25,000,000 francs. They are rich and brilliant in character, and were executed from fifty to one hundred years ago, and by the best artists. We spent most agreeably several hours in looking through this most magnificent palace in all the earth. The banqueting and dancing hall of Louis XIV. is by far the most sumptuous room I ever entered. It is about 240 feet in length by about 50 in breadth, and 40 or more in hight. It has some most beautiful life-size paintings—by Lebrun—of France's greatest heroes, but the walls are mostly polished variegated marble, gold, and mirrors, with statues of Venus, Minerva, etc. I think the surface of the walls and the richly frescoed arched roof must be fully half in gold. Here a grand fete was given to Queen Victoria in 1855, and here took place the coronation of Emperor William in 1871. The seventeen arched windows, large and splendid, look out upon the most beautiful grounds mortal eyes ever rested upon, consisting of many acres of fountains, beautiful beds of splendid flowers, trained vines, orange trees, scores upon scores of compact evergreen trees fifteen to twenty feet high, carefully trimmed in the form of cones, both round and square, beautiful hedges of glossy growth, trained ivy, etc. The walls, steps, fountain basins, are made of hewn granite or marble, and everything presents the richest appearance. These gardens, termed by Voltaire l'abime des despenses, are still laid out according to the original plans of Le Notre, and are a perfect specimen of what that celebrated gardener could do when he had unlimited sums at his command. The view is a most magnificent panorama which is opened to the vision of the beholder; the superposed terraces, the numberless flower-beds, the groups of statuary most elaborately sculptured, the vast number of single statues and vases, the superb trees, several centuries old, the flowers, resplendent with beauty and odor, that border the marble stairs, the avenues of arched foliage, the grottoes and rotundas, with the large and beautiful fountains, form a series of fine prospects which I confess myself utterly unable to do full justice to. The fascinated eye dwells upon colonnades, pilasters, and pavilions ornamented with exquisite sculptures, upon mysterious groves and trembling pieces of water, upon flights of steps embroidered with heliotrope plants and dying roses. This rich and varied bewitching scene extends over an immense expanse of ground, ever varied, ever beautiful. Adjoining these gardens, on the north, are beautiful and extensive parks, consisting of trees of natural growth, with carriage ways and footpaths running and winding in all directions. Along some of the roadways trees resembling elms were set in regular rows on each side more than a hundred years ago, and there they are now, tall and majestic, and their boughs are curiously trimmed and interlocked so as to make a most fascinating bower beneath which to drive or walk. Musical concerts are often held in these parks in pleasant weather; one was being held while we were there, and the music discoursed was very fitting to the place and the occasion.

But let us return to the palace. We strolled through the rich and gorgeous rooms, large in size and many in number, occupied by Louis XIV. and his successor. Such richness cannot be found in any other palace in the world. One becomes filled with the conviction that Louis XIV. had more gold than he knew what to do with and that he spread it with a lavish hand through all the rooms of his palace. The stately room designed for receiving other crowned heads is most magnificent; so are the dwelling rooms, the breakfast and dining rooms, and the bedrooms, which themselves must be twenty feet each way, including hight. And in these rooms the German army in 1870–1 made their homes for a long time. The banqueting hall they used for a hospital, and I could only wonder that it still remained so beautiful and uninjured. The floors are of polished oak, and laid in short pieces and diagonally, as described in the Louvre.

We were shown into the room where Louis XIV. died, with the same stately bed there upon which he breathed his last. The room, though extremely rich and pleasant, has remained unused since he left it. We were also shown into the bedrooms of queen this, queen that, Madame Pompadour, where this person of royal blood once slept, and that one. All seemed a mass of magnificence and great splendor. We were also shown into the senate chamber and where the deputies assembled, debated, and passed laws. But my descriptions are too detailed, and I will not stop to describe more now; suffice it to say all is in keeping with that already described.

I must not forget to mention that in one of the picture galleries we saw the celebrated white marble bust of Napoleon I. as he is said to have appeared at his death. He looks feeble and troubled and careworn, a map of Europe is lying on his knee, which he has just been examining, but his eyes are closed in death—the greatest of warriors, a most able statesman, but a most unconscionable butcher and disseminator of human wretchedness. Much more could be said of the vast galleries of the dying scenes of French marshals, admirals, constables, and soldiers, in this Gallican Walhalla, but I know you will excuse me. It is all bloody ground, and tells the story of man's oppression.

On the ground floor of one wing of the palace we saw much statuary, largely of Grecian and Roman gods, heroes, etc. I must say a word of the numerous fountains which surround the palace; they are one of the grand elements of the place and are truly magnificent. There are fully half a dozen of them large and grand. In one large one were fully a dozen figures and jets throwing streams of water. They only play once a month, as the expense of pumping up the water is four thousand francs each time. Fortunately for us the playing of the fountains was to take place the next day, and as it was necessary to test them to see that all was right, we had an opportunity of seeing them in operation. The streams played in all directions and were beautiful.

We visited the Royal Chapel where the voluptuous and princely Louis XIV. and his successor did their worshiping, to atone for their sensuality and wickedness. It is very rich and contains beautiful paintings and statues. It is to be presumed by those lecherous monarchs entering into this holy place once every week or two they would be entitled to act as basely as they pleased the remainder of the time. That is also about the way many more modern Christians judge their conduct.

We did not have time to visit the Grand Trianon, about a mile from the palace. It is also a place of great magnificence, and was built by Louis XIV. for his elderly sultana, Mme. de Maintenon. It is said to have grand rooms, galleries, and rich paintings. The Musée des Voitures is a small building containing the carriages of state, used by the kings in former times. The Petit Trianon is a short distance to the east, and was built by Louis XV. for a favorite mistress, the notorious Countess de Barry, but it was more a house of debauchery than a temple of love. Marie Antoinette passed here some of the happiest hours of her life. Marie Louise also resided here. The grounds are said to be very beautiful.

But enough of Versailles. We returned to the city by steam-cars in about thirty-five minutes, feeling that we had seen grandeur enough for one day.

Paris is well supplied with market-houses; and as I viewed the tall, commodious, light, and airy buildings for the purpose I could not help thinking of our Washington Market in New York and feeling ashamed of the same.

Now, as I am about ready to leave Paris for the present, I will detain you no longer with descriptions of its gayeties and animation. I have given you the day-view of some of its more noted places, but Paris has also a night-side. It has its gardens and variety theaters, where damsels not quite so modest as they should be dance the can-can and go through various unmentionable evolutions either very scantily dressed or not dressed at all. I will, however, leave it for such reverend harlequins as T. De Witt Talmage to look up and describe the delinquencies from virtue of this great city. All I know of the nightside of Paris I get second-hand. I get wearied enough every day to be willing to retire at an early hour at night; besides I feel the great responsibility that rests upon the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER and the necessity of maintaining the untarnished reputation he is the possessor of. It would not answer for me, though on this side of the Atlantic, to do anything to tarnish, even in a small degree, that reputation. I must say, in this connection, that whatever facts may exist, whatever naughty practices may be indulged in between those who reside here and those who sojourn here, so far as my knowledge and observation go, it is one of the most virtuous places in the world. That I have my doubts and fears to the contrary I will not deny. To inform you, however, to what extent the proprieties are here observed, I will narrate an incident related to me. An American gentleman was stopping at one of the first Parisian hotels, and feeling lonely, etc., he had induced a young person of the female persuasion to bear him company. It is said they were seen and observed by somebody outside and were complained of. The gentleman was requested to change his hotel. He remonstrated at this, and said he thought in Paris a man had a right to do what he pleased, and that he had done no more than others. The reply to him was that if his room had opened on the court it would have made no difference who he had had with him, but his room opened on the street, and the proprieties must be observed. I think I mentioned that many of the hotels have courts of considerable size, the hotel being built on all sides of it, and the court being covered with a glass roof. The man was compelled to leave. It is presumed he next took a room opening on the court. So much for Parisian morality.

I do not like Paris for its scarcity of ice, ice water, ice cream, and soda water. These are seldom met with. We saw a few pieces of ice at the hotel about once a day, two or three small lumps about the size of chestnuts being dropped into the wine glasses once, but never being added to the water pitchers or bottles. When I called for ice the second time the intelligence was brought to me that it was "out." I have hardly seen a regular soda fountain in the city, and only one or two ice cream saloons. Carbonated water is put up in quart bottles, and by opening the valve the stream pours out nicely, but it is always warm and insipid. Oh, what a luxury is ice in hot weather!

In settling up our hotel bill we received what is called l'addition (bill). This is put in a sealed envelope and handed us. Mine reads as follows:

| Mr. Bennett. | | | Dr. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aout (Aug.) | 19. | 1 Bougie (candle) | .50 |
| " " | 22. | 2 Timbre (postage) | .40 |
| " " | 25. | 1 Bougie (candle) | .50 |
| 6 jours (days) dejeuner et diner (breakfast and dinner) | | | 54.00 |
| | | | 55.40 |

Meaning 55 francs and 40 centimes (pronounced sonteems), or $11.08.

Now the bill is paid, and we are off to the gare (depot) on our way to Brussels.

Au revoir, D. M. B.

Letter from Europe.—No. 8.

A VISIT TO GUISE.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKERS: I will in this letter give you some account of our visit to M. Godin's Familistere or Social Palace, of Guise, France. I have for considerable time felt a desire to visit the place and witness the practical working of the institution, and more particularly at this time, because Mrs. Augusta Cooper Bristol, of Vineland, N. J., one of the delegates to the Brussels Congress, has been visiting the place for a few weeks, and being still there our visit would be more pleasant.

The morning on which we left Paris was a pleasant one; after spending a few days in the crowded city the pleasant country scenes were a delightful change. We swiftly rolled by thrifty farming districts, tidy looking villages, manufactories, churches, etc., and viewed all with delight. It is a beautiful farming country, and the crops of oats, hay, etc., were industriously being secured. The country, as a rule, is nearly free of fences, none being used by farmers as a general thing. The hedges along the railway (chemin de fer) were about all the fences we saw. The beet culture is extensively prosecuted in this part of France, hundreds of acres in the aggregate being seen during that day's ride. It gives the little farms the appearance of gardens, so the country for scores of miles looks like a continuous garden. The patches of wheat, oats, clover, etc., are in square form and present the appearance of garden plots. We saw many plowing for fall wheat, and sowing and harrowing in the same. The land is very free from stones, and plowing is easy and pleasant. The ground is rolling but gradually. You often obtain a beautiful view of thousands of acres of this beautiful country, all in cultivation and dotted thickly with farmhouses, barns, and villages. The appearances of thrift are seen on every side. The farmhouses are generally of brick, with tile roofs, always very steep, and sometimes the old thatch roof is still noticed. The farmhouses are not large nor imposing, and, as in England, the barns and stables are unpleasantly close to the dwellings, often being joined together. The almost universal flower-beds in proximity to even the humblest dwelling gives the country a pleasing, cheerful appearance to the passer-by. I think American farmers and the dwellers in the country would do well to give more attention to growing flowers around their homes. They add an amount of beauty and cheerfulness which far more than compensates for the trouble they cost. We passed some extensive stone-quarries where the soft, light-colored building-stone is obtained in large quantities, and much of it doubtless taken to Paris.

At St. Quentin (pronounced Sonn Kontan), 125 miles from Paris, we stopped to take a diverging road to Guise. We were obliged to wait two or three hours for a train, which afforded time for dinner and to look at the old town, named after an old Frenchman of many hundred years ago, who was canonized as a saint. I judge it to be a city of 50,000 inhabitants or more. It has very extensive cotton manufactories, and is said to come next to Manchester, England, in the manufacture of cotton goods. We visited the old cathedral, venerable with the age of several centuries, and saw more altars, shrines, aisles, transepts, chancel, chapels, organ, pulpits, statues, saints, paintings, tombs, etc., the regular paraphernalia of all the cathedrals. This one is old, large, high, vaulted, and of course grand. Pious females were occasionally seen inside muttering their prayers, counting their beads, etc., and the sacred candles were burning. Around the doors were the irresistible and omnipresent beggars, holding out their hats or tin cups asking for alms. We visited the Hotel de Ville (town hall) a building of imposing appearance where the mayor and the city officials transact the public business. We also strolled through the markets in an open square, out of doors, where women were selling vegetables, fruits, goods, and wares of various kinds. Plums and pears are the main fruit met with, and the latter are not good. They are dry and puckery, and not soft, juicy, and luscious like American pears. The French muskmelons were too dear to encourage us to buy. The town stands on a hill, and some of the streets are pretty steep. Water must be plentiful with the St. Quentins, for it came rushing down the gutters in sufficient quantity to run a mill. The town has not much beauty, but looks solid and antiquated.

Guise is some twenty-five miles east of St. Quentin; and as the train running there is a mixed one—freight and passenger—and travels slowly, we were two hours in making the distance. The river Ouise, on which Guise is built, is a very crooked stream, and meanders charmingly through the low meadow land on either side of the railroad. We saw many fine herds of cattle feeding in the pastures, but under the care of an attendant. I was sorry to notice all the apple trees in this section were killed by last winter's severe weather.

There are many pleasant little villages within this space of twenty-five miles. The railroad terminates at Guise, an old town of some twelve thousand inhabitants, named after the Duke of Guise, who, I believe, was one of the terrible men of his time, noted for warlike deeds and personal valor. The town makes no pretension to beautiful attractions, but is cleanly and of the old time. It reminded me of pictures of European towns which I used to look at in my childhood. There is a public square and a mairie, or town hall, where the municipal council hold their meetings and pass their ordinances. On a slight eminence is the remains of an old castle where warlike encounters doubtless once took place. It has been repaired and modernized, and we did not learn much of its history. I learn there are convents and monasteries in the vicinity where men and women lead most useless lives. Our hotel was very cleanly. The landlord was once a soldier, and had several badges and testimonials of personal bravery in service. His wife understands how to run a hotel. The female attendants were dutiful, and blacked our shoes and brushed our clothes in fine style. Had we a week to spare in the place, such a cleanly, quiet hotel would be very pleasant. The main fault we had to find was the so frequent changing of plates at dinner. We ate but a few mouthfuls before our plates were taken and clean ones given in their place. I think they were thus changed six times during one meal. I don't believe the women mind washing dishes much in this country.

But it is of the Familistere—M. Godin's wonderful experiment in co-operative labor and interest—that I wish to tell you. This social palace stands at one end of the village and a little away from the station, in a bend of the Ouse, which here is not a large stream. The residence, for four hundred and twenty families or over twelve hundred people, is a large building, or series of buildings, of red brick, the main part being perhaps two hundred feet in length, and the two wings, one at each end of the main building, being of nearly the same size, and all four stories in hight. No attempt at architectural beauty was made, everything being plain and practical.

We found Mrs. Bristol in good health, and remarkably well pleased with her surroundings at the Familistere. She introduced us to M. Godin and his companion, Madame Marie. The Monsieur being unable to speak English, we could not converse with him; but the Madame being able to talk a little in our language, we could make out better with her. They are indeed a remarkable pair. There are probably few men living with more efficient practical administrative talent than M. Godin, a man of about sixty-five years. He was formerly a member of the National Assembly, and is a man who would distinguish himself wherever placed. It is twenty years since he commenced this co-operative enterprise on a small scale. The experiment was undertaken under the most disadvantageous circumstances and with an illiterate class of people; but, being thoroughly imbued with the conviction that co-operation between capital and labor is susceptible of being made a practical success, he pressed on through all discouragements and obstacles until it may be declared a perfect success. The authorities of the town were for a long time opposed to him and his enterprise, and embarrassed him in every way they could. This they did especially in the way of schools, not recognizing the schools which he established. The church (Catholic) also regarded his enterprise with great jealousy and apprehension. The priests conceived the idea that he was gaining a power over his people decidedly inimical to their own, and they thwarted his efforts in every way they could. He is not an orthodox, and takes no stock in church nonsense. He is a Spiritualist of the Swedenborgian type, but does not interfere with the religious opinions of any of the persons comprising the Familistere. Those who do not wish to attend church at all are regarded with as much favor as those who do. Those who are Catholics and wish to attend to confession and the other services of the church are entirely free to do so without a word being said to the contrary. He neither interferes with the religious opinions nor social relations of his twelve hundred employes. Those who wish to marry do so, and those who do not wish to marry have the same right. There is the fullest freedom allowed save in such practices as may interfere with the rights and privileges of others; in that domain there are regulations that have to be attended to.

We were soon on our way to and through the workshops, within five minutes' walk of the dwelling. The principal work done is the manufacture of stoves of all kinds, hollow ware, various household articles of japanned ware, etc. The iron is taken in the pig, and worked up into hundreds of shapes in these elaborate and well managed workshops. The molding rooms are very extensive, and the number of patterns immense. Many were molding in the old-fashioned way, by hand, while many others were using M. Godin's improved process, which I will attempt to give an imperfect description of. On a turn-table, perhaps fifteen or twenty feet in diameter, are six or eight molding frames or stands, about five feet long by two and a half feet in width and five inches in depth. In the bottom are permanently fixed a series of iron patterns for the different parts of stoves or whatever else may be required. On these a little ground plumbago or stove coal is sprinkled, and as the turn-table moves to a certain point the moistened molding sand comes down from a floor overhead, and fills the frame. I should say, before the sand is let in a man attaches to each pattern the apparatus that leaves the opening for the melted iron to be poured in. The turn-table moves again, and the frame goes under a press, and by the action of the machinery the sand is firmly pressed over and around the patterns; as soon as the frame moves another degree two or three men stand ready with spatulas or little trowels to make the openings where the iron is to be poured in, and the apparatus is removed which connects with the patterns. A large crane then takes the entire frame, sand and all, and lifts it from the part to which the patterns are attached, all dust, etc., is brushed away, and that frame is then attached to another to correspond, prepared in a similar way, and when fastened together by a simple arrangement another set of men pour in the melted iron, and the castings are made. As soon as the iron has become cold enough, which is but a short time, another crane lifts the double frame to a large table, with slats or bars a little way apart, for a top. Here three or four men take the clasps off the frame, the sand is broken up and falls through the bars to a wide endless apron which takes it to the floor overhead, where it is passed through a sieve or riddle, by machinery, ready to descend again upon other molding-frames. In a shorter time than I use in telling this, half a dozen of these frames are filled, manipulated, molded, adjusted, cast, the castings picked out of the sand with tongs for the purpose, and, as soon as they become cold enough, are taken in cars on a little track to another part of the establishment to be cleaned and finished. The adjusted frames, the permanent patterns, the turn-table, the fires, the sand being taken up and sifted by machinery, this altogether is a great labor-saving arrangement, and facilitates the work very much, and makes it light for the workmen. All the lifting and heavy work is done by the engine. The turn-table moves about the sixth part of a circle each time, and just the right number of hands attend to each branch of the business, so that as the turn-table makes its regular circuit each share of the work is done just at the proper time, just as the sprinkling of the sand is done, and the due amount of pressure applied. It seemed like "clock work," and was interesting to witness. This invention is of great value to the establishment, and I think it could be introduced into some of our American foundries with benefit.

The works consist of many large rooms, two hundred feet in length, some of them, and in all of them constant industry seemed to be the rule. The men were working as though they felt that they had an individual interest, as they have, to get as much performed as possible. But little talking is done by them, and that in a low voice. In the cleaning department, and other branches where suitable, were many women at work with the men, and they seemed just as industrious as the men. True, the work is rather black and dirty for women, but the branches they attend to are not very hard. They wore dresses suited to the work, and I was told they were paid the same wages that were paid to men for the same services. In packing up the smaller articles for market the women were employed, and can do it as well as men.

The enameling room was quite interesting. The wares and articles to be enameled are put into an oven and brought to a red heat, when they are taken out with long iron forks, and the glazing material, composed of finely-powdered flint glass, lead, etc., is sprinkled on, and the articles are again replaced in the oven. I think this process is repeated. The glazings are of different colors, as desired, and when completed they look very pretty. Light articles of hollow ware, basins, mantles, fireplace pieces, etc., are the articles glazed and colored.

The whole establishment, having twelve hundred workmen all busily engaged, seemed a perfect beehive of industry, and all looked happy and contented. A more peaceable, quiet, industrious set of men and women I have never seen, and I am glad to say they are doing a flourishing business. The sale for their wares has greatly increased; they have orders from all parts of France and the adjoining countries, more even than they can fill. I learned that orders were in hand that would require some months to fill. It is a very extensive business that is being done there, and something like a quarter of a million francs in profit is made by the association.

After seeing the shops we visited M. Godin's garden. As I am interested in all the gardens, I was particularly so with this. He has in it a large variety of flowering plants, ornamental plants, fruit trees, etc. It is well laid off and is a pleasant place to pass an hour.

We also visited the nursery—that is, the baby nursery. It consists of two good-sized rooms where babies from a few months old to a year or two of age are kept through the day and returned at night to their mothers. A sufficient number of nurses are delegated for this purpose to give the babes all due attention, and the mothers can visit them during the day as desired. None are required to send their babies to the nursery unless they choose to do so. It certainly relieves them from a great deal of trouble, and the babies are well taken care of. It was curious to see the arrangement for the little cradles, thirty or forty in all, arranged in rows and duly numbered, each child bearing a certain number. The beds for the little fellows are made of bran; this is put loose in the bottom of the cradles, and when necessary to be renewed it is taken out and disposed of and more clean bran substituted. A cloth is placed over it, so the child does not come in contact with the bran. The babies all looked clean and healthy, but I presume some of the little fellows were getting hungry and tired, for I noticed they were able to use their lungs with considerable force, and that is a very fine provision of nature; crying strengthens the lungs as well as other parts of the system; it is a necessary exercise for the miniature men and women. If they did not cry they would be feeble and puny.

In another department of the nursery were children from two to four years of age. This is conducted on the plan of a kindergarten school, and a rudimentary course of education is blended with the exercise. Here the little boys and girls are looked after through the day, and here they learn the alphabet and how to spell simple words. The children still older have suitable playgrounds, where we saw them exercising in various ways, sportive and happy.

The children from seven to fifteen attend school in a regular schoolhouse, apart from the little fellows, where boys and girls attend together. We saw them return from school at the close of the day; they march in two columns, side by side, boys in one and girls in the other, singing a lively air as they march along. Inside the dwellings are courts, say fifty feet or more square, inclosed by a glass roof. The children march into these courts according to the part of the large establishment in which they live, then arrange themselves in rows, complete their song, and repair to their respective homes. Everything seems to move like clockwork without jarring or clashing. In the morning the children, when schooltime comes, gather into their courts, sing a song, and in time to their own music march in the same order, boys and girls side by side, to the schoolhouse. Mrs. Bristol, who has been a schoolteacher, informed me that she had never seen a body of children more proficient in their studies or any better behaved than these children of the Familistere.

The rooms occupied by each family are in proportion to the needs and tastes of the individual families. The buildings are so arranged that rooms may be had according as required. Some suites are more desirable than others, and command a higher price. The rooms on the upper floor are less desirable than those lower down, consequently they are cheaper; so every family can rent such rooms as they prefer, just as people do elsewhere, only paying in proportion to what they have. If any prefer to live in some other part of the village in place of the Familistere they are at liberty to do so. A small number avail themselves of this liberty, though by far the greater number prefer the Familistere, finding it more economical and pleasant. Water is taken into each hall, and places provided for emptying the waste water. Necessary rules for cleanliness of course have to be observed. So far as I saw, the entire establishment appeared clean and orderly. People soon learn to adapt themselves to the requirements, and seem to show a disposition to do that which will prevent their being disagreeable to their neighbors.

It would seem that the establishment must be crowded, and too compact for comfort, but they have a plenty of air and room for exercise. Each story or floor has a wide piazza running around the entire court, and there is no necessity for collision. Here they can walk and exercise to their heart's content. They are not as much crowded as are the average tenement houses in New York. But I apprehend this manner of life would not suit all tastes. I must say, however, that the members of the association seem to be contented, and it is very seldom that one withdraws. If they are immoral or misbehaved they can be expelled from the association by the votes of a majority of the members. Candidates for admission are also acted upon in the same manner. None are admitted unless so decided upon by a majority.

M. Godin is the capitalist of the concern, and the men and women furnish the muscle or labor. The association is a partnership on this basis: The nominal capital is 4,600,000 francs. M. Godin assumes the position of manager and general director. A managing committee elected by the association assist him in conducting the business. The members of the association are divided into four classes, called associes, societaires, participants, and interesses. All members twenty-five years of age who have lived in the family five years or more, and who can read and write, may, if they are owners of a share of the general fund amounting to not less than 500 francs, become associes. They have certain stipulated privileges, and are entitled to a larger share of the profits than the societaires, participants, or interesses. The societaires, like the associes, must reside in the Familistere and have been members of the association not less than three years. They must not be less than twenty-one years of age. Societaires have a larger share in the profits than either the participants or intresses. The participants are members who have been with the association not less than a year. They must be twenty-one years of age, but need not reside on the premises unless they prefer to do so. Such persons as have become owners of a share by the death of a relative, or otherwise, are entitled interesses, and have only a money claim on the association.

M. Godin receives for his services as general manager the annual salary of 15,000 francs, which is paid from the general fund of the association. In addition he receives interest on the capital he has invested in the enterprise (4,600,000 francs) at the rate of five per cent per annum. M. Godin could easily have received a higher rate of interest on his capital, but this low rate of interest is perfectly satisfactory to him. A certain sum, fixed by the committee, is set aside for the support of the sick, aged, and infirm, and their wives and children. I was informed that there are in the association at the present time two or three members too old and feeble to toil longer, and they receive a pension sufficient to sustain them. Every member, after toiling a certain number of years (I think thirty), is entitled to this pension.

Another fund, amounting to 20,000 francs yearly, is set apart for the purpose of educating the children of the members. It is obligatory upon all that their children have the proper time for education. No religious dogmas are taught in the schools.

A third fund is reserved for the payment of interest on the shares and certificates held by members. Again, ten per cent of the annual profits is reserved for a sinking fund.

After this the net profits are divided as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| Reserve fund, | per cent, 25 |
| Capital and labor, | " 50 |
| Capital is paid its division in cash, labor receives its division in credits in form of certificates called titres d'epargne, | " 75 |

The remaining twenty-five per cent is distributed in credit notes; twelve per cent goes to the manager; nine per cent to the other members of the managing committee, and two per cent to the members of a committee for managing certain internal affairs, called the Conseil de Surveillance. Two per cent is also set aside for rewarding any workmen who may have specially distinguished themselves, and for inventors. Thus the entire earnings are provided for.

HOW IT WORKS.

This system will perhaps be better understood by restating it as follows:

| | FRANCS. |
|---|---|
| The capital invested in the establishment | 4,600,000 |
| In the course of the year 1,100 workmen have been paid five francs per day each for three hundred working days, total, | 1,650,000 |
| Five per cent interest to M. Godin on 4,600,000 francs, | 230,000 |
| Net profits of the year amount to | 200,000 |
| These profits are divided thus: | |
| Reserve fund of twenty-five per cent, | 50,000 |
| Fifty per cent capital and labor, | 100,000 |

Capital being represented by 2,300,000 francs and labor by 1,650,000 francs, about six-sevenths of the 100,000 francs would be credited to labor and the other one-seventh paid over to capital. Capital would thus get about 14,000 francs and labor about 86,000 francs. The remaining twenty-five per cent would be divided by the manager, the committee, the inventors, etc., as stated.

The amount credited to each individual workman and employee of course depends upon the amount of the wages he earns and his social status as an associe, societaire, or participant. An associe earning 2,000 francs a year, for instance, would be entitled to a credit note of 150 francs. A societaire also receiving 2,000 francs wages would be credited by 100 francs, and a participant only 50 francs. It will be seen that M. Godin receives in cash a salary of 15,000 francs; interest on his capital, 230,000 francs; a share in the net profits, here supposed to have amounted to 16,000 francs; and is, moreover, as manager, entitled to a credit note for twelve per cent of said profits, say 16,000 francs more.

The sums credited to the workmen and employees gradually accumulate, so that the employees, too, become capitalists. At the end of twenty years it is estimated that the sums so accumulated will equal the amount invested by M. Godin, and that the workmen will thus become owners of the establishment.

The capital, 4,600,000 francs, is the estimated value of the entire establishment, together with another smaller establishment in Belgium, not far from this city.

A fine bathing house, with shower baths, plunge bath, or swimming bath, belongs to the establishment. During certain hours of the day it is reserved for the use of the men, and certain other hours for the women. No washing of dirty clothes is done in the dwelling rooms, but in the laundry or washhouse for the purpose.

Opposite the dwelling is a building called the theater, in which there is a stage, scenery, seats, etc., like any theater, and theatrical performances are occasionally held there. The members formerly got up amateur companies, but as it was found to interfere somewhat with their work it was discontinued.

The night we were there it was used by the brass band of the Familistere, who met there for practice. We stepped up, M. Godin, Madame Marie, and Mrs. Bristol with us, and listened to some very good music. Thus the men who two hours before we saw molding, cleaning, casting, etc., were now playing the cornet, the French horn, the clarionet, the bass viol, etc. There were some thirty members in the band. It seemed to me a very sensible way of passing a few hours in the evening. Those who prefer to read can do so. Besides this they have a lecture room, where lectures are listened to as often as the wishes of the association dictate.

I judge that the members of the association are a moral class. There is said to be no drunkenness among them, and an illegitimate child has not yet been born in the Familistere. I do not know where there is another community of the same size of which the same can be said in truth.

A store where the ordinary necessaries of life may be obtained a trifle above cost belongs to the association, and is patronized by the members. The purchases are made at wholesale prices by a committee for the purpose. They have no priests or spiritual teachers among them, but those who wish to attend the churches in the village are at perfect liberty to do so. M. Godin makes no effort to influence the religious notions of any of the members. It comes as near being a community of mental freedom as can easily be imagined. The majority, however, having been brought up in the Catholic church, still adhere to it.

M. Godin prefers in cases of death to have a secular funeral only, but if the friends of the deceased wish the services of a priest he does not object. A few weeks ago one of his own relations died, and he dispensed with the services of the priest at the funeral altogether. Each member who wishes it is entitled, upon the payment of a small sum, to the use of a piece of ground belonging to the association, of which they own nearly fifty acres, for a garden. Many avail themselves of this provision.

Take it all in all, I think it a very happy, industrious, and virtuous community M. Godin has certainly made his enterprise a great and practical success, quite beyond anything that has been accomplished by others in the same direction. This has undoubtedly been owing to the great ability and executive talent of the founder, and the deep, persistent, and unfailing faith he has all the time had in the ultimate success of the undertaking. There is not, perhaps, one man among ten millions so well calculated for such on enterprise as is M. Godin. He has not been actuated by a sordid, selfish principle to benefit himself alone, but has been moved from the first by the high and holy purpose to do good to his fellow-men.

It is thought he has had many disadvantages to labor under at Guise that he would not have had to contend with at many other places. First, the people of the town, though he was establishing a very considerable industry among them, threw every obstacle in his way possible. Second, he was not on a general thoroughfare, and his freights on the iron for his use and on his wares when made are much heavier than they would be in many other localities. Third, his members are not from an intelligent, enlightened, thinking class. In fact, they might be called the ignorant, stupid class, not quick to perceive the advantages to be gained from coöperation, but they are slowly changing and gradually becoming better enlightened. Mrs. Bristol gives it as her opinion that M. Godin is decidedly the greatest and ablest man she ever became acquainted with. He is a scholar of no mean ability, and has written and published several works on Socialism and coöperation. A paper devoted to the same cause is published by the association, and Mr. Godin contributes largely to it. The editor, M. Chambly (or something near that), is an intelligent gentleman, speaking English with some difficulty, however. He paid us very polite attention and showed us through the workshops, etc.

Our visit to the Familistere was an interesting one, and I hope many similar institutions may be established in many other places and prove equally as successful. M. Godin has worked out a problem in coöperation of great use to mankind, and it is to be hoped many will profit by it and go and do likewise.

The question arises in my mind as to how far such an enterprise may be successful in America. Coöperation and a united effort and interest have many advantages over individual effort, and of course there are also some disadvantages and drawbacks. Our people are restless, impatient of control, and decidedly selfish. Whether a Familistere could be successfully managed with the average American I am not by any means certain. If this selfishness and restlessness could give place to earnestness, unceasing enthusiasm, and willingness to work for our brothers and sisters of humanity, I should indulge in great hopes of success. Let hopes be indulged in by all. Mrs. Bristol came to France to especially inform herself as to the actual workings of the enterprise, and she is highly pleased with what she has seen and learned. She will return to America well posted on the subject of coöperation, and will undoubtedly lecture upon the subject. Connected with her are persons deeply interested in the same subject, and it is to be hoped some noble minds, with necessary pecuniary ability, may be interested in the cause and do in America what M. Godin has accomplished at Guise.

On Friday morning of the 27th we left Guise for Brussels, leaving Mrs. Bristol and Mrs. E. B. Foote—who will join her at Guise—to follow in a couple of days. We were detained two or three hours again at St. Quentin and arrived at Brussels at about 6 1-2 P. M. The country all along from St. Quentin is of the same beautiful, highly cultivated character as that we had seen before, with perhaps some increase in the hight of cultivation reached. We came to the frontier of Belgium at Erquelles, where we changed cars and were subjected to the usual Custom House overhauling of baggage, to see that we had nothing contraband in our possession.

Belgium, called here and by the French Belgique (pronounced Belgeek), is a small country, containing about 11,400 square miles (about one-fourth the size of the state of New York), and sustaining a population of 5,000,000—250 people to the square mile—and, after China, is said to be the most densely populated country on the earth. It is almost entirely a continuous garden, and almost every foot of land is in a state of high cultivation. The Belgians are truly an industrious, thrifty, talented people, and probably manage to get about as much happiness out of existence as any people in the world. For a Catholic country I think it may be called one of the most prosperous in Christendom. The inhabitants are made up of three nationalities, the French, Dutch, and Germans, the first predominating. The language spoken is usually French, though it may be called a patois, not a pure French, and partaking in some degree of the languages of Holland and Germany. Belgium was formerly united with Holland, and the two were the Flanders of a few centuries ago. The lines hav often been changed; war has had much rule here in the times when war was more common; and often has this small, rich country changed owners, belonging first to one government and then to another.

Fifty years ago a revolution took place, and Belgium separated from Holland and had a king of her own, Leopold I. He passed away, Leopold II. had his time, and now Leopold III. is upon the throne—a tolerably amiable, harmless, useless sort of fellow, but one whom it costs the Belgians a good deal of money to support. But these Europeans think there is nothing like royalty, and they hug it to their hearts like a choice treasure.

Upon arriving in Bruxelles, as it is written in France and here, we called first on Dr. Cæsar De Paepe, the Secretary for the English-speaking delegates to the Freethinkers' Congress. We met with a very cordial reception from him, and found him a genial gentleman and an excellent scholar. He has distinguished himself in medical science, and stands high with the people of Brussels. We took supper with him and his interesting family, after which we looked around town and took rooms here in the Nouvelle Cour de Bruxelles, which, I believe, means the New Court of Brussels, the building in which the Congress is to be held, so we will be handy on the ground.

In the evening the committee on organization held a meeting, which we were invited to attend, and met with another very kind reception. Nine of the committee were present, among whom were Dr. De Paepe, M. Nicholas Goffin (President), D. Brismee, A. Vancanbergh (Secretary), N. Coulon, Ch. De Buyger, A. Standart, and others. An hour or two were passed as pleasantly as could be expected where one language is not spoken in common. Dr. De Paepe speaks English, but not fluently; President Goffin speaks it some also, but the others do not. I wish Stephen Pearl Andrews would hurry up that universal language of his, so we need not always labor under such difficulties.

We arose in good season this morning, and as our room fronts on the street we were interested in looking at the movements of the people. We especially noticed the great number of dog-carts that are in use. I think we must have seen a hundred of them before breakfast going in all directions, generally under the drivership of women and lads, though occasionally men. I was surprised to see what big loads they managed to get along with. They had all kinds of loads, though I think more were in the milk trade than anything else, two or three big cans of milk usually making a load. I saw some with loads of cabbages, etc., half as large as a horse could draw.

I do not know that I disapprove of making the dogs work. As a general thing they are nearly a useless animal, and if they can be made to earn their living in an honest way I have not the slightest objection. There are hundreds of thousands of dogs in America which might well be employed in some useful occupation. I see no reason why horses, asses, and mules should be made to work constantly and dogs allowed to go scot-free. Give the dogs a chance to be industrious; let them work their way through the world as honest men, women, horses, asses, and oxen have to do. The little donkeys, not much larger than some dogs, are also common here. The poorer people wear wooden shoes largely, and the way they go clattering around is funny.

Brussels is a beautiful city, and is probably more like Paris than is any other city in Europe. Had I not seen Paris I could readily have believed it to be the most beautiful European city. But though it is called "the second Paris," and "Paris in miniature," it still falls far short in extent and magnificence of the French capital. Brussels contains about 200,000 people, while Paris has 2,000,000. Brussels is the capital of Belgium, and is the largest city in it. The style of the buildings is much after the manner of Paris, only they by no means reached the point gained in that larger and wealthier city. The buildings here are of the same light-colored stone, and are usually four, five, and six stories high. The roofs are very steep, and almost invariably of the red or black tile. The streets are clean, but not as smoothly paved as those of Paris. I see very little of the asphalte pavement here.

The city is situated on the river Senne a stream of no great consequence. It is divided into the upper and lower town, the fashionable world taking possession of the former, and the merchants and tradespeople the latter. The more modern portions of the city are well laid out, but in the older part the streets are narrow, crooked, and irregular. The higher and newer part is not less than a hundred feet above the lower or flat part. The ground is not quite so favorable for a city as is Paris. The older part of the town is crowded with narrow thoroughfares, abounding with houses of the ancient Flemish type. The shops or stores are numerous, and many of them very attractive. Like the stores in Paris, they seem small to a New Yorker, but are neatly arranged.

The history of Brussels dates back to the seventh century, when St. Géry built a castle on the island of that name, formed by the Senne, which Otho II. inhabited in the tenth century. The manufacture of cloth and firearms raised it to prosperity in the fourteenth century, and from that time to the present it has nearly always been a prosperous city. In common with all this country it has been the scene of many vicissitudes. It was besieged and taken by the English in 1213; by Philip of Cleves in 1488; bombarded by the sacrilegious Marshal Villeroi in 1695, who demolished the churches, and over four thousand dwelling-houses, besides, again, in 1708, by the elector of Bavaria; and by Marshal Saxe in 1746. The treaty of 1814 made it one of the capitals of the Netherlands, and when at length the separation took place in 1830 of Belgium from Holland, Brussels became the capital and the seat of government.

Probably the most bloody and cruel time ever seen by Brussels and Belgium was when that cruel, merciless Christian tyrant, the Duke of Alva, in 1567, roamed over this fair land like a wild beast with his murderous army, putting thousands to death because their belief did not quite tally with that prescribed by the established church. Many were thus put to death in this vicinity, and ten thousand artisans from this city alone were driven to seek refuge in hospitable England, from whence the larger portion of them never returned, thus England gaining largely by what Belgium lost. The citizens of Brussels are proud of the institutions of their ancestors, and there are still existing here many admirable foundations and corporations which had their origin in the middle ages. Counts Egmont and Horn, those distinguished heroes, for opposing the power of the religious king of Spain, were executed and met their fate here. The cruel policy, of which this deed was one example, has left an indelible, horrible blot on the execrable memory of Philip II. and his bloody, tyrannous general, the Duke of Alva. A splendid monument formerly stood here to the memory of the martyred heroes, directly in front of the ancient Broodhuis (Bread House), or Maison du Roi, from the windows of which the ferocious human tiger, Alva, grimly gazed on the sickening tragedy. It is thought and hoped the monument will be restored; but the church is so strong here it looks discouraging, and it may wholly prevent the restoration of any monument commemorative of its own heartless, bloody cruelty and oppression. Goethe, in his "Egmont," does full justice to the churchly scenes enacted here.

Yes, the church is powerful here. The Catholic power is almost unlimited. The priests—and the country is full of them—are paid by the government, and the churches are also furnished by the state. A great work has to be done here before this is a free country in a religious point of view. But here are a brave band of Freethinkers, and they are steadily and wisely pressing on to the great work before them. They do not expect impossibilities, but they do hope and expect to make gradual inroads upon the power of the pope and his minions, who for centuries have been the great incubus—the curse of this beautiful country.

There are many points of interest in Brussels—much to be described. I have spent several days in sight-seeing here, and have been highly pleased; but before going into a general description of the same I will in my next give a brief account of the Freethinkers' Congress, the main object which brought us here.

Believe me, dear friends, I bear you in constant remembrance.

D. M. B.

---

THE third Annual Convention of the New England Anti-Death League meets in Science Hall, 718 Washington street, Boston, Mass., Sunday and Monday, Oct. 17th and 18th, three sessions daily. Dr. B. T. Clarke, A. D. Wheeler, Moses Hull, Angela T. Heywood, C. M. A. Twitchell, Dr. J. H. Swain, J. W. Stillman, Prof. A. P. Barnes, E. H. Heywood, and other speakers expected.

Communications.

"And Ever the Right Comes Uppermost."

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The fact that Col. Ingersoll has withdrawn from the Liberal League is out, and the telegrams of Saturday night and Sunday hav "gone and done it." Indeed, the Colonel had hardly concluded to hang by the bias of the politician and lawyer, and part company with the agitator and reformer, before the fact was known in Boston, and an editorial (the one I send) "got up" for the morning issue of the Sunday Herald. Quick work! but then this is a fast age, particularly when and where interested parties hav control of the wires. Since then the "Associated Press" has added a few details, but the truth and the whole truth of Col. Ingersoll's issue, it is hoped, will appear in the columns of The Truth Seeker.

Passing the minor reports, the following is worthy of attention for its lack of intelligence and its attempt to make capital for Comstock & Co. The association of the Boston Herald with some of the most selfish and cowardly phases of conventional cant and commonplace is not new, but to hav such a man as Col. Ingersoll complimented by such a sheet on the score of his "moral and religious opinion" is a surprise. "Morals" and "religion" in the pulpit and other party places may hav a conventional fitness, and thoughtful hearers and readers excuse the "overdone" part on the score of habit, professional duty, and such other make-shifts as come to the mind of the charitable and the merciful, but for the Herald to put on such airs is simply disgusting, and can hardly fail of reminding Col. Ingersoll of the broad and commanding Liberalism that characterizes the consistent reformer in contradistinction to the political trimmer and the party hack. But here is the article entire, an article entitled to the bad pre-eminence of containing more falsehood and cant than common, even in the columns of the Herald, and that means "muchly:"

The action of Col. Bob Ingersoll in withdrawing himself from the National League shows an independence on his part that is in every way commendable. By their unreserved condemnation of what are commonly known as the Comstock laws, the Liberal organization, and the Liberals individually, hav brought themselvs and their cause into contempt. We are quite willing to admit that, in his enforcement of the law, Mr. Anthony Comstock has far exceeded the spirit of the statute, and has sometimes acted as though his function was to suppress literature which bore hardly upon the doctrins of Christianity. In thus doing he has made a grievous mistake, and we should be the last to uphold him in such a course. But the members of the Liberal League make no such discrimination. Because Mr. Comstock has in a few cases acted unwisely, therefore his whole work should be condemned, is the way they argue. Because one of their number was put in jail for circulating through the mails literature much too feeble to be dangerous, they cry out for a repeal of a law which is indisputably wise in preventing the free circulation of all manner of articles and literature of a filthy and debasing character, wholly designed to corrupt youthful minds. Col. Ingersoll, whose devotion to his own children is known, has, on this account, a tender regard for the children of others; and this accounts for his unwillingness to be, even in theory, a party to the removal of restraints which certainly prevent the commitment of lasting injury to them. When the use of the mails has been so far taken advantage of that it is no longer safe for the principals of schools for young women to giv out catalogs containing the names of their pupils, it is absurd to say that the danger is an imaginary one. If a man of Col. Ingersoll's moral and religious opinions could be obtained, who would take upon himself the work of executing the law, we should hav much more faith in its proper administration than we now hav, when the executiv power rests in other hands. But, in striking a balance, the good obtained so far outweighs the evil that we are willing to excuse quite a little undeserved persecution on the part of Mr. Comstock. By driving Col. Ingersoll out of the League, the Liberals hav shown themselvs false to their name. Liberality is not license, but this is what, in one way, would be secured by the total repeal asked for of the Comstock laws.

The best answer to this systematic misrepresentation will be a full report of the proceedings of the Congress itself, but it may be well to remind your readers that Mr. Bush, of Washington, has put on file in the columns of The Truth Seeker all that is necessary at present to correct the most prominent falsehood in the above. Mr. Bush is attempting to convict Mr. Wakeman of logical inconsistency, and adds, "Mr Wakeman spoke of that society [the Society for the Suppression of Vice] with a tenderness and respect the converse of his present denunciations of the administration" (Truth Seeker, Sep. 4, 1880). The Herald says, "The Liberal League makes no such discrimination."

The fact is, the controversy, with the Herald, turns on political interests, and that just now means support the existing government and the Republican party, and all the more in this case, as the political significance of the Liberal League in the impending campaign has not been lost sight of. Indeed there is something more than commonly suggestiv in the sameness of attitude and the line of argument used to support it in the articles of W. S. Bush and in the speeches of Col. Ingersoll; and both were understood by not a few Liberalists in the East to foreshadow the policy Col. Ingersoll would urge on the consideration of the incoming Congress. That it was talked up and agreed upon as a line of policy is not asserted, but it would not be difficult to show that Col. Ingersoll intended from the first to make the policy of the Liberal League Republican—if he was to be identified with it. That he failed, and has left, will therefore surprise none acquainted with the management of the Cincinnati Congress.

A large class, however, not identified with the Liberal League, not particularly interested in the issue of "repeal," will look with attention to find how far Mr. Ingersoll's future conduct as a politician will agree with the policy of the Herald when it strikes a "balance" in favor of Comstock & Co., for the power of example is well known and fully appreciated. Ever since the days of Pythagoras it has been said and sung,

> "Evil habits form by unseen degrees,
> As lakes form rivers, and rivers run to seas."

And Col. Ingersoll is not beyond the reach of such inference, his "moral and religious opinions" to the contrary notwithstanding.

In reaching this conclusion there is no intentional disrespect to Col. Ingersoll, nor need there be. It is not the first time in the world's history that good men differed about policy, nor will it be the last; but the noticeable fact always is that some one grows strong, heroic, and consistent just in proportion as others become timid and unequal to the issue. Bolingbroke, Hume, and Gibbon were conservativ, but Wilkes, Paine, and Bradlaugh are radical in politics no less than religion. In France, as in England, the law holds good; and just in proportion as Louis Blanc insists on prudence there will appear a Gambetta to demand justice and plead for reform. A Holyoake may become overcautious, but a Bradlaugh will become correspondingly bold, and the essential and radical truth will grow into favor with the more thoughtful and truth-discerning members of society.

Therefore, Liberalist, whosoever or wheresoever you may be, be of good cheer. Ingersoll may decline the proferred honor of showing himself the grand man and the heroic leader the occasion calls for, but that is his misfortune. Reform had become a power in the land before the Colonel left his law office, and reformers will not be less faithful to the issues of the times though he should return to it. The Herald will continue to "blow hot and cold" so long as it can get a living by playing the "independent;" but the real reformer and radical thinker will ever and always demand the repeal and abolition of all laws and usages opposed to the reign of justice and the growth of true civiliza tion.

Co-operativly, J. H. W. Toohey.

Chelsea, Mass.

What Is Truth?

No interrogation is of larger consequence than "What is truth?" The object of all scientific investigation is to find the truth. Imagination and faith may build castles in the air, and even cities, and pave those cities with gold and silver, and embellish their gates with pearls, diamonds, and precious stones. What a place to liv! How glorious to drink of the sweet waters of that crystal river that issues from a mountain of light, and eat of the luscious fruit that grows upon its banks. In hopes of such a city, who would not shout hallelujah? But my reverie is breaking. I look around and find myself environed by stubborn facts with which I am forced to grapple. My children are hungry, but neither fancy nor faith will feed them, and at last I am forced to inquire, What is truth?

Only what is demonstrable to the senses is known to be true.

Many truths doubtless exist in the universe beyond the possibility of our apprehension. We are morally bound to know only what is cognizable by the senses. Facts alone are the test of knowledge. All our knowledge of natural philosophy is drawn from discovered facts.

Truths are allowed to consist of three kinds—physical, moral, and metaphysical. Physical truths embrace the whole phenomena of nature. Moral signifies manner; good manners are good morals. The whole object of the civil law is justice, and therefore is moral law, the great cornerstone of which is, Do as you would be done by.

Meta is a Greek word, and signifies beyond. Physical is also a Greek word, and signifies substance—hence beyond-substance.

But as we know of no metaphysical facts, we must suppose them to agree both with physical and moral principles or we know nothing about them. Our metaphysic is our soul or spirit; and if it is a consciously existing entity, it must exist everywhere in the universe, or only somewhere. If the latter, then that where has extension, and that extension is divisible; extension and divisibility are properties of matter. We know matter only by its properties. If we cannot apply this rule to whatever exists, what do we know about it?

Religion comes under the head of metaphysics, and if what is claimed for it be true, that at the end of this short life we are to enter a state of eternal bliss or eternal woe, and that upon a question of fact, no question of this world can bear any comparison with it in importance. At every step we should ask, What is truth? In this inquiry my first question is, Can the innocent be justly punished? Mark, the question is not, Do the innocent ever suffer for the guilty? but, May punishment—pains and penalties—be justly inflicted upon the innocent?

The consideration of this subject involves the question of justice.

It will not do to assume that justice when applied to God means one thing, but another thing when applied to man. Justice is a principle, and must mean what our dictionaries say it means, or we are none the wiser for being told that God is just.

It is well known by the readers of history or the Bible that various religions existed thousands of years before Christ, as the Bible speaks of lords many and gods many. The Jews were forbidden to worship the gods of the land, near at hand or afar off. One of three things must be true—that God or man or the devil originated these religions. If man or the devil did it, one would think he was not quite totally depraved, for many good things were incorporated in them all. But if God originated them, they were what he wished them to be. It is assumed by standard theology that Adam and Eve were created perfect. It is reasonable to suppose that God made them as good as he could, unless he preferred a poorer article to a better one.

They had not lived long enough to learn much, as we hav no intimation that they had spent one night in the garden, and therefore what transpired must hav been in the first day of their existence. What time is that to learn a language and the ideas a language is designed to convey? They saw no impropriety in being naked, nor had they the least idea of right or wrong. Nor did God wish they should hav, for he had interdicted the fruit of the only tree in the garden that would giv them any knowledge of good and evil. But the snake or serpent thought it a pity that so nicely made and perfect people should remain so ignorant. Knowing God, and apprehending the facts in the case, supposing that God had left the garden on purpose to giv him a chance to tell them what he knew, he says to Eve: "This fruit won't kill you. God knows it will open your eyes and make you to be as gods, knowing good and evil." Now here is a question of veracity to be settled between God and the serpent. This will require at least three witnesses; first, the history of Adam and his race is sufficient proof that they didn't die in the day that they ate the fruit.

But it is said they did die in trespasses and sins. That is an afterthought. That is theology. God didn't think to put that in when he inspired the narrativ.

The second witness is Adam. He says his eyes were opened, and he knew he was naked, and God did not contradict him.

The third witness is God himself. He said, Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil.

The propositions of the serpent to Eve are therefore sustained by three unimpeachable witnesses.

The snake, for an animal, must hav been very sharp to hav learned a language in so short a time, and know so much of what God knew.

But it is said by preachers that a spirit called Satan, or devil, entered into the snake, and made him his medium, as spirits do nowadays, and so used the snake's speaking organs, which were better than his own. It is not intimated that the snake had invited the devil to take possession of him, but it would be more natural to suppose, from what we hav heard of the old fellow, that he, a sub-infinit being, had just taken possession of him without leave.

But then there is another idea which conflicts with this, for it cannot be possible that God would inflict curses on a medium. He could but be passiv in the hands of a semi-infinit being. Yet God did curse this snake, causing him to crawl on his belly all the days of his life, and his posterity after him. But did this snake sin? Did he violate any known law? Had God ever told him he must hav no conversation with those people? Unless God did tell him so, or something like it, the snake did not sin; for sin is a transgression of the law, and where there is no law there is no transgression. So God punished or cursed him simply for telling Eve the truth, the result of which was the knowledge of good and evil.

Old religions hav something in common, and each has some peculiarity which constitutes the difference between it and other religions, and constitutes its ism. So the Christian religion has its peculiarity which constitutes its "ism" or "ianity." The fall of man and his redemption by Jesus Christ constitutes the ism of the Christian religion. Morality is not Christianity. That is common to all religions.

With my motto before me I inquire, What is truth in this case?

Christian theology teaches us that by Adam's offense all mankind became totally depraved. This we learn by consulting the creeds of orthodox Christendom.

The church of England creed and that of the Protestant Episcopal and the various Methodist churches are very nearly the same: "Original sin standeth not in the following of Adam, but it is the corruption of the nature of every man, whereby he is of his own nature inclined to evil and that continually."

The Presbyterian church says: "Our first parents sinned in eating the forbidden fruit. By this sin they fell, and so became dead in sin, and wholly defiled in all the faculties and parts of soul and body. They being the root of all mankind, the guilt of this sin was imputed, and the same death in sin and corrupted nature was conveyed to their posterity. Original sin doth, in its own nature, bring guilt upon the sinner, whereby he is bound over to the wrath of God and curse of the law, and so made subject to death, with all miseries, spiritual, temporal, and eternal."

The above is the foundation-stone of Christianity, and teaches that Adam's offense not only made him guilty, but radically changed his physical, moral, and spiritual constitution.

Nothing in the narrativ intimates, nor has it ever been suggested by the clergy, that there was any particular quality in the fruit that produced so direful effects on Adam and Eve. The fruit did it, or something else did it. If the fruit did not do it, what was it that did do it? Would the guilt, per se, produce such effect? If it would, and did, would not every offense from that day to this produce like effects? Is it true that a violation of moral precept can vitiate and totally deprave the mental, moral, and physical constitution? Fathers and mothers, did you ever suppose that your little boy, for eating a prohibited fried-cake, became totally averse to all your wishes after that? Did you ever suspect his disposition worse after that than before?

Adam, in age, was a little boy, not more than a day old, knew nothing of right or wrong, of good or evil. Yet his crime was such that it degenerated, changed the very constitution of soul, body, and spirit, rendering his whole posterity, to the end of time, justly liable to eternal agonies. Is it possible for one moral offense to involve such a disaster?

Peter being accused of being a disciple of Christ, denied it, and on its being urged upon him, he swore he wasn't. Peter violated the law, "Thou shalt not lie;" second, he violated the law, "Swear not at all;" third, he committed perjury; he told a lie and swore to it. Does any theologian suppose that Peter became disqualified for a bishop in Jerusalem? Which was the worst—eating an infinit godfather's apple or swearing to a lie? Paul was educated a doctor of the law, and yet gave his consent to the murder of Stephen. Here were two men—a perjurer and a murderer. Were their natures corrupted, or were they so low they could sink no lower? Yet they became apostles. Which was most degrading—to swear falsely, to kill a man, or eat an apple, all being equally prohibited? A duty omitted is as criminal as an offense committed. If the offense of Adam, first, could hav no effect upon his physique, then all suffering resulted from the curse of God. Therefore man is what he is because God made him so. Can God create a being justly liable to his infinit wrath for an offense never committed? Is a man justly liable to judicial penalties for what he is by nature? It follows that Adam's offense was the occasion, and God's curse the cause, of all the depravity and suffering in this world and that which is to come.

After thousands of years of observation God concluded to provide some way by which he could rescind his unjust judgment and make man believe it an act of infinit mercy. And so he produced a baby, who is Christ the Lord. By all self-styled orthodox churches this child is called the Almighty and eternal God, making Mary the mother of God Almighty, he depending on her for being washed and fed and clothed.

What an idea for men of the nineteenth century to entertain! But so it is. This child came to redeem us from the curse of the law. This curse caused all the sickness, pains, anguish, starvation, wars, floods, tornadoes, fires, murders, and savagery of the world; it caused the teeth of lions and tigers, of bears and wolves, to grow sharp so as to tear other creatures to pieces; it caused the fish to devour their fellows; it caused strong talons to grow on the feet of eagles and hawks, and bent their bills to tear the flesh of lambs and chickens, and gave the chickens a relish for grasshoppers, bugs, and worms, and final death to all, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin. Oh, what a curse!

But Christ came to redeem us from the curse of the law. When will he do it? Has he done it to any individual that the world knows of? Does anyone know of any man, woman, or child that has been saved from sickness, sores, pains, and that since the Christian era began? Take those who hav been rejuvenated, born of God, children of God, and, if children, then heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, old things having past away and all things become new (He that is born of God doth not commit sin, for his seed remaineth in him; and he cannot sin, because he is born of God), does anyone know of such a one ever being redeemed from the curse of the law? If not, what does the redemption amount to?

If, as the churches say, Christ hath made a full and sufficient satisfaction for the sins of the world, why should the world yet be prosecuted even unto death? Babes that never sinned, and children of God that cannot sin, are still suffering under the curse of the law. If no one is redeemed in this world from the curse of the law, what assurance has he for another?

A. B. PIKARD.

Extracts from Remsburg's Non-Credo Speech at Bismarck.

I do not believe in the faith that requires a father to burn his child upon a bloody altar. Extol the faith of Abraham and condemn that of Charles Freeman! O Consistency, thou art indeed a jewel! But then Christians will part with their jewels in order to propagate the gospel.

I do not believe that Jacob was ever permitted to ascend that ladder of his. A man that will deceive his old blind father, rob his brothers, cheat his uncle, and squander his son's mandrakes as he did, can't get to heaven even with a ladder.

I do not believe that "Moses was the meekest man that ever lived." The meekest man that ever lived did not boast of his own humility; the meekest man that ever lived was not the greatest robber of his age; the meekest man that ever lived did not butcher in cold blood twenty thousand grief-stricken widows; the meekest man that ever lived did not snatch innocent babes from the breasts of dying mothers and dash them to death against the earth; the meekest man that ever lived did not take thirty thousand sweet and tender girls and giv them over to the savage lust of a brutal soldiery. No, not until meekness and villainy became synonymous can I admit this fiendish monster's claim.

I do not believe that God used Balaam's ass for a speaking-trumpet. True, much of the Bible bears unmistakable evidence of having issued from a similar source, but don't mistake an ass's braying for the word of God.

I do not believe that Samson could hav slain a thousand Philistines with the jawbone of an ass, because I hav seen a thousand theological Samsons employ the same weapon without being able to slay one Phillistine.

I do not believe that a whale swallowed Jonah, but am rather inclined to believe that Jonah swallowed the whale. I accept this theory the more readily because I find so many men capable of swallowing both Jonah and the whale.

I do not believe, with an eminent divine, that "David is one of the grandest characters in all human history." Who is this saintly David? A vulgar braggadocio, using language to a woman the mere quoting of which sent George Francis Train to the Tombs; a traitor, desiring to lead an enemy's troops against his own countrymen; a thief and robber, plundering and devastating the country on every side; a liar, uttering wholesale falsehoods to screen himself from justice; a fiendish butcher, torturing and slaughtering thousands of men, women, and children, making them pass through burning brick-kilns, carving them up with saw and axes, and tearing them to pieces under harrows of iron; a polygamist, with a harem of twenty wives and concubines; a drunken debauchee, dancing half naked before the maids of his household; a lecherous old libertin, abducting and ravishing the wife of a faithful soldier; a murderer, having that faithful soldier put to death after ruining his home; a hoary-headed old fiend, foaming with vengeance on his dying bed, demanding with his last breath the death of two aged men, one of whom had most contributed to make his kingdom what it was, the other a man to whom he had promised protection. History does not furnish a more infamous character than this.

I do not believe it possible for society to be blessed with pure morals so long as it recognizes as its moral code a book which sanctions murder, theft, falsehood, drunkenness, adultery, and slavery, and which presents the most notorious villains as the highest models of human excellence.

I do not believe that a lie is any better for being inspired, that a vice becomes a virtue with age, or that a dead rogue is any better than a live one.

I do not believe in the doctrin of vicarious atonement. I do not believe that another's sufferings can mitigate my pains. How credulous must Christians be to rally round the blood-red cross of Christ, to suppose that a little blood can cleanse the earth from sin, when they admit that twenty thousand feet of clean rain-water failed to make it pure.

I do not believe in the doctrin of a change of heart, as popularly understood, because it affects none but the smallest hearts, and these it does not better. After protracted wallowings in the filth, undergoing the manipulations of a cunning priest, and suffering the most violent contortions, the "mourner's" heart becomes fearfully distended, and for a moment feels large enough to hold the world; but, like a bubble, it collapses, and there is left naught but a sordid, selfish, soulless being, whose chief occupation, henceforth, is laying up treasures above by levying tribute below.

I do not believe that damned, degrading doctrin of eternal woe. I do not believe that dimpled babes and loving women will roast in lurid flames, while their red-handed murderers, in linen shirts and tinsel crowns, parade the gold-paved streets of Paradise.

I do not believe in the efficacy of prayer. A bullet patch will come nearer clothing a man than forty yards of the best orthodox prayer. Who is this God, my Christian friend? Is he a being incapable of managing his own business that you must advise him what to do? or is he a roguish urchin taunting his hungry dog with a cold potato, and shouting, "Beg, Tray, beg!"

I do not believe that the iconoclast can be overwhelmed with such doleful exclamations as "our faith is gone," and "what are you going to put in the place of it?" A dead mule lies before your door, and the stench from its decaying carcass is becoming unbearable. The authorities discover it, and at once proceed to remove it. As they do so isn't it ridiculous in you to frantically rush into the street and exclaim, "What are you going to put in the place of that mule?"

I do not believe that Christians are aware of the real strength of Liberalism, or of the rapid progress it is making. The fact that Liberals do not think in herds, employ shepherds, and do a great deal of bleating, is no evidence of its weakness.

I do not believe in Christians manifesting such self-satisfaction in consigning Infidels to hell, particularly those Christians who are so prone to violate even the commandments of their own law; for should the doctrin of future rewards and punishments prove true, it may be that what a man does in this world is of as much importance as what he believes, that a reverence for the good, the true, and the beautiful, because it is right, is as meritorious as a professed reverence for the bad, the false, and the ugly, because it is fashionable; and that many who are so ready to thank God that they are not as other men hav less occasion for gratitude than they suppose.

I do not believe that Infidelity need blush for the deeds of her master spirits, while Christianity, with such complacency, parades her leading characters before the world. The reputations of Buddha, Confucius, Socrates, Seneca, Mohammed, Franklin, Humboldt, Lincoln, Comte, and Ingersoll will not suffer from a comparison with those of Abraham, Jacob, Moses, David, Paul, Constantine, Luther, Calvin, Laud, and Beecher.

I do not believe that the Christian millennium is yet to come, but that it has already passed. That dark blot on the page of history, that withering pall stretching across the centuries from Constantine to Luther, constitutes the thousand years of Christian rule foretold in the Apocalypse. But that has come and gone, and the power of Christianity is vanishing never to be restored again. From the ashes of that dauntless hero, Giordano Bruno, young science, phœnix like, arose, and in the soil prepared by Luther, sowed the seed whose harvest is her death. Even now I hear her death knell ringing; even now I gaze into a sepulcher where soon must lie her Bibles and her creeds, her stakes, her gibbets, and her racks; her gods, her devils, and her priests. And when the last hav been entombed, then gather up the bleached and crumbling bones of the one hundred million human beings who hav perished at her hands, and let this ghastly pile remain, a most befitting monument to her unbounded cruelties and crimes.

---

WHAT we want is to find out what every one is fit for, and to put them to that work which they naturally lean toward. There is a niche for every one; the trouble is that in dealing with people we want to drive them into lines and batallions by wholesale, instead of finding for everybody his natural place.

Prof. Robbins's Dream.

As I was plowing in the field one day in the month of May, the rays of the sun beat down upon me and my team so hard I was obliged to rest; and as my nerves calmed down I fell fast asleep; and as I slept I dreamt a dream; and behold I soared up into an imaginary heaven, in the presence of the orthodox God. There he sits upon a throne of nothing. He was about three feet thick and nine feet high. He had a crown of gold upon his head, and was robed in a white garment, with a black book and a white book, taking down the deeds of men. My vision grew keen, and I looked; and lo! thousands of angels floating to and fro promiscuously. Every one was like unto a beautiful young girl, with eagle's wings on the back of its shoulders. I did not see a wrinkle-faced old woman among them, neither did I see any with whiskers. I think there was only one kind there. And as I looked, lo! there was a street of solid gold. Thinks I to myself, this is the street of the new Jerusalem; thinks I to myself, I will take a walk along it. And as I traveled along the street I soon came to the big cow-pasture, where thousands of cows were being milked by perpetual motion, and the milk was flowing down a golden gutter. After looking for awhile I crossed over the way. I looked, and lo! there were thousands of bee hives. The bees were gathering honey from the never-withering flowers, in those extensiv fields of living green, and the honey was flowing down another golden gutter. Thinks I to myself, I must hav passed through death, for I hav awoke in a land where milk and honey flow. I rejoiced to think that I was so fortunate as to dwell in the presence of angels, where I could liv on such rich food forever. It is neither hot nor cold, never any sickness enters here, nor do thieves break through and steal. I will go back to my seat, for I do not want to return to the earth again.

And as I sat down I cast my eyes toward earth, and was about to say, Farewell, vain earth, with all thy sickness and sorrow, hypocrisy and superstition! when I was struck with surprise by observing a large funnel bottom side up. It was about six inches in diameter at the top, and it grew so large when it reached the earth that it covered the whole globe. Thinks I to myself again, What is this funnel for? and, being a little inquisitiv, I inquired of the Lord, and he answered and said: "That is for the prayers of all nations of the earth to come through. If it were not for that funnel they would spread out over the other planets so we could not hear them; for this is my seat. Now, Robbins, put your ear down and listen to it." This excited my curiosity and I put my ear to the mouth of the funnel. You may imagin my surprise when I heard the voice of men praying to God to make it rain, while others were praying for dry weather. Thinks I to myself another time, Which prayer will God answer? But I had no time to reflect, for I heard all the ministers of the North and northwestern states praying to God during the rebellion to assist us in the bloody work, calling aloud, "O Lord assist us in this great undertaking, that the victory may be ours, and the praise shall be thine, both now and forever. Amen!" But I had no time to reflect, for I heard all the ministers of the Southern states and the chaplains of the Southern army tell God that the Yankees were stealing away their property and burning their dwellings; "and we pray thee, O Lord, to let justice prevail in our nation. Stretch forth thy mighty arm and assist us in our great undertaking, that the victory may be ours, and the praise shall be thine, both now and forever. Amen!" Boom, boom, goes the cannon. I hear the beating of drums and the playing of bands of music. I hear the cracking of thousands of muskets, and the whistling of minie balls, and oh, what a chill of horror seized my frame when I heard the dying moan of my fellow-man! Oh, how I felt for the wickedness of man when I heard one army charging the other, with flaming eyes and vengeance in their countenances, calling upon God to damn their enemies' souls to hell, while the ministers in the background pleaded with God to take their side. I heard all the ministers of France and of Germany offering up the same kind of prayers during their bloody war. I heard all the ministers of Turkey and Russia doing the same. I heard thousands of Arabs worshiping God through Mohammed. I heard such a pandemonium that my pen fails to describe it. Thought I, I would not be God for the world. If I had five hundred children and they got into a quarrel over their little property, and being divided, both parties called upon me, their father, to assist them in their bloody work, I would say: "Children behave yourselvs. It is your love of money and your wickedness. Not I will assist in your bloody murders. You are all my children." But what are five hundred compared with millions upon millions that are daily calling upon him in a similar manner? I raised my head from the funnel in disgust and looked up. And the Lord said, "Robbins, what do you think about it?" "O Lord," said I, "I do not understand it." "Well," said the Lord, "did you hear that old grave-faced Deacon Jones asking my blessing on his dinner just now?" "Yes, Lord, I did," said I. "Well," said he, "I hav known him ever since he was a little boy, and nearly all the property he has he got by illegitimate means—by cutting cord wood three feet and nine inches in length and selling it for four feet; by putting the tailings of wheat in the middle of the sack and selling it for good wheat, and by putting rotten corn in the bottom of the wagon and the good on top." "Robbins," he continued, "I hav heard him tell his wife to put lots of salt in the butter, for salt was worth one cent and butter twenty-five. I hav seen him go to the railroad and get two or three rides on one ticket. Now, Robbins, the men that will rob the railroad company will plunder the stores at the midnight hour if it were not for the law. Take away the law, and Deacon Jones is a thief. Then he loans money at unlawful interest, although I gave instructions though Jesus Christ, my son, that he should not take usury money. The laws of the nation say he shall take but ten per cent, but he dodges the law by drawing a note for one hundred dollars and giving his neighbor only ninety dollars at ten per cent; and he goes to church and tries to work it off every Sunday in long prayers and hypocritical groans." This so excited my nervous system that I awoke out of my dream.

ISAAC L. ROBBINS.

Editorial.

Changeable Contemporaries.

The recent Congress of the National Liberal League has, as we expected, furnished the occasion for a number of editors of journals of assorted views to air their ignorance, which they hav proceeded to do with a promptitude to be commended or otherwise according to the predilections of the readers. Mr. Monroe of the Seymour Times (a paper which extensivly advertises itself—and correctly we are forced to believe—as having "few principles") says its (the League's) "purposes are not the purposes of intelligent, law-abiding, peaceable, moral people," a statement which we imagin calls for no comment on our part further than to say that the man who could write that sentence has an obliqity of his moral vision equal to the most advanced Christian or an editor of a "Free Religious" paper. Mr. Monroe wants no fellowship with the organization, which thrust is the more cruel as we hav never heard that the League yearned for him to any appreciable extent. Yet we cannot see why Dr. Monroe should object to the League asking for the repeal of a law of which only so long ago as last summer he wrote, "That the law under the operation of which Mr. Bennett suffers is unconstitutional no candid, intelligent, clear-headed man can doubt; nay, more, it is undemocratic, tyrannical, and odious."

The R.-P. Journal also comes to the front as the champion of morality. When the peculiar circumstances regarding the transplanting to spirit spheres of Mr. S. S. Jones, the former editor of the paper (and who it will be remembered bitterly denounced Mrs. Woodhull for being a Freelover) are called to mind the reason of this tergiversation on the part of the present editor is at once apparent. It also furnishes us a pair of scales in which to weigh his words.

But Mind and Matter must be awarded the palm for either culpable ignorance or malicious falsehood. In its issue of Oct. 2d we find this:

"We dare Messrs. Bennett, Wakeman, and Leland to publish the anti obscenity law in THE TRUTH SEEKER, and declare over their own signatures that they are in favor of its repeal, and so much so, that they will not affiliate as Liberals with those who insist that it is a most wise and proper law. These men hav never dared to publish the statute in question. If there is any part of that statute that is not proper, we ask these so-called Liberalists to point it out, quoting the word of the act to which they object. Mind and Matter is at their service. If they do not avail themselvs of our offer, or through THE TRUTH SEEKER, their organ, respond, we shall conclude that it is license they seek, and not liberty—licentiousness, and not the good of society."

If this had been the first time Gen. Roberts had uttered this remarkable "dare," we should, as we did on a former occasion, call it one of his mistakes, but as it is the second time we conclude he really believes it to be truth. It is needless to say that Gen. Roberts is not at present in favor of repeal. We wonder sometimes if he does not recall the letter he wrote to John A. Lant while that person was in Comstock's toils, in which occurred the vigorous and commendable expression that he (Gen. Roberts) should not rest until the law under which Lant was convicted was wiped from the statute books? Gen. Roberts has changed his mind since then.

But we will inform this changeable editor that in his zeal for morality he has made a slight error in supposing that the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER are not familiar with the statute in question. It was printed in the "Trial of D M. Bennett," of which a few thousand copies were circulated. It was printed in THE TRUTH SEEKER of November 24, 1877, in December 1, 1877, in January 19, 1878, in February 8, 1879; the obnoxious section in Judge Benedict's charge to the jury in April 12, 1879; as also the Massachusetts law, which is substantially the same, in April 12, 1879. And now to make it stronger we will reprint it here, and giv a few of our reasons why we ask for its repeal. We do not speak for either Mr. Bennett, Mr. Wakeman, or Mr. Leland, but we imagin their reasons are substantially the same as ours. Here is the law:

Chap. 186.—An act to amend sections 3893 and 3894 of the Revised Statutes providing a penalty for mailing obscene books and other matters therein contained, and prohibiting lottery circulars passing through the mails.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section thirty-eight hundred and ninety-three of the Revised Statutes shall be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"Every obscene, lewd, or lascivious book, pamphlet, picture, paper, writing, print, or other publication of an indecent character, and every article or thing designed or intended for the prevention of conception or procuring of abortion, and every article or thing intended or adapted for any indecent or immoral use, and every written or printed card, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement, or notice of any kind giving information, directly or indirectly, where, or how, or of whom, or by what means, any of the hereinbefore mentioned matters, articles, or things may be obtained or made, and every letter upon the envelope of which, or postal card upon which, indecent, lewd, obscene, or lascivious delineations, epithets, terms, or language may be written or printed, are hereby declared to be non-mailable matter, and shall not be conveyed in the mails, nor delivered from any post-office nor by any letter-carrier; and any person who shall knowingly deposit, or cause to be deposited, for mailing or delivery, anything declared by this section to be non-mailable matter, and any person who shall knowingly take the same, or cause the same to be taken, from the mails, for the purpose of circulating or disposing of, or of aiding in the circulation or disposition of the same, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for each and every offense be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned at hard labor not less than one yera nor more than ten years, or both, at the discretion of the court."

The reasons why we ask for its repeal are:

1. The Constitution givs Congress no right to legislate upon the morality of the matter transmitted in the mails.

2. These laws can be, and hav been, used to abridge the freedom of the press.

3. Every U. S. judge before whom alleged offenders may be brought has the power to define obscenity, and his definition must be taken by the jury. This places every book, paper, or person who may be arraigned, at the mercy of one man, whose ideas are always according to his religious convictions.

4. The government of the United States was never intended by its founders to be an inquisition for the regulation of the morals, or religious or social opinions of the people.

5. Having voted to carry books and papers through the mail, Congress has no right, moral or constitutional, to discriminate as to the literary contents of that book. If it may discriminate for a good purpose it may discriminate for a bad one, and the power is fraught with too much danger to be intrusted to an irresponsible body of men.

6. Obscenity is a vice (not a crime) which should be suppressed by the state governments, the same as theft is punished by them.

7. Under these laws the crime must be made by a decoy before it can be punished.

8. The power to suppress obscenity was not granted by the Constitution to the federal government, therefore it was reserved to the states. To legislate upon the subject is a usurpation of power by Congress. When Gen. Roberts can point out the grant by the Constitution to the general government to suppress indecency we will concede the Comstock law is constitutional, and not before.

9. These laws can never be reconciled with the clause that "Congress shall make no law abridging the freedom of speech or of the press; for they manifestly do abridge both. The moment a man or woman advocates social reform he is adjudged obscene, and if he sends his views through the mails he can be imprisoned.

10. Under these laws innocent men hav been imprisoned, while no guilty men hav been convicted who could not hav been punished under state laws in less time and with less expense to the government.

11. The municipal police can more readily reach and punish obsenity venders and illegal lotteries than the general government. Thirty-two arrests for selling lottery tickets were made in one month in this city by the police, while Comstock has done nothing that has been of practical use. His crusade against the Louisiana lottery only resulted in avertising that concern.

These are only a few of the reasons which might be given, any one of which of itself would be sufficient. The whole ground has been so often gone over in these columns that it seems to us superfluous to do so again. Even within the last few weeks Mr. Wakeman has republished his argument for repeal, and Mr. Bush has made no headway against him. It is sheer folly and braggadocio for Mr. Roberts to say THE TRUTH SEEKER has not published the law and the reasons why it should be repealed. If he had read the paper closer he would not now fall into such a palpable error, and if he had perused Mr. Wakeman's and Mr. Bennett's arguments, and was not so easily frighted by the bugaboo of obscenity, he would probably be of the same mind as he was when he wrote to Lant that he should not rest till the infamous law was wiped from the statute books.

---

IN another column Mr. Green givs his reasons for withdrawing from the League. They may be ample for him, but most of his premises seem to us false. For instance, he says the majority made the repeal question the test of fellowship, when it is Col. Ingersoll and himself who do so, they withdrawing when the majority passed the resolution. The League did not ask them to leave, and regrets their doing so. The League does not ask an intending member how he stands upon the question, but these two recalcitrant members will not stay unless the League muzzles itself. Mr. Green has the right to do as he pleases in the matter of going or staying, and his action will not with us detract from the esteem in which we hold him.

---

PROF. NATHANIEL PIERCE, Liberal lecturer and psychometric mind-reader, gave us a call the other day. He has not been lecturing much lately, but intends to enter the field again soon.

---

MRS J. H. HARTER has just published a neat poem called "True Religion." It has attached to it "Rhymes on Shakerism," by Mrs. Harter and Lizzie Morton. Price 10 cents. For sale at this office.

---

THE present book by Dr. Simms, on physiognomy, illustrated, we think, while propounding a system of character-reading altogether new, is the fruit of a mind highly moral, keenly perceptiv, logical, and well-ripened with extensiv travel and wide experience in dealing with the public for more than a quarter of a century. There hav been but few authors on this subject. Aristotle, Porter, Lavater, and Dr. Simms are about all the original writers worthy of mention, and as Dr. Simms is the only one of this number who has devoted a lifetime to this study alone, he therefore offers to the world the first system of physiognomy, elaborated and illustrated, in his large book, "Nature's Revelations of Character." The book is interesting reading, clear, thoughtful, and evincing great observation and study of all departments of life, and the forms in which it is domiciled. It is masterly in its treatment and should be in the hands of those who would know their friends and their natural enemies.—Chicago Journal.

This work is for sale by D. M. Bennett, 141 Eighth street, New York; Price, $3.00.

Communications.

The Censorship Further Displayed.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Mr. W. S. Bush, of Washington, D. C., has heretofore been the unexplained cause of many columns in your paper. The reason is that he was known to be the office associate and intimate of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll—that is, known to be the shadow of a mightier name. When, therefore, he volunteered in your paper as the champion of Comstockism and Garfield, Liberals knew that he was preparing the way for what did not occur at Chicago, and he was met accordingly. That the knight and the squire are one the result has proved. What one printed in your last number, and what the other said at Chicago may therefore be handled together as occasion requires without danger of "dividing the substance or confounding the person."

Mr. Bush has learned at last that I was not the counsel in Mr. Bennett's trial. Will he not inform the Colonel of that fact? At Chicago the latter thought it proper to say: "Let us remember that Mr. Wakeman is sore. He had a case before the federal courts, and he imagins, having lost that case, you cannot depend on them. I hav lost hundreds of cases." The Colonel was then in the "hitting business," and short of material, or he would not hav struck below the belt. The fact is, I hav never had nor defended a case of this nature in any court, and I never expect to. The public expressions I hav made on this subject seem to me to render it improper for me to act as counsel. Nearly a year before the Bennett trial I made the speech at Faneuil Hall, without any professional or personal interest in the matter whatever, and what I hav done since has been from similar motivs. True, I tried to befriend Mr. Bennett in his trial, and after, but I was not disarpointed at the result of that case, and hav no vindictiv feelings as to courts or persons on account of it. They were the mere instruments of the dangerous laws and influences it seems to me needful for freemen to oppose.

Mr. Bush tries also to make out that I must hav approved of state Comstock laws from some expressions in the Faneuil Hall speech. This is immaterial, but wholly untrue. In the law handbooks for justices of the peace in the Bay state I saw the laws about offenses of this kind and the forms of process for them. Afterwards—the winter after—the Hon. Elizur Wright told me how the Comstock laws had been smuggled through the legislature in his state. He said they were "laws that never should hav been passed, and never would hav been if the people had known anything about them."

The Colonel repeated this notion of Mr. Bush at Chicago, to the effect that the majority there accepted the state Comstock laws. I replied to that supposition on the spot, and pray the candid reader to refer to the report of my speeches in the last number of your paper as the end of that story.

Mr. Bush next undertakes to show that the United States Comstock postal laws are entirely innocent of censorship or interference with postal matter, and that I hav not told the truth about them. This makes it necessary for me to go over this wearisome and disgusting subject again, but I giv notice that this shall be the last time. For four years, Mr. Editor, you and I hav been copying and reprinting and distributing these laws, but every now and then some idiotic Rip Van Winkle of an editor wakes up and dares us to print those laws, utterly ignorant of what has been done and of the state of the controversy. Let them remember that the Comstock legislation referred to in the Chicago resolutions is partly state and partly United States legislation, and would now make not a small book of itself. It began in 1865.

But the leading acts of that legislation were passed March 3, 1873, and as amended form, §§ 225 and 226 of the Postal Laws and Regulations, which I quote, and which are appended to my Faneuil Hall speech, and are always sold with it.

These laws hav been extended to lotteries, frauds, gift concerts, and letters "misusing the post-office establishment," whatever that may mean.

In my former letter, to which Mr. Bush excepts, pages of these laws were quoted showing that they were planned so that by virtue of them and the inspection required by them all postal matter was thrown open to inspection and so placed within the control of the postal officers and agents.

This was shown by proving that certain objectionable or suspected postal matter was made by them to be "unmailable and not to be conveyed in the mails nor delivered from any post-office nor by any letter carrier" (§ 225 P. L. and R).

Then I proved by citations that every law that would otherwise protect the mails and make them inviolable has a fatal exception which obligated the postal officials to inspect all matter to find that this suspected and so called non-mailable matter was not there. Then I showed that the official on his inspection and judgment was compelled to confiscate this matter. Thus the inviolability of the mails had been made a myth by these laws.

Mr. Bush does not answer these proofs at all, but merely quotes two instructions from the Postmaster-General to local postmasters not to hold "first-class matter as unmailable merely on suspicion" (§434), and that the "sanctity of seals is inviolable" (§530). Those instructions, instead of disproving, are only cautions to the local postmasters not to go too far and be too rash in their espionage, and so really admit it.

The very book Mr. Bush held in his hand more than sustains all I said. Can his omission to refer to the sections I shall now quote be reconciled with "honor bright?" Let us see.

By §§ 225, 226, 1,246, 455, the objectionable matter above alluded to is declared "non-mailable, and not to be conveyed in the mails nor delivered at all."

But who is to determin what is objectionable, and who is to find it? In the Jackson case it was held that the postal officials should do it "on their own inspection." See the laws and opinion annexed to my Faneuil Hall speech (page 51), obtainable at THE TRUTH SEEKER office. Price ten cents.

The local postmaster is required to do this at his peril; he must do it under danger of a severe penalty. He is bound to decide whether matter is obscene or fictitious, or whether it relates to lotteries, gift concerts, or fraudulent schemes or devices, or misuses the mails for

Section 228 provides that "postmasters will be expected to rigidly exclude from the mails any and all of the articles enumerated in §225; and the Department will hold them accountable for any dereliction of duty respecting the plain provisions of that section. Whenever a postmaster is in doubt as to whether a publication, print, picture, pamphlet, book, or writing comes within the statute, he will submit the same to the First Assistant Postmaster-General and await his instructions." And note further that

Sections 230, 455, 475, provide that the matter in question should be "sent to the dead-letter office at once," even that "which through inadvertence of the postmasters at the mailing place reaches the post-office of destination should be withheld from delivery and at once be sent to the dead-letter office," to be examined there, as Mr. Bush reminds us, under laws as old as 1810, and killed.

How this return is to be made is prescribed by §§ 431–433, and 441–443. The matter is "not to be advertised," nor is notice to be given to the sender. It is simply confiscated without notice or law by this censorship. It must be done, for, by § 1,253, if any postmaster fails in his duty in this subject he is liable to be held as "aiding or abetting the sending of improper matter," and shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall for every offense be punishable by a fine of not less than $100, and not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment at hard labor for not less than one year nor more than ten, or both."

These provisions apply to all printed matter, and if it is not espionage and a censorship with a vengeance, what could be?

Now as to the opportunity to apply this censorship, Mr. Bush says it is "alone at the place of delivery," but by § 182, other than first-class matter—that is, all matter except letters—"must always be open for examination, so that the contents of each package may be easily examined." Also

By § 209, "Matter of the second class may be examined at the post-office of mailing, and if found to contain matter which is subject to a higher rate of postage, such matter shall be charged with postage at the rate to which the inclosed matter is subject." Also

By § 266, "Postmasters at the office of delivery may remove the wrappers and envelopes from mail matter not charged with letter postage when it can be done without destroying them for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is upon or connected with any such matter anything which would authorize or require a higher rate of postage thereon." So the opportunity to inspect is abundant. But further,

By § 436 it is expressly provided that the matter in question "should be detained by any postmaster into whose hands it may fall," and be sent to the dead-letter office.

So printed matter is open to inspection at the beginning and end of the route and during its transit, and can be condemned at any time without notice to the owner and without judge or jury, Mr. Bush to the contrary notwithstanding!

Now let us see how it works in practice. Dr. E. B. Foote writes me as follows:

"In 1875 the postmaster at Chicago refused to mail my work, "Medical Common Sense," for the Chicago publishers. He declared it was objectionable and unmailable under the United States postal laws. I had to send a gentleman to Washington to the Postmaster-General to hav the matter corrected. The matter was referred to two assistant postmasters, and notice was finally sent to the Chicago postmaster to allow the book mail facilities. This book has never been debarred from the mails in Germany or England, and thousands of them hav been sold in London and Berlin."

In my former letter I referred to a late case where THE TRUTH SEEKER is now retained in the same way. Suppose this censorship of two "assistant postmasters" had decided adversely to Dr. Foote—it all hung on a breath, or the flop of a penny—that would hav been ruinous to him. He would hav lost the right of publication in the United States, to which the mail is indispensable, and would hav had his property totally destroyed without any constitutional trial or remedy whatever.

When Col. Ingersoll's "dear brother in the Lord," Garfield, is in the Presidential chair, will Dr. Foote or THE TRUTH SEEKER be safe before their postal censors? No one can tell.

The next point of Mr. Bush is that letters and sealed matter are certainly safe from inspection. This is not clear. The sections he quotes to prove this, as above stated, are merely instructions of the Postmaster-General to the postmasters, and do not bind him nor his special agents. The sections which might otherwise make sealed matter inviolate, for instance §§ 870, 1,232, 1,233, and 1,237, are all qualified by the insertion of those fatal words "unlawfully" or "wrongly" or "improperly." So that if the official detains non-mailable matter he is not liable at all, for such matter is "lawfully" and "properly" detained. No law applies to him in such case, for the case is excepted from the law. He does not unlawfully nor wrongfully detain it. § 370 expressly provides that "prohibited" and "unmailable matter does not make the detainer liable. This leaves the whole matter subject to his judgment.

Again, the postmaster may by § 6 appoint any number of special agents "as the good of the service and safety of the mail may require."

These agents are by § 18 simply duplicates of the Postmaster-General. They hav undefined and almost unlimited powers. By § 15 they may arrest and hand the party arrested to the United States officers. By § 13 "ALL special agents are intrusted with keys to the several mail-locks in use, and are, by virtue of their commissions, authorized to open and examin the mails whenever and wherever they may find it necessary to do so. They are also empowered to enter and examin any post-office when the safety of the mails requires it or the general interests of the service demand such examination." And "by virtue of their commissions, all contractors, postmasters, and others in the service of this department are bound to respect and obey the authority thus conferred."

By §§ 14 and 18, "the Postmaster General considers special agents of the departement as his representativs, and as such, all postmasters, contractors, and others in the service are subordinate to them. They are responsible for their official acts only to him. . . . Instructions for their guidance are furnished them in a separate volume."

By § 786, these agents are not to report to nor disclose the presence of each other when on duty. They are a band of irresponsible spies. Is not Comstock a special agent of the Post-Office Department?

Now the sections 434 and 530 quoted by Mr. Bush about not detaining letters "on mere suspicion," and the "sanctity of seals" are only instructions from the Postmaster-General and his special agents to the local postmasters. But what restrains these agents with their keys that fit every mail and with their power to open and examin, when, where, and as they will?

Where is the penalty that applies to these agents if they detain letters and break seals? and who knows if they do or do not? Their ways are secret and past finding out. Who is there to keep these keepers under these facts?

It is the merest irony to quote §1,043: "But nothing contained in this title [about postal orders] shall be construed to authorize any postmaster or other person to open any letter not addressed to himself." Even this section authorizes the return by the Postmaster-General of money-order letters "upon evidence satisfactory to him" that they relate to objectionable matter or business. How is he to get the evidence? And where is the penalty that punishes him or his agents if they do this thing which is surely not "authorized," but is not forbidden. No law "authorizes" another to commit murder. What we want is a law, not to say that it is unauthorized, but to forbid and punish it. So § 282 forbids postmasters to withhold letters from criminals, but there is no penalty, and it does not apply to special agents nor to unmailable matter. In case these special agents suspect unmailable matter to be inclosed in a letter and open it, they hav a sufficient defense that the letter was non-mailable and contraband, and no penalty whatever attaches in such case. How can they be punished?

And finally by § 468, the Postmaster and his agents may determin when matter sealed or otherwise shall go to the dead-letter office, to be killed.

But remember, still farther, that these espionage laws are to be run not only by the post-office officials within the post-office, but also by Comstock, with his decoy system, outside. So that first-class matter is effectually "regulated' by espionage within and decoy out of the post-offices.

Dr. E B. Foote explains how it works very well. "I would remind you" he writes, "of my own case wherein the fine of $3,500 was imposed upon me for a little leaflet which I never sent in any other way excepting in a sealed envelope. It was printed in pearl type no larger than an ordinary envelope so that it could be sent in that way to answer questions and save letter writing. It was never sent except in a sealed letter."

What good did the seal do Dr. Foote? Again, take the case of Banker Williams in Brooklyn, who was prosecuted and ruined by Comstock upon the charge of sending improper private letters under seal to his neighbor.

What good did the seal do him?

In another case up the Hudson reported to me, Comstock arrested a woman for sending a sealed letter to a physician's wife.

In Dr. Foote's trial a sealed letter was also used, which referred to an article claimed to be objectionable by Comstock, and which had been sent by express. The letter simply announced that it had been sent. This was held to be a violation of these postal laws, and a conviction was had on that count as well as the other three charged.

In my former letter I showed that this espionage applied also to the registry and money order systems, with still greater danger. See §§ 875, 1,043, and 1,044. Need I repeat what I then wrote, and which has not been answered, and cannot be? See TRUTH SEEKER of Aug. 21st last.

But in reply to all this line of exposure, Col. Ingersoll said at Chicago that the injured party has his remedy, meaning, I suppose, that if his property is destroyed, or if he is denied the use of the mails wrongfully, he has some legal remedy.

But where could Dr. Foote, in case his book had been condemned by his censors, pursue his remedy against them? Could he compel them to decide rightly? No. It has been expressly decided that "a public duty is not enforceable by a private action except when that right has been specifically given by statute." (See P. L. and R., § 444, p. 115.)

But no right of action nor possibility of relief is given against this church and federal espionage and decoy system. It is a power, secret, irresponsible, and remedyless, which may be used at any time to strike down any interest or any person, for the mail reaches all. Let us be thankful that the postal officials are mostly fair and honorable men, as I before stated. If this placer of evil was worked as Comstock wishes there would be no need of urging repeal. The indignation of the people would compel it.

The laws and regulations above quoted and referred to were in Mr. Bush's hands when he charged me with misrepresentation. Surely I need not say more.

New York, Oct. 3, 1880. T. B. WAKEMAN.

H. L. Green's Reasons for Withdrawing from the Liberal League.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: In your editorial in this week's issue of THE TRUTH SEEKER you say: "As to Mr. Green's defection, we do not know what to make of it. He is in favor of repealing the Comstock laws, and told several members of the League while the discussion was in progress that though he should vote to lay the resolution over, yet if he came to a vote on the resolution itself he should vote in favor of repeal." And you ask me to "rise and explain," and I now do so.

From the first I hav been opposed to making the opinion one held as to the constitutionality of the Comstock laws a test of fellowship in the Liberal League, for I know that some of the best friends of state secularization in this country believe those laws constitutional, while others who are just as good friends to our movement hold them to be unconstitutional. Now to succeed we need the assistance of both classes; and my opinion has been that to make the League movement a success either party should not press their views on the other party by making them the voice of the League.

I took this position when I thought Mr. Abbot and his friends were making an attempt to commit the League, as a League, to the doctrin of "modification" as against the friends of repeal. And I think I am perfectly consistent in taking the same position when Mr. Wakeman and his friends undertake to commit the League, as a League, to the doctrin of repeal. By taking either course we virtually establish a test of fellowship that shuts out those who cannot indorse it. For example, the League has now been fully committed, as a League, to the doctrin of repeal. Can we expect that hereafter any one who does not believe in repeal will apply for membership?

Now as to my consistency at Chicago. Since reading Mr. Wakeman's argument on the Comstock laws I hav been of the opinion that they are unconstitutional. Still I hav never thought but possibly I might be mistaken. I knew that many persons of more ability than myself differed with me, and it is my misfortune to be in conflict with the decisions of the courts. And I felt a great repugnance to compelling anybody to accept my opinion or the alternativ of withdrawing from the League, which appeared to me to be the place in which we were putting Col. Ingersoll and all others who agreed with him, at Chicago. And I said to Mr. Wakeman while the resolutions were under discussion, "I shall do all in my power to prevent your bringing these resolutions to a vote, but if you compel me to vote on them I shall vote for them." And it was for the reason that I was resolved not to be compelled to do so unjust a thing to the minority that I withdrew from the League at so early a period, before the vote on the resolutions was reached. And it was not true, as stated in your report of the proceedings, that I threatened to withdraw if the resolutions were passed. I made no threats, but withdrew at once when I came to the conclusion that duty required it.

There were many other reasons why I withdrew from the League. For a long time I knew that I was not in accord with the views of many of the controling members. The tendency has been for a long time to make the League more of an anti Comstock institution than an anti-church and state institution. I hav thought that many were more desirous of having "Cupid's Yokes" circulated than church property taxed. When I hav insisted that we confine ourselvs more to the original objects for which the League was organized I hav been charged with having too narrow a view of the work of the League, and that mere state secularization was of small importance compared to other work that the League must do.

And I found at Chicago that those known as Freelovers seemed to hav taken possession of the organization. Mrs. Colman, the first speaker, declared—which declaration was welcomed with loud applause—that "we had met to settle the question that men and women could say what they pleased and send through the mails just what they pleased." And she declared that sexual intemperance was the question of the hour. That may and may not be true, but I insist those were not the questions that the League was organized to settle, and not questions that I am interested in.

And I thought the question of the "Comstock laws" and "obscene literature" were admirably disposed of by Colonel Ingersoll's resolutions at Cincinnati last year, and I felt sure Mr. Wakeman and his friends endangered the life of the League by bringing the question up again this year. Time will prove whether my fears were well founded or not. I stated at Chicago, on the floor of the Congress, that in my opinion the passage of those resolutions at this time over the heads of the minority would be the death of the League. I still believe that prediction will prove true. Not but what I believe that, as an organization, it will still exist for a long time, but I think it will exist not as an advocate of the entire secularization of the state, but as a society for the promulgation of Freelove principles, and, as above stated, an "anti-Comstock organization." And as such a society I do not desire to be connected with it.

But I shall hav no angry conflict with my old friends who still remain in the League and for the future will control its action. For many of them I entertain, personally, a high opinion. With their views and methods of action I radically differ and feel that it is a great relief to me to be out of the League, and as I could not go with them into the work that they deem important they will feel better to be rid of me. That is the reason probably that my friend Walker shouted, "Good riddance!" when I withdrew. He had learned from a private conversation with me that I was opposed to loading down the League with hobbies foreign to its legitimate work, as I understood it, and he for that reason thought my resignation would get a stumbling-block out of the way of his introducing into the League his pet hobby, Freelove. But be that as it may, I am out and shall in the future work for the Liberal cause outside of that organization, but I shall continue to work for what I think the best interests of humanity in my own way.

I hope in the near future to see organized a society that shall make the secularization of the state its special object and leave other questions to the associations to which they legitimately belong. I think there is room for and need of such a society, and when it is formed I hope to see it attend earnestly to its work. If those who claim to be Liberals cannot agree, let them agree to disagree. Our conflict should be with principles we deem erroneous and not with individuals. I hope to continue to be on friendly terms personally with all my old friends in the Liberal League, notwithstanding our antagonistic opinions. I despise the views promulgated by Freelovers, but know many persons who advocate them for whom personally I hav great respect. But that is no reason for my giving countenance to their opinions. Please pardon me, Mr. Editor, for occupying so much of your space in complying with your request to rise and explain.

Truly yours, H. L. GREEN.

A Letter from a Red-Hot Republican.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: When I subscribed for The Truth Seeker I did not suppose I was to receive a truthless Democratic journal. I neither knew nor cared for the party politics of its editor, not expecting that he would obtrude them offensivly on his readers. For the last three or four years the paper has been all that I could wish it to be. Now I am forced to regard its editorial matter as little better than the spawn of Southern rebels.

Rebellion against free institutions because of their freedom is a new development of human nature, an unlooked-for and a surprising phase in human events. No pen or tongue has done full justice to its hellish principles and deeds. The motivs which prompted the Democratic rebellion of 1861 were radically different from any other rebellion that has ever occurred in the history of the human race. Other rebellions hav originated in a laudable determination to throw off despotic power, to escape from intolerable oppression. Our fathers were rebels to King George IV. of England. Their motto was, "Resistance to tyrants is obedience to God." But this Democratic rebellion was a case of resistance to a constitution—the admiration of the friends of justice in all lands—which they had sworn to defend, and to equal laws enacted by the master rebels themselvs. When they revolted there was not a law on the United States statute books that had not received the sanction of a majority of Southern representativs in Congress. Up to that time they had their own way in everything. Being defeated in the election of Abraham Lincoln, they surmised that their imperious domination might not last forever.

Their leading object, the perpetuation and extension of slavery, they feared could not be realized in a republic the Northern portion of which was animated by the spirit of liberty. They had become the avowed enemies of not only a republic but of all forms of free government and free society. Their press teemed with articles denouncing every kind of liberty, except the liberty of holding men in bondage, as a pest and a curse. Witness their talk to W. H. Russell, correspondent of the London Times: "If we could only get one of the royal race of England to rule over us, we should be content." That sentiment, varied in a hundred ways, has been repeated to me over and over again in South Carolina. Their admiration for monarchical institutions on the English model, for a privileged class, and for a landed aristocracy is undisguised. Others asserted as vehemently that "there was too much freedom in England, France, and Germany, and that they hated everything under the name of free, from free soil, free suffrage, free schools, free speech, free press, free labor, down to free niggers."

Thus it is seen that their revolt was an insurrection against the rights of nature, a war upon equality itself, an effort to crush out every aspiration for a government of the people, by the people, and for the people; a war against the commonwealth of man. It therefore stands unequaled and alone in its criminality. Beneath the lowest hell of all past iniquity these Democratic traitors hav found "a lower deep," where nestle and fester a pestilential breed of hideous monsters, before unknown to the darkened annals of the world. They hav done more to blacken and disgrace our common humanity than all other miscreants, from Cain down to the present moment. They hav vastly enlarged the boundaries of human turpitude, and extended the possibilities of shameless infamy. Their manner of waging their war against right and civilization, by means of pirate ships, infected clothing, the starvation and cold-blooded massacre of defenseless prisoners, was in keeping with their original foul design. Of such is the material, in fact the ruling element, of the present Democratic party; and its history for the last twenty years has been a series of shocking and astounding enormities, of which its felon attempt to steal the state of Maine is one of the least.

The difference between its present candidate for President and General Lee is simply this: Lee went over to the rebels before the war, and Hancock went over to them after Lee had surrendered. His Order No. 40 was to them both aid and comfort, but it was death to three hundred and thirty Union men in Texas alone, who were murdered for the noblest virtues that ever animated the human heart. His administration in Louisiana was equally disastrous and bloody. In his official course in the latter state he showed that he preferred the associations and friendship of traitors to Union men, and in that way he earned his present nomination. In 1868 a state constitutional convention in Texas appointed a committee to report on the increase of crime and the non-execution of the laws. Here is an extract from that report, which was unanimously adopted:

Authorized by law to uphold the peace, and to protect life and property, having at his disposition the army of the United States to uphold the authority of the law, Hancock has neglected to perform his duties.

He has refused to punish murderers; he has refused the requests of the governor and the general commanding in Texas for the creation of stronger courts, and was deaf to the wail of terror-stricken, persecuted, and loyal men.

And, knowing what we assert and maintain in the face of the civilized world, we place the cause and the responsibility for the death of hundreds of loyal citizens of Texas upon his [Hancock's] shoulders.

It is a responsibility that should cover his name with infamy, and his memory in years to come with curses and execrations.

That shows that Hancock is almost a fit candidate for the Democratic party—a party that has destroyed six billion dollars' worth of the hard earnings of the people; a party that has piled upon the weary shoulders of honest toil three billion dollars of national debt; a party that has murdered four hundred thousand of the flower of American manhood, and all murdered for their patriotism; I say murdered, because offensiv war is always murder on the part of the aggressiv and atrocious villains that wage it. Those who sympathized with traitors during the gigantic contest, and all who hav coalesced with them since with the intention of robbing the nation of the blood-bought fruits of the struggle, are alike guilty. They hav, by force, fraud, and assassination, wrested from four hundred thousand loyal citizens the right of suffrage, and sent illegally to Congress thirty of their most damnable rebels. The Democratic party has put to death more martyrs to liberty, and made more widows and orphans, than Simon de Montfort, the Duke of Alva, and the Spanish Inquisition.

If this piratical horde can elect Hancock now, they will be sure to bring out their most admired, trusted, and truly representativ man, Jeff Davis, as a candidate for President in 1884. And why not? In what respect is he less worthy than any one of the sixty-one black-hearted traitors now in Congress? If by craft, ballot-box stuffing, and midnight murder the principles symbolized by the Stars and Bars, are to trample over those of the Stars and Stripes; if the gray-back army, with bowie-knives, shotguns, and tissue ballots is to ride rough-shod over the Boys in Blue, why not let the gray devil, the head of the Confederacy, take his proper place at the head of the American republic? That would be "reconciliation" with a vengeance, and it is just the thing the "solid South" is hungering and thirsting for.

Of W. H. English, their candidate for Vice-President, but few words need be added, as he is all the vice, or rather organized avarice. As a forecloser of mortgages and a merciless grinder of the faces of the poor, he is without a rival. His clutching of five to fifteen per cent a month would put to shame the money-changers of the ancient temple and all the Jew merchants of ancient Venice. A slaveholder at heart, though living in a free state, an abetter and defender of Preston Brooks in his cowardly and murderous assault on Charles Sumner, a hater and reviler of the negro, a venomous prosecutor of the free state men of infant Kansas, and a malignant Copperhead during the Rebellion, he is indeed a fit candidate for the Demo-Greenback and green-headed party.

Having presented, as briefly as possible, my opinion of the Democratic party and its candidates, I shall be still more brief in speaking of the Republican party and its candidates. If the Republican party had done no more than to defend and preserve the noblest republic of all time—the last and best hope of the oppressed of all nations—from the ruthless destruction attempted by nine hundred thousand red-handed Democratic traitors, it would deserve the eternal gratitude and support of all human kind.

The greatest deliverances of humanity hav been wrought by higher agencies than war. But by war no such deliverance of humanity was ever wrought as this. Not the fields on which Greek intellect and art were saved from the Persian; not the fields on which Roman law and polity were saved from the Carthagenian and the Gaul; not those plains of Tours on which Charles Martel rolled back Islam from the heart of Christendom; not the waters over which the shattered Armada fled; not Leipsic and Lutzen, Marston, and Naseby, where, at the hands of Gustavus and Cromwell, the great reaction of the seventeenth century found its doom, will be so consecrated by the gratitude of after ages as Vicksburg and Gettysburg, Atlanta, and those lines before Richmond which saw the final blow.

As leaders, directors, and principal actors in that colossal achievement the Republican party won an amaranthin wreath that will adorn it forever. Impartial history will award it the transcendent honor, the immortal glory, of having through a deluge of blood, a four years' storm of leaden bullets and iron hail, preserved, purified, and rejuvenated the great Western republic. Its mighty power and lofty grandeur among the nations of the earth has immensely increased in spite of the satanic efforts made to subvert it. Its magnificent and benign future is more fully assured than ever before. With what sincere exultation may we now exclaim, "Hail, Columbia, happy land!" Since the cessation of open hostilities the Republican party has, amid surrounding foes North and South, exerted its wisdom and skill in combating the ferocious machinations of vanquished though still exasperated traitors. If sustained by the people it has so well and faithfully served for twenty years, it will ultimately secure that obedience to equal and just laws which is the only talisman of lasting peace, harmony, and universal prosperity.

It has been well said that the Republican party is running this canvass on its record, and that the Democratic party is running away from its record. Here is a summary of the Republican record, which I use for its truth and comprehensiv brevity.

It suppressed a rebellion which had armed nearly a million of men to subvert the national authority; it reconstructed the union of states with freedom instead of slavery as its cornerstone; it transformed four million human beings from the likeness of things to the rank of citizens; it relieved Congress from the infamous work of hunting fugitiv slaves, and charged it to see that slavery does not exist; it has raised the value of our paper currency from thirty-eight per cent to the par of gold; it has restored, upon a solid basis, payment in coin of all national obligations, and has given us a currency absolutely good and equal in every part of our extended country; it has lifted the credit of the nation from the point where six per cent bonds sold at eighty-six, to that where four per cent bonds are eagerly sought at a premium.

Under its administration railways hav increased from 31,000 miles in 1860 to more than 82 000 miles in 1879. Our foreign trade increased from $700 000,000 to $1,500,000,000 in the same time, and our exports, which were $20,000,000 less than our imports in 1860, were $265 000,000 more than our imports in 1879. Without resorting to loans, it has, since the war closed, defrayed the ordinary expenses of the government besides the accruing interest on the public debt, and disbursed annually more than $30,000,000 for soldiers' and sailors' pensions. It has paid $880,000,000 of the public debt, and by refunding the balance at lower rates, has reduced the annual interest charge from nearly $150,000,000 to less than $89,000,000. All the industries of the country hav revived, labor is in demand, wages hav increased, and throughout the entire country there is evidence of a coming prosperity greater than we hav ever enjoyed.

I shall make no reply to your charges of corruption against General Garfield, as they hav been so often and so effectually refuted by Judge Black and the more candid men of your own party. As a soldier and statesman he is a genuin product and growth of the Republican party, of which he is the gallant leader and its matchless exponent. His speeches are unrivaled among the political oracles of the nation. Like Lincoln, he is a prodigy of self-made greatness and goodness, and he will be the peer of any of the illustrious men who hav occupied the presidential chair. Your objections to him on account of his religion do not accord with my notions of true Liberalism. Gen. Arthur I hav known for over forty years as the legal defender and protector of the hunted fugitiv slave, and that key to the broad generosity of his character is enough for me.

Respectfully, S. Stebbins, M. D.

Unionville, Pa., Sep. 20, 1880.

Important Decision on the Use of Bibles, etc. in Schools.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In the Report of the Superintendent of Public Instruction for Michigan, 1879, I find the use of Bibles in schools discussed in a very able, impartial, and comprehensiv manner by the Rev. Kendall Brooks. The superintendent, C. A. Gown, informs me he agrees with Mr. Brooks, and that a large majority of the members of the association who listened to the essay or address also indorsed it. So highly do I esteem this address that I take the liberty to quote the more salient points for the benefit of the readers of The Truth Seeker. If the entire address could be given to and read by the public much good would result. It was read entire to the school board of Lowell with the happiest results. The teachers in the Lowell schools hav their choice to read the Bible, if at all, in their own time before nine o'clock. The result is that only a small portion of the pupils attend "chapel exercises." Heretofore our children hav been compelled to join in religious exercises or be marked tardy. Now they can play or pray just as they please. Without further comment I will quote from Mr. Brooks's address. E. A. Chapman.

Lowell, Mich.

THE ADDRESS.

But does it follow that the civil government ought to provide for the religious education of the people. Not at all. Although this is more important than the other it does not come within the province of the civil magistrate. Governments are formed for specific purposes. These purposes do not include the support of religion. The functions for which it was established are of a different order and demand different qualifications. It cannot giv religious instruction and maintain religious observances without first deciding what is the true religion without prejudice to every other system. And that is an infringement of religious liberty. Our public schools cannot be for the religious instruction of the children. Such a duty required of them would be directly opposed to the genius of our Constitution. We hav no national religion. We do not believe in a national religion. Our idea of religion is such as excludes the possibility of a national religion. A nation is not religious and is not required to be and cannot be. Religion is a personal concern. A nation as such has no right to hav religious opinions.

The truth is that every man, whatever official position he may occupy, must discriminate between his duty as as officer and his duty as a man. His duty as a man includes his duty as an officer, but his duty as an officer is far narrower than his duty as a man If the governor uses his official influence in favor of one religious belief rather than another he misuses the power committed to him and incurs the censure of the great body of his fellow-citizens, by whose votes he was elected to his high office. But now suppose instead of being employed by the state as its chief magistrate he is employed under its laws and by proper appointment of civil officers as a teacher in one of its public schools, to giv instruction and to train the young for the service of the state. May he any more than the governor use his official influence for the propagation of his religious opinions and for making the children under his care Episcopalians, Baptists, or Methodists? There is but one answer to this question. It is no part of his official work to teach religion. The school is not established for religious instruction. It is the creature of the state, and the state has no relation to religion, except this, that it must secure perfect equality of religious liberty to all churches and to men of every creed. They attend school to be taught the elements of human learning. They must be taught at home the principles and doctrins of true religion.

The church sustains an institution for the express purpose of leading the young into a knowledge of God, of rendering the service which the public school cannot render. It is the mission of the church to teach religion just as the public schools teach secular learning. The state and the church hav different functions, and each is important, yes, indispensable in its place, but neither should be allowed to interfere with the province of the other or to go outside of the sphere in which its work lies. The church must not compel attendance on its instructions and services, for its power in nothing is compulsory: religion is a personal concern. The state alone compels. On the other hand the state must restrict its instructions and requirements to secular things, because religion allows no compulsion. Religion covers with its broad wing all the relations of men, and calls on them to be faithful as citizens and to cultivate to the largest advantage all the faculties of the mind. But the state must impose no disability on those who disregard the claims of religion, for she knows no religion, and is not charged with its defense or support. The public school then has no duty to perform in reference to the religious education of its pupils.

May teachers of public schools be required as a part of their daily exercise to maintain any forms of religious worship? The state certainly has no right to require that any person employed by it shall in his official capacity engage in any religious services. The state has nothing to do with religion except to protect man in the enjoyment of religious liberty. If the teacher in a public school may be required to engage in religious worship and the children of a school may be required to join in this worship, then of course some teacher may be required to observe the external forms of a worship in which he does not believe, and some children may be compelled to attend on religious service which they or their parents honestly believe to be wrong and displeasing to God. This would be to invade their religious liberty. And if the spending of fifteen minutes each morning in religious observances may be demanded by the civil authorities, the same principle would sanction religious instruction and compulsory attendance on other services of religion.

If now the question is asked whether teachers in our public schools are at liberty to maintain religious forms and worship in their schools, we answer, Yes, they are at liberty to do this, so long as the pupils and their parents offer no objections to it. But if any parent object, if an honest adherent of the papal church, for example, should be unwilling to hav his son join in worship which he declares to be offered by a heretic and which he regards as dangerous to the soul of the child, that child must not be required to join in such service or even be present when it is rendered. His conscientious scruples, or those of his parents, must not be disregarded, for we believe in religious liberty. But if in consequence of unwise action on either side the question is pressed to a sharp and final answer whether children may be compelled to engage in forms of religious worship, however much we may regret the necessity for rendering the decision, we must admit there is but one answer to the question, They may not be compelled.

Each religious opinion must hav the same opportunity in a nation in which religious freedom is secured to all. If some public schools are maintained in the interests of Protestantism, others may be rightly maintained in the interests of Romanism. If the public funds may be employed for sustaining schools in which one form of religion is favored, they may be employed for sustaining schools in which any other form of religion is favored.

It is better a thousandfold that all religious observances be omitted from our public schools than that by establishing certain forms in some we compel ourselvs, as a matter of consistency, to maintain other schools in which children shall be taught doctrins subversiv of our national existence and favorable to the return of medieval darkness and superstition.

[From the Boston Investigator.]

The National Liberal League.

Col. Ingersoll, who had been elected first Vice-President, and H. L. Green, Esq., as one of the directors, resigned their offices after the discussion took place on the resolution asking for the repeal of the postal laws in relation to obscene literature, or, in other words, what is known as the Comstock law. These gentlemen (and they seem to be the only ones of similar views) were opposed to repeal, on the grounds that such action implicated the League as favoring obscenity; and, secondly, that as such a subject formed really no part of the platform of the League, it was entirely irrelevant and should not hav been introduced.

The first objection appears to us unsound. The League is not a promoter or encourager of obscene literature, and never was, to our knowledge and belief. Its position always has been, and is now, if we understand it, that speech should be free, the press free, the mails free, and everybody free to send through that public conveyance just such book or paper as he or she may see fit. We hav thought that this is the position of the League in regard to the question of obscenity. Anyhow, it is our position, and we think it a proper and consistent one for a Liberal and independent man, and therefore we hav always been in favor of repeal, for we are not going to allow Mr. Anthony Comstock or anybody else to define for us what is obscenity or what we shall send through the mails. We take the liberty to do our own defining on all subjects, and exactly the same liberty to sell or giv away any book or paper or send it by express or mail either, Anthony Comstock of the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, and the whole Christian church thereunto added, to the contrary notwithstanding.

The second objection, however, that the subject of obscenity should not hav been introduced in the League, we regard as strictly correct. It is no part of the "Demands of Liberalism," and if the members of a former congress had been more thoughtful and sagacious, they never would hav accepted or debated a question which, by its continuance, has only resulted in useless dispute, dissension, and division. There are some things, it would seem, which should be taken for granted, without any debate, because they are self-evident; and one of them is that men and women who are intelligent enough to be Liberals are as much opposed to obscenity as to murder, robbery, piracy, slander, or any other crime. Therefore, so far as we are concerned individually, we hav not the least objection to a law against obscenity, provided such law is enforced, as we know it can be (for it was successfully carried out in this city), by municipal authority, before we ever heard of Anthony Comstock. But we are sternly and determinately opposed, now and forever, to any law, framed by any class of people, that shall in the remotest degree interfere with what should always be preserved inviolable—the freedom of the mails!

We regret sincerely that such very able gentlemen and most industrious workers in the Liberal movement as Col. Ingersoll and H. L. Green, Esq., should hav seen fit, from anything that transpired at the Congress, to hav resigned their offices, though of course they will continue, individually, their successful efforts for liberty or equal rights, but as prominent officers of the Liberal League their labors and influence would be more beneficial.

. . . . . .

The League, if we understand its position (and we think we do), does not want the churches, the New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, and Anthony Comstock to control the criminal laws in any municipality, or state, or in the general government; nor, secondly, does it want the general government to set up anything like a postal censorship by defining the meaning of mailed matter, or the kind of books, pamphlets, papers, etc., that may legally be sent through the mail; and lastly, the League is opposed to allowing the post-office to be used as a decoy-duck to deceive and lead into a snare, in order to keep in office a government spy, trickster, or informer.

If we are correct in these three points, and hav fairly stated the reasons of the League for desiring the obscenity law repealed unconditionally, then we hav no hesitation whatever in saying that the majority vote of the League in favor of repeal was Liberal, right, just, and constitutional.

[From Cooley's Weekly.]

Modern Sorcery.

Elder James L. Smith is the happiest man in town. He has just returned from Lake Pleasant Camp-Meeting, where, at the "seance" of the noted Eddy brothers, he professes to hav seen his deceased relativs reclothed in mortal garb.

Elder Smith is an activ, intelligent man of seventy years. He was one of eleven children born in slavery at Heathville, Va. Forty-two years ago he escaped from bondage, and found refuge in this city. He was ordained a minister of the gospel many years since and during a quarter of a century was pastor of the colored Methodist church of Norwich.

A party of about twenty, including the writer, was seated in a moderately lighted room, in one corner of which was a dark recess or cabinet occupied by the "medium." From this small enclosure came forth the ghostly forms for recognition by the sitters.

After several of these eminent forms had "manifested," to the evident satisfaction of their friends of mortal mold, a colored woman appeared upon the scene, and gently waved her hand to Mr. Smith. The Elder approached, took the strange visitor by the hand, and, to his astonishment, recognized in her his sister Lelia, whom, after the shackles of slavery were stricken from his people, he used to visit on his annual pilgrimage to Dixie. Congratulatory greetings were exchanged, and the Elder resumed his seat.

A young colored girl, in plantation costume, next came from the cabinet. She scanned the faces of the sitters, and when her eyes fell upon the Elder she extended her hands, while he advanced to greet her. She claimed to be his long-lost sister Scilla, who was sold and torn from the family hearth when about twelve years old, and from whom no tidings had since been received. She seemed overjoyed to meet her elder brother, in mortal form. Eagerly seizing his hand she fondly caressed him, and danced in girlish glee as she exclaimed, "Free at last! Free at last! Bless the Lord! Free at last!"

Later in the seance the bent form of an old colored man, with gray hairs and whiskers, tottered from the cabinet. Mr. Smith again advanced and at once recognized his aged father. Their affectionate greetings and mutual ejaculations of "Bless the Lord!" and "Glory to God!" were indeed pathetic.

The light was sufficient to clearly define the features when the observer was near, and from a rear seat, where the writer sat, the color and general contour of the faces could be discerned. The cast of countenance, it was stated by one who occupied a more favorable position, bore a family resemblance to Elder Smith.

A voice from the cabinet was heard saying: "We are glad to meet our worthy colored brother, for we know him to be honest-hearted and true. And we can assure him that the immortal spirits of his loved ones on the eternal shores are pure and white. And we know that in earth life many a blacker soul than his is hidden beneath a white skin."

On taking his seat the aged Elder wept for joy. He firmly declares that he would hav known his father and older sister had he met them in a crowd. And now he boldly proclaims the wonderful works of the Lord. He is no longer a doubting Thomas, for he has seen and talked with his loved ones "face to face."

Norwich, Sept. 4, 1880. BYRON BOARDMAN.

A New Phase of Religious Intolerance.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Our priest-ridden town has been having quite a sensation of late in the way of religious intolerance. Andrew Grove, a highly respectable and well-to-do farmer of this county, an outspoken, radical Spiritualist, quite bitter in his denunciation of the Bible (as an inspired book), the vicarious atonement, and the dogmas of the church, left home in March, 1878, to visit the Hot Springs and his sons in Iowa and Michigan. He loaned some money in Chicago, Ill., and word soon came that he got swindled out of his money, and the report flew around like wildfire that Mr. Grove was insane, and the sons and son-in-law set to work to hav a guardian appointed. Of course his being a Spiritualist was enough for Christians, and there were a number of them who went before the probate judge and swore that Mr. Grove was insane, hence the son-in-law was appointed guardian in his absence. When he returned from the West he commenced suit to set aside the guardianship. The suit was quite a protracted one, lasting twelve days, with two leading attorneys upon a side. The party opposing Grove let the bars down, and lugged in his religious views; in fact, Spiritualism was made the gist of the whole affair. Pious, long-faced Christians went on the witness stand and swore that a man who talked about the Bible, the Bible God, the churches, and who believed in the ability of the departed to return and communicate, and in materializations, spirit pictures, etc., must be insane. One good Methodist based his conclusion upon the fact that Grove once showed him what he claimed to be spirit pictures, and he swore that a man must be insane to believe it. Mr. Grove gained the suit, and the opposit party took out an appeal, thus the case is still unsettled. Mr. Grove is considered (by those not prejudiced on account of his belief) to be one of the best posted and most practical farmers in this section of the country. He is a man of more than ordinary ability, and there were no possible grounds to make out a case of insanity except through prejudice against him on account of his being a Spiritualist, an Infidel, which made it a clear case of religious intolerance. Think of it, a man must be harrassed, tormented, put to hundreds of dollars of expense in this land of boasted religious freedom, to test his sanity on account of his heresy to the dogmas of the church. How much longer must Liberals forbear? How much longer will their patience hold out? How much longer are we to bear this persecution at the hands of bigoted Christians? It is to be hoped that a more decided action will be taken ere long, and Christians soon be made to know that Infidels hav rights which they are bound to respect.

A. ALLEN NOE.

Warren, O.

"John's Way."

Mrs. M. J. Pierce, New Hartford, Iowa, writes, "It is the best book I ever read."

L. H. Conover, Beach Haven, Pa., writes: "The book is small in size, but I find on reading it that it weighs just one ton gross weight. I hav read and re-read it, and loaned it out to the brothers and sisters of several churches, and it is doing good missionary work."

M. J. Pierce, New Hartford, Iowa, writes: "Mrs. Slenker's 'John's Way' will do great good. If any commence reading it, it is all day with them. They cannot leave it till it is finished, and then their faith in that old barbarous book, the Bible, is gone. I prophesied that her book, 'Studying the Bible,' would do more good than any book since the 'Age of Reason,' but for actual work and benefit to humanity this little 'John's Way' will beat it. It is a new departure, and will surely work its way to eminence. As sure as two and two make four Mrs. Slenker has erected her own monument while yet alive, and when marble and granit are powder, her's will shine forth a glistening aid to reason."

Elmina's Notes.

First and foremost, I wish to thank friend Leland for his good fight with Comstock's doings vs. Liberal public, in the person of H. L. Barter, who has done a good work in printing the story of "Libra Dawn, or the Dawn of Liberty," a story wherein the fruits of sexual intemperance and marriage license are so terribly exposed that every true soul must burn for a higher and purer plane of civilization.

Inclosed please find fifty cents from Isaac Slenker and fifty from Elmina for the "Barter Trial Fund." I feel sure there are few Liberals who will not be liberal enough to giv an equal percentage according to means and ability.

Second, I want to say to T. B. Wakeman that his "The Union the Controling Issue" is the first article I hav yet read that, to my mind, givs good, sound, unselfish reasons why Republicans should decide to vote with the Democratic party. A few more such blows as that will knock the props from under even the old-time Whigs, and topple over the edifice of ages.

Third, I put in a gentle reminder to the friends of Mr. Jeremiah Hacker, of Berlin, that the powers that be hav, in the shape of New Jersey drouths in the spring, once more destroyed his fruit and berry crop, leaving him entirely defenseless against the cold and hunger of the coming winter's needs.

And lastly, I wish to say how greatly interested we all are in the good letters of our absent friend, D. M. Bennett, whose graphic pen has carried his numerous readers all the way along with him on his travels, making them partakers with him in its sight-seeing, and yet leaving them exempt from the wearisome tedium of the actual jaunt.

ELMINA DRAKE SLENKER.

Snowville, Va., Sept. 29, 1880.

Elmina's Mistakes.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER, Sir: Although I find much which does not accord with my own sentiments in the contributions of Mrs. Slenker to your columns, I always read them with interest. In her recent open letter to George Lynn she falls into some errors, the truth rather than the falsity of which are necessary to sustain her views. She thinks if "of one hundred men and women selected from the strong and robust and middle-aged fifty should marry and fifty liv celebate lives the latter would produce the greater number of aged persons." It is only a little time ago that considerable discussion was going on both in Europe and in this country to account for the fact which statistics presented that married life seemed to promote longevity. I do not recall the statistics, but they were certainly very largely in favor of marriage. Then she quotes from an article from Mr. Preston in which he says that of parturient women about one in twenty-eight die! I cannot imagin where Mr. Preston obtained his figures. My first thought on seeing such a startling statement was to refer to our medical text-books. But as the New York Herald of Sept. 29th contains something bearing directly upon the subject, it is more convenient to quote from that: "Prof. A. L. Loomis, M.D., in a lecture at the University of the City of New York, on the evening of the 28th, on The Relation of Clinical Study to Medical Progress, undertook to show what progress had been made in medicin since the beginning of this century. In the course of his address he said that in obstetric practice one in sixty died formerly, while now only one case in 216 proves fatal." It is especially important that such an error in popular literature as that which occurs in Mrs. Slenker's article should be corrected because so many young wives suffer from apprehension on this point. They might well be apprehensiv and might well dread to encounter the risks of motherhood if one in twenty-eight die in confinement. The same article is open to other criticism, but as statistics are not readily obtainable to show that Mrs. Slenker's suppositions are disproved by the experience of the human family, I will simply let them pass, at least for the present.

New York, Sept. 30, 1880. E. B. FOOTE, M.D.

Some True Inwardness.

All readers know that political "chatter" raged fiercely all summer long; and everybody expected that political questions would come up in the Fourth Annual Congress of the League. What happened to stop the chatter just where all minds thought it would be most uproarious? Why did politics go down and the demand for repeal of the Comstock law go up, especially as the question of repeal had recently been very little discussed?

Let us throw some light on the under face of these cards.

The delegates on arriving in Chicago, and meeting and greeting, found themselvs fairly apportioned off between the parties. There were Greenback Liberals, Hancock Liberals, and a few Garfield Liberals; and it was instinctivly felt that no unanimity of agreement could be attained by raising any political question. No doubt unanimity could hav been secured on an independent candidate; but it was generally felt that it was too late in the campaign for an independent movement.

Another consideration that kept down politics was the fact that Maine had just electrified the country with her decisiv vote against the Republicans. After this development, Hancock Liberals felt that the Republicans were bound to be beaten anyhow, and so what would be the use of crowding the mourners in the League Congress on that question?

Now what brought up the Comstock law and the demand for repeal so urgently—especially after the general acquiescence in such disposal of it as was had last year at Cincinnati? Well, it was nothing else than the arrest of another editor. The recent attack by the Comstock emissaries on Mr. Barter, of Le Claire, Iowa, was especially well timed to anger all Western Liberals; and the Western delegates, particularly those from Iowa and Kansas, came to Chicago irrepressibly determined in their demand for a repeal of that infamous law; and, had not that demand been answered, there might hav been a real bolt in that direction, in place of the individual unpleasantness that did occur. That was the cause of the repeal movement at this particular time. Without this arrest the question would not hav come up, or not with strength enough to carry it; and the action at Cincinnati would hav remained the final expression of the League upon the subject. But for this arrest Col. Ingersoll might again hav carried the day.

These two disclosures will explain to the Auxiliary Leagues and Liberals everywhere why the thunder that was set down in the program made no noise, and out of what clear sky came that other bolt not in the bills.

Now whence came the opposition to this demand for repeal of the Comstock law? It came solely and alone from Col. Ingersoll, and he came into the Convention for the sole and only purpose to oppose and defeat that demand. But for him, I venture to say, the resolution would hav passed unanimously and without debate. Mr. McCracken gave in his approval of it in committee. Green promised Wakeman, up to the last moment, to vote for it. Burnham would not hav voted against an overwhelming majority. All the women, to a man, were in favor of it, excepting Mrs. Hulett Parry, and she said she voted against it under instructions. R C. Spencer is the only man who might, at the last pinch, hav voted a solitary "no," as he did last year on the resolution of sympathy with Mr. Bennett.

Now will the Liberals of this country who were not present to witness the struggle at Chicago in any way be persuaded to believe that that Congress of hard-headed, thinking, reasoning, independent Liberals could be carried wrong on any question with Col. Ingersoll bringing his unexampled powers of rhetoric, wit, argument, analysis, great good nature, and irresistible eloquence to bear in the exposure of that wrong? And if they voted against him, as they did, three to one, on this special question, must it not hav been because there same qualities of the great orator are utterly powerless to persuade such a Congress of free, independent, thinking citizens against their convictions and away from the path of rectitude? Had there been any right in his proposition, he would hav had our votes. The orator must espouse the side of justice if he wishes to prevail. In the wrong he is just as powerless as the weakest of men. It was like tearing our hearts out to vote against Col. Ingersoll, but the facts and the logic of the situation demanded it. Whom the League loveth it chasteneth; and it was in the spirit of love that we administered this rebuke.

Ingersoll taunted upon Wakeman that he had lost a case, and that was why he had not a good opinion of the law. This was not true; but to this attribution of personal motiv Wakeman might hav retorted, but did not, that all Ingersoll's affiliations and interests are in Washington, with government people from whom he collects claims, with judges before whom he prosecutes them, with Garfield and the Republican party from whom he gets political lecture engagements, and with all the recreants who made and sustain this law, and he must sustain it with them or lose patronage. With all these purely personal interests centering in him and influencing him he came into that Congress to persuade its delegates to swell his sails and make his hay while his sun shines. They saw clearly through it and simply wouldn't do it.

Now as to the consequences of the Colonel's defection, it should be stated that the League began, grew, and progressed for three years without him. His first appearance in it was only a year ago, after more than one hundred local Leagues had been organized, and two annual congresses had been held. He came to our Congress in Cincinnati with apparent heartiness and enthusiasm, assuring some of us that his "whole soul was in the movement." He, Green, and Cornell University staved off repeal, and carried just the expression on the Comstock legislation that they wanted to, had it all his and their own way unopposed. Then we adjourned, separated;

"Each tak aff his several way,
Resolved to meet some ither day."

Cornell, two months after, in a fit of concern for "public morality," stepped down and out from the League. Green truckled and wavered, and we never heard of Col. Ingersoll any more in connection with the League till the second day, late in the afternoon, of the last Congress at Chicago. Then he came to scoff, and would not remain to pray. As the League flourished before he joined it, so it will survive his departure.

There was once a knighthood that protected the weak, that opposed the strong in the unjust exercise of strength, that devoted great gifts to the defense of the right. Only some scattered remains of that order hav come down to us. The Liberal League is fanning some flickering flames of it in the hope of rekindling the once chivalric fire. And Col. Ingersoll, after a baptism into that holy order that devoted his whole soul to it, retreats from the forlorn hope, though knowing that editor after editor, for no wrong done, but at the mere star-chamber behest of a private theocratic society, is gobbled up and imprisoned. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these ye did it unto me," is one of the touching reverberations from a far away time to the inquiry, "What shall we do to be saved?" but Col. Ingersoll, with the text on his lips, rallies not under the flag of that host. Well, nevertheless, he is still good bread self-cast upon the outer waters. We look confidently for his return to us after many days.

T. C. Leland.

The Latest Rip.

The editor of Mind and Matter last summer occupied a whole page of space that could not be very valuable in giving a large quantity of misinformation on a subject about which Liberals generally are well informed. He took a political article of mine from The Truth Seeker for a text, denounced me as a "dishonest demagog," and called for proof of my statements. I sent him the information, and naturally looked to see him print it. In a few days he sent me a whining letter declining to publish my communication.

Now he continues this line of proceeding in an onslaught on the action of the League Congress at Chicago. He publishes the Comstock law, assures his readers that The Truth Seeker and other Liberal journals hav never published it, and dares any of them to do it.

The editor conducts his paper on trance principles. He Rip Van Winkles his head up (or down) among the dead folks a decade or so, lets the world go by him, then half opens a peeper and begins cursing and damning the busy people of this lower world because certain things hav not been done that were done and forgotten long ago. This very Comstock law has been published over and over again in The Truth Seeker, in all the Freethought papers, in tracts and pamphlets, far, wide, and broadcast, wherever we could find any possible medium of publication.

Now he ostentatiously opens his columns to Wakeman and me to vindicate ourselvs. As for myself I decline invitations to write for his waste-basket—and even the columns of his paper are little else. If he wants any article of mine he may forward me $25 cash in advance as a guarantee of good faith.

Dear General, either put up or shut up.

Yours anciently, T. C. Leland.

The Barter Trial Fund.

This trial under the Comstock law has been fixed to commence on the third Tuesday in January, 1881, at Keokuk, Iowa, before Judge Love—good name, if it doesn't go, like dreams, by contraries.

On the last afternoon of the League Congress at Chicago, I read the report of my investigation of the case to the convention. While reading it a woman came forward and placed a silver dollar in my hand. That seemed to be contagious, prompting another woman to do the same. At the close of the reading Lucy Colman took my hat, ran around the audience, and collected $44 60 cash, which with the two dollars made $46 60. Also nearly as much more in written pledges was handed me. If the givers of the money will send their names they will be printed and credited.

Some money has come in by mail to the Treasurer, H. B. Brown, 141 8th street, New York. This is but a beginning. Much more will be needed, and some of it immediately to pay retaining fee to the attorney engaged in the case.

The sums contributed, as far as received, are given below.

T. C. L.

Collected at Chicago, $46 60; Mary E Barlow, Lincoln, New Mexico, $1; C Muelheims, Nashville, Ill, $1; Robert Guthrie, $1 Dr Caleb Weeks, New York City, $1 Isaac Slenker, Snowville, Va, 50 cents; Elmina D Slenker, 50 cents; C B Peckham, Newport, R I, $1; Werner Boecklin, Burlington, Iowa, $5; E L McClung, Jewel City, Kansas, $1; James Lehman, Washington, D C, $5; John Cosgrove, $2.

PLEDGED.

T B Wakeman, N Y, $15; E B Foote, Jr, MD, N Y, $5; Mrs P Lillibridge, Rockford, Ill, $5; A J Clark, Ind, $3; Thomas Wickersham, Chicago, Ill, $1; E W Pike, Chatham, Ill, $5; W W Hall, St Johns, Ill, $2.

Any friend having a full set of "The Atlantic Monthly" for 1878 or 1879, and willing to sell them for two dollars, or less, will confer a favor on Elmina by writing to her address, Elmina D. Slenker.

Snowville, Va.

Let ours be like the meeting of two planets, not hastening to confound their jarring spheres, but drawn together by the influence of a subtle attraction, soon to roll diverse in their respectiv orbits from this their perigee or point of nearest approach.

Letters from Friends.

Prairie City, Oregon, Sept. 19, 1880.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: As soon as possible after receipt of my commission as member for Oregon of the Executiv Committee of the National Liberal League I opened correspondence with parties in different portions of the state, with a view to their appointment as State Executiv Committee. I hav secured the services of E. S. McComas, Esq., of Union, and Mrs. Lucy L. Brown and Walter Hyde, of Portland.

Dr. Eagan declined on account of want of time, though he appeared to be interested in the cause of Freethought, or liberty of soul; and Norris Humphrey, of Eugene City, has not yet responded, though I knew him for years as an enthusiastic Liberal and an intelligent gentleman. I cannot explain his silence. Thinking best to defer reporting to you no longer, I send this as a report of progress, and hope to fill the Committee soon.

Our League is prospering, and will soon, I think, number one hundred members. I hav distributed blanks for forming Leagues pretty extensivly, and hope they will soon be bearing much fruit, a la missionary. We hope to hear from the National Liberal Congress soon.

Respectfully and fraternally yours, J. W. Mack.

Lowell, Neb., Sept., 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I promised to giv a dollar to D. M. Bennett for his trip to Europe. I therefore inclose postal order for $2 50—one dollar for D M. Bennett, one for The Truth Seeker, 25 cents for Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason," and 25 cents for Mr. Bennett, to get him a glass of wine to drink when in London, so that he may drink to the health and better sense of C. L. Morgan, who appears to be so much troubled because he says that at the Fourth League Reception the friends of Mr. Bennett brought wine and set it before him, of which he tells us he drank a glass and it did him no harm. What a miracle! I think the gentleman must be under the delusion that Mr. Bennett drank the glass, but the way I read it he only drank the wine. Now let us hope for the sake of common sense that he did make the blunder. Surely he cannot be quite such a mad fanatic as to object to one glass of wine. But one thing is quite certain, the gentleman must read his Bible again, for he will find that wine drinking is encouraged all through the book. Read 1 Tim. v, 23.

I trust I shall find Mr. Morgan a better Liberal than he appears to be. Mr. Bennett is now gone to Europe to represent him as well as all other subscribers to Freethought. I suppose the gentleman don't expect him to imitate Dr. Tanner, and that he will allow him a little tea or coffee. If so, I wish to inform him that tea and coffee drinking in England is much more expensiv than ale or stout, for in many places from fourpence to fivepence is charged for one cup of tea. On the other hand, you can go into the finest public houses and get a good glass of ale or stout for three cents, sit in a good furnished room where a good supply of daily newspapers are kept. So you see one can buy four glasses of ale or stout for the price of one cup of tea.

I believe that not one half the money sufficient for the trip has been subscribed, and would it not be an everlasting disgrace to us Liberals to allow these gentlemen to sacrifice so much time and put their hands into their purses and pay their own expenses? Now let the hat go around again, for as I hav shown that tea and coffee drinking in England is so expensiv, our representativs may get short of cash and be compelled to resort to the cheap drinks of ale and stout. I feel sure Mr. Morgan would be very sorry for that to occur, perhaps as sorry as I should be if I knew he went short of a glass of wine, so let the hat go around again. We are Liberals, so those that are for ale, stout, and wine may hav the opportunity of giving, and those that are for the expensiv drinks, tea and coffee, can also giv for that purpose.

Mr. Bennett's letter from London, giving an account of some of the sights of that great city, entirely puzzles me. He must be an extraordinary man. Nothing appears to escape his notice. I hav lived in London and hav known it for many years, and he has told me many things that I did not know. His account of Kew Gardens is first rate, but let your readers understand there are lots of other beautiful places to see when in London, such as Victoria Park, Battersea Park, Hyde Park, St. James's, and Green Park, Kensington Gardens, Cremorne Gardens, Zoological Gardens, Crystal Palace, Hampton Court Palace, Kensington Museum, Horticultural Gardens, and lots of others.

One little exception I must take about the fruit of England being behind those of this country. Mr. Bennett only went into Finsbury Market, a rather poor locality, a Saturday night market, only attended by poor people who are compelled to get the quantity instead of the quality. If he goes into Covent Garden Market he will see some of the best fruit the world produces, or a Crystal Palace fruit show, which is beyond description.

G. Gray.

East Rodman, N. Y., Sept 20, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I am thankful that you are free again from the hell-hounds who are not willing that others shall enjoy the same rights and privileges as themselvs, but in their intolerant zeal compel everybody to accept their own narrow and bigoted ideas. Examin the phizs of the committee who are revising the "word of God,' and if physiognomy means anything, I think you will agree with me that they are a set of men the majority of whom care more for some unimportant technicality than for the whole human race. And I will venture to assert that a more bigoted set could not be found outside of their own class—the priesthood. Men of their attainments should rather be engaged in devising ways and means by which the mass of people might be relieved in part of the dark load of misery and ignorance which they are now staggering under. Will the people ever shake off the incubus that loads them down with poverty and superstition, eating out their substance and debasing their minds. Yes, they will undoubtedly, for their numbers are increasing, but it will require generations to cleanse the mind from the effects of the miserable delusions of so-called religious Liberals.

How many of the so-called Liberals can or will cast aside prejudices inculcated by a venal press and vote for the best men? To do this a man must be able to free his mind from all campaign influences and consider himself as a juror, investigate the candidates of both parties as to their records for good morals, qualifications, etc. Then the principles of the parties, and whether, if carried out, the effect would be to perpetuate free institutions and good government from this judgment upon good sound reasoning. When he has done this he should go forward, without fear or favor, and exercise his right as a freeman, untrammeled or owned by any party. If there is any one capable of carrying out the above, it should be a Liberal, as from the very nature of the case they are compelled to cultivate their reason and form their judgment therefrom.

There are many, I fear, who claim to be Liberals that cannot rise above partisanship and vote purely upon principle. We hav a Liberal League of about fifty members, and I do not believe there are three who would vote to advance Liberal principles if it required a change of party to do so. I am certain of but one (myself) who would pledge himself to vote as the Liberal Congress may in their judgment decide to be for the best interests of the principles of Liberalism. We cannot accomplish anything unless we unite and vote as a unit. Our enemies are united, and in numbers like the leaves of the forest, while we are few and scattering, though with right, justice, and equality on our side?

Where is Ingersoll? After making a splurge for a new party, has he climbed upon the fence, and is he waiting to see if would not be better for him to desert the little frail baby and follow the pretentious and plethoric Republican party? Will he desert his offspring for promises of official position? I think that he did once so trade his birthright for a mess of pottage, but failed to get his sop, which had perhaps something to do with the Cincinnati organization of the Liberal party. Be that as it may, the future will bring to light his sincerity as to his Liberal principles.

Now a few words as to the candidates in the field. Personally, I know neither, and my judgment is made up from what I hav read concerning them.

First. Garfield is an ex-preacher. Liberals hav had some experience with those which it is unnecessary to mention; at least it has been of such a character as to caution them against putting all confidence in their professions.

Second. His official history is not complimentary to his integrity, and cannot be so construed by any honest man.

Third. His statesmanship has been entirely of a partisan character, which is fully shown by his speeches and votes in Congress.

So much for James A. Garfield, Republican candidate for President—the party that claims the church as its own, together with all the morality in the country.

Hancock, the Democratic party's candidate, stands as follows:

First. He has been an efficient military officer. His integrity is not questioned.

Second. A non-partisan.

Third. He has a clean record to start with.

The results would be about as follows:

If James A. Garfield is elected the church power is increased, liberty is assailed, etc.

If Hancock is placed in the White House the hold of the church on the government will be weakened, the Comstock laws repealed, the espionage system squelched, and the states will run their own legitimate affairs.

Such are the views of a hard-working farmer—a "R. T. and B.T.," if it so please "cultured" and "high-toned" gentlemen.

I believe that the only way to accomplish anything of moment is to unite and throw our whole weight with that party that will come nearest to carrying out our principles. Then we become a power, and can make it felt and respected. How many so-called Liberals will throw off party prejudices and strike while there is a chance? Our chains are being forged. Now is our time. Another chance may never come to us. Yours, etc., M. E. Rose.

---

Irwin's Station, Pa., Sept. 18, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: After reading the different articles from your many contributors on the present campaign, I am compelled to come to the conclusion that Liberalism, if indulged in religion, is not put in practice very freely in politics. Now, I wish to say here that all who profess to be fully converted from strait-jacket bigotry to Liberalism are endangering our craft in their cross-firing at each other about their political opinions. Know ye not, brethren, that your political opinions are merely results of your former education, the same as your former religious beliefs hav been? This being true, it behooves us as Liberals to be very careful how we express our opinions of each other's views, knowing that the difference in our political opinions arise from prejudice, partiality, and ignorance of the perfect right between man and man. This difference will naturally diminish as Liberals make progress in the understanding of what constitutes a full-fledged Liberal. We must teach by example if we expect to make any progress in reforming the human family, and put a stop to persecuting for opinion's sake. Some persons are not as intelligent as others, and are not capable of grasping reformatory ideas, while others are stubborn and will not allow you to instruct them. Therefore Liberals who are endeavoring to reform their fellow-men must exercise much patience. Remember that our political machinery, in either party, is in a very crude and imperfect condition, and it will take years, if not centuries, to break down the prejudices of the people, and educate them so that the majority will even be able to comprehend that every person's religious or political opinions are merely the result of their former education, their constitutional make-up and environments. Liberalism in a church-member is looked upon as a mark of moral looseness. The fact is that the Liberal church-member is too intelligent for the priest to fully control, and this they call loose morality. Alike the Liberal citizen will not be a slave or dupe to any political party. The party will hav to rule righteously to gain his vote. The Liberal vote will eventually be controled by the Liberal platform of the party. Liberalism in politics is but a babe, and we must be kind to the baby, and try to raise it. If we cuff it too much it will die in its infancy. If all Liberals will take my advice they will vote this campaign as they please. And may the blessing of truth, justice, mercy, liberty, temperance, confidence, long-suffering, forbearance, and love abide with you all, now and forever more. Amen.

Wm. N. Ridinger.

---

Philadelphia, Pa., Sept. 30, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I herewith send you a copy of the New York Witness for 1876, where you will find how it worked to elect Hayes and to hav a firm Christian government, and to show how cordially your Liberal friends embraced the fervent Witness in supporting the Republican party, as many will do this fall, especially those of the Bundy and Ingersoll class. No doubt George H. Stewart and Comstock will giv them a cordial greeting.

An intelligent young man of orthodox faith told me a few days ago that not a religious newspaper, except the Catholic, supported Hancock. So a religious crusade is upon us.

I hav before me the Saratoga county Standard, of Schuylerville, N. Y., of June 2, 1880, in which is recorded the speech of Rev. A. D. Heath, on the floral day, May 31, where he says that "Gen. Lee invaded Pennsylvania. The peril was very great." Then in his extremity Mr. Lincoln made a solemn vow to Almighty God that if he would giv success to the Union army and enable him to defeat Lee he would liberate the slaves." This was at Gettysburg, July 31 or 4th, 1863, just six months after Mr. Lincoln had issued his proclamation of emancipation on Jan. 1st or about there that year, 1863. Remember that it was a bargain with God. I do not suppose that the orator intended to misstate dates, but his zeal bore him away. The discourse is worth reviewing. Yours for the truth, Inquirer.

---

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: I think few names are more worthy of honorable mention in the The Truth Seeker than Hon. Charles Robinson, one of the pioneers and fathers of Kansas. Born, if I may so speak, a lover of truth, liberty, and justice, he has ever been first and foremost in the advocacy and defense of human rights in every sense.

His brain is large, and its moral and mental levers reach upward and forward, giving his moral and mental forces a world-wide sweep and scope, and benevolence sits queenly and majestically, shedding its sympathy and good will over all. There is a large degree of and a good balance between the vital and mental forces, and they all seem to act in concert to sustain life, make it worth living, making him "a law unto himself," and a powerful, persistent force to do good to humanity.

For thirty-five years Governor Robinson, first in California, and then, since 1854, in Kansas, has been a pioneer and "borne the heat and burden of the day," and often imperiled his life that human rights and justice might be vindicated and sustained, equal political freedom be obtained for all, and African slavery first be destroyed, and thus prepare the way for the destruction of other slaveries. His past history is written in books and on the minds of all who hav read about or known him, and I only allude to it here in connection with his work at our Bismarck meeting. In my allusions to him I also giv all due credit to other noble men and women who co-operated with him to furnish our "feast of reason and flow of soul."

I might say, truthfully, that all through the meeting he was, as he naturally is, a committee of ways and means, and, happily for the meeting, he had the means in a pecuniary sense, and was ready and willing to contribute them. He is one of the few Liberals who are both able and willing. If anything was wanting in any sense, Governor Robinson was appealed to and consulted, and his mental and physical resources were always adequate to supply the demand. To our meeting, for the time being, he was a George Washington, a major-general and quartermaster, to lead us on, supply every want, and inspire and aid us all in our six days' battle for truth, justice, and a prospect iv higher and better life for humanity on earth. He was constantly vigilant that each and all should be supplied and made comfortable. He wanted all bills paid, and if anything was lacking he paid it. I know not how many meals he paid for, but I know how much he paid for me. His own house (two miles distant) was and always is open to his hospitalities. The Bismarck meeting I hav no doubt cost him over a hundred dollars, besides his time and trouble, all of which he was happy in giving. Let me say of him:

"Great without pomp;
Without ambition brave;
Proud not to conquer,
But fellow-men to save."

Yours, J. H. Cook.

---

Schoolcraft, Mich., Sept. 13, 1880.

Mr. Editor: On Sunday, September 12th, the Liberals of Michigan and northern Indiana held their annual Grove Meeting. Not more than four thousand people were present, which was considered a failure, so far as attendance was concerned. Sunday morning opened cloudy and gloomy and rainy. Had the day been fine, the number in attendance would hav exceeded ten thousand. The quiet little town of Schoolcraft never witnessed such a sight before when the excursion train arrived. More than a thousand people marched through the village to the grove, headed by a fine band of musicians playing a quick secular tune, and a carriage, in which were seated Col. R. G. Ingersoll, Prof. Phelps, Col. Gilbert, and the writer. The column, in its march, passed by the Baptist church, whose bell was mingling its sad tones with the gayer air of the band.

At eleven o'clock Prof. Phelps commenced his oration, entitled "The Garden of Eden," which lasted nearly two hours. It was simply a masterpiece of logic, eloquence, and wit, eliciting frequent and prolonged applause from the sympathetic multitude.

Mr. Phelps was immediately followed by the "magnificent Ingersoll," with his latest and best oration, "What Must we Do to be Saved?" Ingersoll never made a poor speech in his life, but this one was superb. His masterly analysis of the old theological system excited the admiration of the vast throng, and his brilliant wit and magnificent oratory drew from the audience continual applause and laughter. The speech lasted two full hours, thus making nearly four hours, during which the vast audience gave the most potent attention to the speeches.

Prof. Phelps is a young man who, by hard work in Kansas during the past two years, has won a place in the front ranks of the Liberal lecturers. Col. Ingersoll paid him a fine compliment by saying that he is a brilliant and powerful exponent of Liberalism.

The managers took great risks in getting up the meeting, and engaging the speakers at such great expense; but it proved to be a grand success. It will be repeated next year. Do not forget the Schoolcraft meeting next year.

Albert Burson.

---

The Dalles, Or., Sept. 17, 1880.

Mr Editor: I wish to indorse what E. W. Fuzner—personally unknown to me—says in this week's Truth Seeker in regard to the illiberality of the press generally and the bigotry of the religious press here in Oregon. Last year I sent an article from your paper, with a few remarks in answer to one by the editor the week before, on the Pocasset tragedy to our local paper in the Willamette Valley. The editor, though a personal friend, declined. I did not renew my subscription. A journal that will only giv one side of anything ought not to be patronized or supported by us Liberals.

I was staying in Philomath, Benton county, last winter, and can vouch for the disgraceful conduct (described by E. W. F.) of Prof. Walker, of the bigoted Christian Crucible, the United Brethren organ at that place. Prof. Walker is the president and principal of the college and is a great Christian light. One of the students was going to a party with his lady friends and myself when the carriage was intercepted by a friend of his to say Walker had heard of his going, was very angry, and threatened to expel him from school. The young man was persuaded to remain away, much to his disgust, and was thus deprived of an evening's innocent amusement, so necessary to students.

Such is and always has been the church's tyranny over people's rights and privileges. While pretending to be such a pink of perfection, Prof. Walker openly neglects his wife and flirts with his lady attendants. He is very aristocratic, and sneers at common people privately, preaches beautiful grammatical sermons on Sundays to the select few who will listen to him. But a great many of his own set are getting disgusted with him. Hasten the day when such priestly hypocrits will hav to take a back seat.

Mrs. A. Everest.

---

Truckee, Cal., Sept. 20, 1880.

Editor Truth Seeker, Sir: An incident has recently occurred in our cosmopolitan city of San Francisco showing the tyranny and bigotry of some of the leading clergy. There is a society known as the Temperance Legion, who hold meetings every Sunday in the hall owned by the Young Men's Christian Association. They hav a full house, and hav interesting and innocent exercises. The majority of the members are those who are striving to keep away from their drinking haunts and liv better lives. The Christian society is greatly in debt, and felt they had been neglected by the churches. A meeting was called, composed mainly of ministers. They concluded that the first thing to be done was to clean out the Temperance Legion. They thought it detrimental to Christianity to allow such meetings on Sunday. One brother said he relied greatly on the efforts of Moody and Sankey for a revival; another thought religiou dead in San Francisco I was surprised that such remarks should come from an intelligent body of men. Anything that differs from their tenets must die. Do they not know that a moral character must be founded before they can expect a spiritual growth? The fact that so large a number are kept from their former associates should be sufficient for the encouragement of anything that comes within the bounds of propriety.

I am interested in the temperance cause, and could not suppress my indignation to think the source we are taught to look to for the encouragement of every good work should be the first to say "Clean them out." When we go back to early paganism, we find some excuse for the persecutions then inflicted, for they lived in the dark ages. In this enlightened age we find no excuse for ignorance. I trust the day is fast approaching that will allow every one the privilege to think, talk, act, and write according to the dictates of reason and conscience. The time has passed

"When to be blind was safer than to see,
For light was magic, wisdom sorcery;
But now in knowledge all our safety lies,
And all our danger in not being wise."

Sierra.

---

Solebury, Pa., Sept. 17, 1880.

Friend Editor of The Truth Seeker: With your kind permission

Again I come to greet my friends,
As I hav done before;
With thoughtful ideas of my mind,
A-knocking at your door.
Ideas gather in the soul,
And agitate the brain;
From whence they find expression,
As drops of falling rain,
In vast unbounded space,
And never-ending time;
We ever run immortal race,
To gather thoughts sublime.
26,668 days
Since I received my birth,
From nature' womb in endless space,
Upon this rolling earth.
Ethereous ether filled all space,
Before the worlds were known,
From which ethereous ether
Suns and worlds were grown.
First brilliant suns came forth,
Then planets did appear,
Rolling in ethereous space,
In their allotted sphere.
They serve as eggs to propagate
The various forms of life,
Which battle for existence here,
And die amid the strife.
Material forms may disappear
With other forms unite.
But life immortal cannot die,
More than celestial light.
Life may change its base of action,
From good to better and to best.
Like the chicken from the egg
Reposing in the nest.
Now here's a lesson all may learn,
Without the aid of preacher,
With a few grains of common sense,
Our only needful teacher.
The silly creeds of silly men,
In ancient days of yore,
Caused thousands and ten thousands
To dye the earth with gore.
Thus creeds are only ghostly manes,
The props of churches grand,
That dot the earth in every clime,
The curse of every land!
May free-born souls their freedom keep,
And battle for the right,
Spread knowledge o'er the earth,
And fill the earth with light.
Light, more light, is what we want,
To wake the people up,
To see the deadly dangling snare,
Concealed in creedal cup!

Truly it was said, "Ye frame mischief by a law," going to shackle the progress of the immortal mind of man, which should be ever free as the bird that flits the air, to obey the dictates of our God-given intellectual conscience.

Come, brethern, let us all unite
To leave the deadly past,
Run up the flag of freedom,
And nail it to the mast.
"And let its motto evermore be this
The broadest liberty compatible with human justice."

Respectfully, E W. Allen.

---

There is a great deal of unmapped country within us which would hav to be taken into account in an explanation of our gusts and storms.

---

It is difficult to blend and unite tranquility in accepting and energy in using the facts of life, but it is not impossible; if it be, it is impossible to be happy.

---

Whenever a new and startling fact is brought to light in science, people first say it is not true, then that it is contrary to religion, and lastly that everybody knew it before.

---

No fields are so barren to me as the men from whom I expect everything but get nothing. In their neighborhood I experience a painful yearning for society which cannot be satisfied, for the hate is greater than the love.

Guido's Annunciation.

BY ALHAZA.

The wild beast breathed for good.
She slept within a wood.
—Jewish Legend.

Darkly they passed through the still, balmy woods,
A soft light shone as from a seraph's wings;
And Mary faintly walked, she knew not why,
She seemed the fairest of all earthly things.

Then lighter gr ew the place, she meekly knelt
On a fallen bough where lately passed the storm.
Her fair hair veiled her cheek, her lovely head
Was bent in awe before that lordly form.

She had seen kinder men, but this was one
Who told his dreams in wild, prophetic tone:
He breathed of love, of a pure home in heaven,
Then left her weeping in the woods alone.

But sleep o'ercame her, and she laid her down.
A gentle beast came near, while angels fled;
He crouched beside her with protecting air,
And watched the halo round her peaceful head.

And one was there with iron pen, I ween
(When suddenly her cheek was flaming red),
He wrote upon the rustic parchment wide
The fearful things she, wildly dreaming, said:

"What mean those streams of blood, those senseless forms,
Those fearful shrieks, those happy homes laid low!
Was it for this my glorious son was born,
To fill the heavens with joy, the earth with woe?

"The Seine ran red with blood that awful night
When raged the hell of dark Bartholomew,
And bones are bleaching on the mountain side.
My son, was this to honor me, or you?

"Sometimes the knife is sheathed, the smoldering fires
Burn out beside the rack and murderous wheel;
But greedy persecution never dies,
The purse must overflow, the heart is steel.

"I am the queen of heaven and suffering earth.
Where all things love the sunshine, except God.
Where nature's showers weep over human woe
And her sweet dew drops wash the blood-stained sod.

"Jesus, thy cruel followers need not boast
A sacred God who came their souls to save;
Mammon and self—the demons they adore—
While the starved poor own nothing but a grave."

LEGEND.

He was an angel beast.
Nor was she left forlorn;
She dropped a tear upon his mane.
And blessed the amber morn.

Revelations of Antichrist

CONCERNING

Christ and Christianity.

"ANTICHRIST" proves from history that James, Kepha (Cephas, alias Peter), and Paul, all lived before the Christian era, and so did Jesus Christ—indeed, many Christs and many by the name of Jesus.

The book contains 446 pages, with a full Index and table of contents. Price, $2.00.

A New and Important Work, entitled

OUTLINES OF PHRENOLOGY.

BY F. E. ASPINWALL, M.D.,

Graduate of the Hygeio-Therapeutic College and the New York Phrenological Institute.

This work is intended both as a chart for the use of phrenologists and a text-book for students of phrenology. As a chart it will be found fuller and more complete than any other work of its size on this subject. It contains in addition to the "Table of Developments," one of "Adaptation to Different Pursuits" and one of "Conjugal Adaptation." These tables being perfectly easy to understand, are calculated to render the work at once both interesting and useful. The work contains also full and clear descriptions of the temperaments, the nutritive functions, health, etc., and all the faculties and powers of the mind in seven different degrees of development, along with excellent rules for health and self-improvement. Its explanation of the principles of phrenology, etc., and its other important remarks will be found well adapted to the needs of students and others who may desire to acquire an elementary knowledge of phrenology with as little outlay of time and labor as possible. In short, this work will be found well adapted to the needs of both students and phrenological examiners.

The work contains 105 pages, with an excellent map of the head, showing the locations of all the faculties, and is handsomely printed and bound. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., N. Y.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 19, 1880.

I wish to notify the public that a Mr. Baldwin, of Chicago, also Rhodes & McClure, of the same place, are publishing pamphlet editions of my lectures. All the lectures published by them are grossly inaccurate—filled with mistakes, horribly printed, and outrageously unjust to me. These men are simple literary thieves and pirates, and are obtaining money from the public under false pretenses. I take this course to warn the public that these publications are fraudulent. The only correct copies of my lectures are published by C. P. Farrell. All others are published by people who are willing to steal from me and defraud the public under. These wretches hav published one lecture under four titles, and several others under two or three.

3m31 R. G. INGERSOLL.

All of C. P. Farrell's editions of Col. Ingersoll's works, and none others, are sold at this office. D. M. BENNETT.

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Price, 25 cents. For sale at this office.

SUPERSTITION;

THE RELIGION OF

"Believe or be Damned."

OPEN LETTER TO THE

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL BOARD.

BY

M. BABCOCK.

This book contains an inspired PHOTOGRAPH of the GOD that's being worshiped at the expense of the district in our public schools; the God that "overshadowed" Mary; the God that's wanted in the Constitution; the gentleman that owns some three billion dollars' worth of untaxed church property; the "so-help-me" God that makes a lie the truth in court; the God that governors besought to stop the yellow fever, which he didn't do. The picture is worth the price of the book. Price, 25 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, New York.

LADIES!!

"SALEM, OR., July 17, 1880.

"S. H. PRESTON, Dear Sir: Please send me by express, C. O. D., to Portland, Or., $100.00 (one hundred dollars) worth of that "Comstock" Syringe. I mean business.

"DR. MARY SOLANDER."

Only sixteen had been sold when

COMSTOCK

set out to suppress it. Now orders come as above. Grand jurymen buy it for their wives. It is SIMPLE, SAFE, INFALLIBLY RELIABLE, necessary to HEALTH and personal purity, and is pronounced by patients and physicians to be the greatest

GODSEND TO THE SEX

gotten up in this generation. Sent securely boxed, with private instructions for special use. Confidential terms to agents. Price $5.00; improved, $10.00. Address SAM. H. PRESTON, t32 209 West 34th st., New York.

"SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES"

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This volume is printed on toned paper, in clear, bold type, and handsomely bound in muslin, containing 275 pages, 12mo. Price, $1.25.

This book contains the principal points that Mr. Ingersoll has made against the Pentateuch in all his lectures on that subject. The pamphlets that hav been surreptitiously issued are incorrect, filled with mistakes, and consist of only about fourteen or fifteen pages, while there are two hundred and seventy-five pages in the book just issued. The book is unanswerable in its facts and logic, inimitable in its style, and filled with wit, satire, eloquence, and pathos.

Busts of R. G. Ingersoll,

By the celebrated sculptor, CLARK MILLS.

Cabinet size, price $2.50.

Small Busts, on Pedestal (mantel ornament), price $1.25. Neatly packed and boxed ready for shipment. Every admirer of this great Apostle of Liberty should hav at least one.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll.

By SARONY, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

| | |
|---|---|
| Imperial or large size | 40 cents |
| Photo or card size | 20 " |
| Life-size Lithograph, 21x27 | 50 " |

Postage paid.

D. M. BENNETT.
141 EIGHTH ST., NEW YORK

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Stinson & Co., Portland, Me

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. True & Co., Augusta, Me.

THE

Anonymous Hypothesis OF Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT. 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Nathaniel Vaughan.

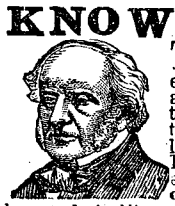
A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.



The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher. 141 Eighth St., N.Y

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth: price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER.

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

NEWBURYPORT MASS., Sept. 23, 1878.

To Miss Anna Knoop, Dear Madam:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

JAMES PARTON.

Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.

D. M. BENNETT. 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot and Power Presses. Die Work of all kinds. Perforating Dies a Specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N.Y.

Jan81.

MODERN THINKERS:

What They Think and Why.

By V. B. Denslow, LL.D.

With an Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The work contains critical essays upon Emanuel Swedenborg, and the origin of the Christian ideas of heaven, hell, and virtue; Adam Smith, founder of the school of Economists; Jeremy Bentham, the apostle of law reform and of utilitarianism in morals; Thomas Paine and his relations to the Declaration of Independence and democracy in America; Charles Fourier, the philosopher of passional harmony and co-operativ association; Herbert Spencer, a review of his theories of evolution and of morals; Earnst Haeckel, the demonstrator of the doctrin of evolution; Auguste Comte, founder of the Positive philosophy and pontiff of the "Religion of Humanity;" and an essay on the authorship of Junius as a sequel to the critique on Thomas Paine.

This volume consists of 384 pp., 12 mo, and is illustrated by portraits of each of the eight great thinkers, and opens with an introduction from the pen of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

Cloth, $1.50. Sold at this office.

The Gods and Religions of Ancient and Modern Times.

In Two Large Octavo Volumes.

WRITTEN IN PRISON.

By D. M. BENNETT.

Volume I. treats principally on all the Gods of the world. Volume II. gives a full description of the Religions of Ancient and Modern Times. An interesting and instructiv work. In cloth, $3 per vol. the two volumes for $5. In Leather, Red Edges, $4 per vol., or $7 for the two volumes. In Morocco and Gilt Edges, $4 50 per vol., or $8 for the two volumes. Sent free of postage.

LECTURES OF

R. G. INGERSOLL.

THE PEOPLE'S EDITION.

Paper Covers.

Vol. I. "The Gods, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Gods," "Humboldt," "Thos. Paine," "Individuality," "Heretics and Heresies." Price, 50 cents.

Vol. II. "The Ghosts, and other Lectures."

CONTENTS.—"The Ghosts," "Liberty of Man, Woman, and Child," "Declaration of Independence," "Farming in Illinois," "Speech at Cincinnati," "The Past Rises Before Me Like a Dream." Price 50 cents.

Both volumes bound in one, price, $1.00.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll, by Sarony, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

| | |
|---|---|
| Imperial, or large size | 40 cents. |
| Photo, or card size | 20 cents. |
| Life-size lithograph, 21x27 | 50 cents. |

Postage paid.

Either of the above Volumes handsomely bound in cloth, $1.25.

Address D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth St., New York.

THE

JAMIESON-DITZLER DEBATE.

BETWEEN

PROF. W. F. JAMIESON,

Of Chicago, Ill., and Minnesota, and the

REV. JACOB DITZLER, D.D.,

Of Kentucky.

Held in Kirksville, Mo., during nine evenings—May 20-29, 1878. Synopsis report—official. This book of 220 pages gives an interesting presentation of the theological questions which divide Christians and Liberals. The Rev. Ditzler is regarded as an able defender of his favorit Christian doctrins, but it will undoubtedly be admitted by the reader that Prof. W. F. Jamieson fully met all he had to offer. Christian readers will take more kindly to a work of this kind, giving both sides an equally fair chance, than to books on our side only.

Price, in paper covers 50 cents; well bound, 75 cents.

WORKINGMEN, READ!

ALLEGORY.

UNCLE SAM AND AMERICUS.

A DIALOG ON

LAND, LABOR, AND REFORM.

By F. E. BOYD.

Outlines of a plan for a new American national land and labor co-operativ system, by which land and comfortable homes may be secured to the poorest classes of every race, without money or price, with the educational and social advantages of modern civilization. Designed to ameliorate the condition of the struggling masses; to equalize population; to prevent vice, crime, and pauperism; to prevent the recurrence of industrial crises and feuds, labor riots, and popular insurrections; to terminate Indian wars; to avoid or do away with an oligarchy of landlords and capitalists; and to preserve or restore the liberties of the people and the rights of self-government by bringing immediately together the two great elements of universal progress, land and labor.

"The land shall not be sold forever; for the land is mine; for ye are strangers and sojourners with me" (Lev. xxv., 23).

"Moreover, the profit of the earth is for all" (Ecclesiastes v, 9).

Price 10 cents. Sold at this office.

SAMSON:

A Myth-Story of the Sun.

The Gospel of the Kingdom According to the Holy Men of Old.

The author of these works finds the Bible largely mythical in its character. He presents us a number of copies to be disposed of in the interest of THE TRUTH SEEKER. All who purchase will therefore aid THE TRUTH SEEKER to the amount of their purchase, or add to the Bennett fund as they may choose.

Samson, 20 cents; Gospel of the Kingdom, vols., each, 30 cents.

THE

CLERGYMAN'S VICTIMS.

A Radical Romance.

—BY—

MRS. J. E. BALL.

This pamphlet of over 100 pages is a pleasing animated, domestic story, presenting Liberal thought in an agreeable manner, and will be read by thousands where heavier, drier, and more philosophical and metaphysical works are not preferred. It is a good story to lend Christian neighbors to read. Price, 25 cents.

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of a scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 East 28th Street, N. Y

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract.

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City.

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind. Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. By COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy character of the origin of the religion of Christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1 75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2.00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo. 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 63 pages; price, 25 cents

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 130 pages. Price, only 25 cents.

The Rights of Man. By THOMAS PAINE. Written in defense of his fellowman. A work almost without a peer in the world. Large type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine. By CALVIN BLANCHARD. 12mo. Large type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall. A radical romance. Paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas: Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. An able examination of the sources of the past religions of the world. 140 pp. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. By D. M. BENNETT. Embracing a variety of subjects, the whole making nearly seven hundred pages. The subjects treated can hardly prove uninteresting to the reader. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.). $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are Illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion; or, An Answer to the Question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Infallibly-Inspired, and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman; together with a sketch of the author. In four parts. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Leaflets, of two pages each. Thirty-two in number; 4 cents per dozen; 8 cents for the set; 25 cents per hundred; $2.00 per thousand.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

THE unbeliever is he who deliberately declines to speak what he thinks, or to trust humanity with what helpful truth has been intrusted to himself.—Rev. Sam. Johnson.

HE who knows no fault, knows no virtue.
The rectitude that heaven bestows on man
Leads through error; and the kindly sense
Of having strayed endears the road to bliss.

THE imitation of all wise and noble things comes and must come from individuals; generally at first from some one individual. The honor and glory of the average man is that he is capable of following that initiativ; that he can respond internally to wise and noble things and be led to them with his eyes open.—Mill's Liberty.

IF that last day does not occasion an entire extinction, but a change of abode only, what can be more desirable if it, on the other hand, destroys and absolutely puts an end to us? What can be preferable to the having a deep sleep fall on us in the midst of the fatigues of life and being thus overtaken, to sleep to eternity?—Cicero.

BECAUSE we cannot explain the whys and wherefores of all we see around us is no reason that we should adopt theories of other men or bodies of men who think they know all about it. If we cannot tell the origin and end, this is no proof that we are wrong in disbelieving the opinions of those who profess to make things as "clear as mud."—Elmina D. Slenker.

THERE is danger lest the transcendental religionist should despise the past and its sober teachings, should take a fancy, personal and fugitiv, for a fact of universal consciousness, embrace a cloud for an angel, and miserably perish. It is not for man to trascend his faculties, to be above himself, above reason, conscience, affection, religion, beside himself. Madmen in religion are not very enthusiastic fanatics.—Parker's Transcendentalism.

OLD writers pushed the happy season back—
The more fools they—we forward: dreamers both;
You mark that in an age when every hour
Must sweat her sixty minutes to the death.

Liv on, God love us, as if the seedman, rapt
Upon upon the bearing harvest, should not plunge
His hand into the bag: but well I know
That unto him who works, and feels he works,
This same grand year is come at the door.
—Tennyson.

FALSE and true are relativ terms, and I shall probably know very little about the false till I hav arrived at the absolutely true. A grand thing, indeed, it would be in a catholic and hopeful spirit, to regard all reaching of the human intelligence and soul as a growth along the whole line toward the true. Let us not despise or dread honest or inquiring error. How hav the sciences of medicin and astronomy, how hav the progresses of social life, the causes of education, of health, of legislation, been advanced except by deduction from error and the hard disciplin of blunder?—Hon. J. D. Long.

WHEN a theater takes fire, good people talk about "a judgment." Well and good, if they will only understaad that it is a judgment simply on the way the theater was built or managed. Only the truth is larger. Every fire is a judgment; every accident or catastrophe is a judgment—a judgment for the wrong or careless or ignorant handling of those awful edge-tools, the forces of nature. All life, all being, all becoming, is growth—growth which is alive with moral meaning, moral will, and moral sequence. The harvest is a judgment on the sowing. Every finished work is a judgment on the way it has been done.—Brooke Herford.

A GENTLEMAN who takes his family to church regularly said to me: "I know as well as any man that the clergyman preaches fables, but I do not care to worry my children by telling them so. When I take them to the pantomime I don't tell them all that scenery is only daubed pasteboard, the fairy there is merely a painted woman, and her jewels only glass, bought for a penny. Whether at church or theater, I propose to humor their pleasant illusions, and let them remain happy in them as long as they can." It appeared to me strange that this gentleman should not see the great difference between transient illusion and permanent delusion. He humors the illusions of the pantomime because he knows very well that his child will outgrow them. It would distress him very much if he thought that when his child grew to be twenty years of age it would still believe in the reality of fairies. But in encouraging the pulpit fables he is fostering things that, from being the illusions of childhood, harden into the delusions of the whole life.—Conway's Idols and Ideals.

Lo, I am weary of all—
Of men and their love and their hate;
I hav been long enough life's thrall
And the toy of a tyrant fate.

I would hav nothing but rest,
I would not struggle again.
Take me now to thy breast,
Earth, sweet mother of men.

Hide me and let me sleep;
Giv me a lonely tomb
So close and so dark and so deep
I shall hear no trump of doom.

There let me lie forgot
When the dead at its blast are gone;
Giv me to hear it not,
But only to slumber on.

This is the fate I crave,
For I look to the end and see
If there be not rest in the grave
There will never be rest for me.

Odds and Ends.

SAILORS always hav a hard time of it. They are always in a mess.

A MAN who wears a ten-cent piece on his shirt front calls it his dime and pin.

A ONE-EYED man on West Hill says he always looks at a friend's vices with his fault's eye.

MANY a tramp would be thankful for cold ham, but none of them relish the cold shoulder.

THE old maid who exclaimed, "My life has been a deserted waist," can readily be believed.

A PUGILIST seems to think that the best way to preserve the eyes is to make them into jam.

HAS any paragrapher ever remarked that Eve was only a side issue in the great human race?

THE tramp is always cowardly, and nothing pleases him better than to strike a bed when it's down.

"THE sun shines for all," exclaims the honest man. "The moon don't shine for haul," exclaims the burglar.

A DEADWOOD mob chased a man three miles into the Indian country because he said baseball, and not poker, was the national game.

A WESTERN plumber takes half a column of his local newspaper to advertise "Cast Iron Sinks." But, great Scott! who ever said that it didn't?

IT was when he wrote home to his wife that he had been poisoned with ivy that she sang to the youngest born, "Ivy letter from your sire, baby mine."

THE weather is always putting on airs and it is no uncommon sight to see the weather vane. —Whitehall Times. So it ought to be. Don't it hold the rains?

"SOONER or later," says a French writer, "everything is found out." Just so. A married man, for instance, is found out later—about three hours later—than he should be.

THE way that a London woman lately identified her stolen parrot was by bringing her husband into court and scolding him. The bird soon called out, "Oh, I wish you were dead, old woman."

A CHINAMAN will bend all day over a hot iron in a little close room, ironing his clothes on a hot day, and never think of being warm; and yet he could not fly a kite in midwinter without fanning himself.

BILL JONES owned one of the billboards in a Michigan town, but business being dull, he was compelled to sell in order to pay his hotel bill. It rather bored Bill to hav to sell his billboard to pay his board bill.

A BINGHAMTON man is suing for a divorce from his wife on the plea that she has a glass eye, that it is always open nights, and the aspect makes him nervous. He coaxed her to close it with red sealing wax, but that only increased his terror.

LAST week a Bible agent sat down at a farmer's table up in Scott county, played eucher with the old man, and won a yoke of four-year-old steers from him, and then made him buy eight dozen Bibles and sixteen pounds of tracts to redeem his steers.

IT makes a new preacher awful mad when fumbling with the intricacies of a front gate fastening, trying to get in and make his first pastoral call, to hav the woman of the house turn the slat in the bay window and call out, "We havn't got no old clothes to giv away, and there ain't a cold vittle in the house."

COWS AND CHRISTIANS.—A minister who had been reproving one of his elders for over-indulgence, observed a cow go down to a stream, take a drink, and then turn away. "There," said he to his offending elder, "is an example for you; the cow has quenched its thirst and has retired." "Yes," replied the other, "that is very true. But suppose another cow had come to the other side of the stream, and had said, 'Here's to you,' there's no saying how long they might hav gone on."

DEPUTY SHERIFF HULL of South Madison opened the door cautiously, and, poking in his head in a suggestiv sort of way, as if there was no more to follow, inquired:

"Is this the rinktum?"

"The what, my friend?"

"Is this the rinktum—sinktum—sanctum, or some such place where editors liv?"

"This is the editorial room, yes, sir, come in."

"No, I guess I won't come in. I wanted to see what a rinktum was like. That's all. Looks like our garret, only wuss. Good-bye."

THERE were two sisters in Louisville famous for their wit, and there is also in that favored town a gentleman, Colonel Blank, who for two generations has had the reputation of having courted every heiress in the neighborhood. One of the sisters referred to said to the other several weeks ago,

"If a million dollars were left to you, what is the first thing you would do?"

"I should fall upon my knees and pray the Lord to keep me out of Colonel Blank's clutches."

This was repeated to the Colonel, who waited for revenge. The witty young woman, leaning on the railing of the piazza at Crab Orchard, saw the Colonel in the yard below.

"Well, dear Colonel," she said, "I meet you everywhere I go. Can't I go anywhere without seeing you?"

"Yes, there is one place," calmly replied the Colonel.

"Where is it? let me go!"

"Well, go home."

Truth Seeker Tracts

| No. | Revised List. | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. " | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Datham, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 2 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft. | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. | 8 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. " | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. " | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 3 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | 2 |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. | 2 |
| 32. | The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 8 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus. D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 8 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 8 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. | 8 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite. " | 8 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 8 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 8 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 8 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. | 8 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 8 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 5 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. " | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus. D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 2 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 8 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 8 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 80. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 5 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 1 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 2 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 5 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London. | 2 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 10 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 2 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 3 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 2 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 92. | The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 5 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 1 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 5 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 10 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 2 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Scieta. | 5 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 102. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 1 |
| 103. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 2 |
| 104. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 10 |
| 105. | Decadence of Christianity. Capphro. | 2 |
| 106. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 107. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 108. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 2 |
| 110. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 1 |
| 111. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 112. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 2 |
| 113. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 114. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 1 |
| 115. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 2 |
| 116. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 117. | Constantine the Great. Preston | 3 |
| 118. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 5 |
| 119. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 3 |
| 120. | The New Age. Bell | 10 |
| 121. | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 2 |
| 122. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 10 |
| 123. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 124. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 125. | German Liberalism. Clara Neymann | 2 |
| 126. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 10 |
| 127. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 5 |
| 129. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 2 |
| 130. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 5 |
| 131. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 3 |
| 132. | My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson | 1 |
| 133. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | 5 |
| 134. | Talks with the Evangelists | 5 |
| 135. | Is there a Future Life? | 3 |
| 136. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett | 8 |
| 137. | Christian Love. C. L. James | 2 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper. | |
| 139. | Massacre of St. Bartholemew. Preston | |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142. | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wau Ho. Eli Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 145. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. B. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L.L. Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D. | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off, on two dollars' worth, 20 off: on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

$100 PER MONTH and a $2 outfit free. Agents wanted in every state to collect small pictures to copy and enlarge to a beautiful Oil Painting. The biggest thing out. PHOTO COPYING COMPANY. Address CHIDESTER & CO. 139 EIGHTH STREET, NEW YORK. 4:41

THE

Cause and Remedy of the Present Financial Condition of the Country.

A lecture delivered at the Courthouse, Albion, New York.

BY MRS. A. H. COLBY.

Price 10 cents. For sale, wholesale and retail, by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

BULLION IN THE CAMPAIGN OF 1880;

OR.

SHYLOCK IN VERSE.

A Pamphlet on the Issues in Finance.

It will be sent to any address on receipt of fifteen cents, or in lots of 10 or more, at the rate of six cents each. Address, A. B. BROWN, Worcester, Mass.

Mrs. Besant's Tracts.

Prices Reduced.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion, | 5 |
| The Fruits of Christianity, | 5 |
| Constructiv Rationalism, | 5 |
| On Eternal Torture, | 5 |
| On Prayer, | 5 |
| The True Basis of Morality, | 5 |
| The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought, | 5 |
| Is the Bible Indictable? | 5 |

ALSO

| | |
|---|---|
| The Law of Population; Its Consequences and its Bearings Upon Human Conduct and Morals, | 40 |
| Marriage; As it Was, As it Is, and As it Should Be, | 40 |

The last two contain a fine steel-plate engraving of Mrs. Besant.

There is no clearer, better writer in the English language.

IN ADDITION.

| | |
|---|---|
| The Church and Education, | 5 |
| On the Religious Education of Children, | 5 |
| Government. An Essay. By Charles Moran. | 10 |

Sold at this office.

THE LIBERAL HYMN BOOK

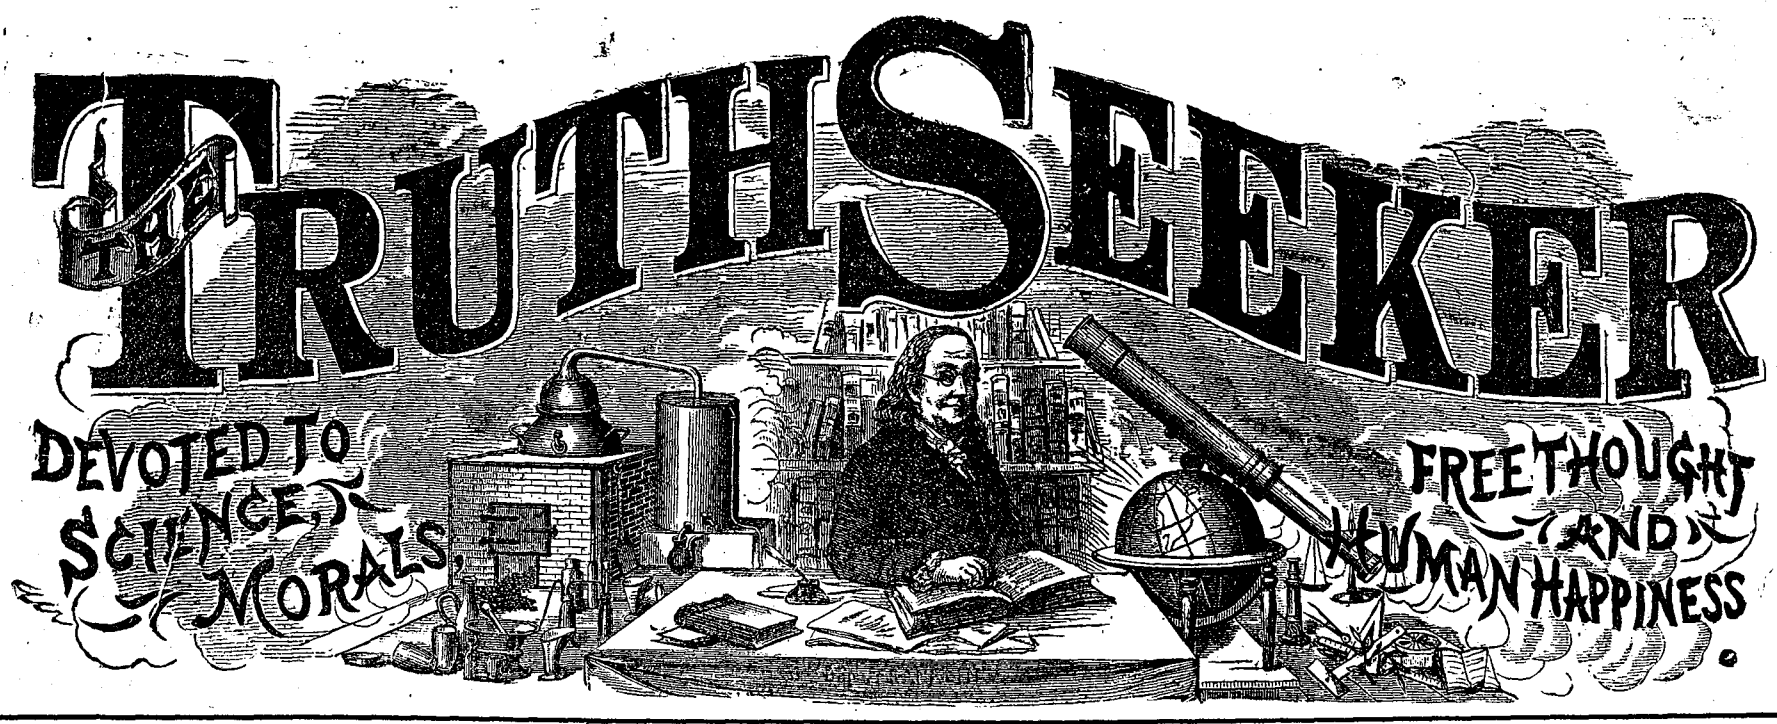
A collection of songs by Whittier, Longfellow, Bryant, Tennyson, and others, set to familiar tunes. Designed for Liberal Leagues and other meetings, and in Liberal homes. Compiled and edited by Eliza Boardman Burnz. Price, half bound and on heavy paper, 25 cents; one hundred copies, $15.00; fifty, $8.00: twenty-five, $5.00. Paper covers, 15 cents; one hundred copies, $10.00; fifty, $5.00; twenty-five copies, $3.00. Two cents per copy additional must be sent to prepay postage on all wholesale orders. Address all orders to D. M. BENNETT.

141 Eighth street, New York.



AN OUTLINE

OF THE

FRENCH REVOLUTION, ITS CAUSES AND RESULTS.

BY W. S. BELL.

There is probably no period of history in the world more interesting or more important than the French Revolution in the last century, and Mr. Bell has traced it ably and in an interesting manner. Every one who reads it will be pleased with it. Price, 25 cents. Send to this office.

Vol. 7. No. 42. { PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT } New York, Saturday, October 16, 1880. { SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY. } $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

A SPANISH proverb says, "An ounce of mother is worth a pound of clergy." It is applicable to other places than Spain.

THE pope has decided to dismiss his Swiss guards. It may be recollected that all of the quaint dress of these men was designed by Michael Angelo Buonarotti, save the helmet. This, it appears, he forgot; hence their incongruous appearance.

THE Vatican is beating up vigorously for Peter's Pence, "without which," says the pope in his letter to the bishop of Orleans, "there would be for the Holy See neither liberty nor dignity." The Tablet heads the subscription list with these words.

SOME of the French Protestants propose giving a handsome diploma to each person who is won from Roman Catholicism to Protestantism by the preaching of the Protestant ministers. In this country the same result would be accomplished by giving a chromo.

THE Spanish government has announced its intention of proceeding against all the clergy who introduce politics into their sermons. If the Spanish government had charge of ecclesiastical affairs in this country it would hav its hands exceedingly busy during the coming month.

ACCORDING to Prof. Grimmer, there is a terrible seven years before us. From 1880 to 1887 there will be a universal mortality. Asia will be depopulated, and Europe will become almost a desert. America will lose fifteen million inhabitants. There will be tempests and inundations. No prophet could possibly be grimmer than this one.

ALMOST all the religious papers, except the strictly Presbyterian ones, are now criticising the great Presbyterian Council, and saying that it did not amount to much. The official letter of the council, which is sent to all the Presbyterian churches throughout the world to be publicly read on the first Sunday in January next, is spoken of as a collection of pious platitudes amounting to nothing of importance.

IT IS a great relief to New York to know that Moody and Sankey are going to leave for San Francisco on Tuesday next. They hav done no good in this section. They may be able to convert some of the Sand Lotters, possibly old Kallock. Be that as it may, we wish them a pleasant journey, and hope they will remain there until we send for them. If they find the thing "a go" out in the coast country let them telegraph for Tony Comstock.—Truth.

THE original Salvation Army in England is said to be making itself more ridiculous than ever. It has adopted several new styles of warfare in the way of screaming announcements, parodies of hymns and songs, and novel and outrageous patterns of banners. A detachment of the army threatens to invade France. The French Methodist paper, L'Evangeliste, is prepared to giv them a chance to prove their ability to make an impression on the lively fancy of the French.

LEO XIII. has enjoined on the Hungarian Episcopate to carry out in their extremest rigor the canonical regulations respecting mixed marriages. The Episcopate has consequently addressed a circular to the clergy, forbidding them to celebrate mixed marriages, even when the parties agree to bring up their issue in the Catholic faith. This measure is extremely unpopular among the Catholics in Hungary.

WE desire to say to the New York TRUTH SEEKER and the National Defense Association that if there is any way of reaching Anthony Comstock and having him punished for inducing persons to violate the postal laws, the laws against indecent exposure of person, etc., we wish to contribute to a fund to be raised for that purpose. If it be true that he is hiring men and women to commit crime, and then informing on them, it seems to us that he is amenable to the law which punishes persons who are accessory to crime. We will start a fund for that purpose with a subscription of $10.—Worthington Advance.

THE Rev. Adirondack Murray, who abandoned the pulpit and has gone into the business of shipping choice American flour in small sacks to Europe, is at last benefiting humanity. Now let about 9,000 other preachers engage in some useful pursuit, in something they know something of, and the world will move easier, faster, better; their old pulpits can be converted into chicken-coops, and society take an upward tendency.

JOHN HENDRY, an itinerant preacher, is trying to travel away from his sins and the sheriff. Last winter he held a revival meeting at Carlton, Michigan, stopping with a man by the name of Lydy. Recently the bank at Saranac, Michigan, notified Mr. Lydy that his note for $80 was due, and he would please pay it. Not having given such a note, Mr. Lydy investigated and found that his friend the preacher had used his name. As he drove into town he was also notified that there was a chattel mortgage on his horse and buggy, which the minister had driven a number of times and represented as his own. Mr. Hendry had just been appointed to a circuit at a salary of $600 per year. He has enlarged the circuit, but the sheriff thinks he can catch him yet.

IN a card recently issued by the Rev. E. H. Dutcher, of Long Island City, N. Y., he says the first Methodist Episcopal church of that place is in debt to the amount of $4,155; $2 100 is in bonds, which can be purchased at fifty cents on the dollar, and he appeals for money to buy them up. "Nothing," he says, "has been paid on principal or interest, the brethren hoping they might in some way evade payment." The honesty evinced in this frank statement is of dubious character. The brethren tried first to evade the payment of their just debt; but "after taking legal counsel," and finding they are holden for the amount, they wish to "scale" the debt by paying only half. If the Lord can not do better than to repudiate his debts, the sheriff better sell him out at auction, pay what he can, and let him retire from activ business.

SINCE Dr. Wolf attacked the Homeric authorship of the Iliad and Odyssey no more startling theory in destructiv criticism has been broached than that made public during the past month by two Norwegian professors, who endeavor to show that the whole scheme of Teutonic mythology—Odin, Walhalla, the horns, and the rest—which hav always been held to be the indigenous myths of the Germanic races, are really nothing more than a transcription since the Christian era of Greek and Roman mythology, with some Jewish stories sifted in. The analogies, and they are numerous enough, between the mythologies of southern and northern Europe hav always been explained on the ground of common Aryan origin; but this argument can be in a sense worked backward by making the Teuton myths start in southern Europe. This is what is done by Prof. Gophus Bugge and Dr. A. C. Bang, of Christina, who father the new hypothesis, a theory which knocks the props out of all current explanations of the northern mythology; but as the subject is further developed the new interpretation appears to meet with less and less credence. That it should be adopted by men of the first rank in the study of Scandinavian literature bears its own lesson of the limits of exact knowledge in the study of comparativ mythology.

"NO, SIR," said Mr. Dontgivadam, "I am not a member of the Y. M. C. A.," and the gentleman knocked the ashes off his cigar, and settled back in his seat. "Although not yourself a member," said the Sun's reporter "you cannot be ignorant that it is an existing corporation; that it is rich, and widespread, and exercises a profound influence upon the youth of the country which is not to be overlooked. I would be glad to know what you think of the institution, of its purposes, and its methods." "I think," replied Mr Dontgivadam, "that I remember telling you that opinions were of very rare occurrence with me, and that even when one forced itself upon me I was disinclined to add it to the mass of current thought. Of the Young Men's Christian Association I know little, and that little only from hearsay. Of its exact purpose I am ignorant, and consequently could not criticise its methods if I wished. But I do remember what was told to me the other day by a young friend of mine. He said that, being in a condition of health which made it necessary for him to take much exercise, he had inquired where he could find a gymnasium. 'I was told' said he, 'that there were two which my informant knew about—Wood's gymnasium and that of the Young Men's Christian Association.' 'Which is the better?' he asked, and was told that there was not much choice in the gymnasiums, but there was a mighty difference in the crowd. The Association was cheaper, and nearer, too, by five blocks. 'Well,' says my friend, "You know what I am, and can imagin that I naturally started for Wood's in hope of striking a congenial atmosphere. But by the time I got to Twenty-third street, considerations of provinquity and cash induced me to turn into the Association. Feeling something like a returning prodigal, and with perhaps a slight touch of defiance, I went into a reception room and asked to see the gymnasium. It was on the lower floor, and I went down stairs to look at it. It was not very light, nor was the outlook agreeable. The dressing rooms were lighted with gas, and were rather dirty. The air in them was bad; in the exercising room it was better, but still not good. Scripture texts adorned the walls, perhaps with the idea that an extra supply of godliness was desirable, because the bath rooms were in another part of the building. Still there was a very fair apparatus—Indian clubs, and parallel bars, and much that was good; and I decided to join. I went up stairs again and inquired what were the usual preliminaries. The gentlemen in charge were very civil and polite, and an infant in leading strings could not come to harm among them. One of them produced a blank form and began to fill it out for me. I think he asked me my name, my age, my home, by residence, my occupation, what religious denomination I preferred, where I went to church, and some other things. I gave him such answers as seemed to me to be advisable, paid my money, got my key, and went down to exercise. I made a fair success of it, and behaved apparently like an orthodox gymnast, except in the matter of wearing my legs bare below the knee, which I was civilly informed was contrary to custom. I apologized, and said that sea bathing had demoralized my ideas of decorum. I was inclined to hazard a small sum on my belief that St. Paul never owned a pair of stockings in his life; but I refrained. And so I joined; and now, being interested in the institution, I am half of a disposition to place at the disposal of the managers that deep knowledge of the character of the American young man which is the fruit of my wide experience and introspectiv tendencies.' 'And what,' said I, 'is the first amendment that you propose?' 'I do not think,' he replied, with a thoughtful air, 'that the questions put at present to applicants for admission are of a nature sufficiently searching to elicit the bottom facts about the character of the young man of the day, or of his habits, or even of his religious conceptions. Such information is very desirable, in order that we of the Association may know what influences should be brought to bear upon such young men as come among us, and I hav drawn up a list of interrogatories, which will afford our managers, I hope, sufficient data to enable us to work in an intelligent and judicious manner. I would be glad to hav your opinion upon them;' and with that he gave me this paper, and we parted." Here Mr. Dontgivadam handed the Sun's representativ the following list of additional questions designed to be proposed to an applicant for admission to the Y. M. C. A.:

1. Are you engaged to be married? If not, what was the alleged reason given by the last young woman who threw you over?
2. Do you think it right to go to Coney Island on the Sabbath?
3. Do you believe in hell?
4. Do you believe in faith without good works?
5. Are you in the habit of paying your tailor? And, if not, what are his views of the previous question?
6. Do you believe in mixed drinks? If yes, what is yours, and do you consume it habitually before breakfast?
7. Do you go in for Adam or apes?
8. How much do you owe?
9. Is your father working?

"Your young friend seems to be much in earnest," said the Sun's reporter when he had copied the questions and returned them. "Yes," says the gentleman, "he tires me. I am tired now from talking about him. He means well, I think, but I doubt if the balance of his mind is quite even. Good-day, sir."—Sun.

Events of the Week.

REPORTS of poverty and death from starvation fill the Russian press.

A WOOLEN mill at West Stoughton, Mass., was burnt on the 9th. Loss, $175,000.

JACQUES OFFENBACH, the great opera bouffe composer, died in Paris on the 5th.

A PLOT to assassinate the Sultan of Turkey has been discovered and frustrated.

FLOODS in Bengal hav drowned many people and done much damage to the crops.

GRANT has been trying to throw dirty slurs on Hancock's character. Jealousy is the probable cause.

Two men were killed and twelve wounded by a railroad accident at Littleton, Mass., on the seventh.

THE triennial convention of the Protestant Episcopal church is now in activ operation in this city.

A BANK messenger was robbed of twenty-two thousand dollars in a Broadway stage a few days ago.

Two men were lynched in Nelson county, Va., a few days ago, for an outrage committed on a widow lady.

THE corner-stone for the Egyptian obelisk was laid in Central Park on the 9th with masonic ceremonies.

THE crew of a merchant vessel were recently massacred by the natives of the Solomon Islands in the South Sea.

FIVE men were killed and a large number hurt by a train collision near Willimantic, Conn., on the 8th.

A FIRE broke out in the palace of the Louvre in Paris a few days ago, doing damage to the amount of $200,000.

A HOTEL and railroad depot at Bradford, Pa., were destroyed by fire on the 9th. One woman was fatally injured.

BY an accident in the St. Gothard tunnel under the Alps, a few days ago, several men were killed and a few wounded.

A GRAVEL train on the Chicago and St. Paul Railroad ran off the track on the 10th, killing and wounding several men.

THE Chilians hav bombarded two Peruvian cities in retaliation for the destruction of their war vessel by the Peruvians.

THE Democratic sheriff of Shelbyville, Ind., was murdered in a political brawl on the 9th. First blood for the Republicans.

IN a pistol fight at Concordia, Miss., three or four days ago, between a justice of the peace and a farmer, both men were killed.

AN Indian outbreak has taken place on the Skagit River, Washington Territory, General Howard has ordered troops to the spot.

THE Republicans of this city had a grand parade on Monday evening last, and were reviewed by General Grant. There were 40,000 men in line.

THREE men were killed and several wounded by an accident on the New England Railroad on the 8th. A passenger train collided with a freight train.

SEVERAL cattle sheds at Sterling, Illinois, were destroyed by fire, burning between seven and eight hundred head of cattle and fifteen hundred tons of hay.

THE Sandwich Islanders are enjoying a little excitement. The ministry has been changed, all natives being excluded, and the natives talk of deposing King Kalakaua.

BY a collision on the Second Avenue Elevated Railroad in this city on last Monday a locomotiv and several cars were smashed, one man was killed, and several were injured.

GEN. WEAVER emphatically denies the charge that he has sold out to the Republican party. He claims that there will be upward of six million Greenback votes polled in this election.

Two overcrowded passenger trains collided at Pittsburgh, Pa., on the 9th. Twenty-four persons were killed, and a long list of others dangerously scalded and otherwise injured.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1880.

Letter from Europe.—No. 9.

THE BRUSSELS CONGRESS AND BRUSSELS ITSELF.

BRUSSELS, Sept. 5, 1880.

DEARLY BELOVED: I have remained here longer than in any other place in Europe I have thus far visited, not because it is so much larger than other places, but there is much to be seen here. The Congress occupied four days, and I got so far behind with my writing I decided to tarry here till I should catch up and be able to start afresh on my journey southward into Germany, up the Rhine, through Switzerland, over the Alps, to Milan, Venice, Florence, Rome, and Naples. Before, however, entering into any further description of this town and its curiosities I will give you briefly some account of the Freethinkers' Congress which has been held here. As Mr. Rawson made a pretty full report of the proceedings, and as he has started for home, and is doubtless now on the broad Atlantic, and you will probably see his report before this reaches you, I will only say briefly what I have to say about the Congress.

Mrs. Bristol and Mrs. Dr. E. B. Foote, two of the American delegates, arrived here Saturday night, Aug. 28th, and took rooms near us, where the Congress was held. On Sunday morning Mr. Edmond Gastineau, delegate from New York, arrived from Paris, also Mrs. Louise Pence, wife of my friend Dr. Allen Pence, of Terre Haute, Ind., arrived here from Berlin, she having ridden all night in the cars to reach here. She was also a delegate to the Congress, representing more particularly the Spiritualistic phase of Liberalism. She took a room at the same place with Mrs. Bristol and Mrs. Foote, while Mr. Gastineau took one in the building here with Mr. Rawson and myself. Thus we American delegates, three women and three men—exclusive of Mr. Schroeter from Wisconsin, who represents more particularly the German element of American Freethinkers—found ourselves very pleasantly located here and near together. Dr. T. S. Andrews, of Kipton, Ohio, whom I saw in London, intended to be with us; in fact he was here the day we arrived, but was taken ill and deemed it prudent to return to Norwich, England, without our seeing him, and we were thus deprived of his company and aid.

On Saturday evening our English friends poured in, also, in considerable numbers. Among them were Mrs. Annie Besant, Miss Hypatia Bradlaugh, Mr. Johannes Swaagman; Mr. Geo. Standring, editor of the Republican; P. A. V. Le Lubez, Sec. English National Secular Society; Wm. H. Reynolds, Mr. R. Forder, Mr. G. L. Fowler, all of the Secular Society; and next day came Mr. Charles Watts, editor of the Secular Review; Mr. Edward Truelove, Mr. Larner Sugden and wife, and M. De Goey, Esq., who a part of the time resides on the continent and is correspondent for several papers. Mr. Truelove is Vice-President of the Secular Society, the others of those last mentioned belong to the British Secular Union. It was indeed pleasant to meet friends here who sympathize with us and who speak the same language with ourselves. It was very much regretted by us all that Mr. Bradlaugh could not be with us. He fully intended to come, but Parliament held its session till after midnight on Friday night, and feeling that it would not do for him to neglect his duty there, he was forced to forego the pleasure of coming here. But he sent his daughter, with Mrs. Besant, and also a letter to the Congress, and we had to content ourselves with that. We had a very pleasant interview with Mrs. Besant, Miss Bradlaugh, and the gentlemen of the English delegation on Saturday night, in this building. All were in good spirits, and it was evident from the first that our Congress was to be a success.

On Sunday morning, August 29th, the first meeting of the Congress assembled at 10 A.M. Nearly two hundred and twenty-five delegates attended the first meeting, and as fine-looking people are not often met with. They looked like thinking men who are capable of making up their own minds for themselves.

The meeting was opened by the Resident Committee on Organization. President Goffin, in a very suitable speech, explained the object of the meeting of the Congress, and extended a fraternal and cordial welcome to the delegates from every country. Of course Belgium sent more delegates than any other country, for the reason that the Congress is held right in their very midst, and because there are so many different Freethinking, Socialistic, and workingmen's parties here fully in sympathy with us in the work in which we are engaged. There were many here from France, Germany, Holland, Italy, with England and America, as I have shown.

After the preliminary business was attended to, a temporary adjournment was had, that the credentials and membership might be duly attended to. We handed in the hundred credentials sent us by the different Leagues and other societies, including private letters to the Congress from individuals. I trust it will not be regarded as boasting for me to say that we had, by far, more vouchers, more certificates of delegation, than any other delegates attending the Congress, and I can also say no delegation was more cordially received. The Congress seemed to realize that the Freethinkers of America are alive, in earnest, and numerous as well.

About the first business attended to after the examination of credentials, etc., was the election of permanent officers for the Congress. It was proposed to elect a President to represent each principal nationality here. So M. N. Goffin was the Belgian President, and became the permanent President of the Congress, and a most efficient presiding officer he is too; M. Le Maitre for the French; Dr. Ludwig Buchner, of Darmstadt, the able and well-known Materialistic writer, for Germany; M. R. C. D'Ablaing, editor of the Dageraad (Daybreak) of Amsterdam, for Holland; Mrs. Annie Besant, assistant editor of the National Reformer, London, for the English, and your humble servant, the editor of THE TRUTH SEEKER, for America.

Let me assure you, my friends, right here, that though I considered myself something like the fifth or sixth wheel of a coach as I sat there on the platform assisting to preside over that intellectual assemblage, I could not help contrasting my situation on this occasion with what it was one year ago this very time, when I was making shoes in the penitentiary with thieves, robbers, counterfeiters, burglars, and murderers, and locked up in my little stone cell at night. I could not help realizing the change as I sat before that body with Dr. Buchner on my right and Mrs. Besant on my left; the status of one year ago came vividly before me, and the tears moistened my eyes.

Mrs. Besant was very efficient as assistant presiding officer. She speaks the French and German languages fluently, and it was easy for her to explain in English, French, and German what was necessary to be known by either nationality. She also made a beautiful speech at the first meeting in French, which was exceedingly well received, and also read a letter from Mr. Bradlaugh to the Congress. Very complimentary remarks were made in reference to Mr. Bradlaugh. The Freethinkers on the continent cherish a very high respect for him and for the moral courage he has exhibited in his warfare against unjust laws and unjust construction of law.

I will not attempt to give separately the business accomplished at each meeting of the Congress. It is sufficient to say that two sessions per day were held for four days, and each session lasted three hours, from 10 A.M. to 1 P.M. and from 8 P.M. to 11 P.M. On Sunday, however, the second session began at 5 P.M. and continued till 8 P.M. The business of the morning meeting was principally discussing the questions of the objects of the International Congress of Freethinkers, what questions should be brought before it, how often it should be held, where, what number of delegates should be sent to it, etc., etc. Some of the discussions were very animated, and it was decidedly amusing to see these Frenchmen and Germans gesticulating, shrugging their shoulders, etc., in the most emphatic manner. It was decided to hold a session of the International Congress annually, and that every session shall have the power to designate where the succeeding session shall be held. Each society sending delegates may send any number of delegates they please not exceeding ten. The next session is to be held in Paris in September, 1881. The debate was lively as to whether London, Paris, Brussels, or Geneva should be the place. Many were in favor of London, but the majority favored Paris. In addition an advisory council, consisting of two members from each nation, is to have its headquarters in London, and to this council the different societies in the various countries are to send their reports of the condition of the societies and their desires as to what business shall be brought before the International Congress. Many of the details I will omit.

When the subject of what should be done to most efficiently propagate Freethought was discussed a great deal of earnestness was displayed and a great unanimity of feeling prevailed. It was to bring about a thorough separation of church and state, to encourage free education without the bias of dogmas or religious teachings, to have only secular marriages and funerals, and above all to oppose the power of the "blacks"—the Catholic clergy—in every possible way, by the dissemination of Freethought publications, lectures, etc. A Liberal editor from Amsterdam gave a very interesting statement from Holland as regards the advancement it has made in secularizing the schools, funerals, marriages, etc., within its own borders. I was not prepared to think Holland had advanced so far. No one is obliged there to employ a priest to solemnize the marriage tie, or to perform the last rites at funerals. The schools, also, are comparatively free. Good for Holland!

The evening meetings were principally taken up in reading reports by the various delegates from the different societies, also essays on morals, free will, and the best means for advancing the cause of truth and Freethought. Among the reports brought forward on Sunday evening was one by Mr. A. L. Rawson, on the status and prospects of the Liberal Cause in America. He made some remarks in English, but his address proper was read in French by Dr. Paepe. It was very well received. Mr. de Goey read in French a letter from Mr. George Jacob Holyoake, and also an address by Mr. Charles Watts of the Secular Review. Many other reports and essays were given, but it is unnecessary to particularize. My address was brought forward on Monday night and read in French by Dr. de Paepe, but as it was not a report, and was long, it was not all read.

Mrs. Bristol gave her admirable address in English on the last night, when the question of morals was before the Congress, and caused to be distributed among the audience the same printed in French. It was exceedingly well received, and the impression she made upon the audience was of the most happy character. As an indication of what was thought of her address and her manner before an audience, I will give a translation of the remarks made upon the subject in the Journal des Brussels on the following day:

"Madame Augusta Cooper Bristol is an American engaged in a mission little known upon the European continent. She is a lecturess. The principles of her discourse rest upon the philosophy of Comte and Spencer. We discuss not these principles; we disapprove them. They are summed up in the words employed by the lecturess, at the termination of her discourse, 'Life is life's own object.' We speak only of the form of oratory. Madame Bristol is really the Rachel, the Ristori, the Sarah Bernhardt, of lecture eloquence. The dignity of gesture, the picturesque inflexion of voice, the majesty of attitude, the complete possession of herself, blending in this artist, produce a feminine sweetness and propriety truly astonishing."

When it is remembered that these words are from an ultra-Catholic paper, the character of this high praise can be fully appreciated. In addition, let me tell you, a gentleman spoke to Mrs. Bristol after her lecture and said to her that she ought by all means to go upon the stage and become a professional actress, and that if she would do so she would at least be the peer of Rachel or Ristori when at their best. Probably Mrs. Bristol's lecture will appear in THE TRUTH SEEKER ere long, when you will have an opportunity to judge of the literary merit it possesses.

Dr. Buchner gave a short address in German, but not speaking the French very well, his main address was read in French by Dr. de Paepe, and was very well received. Dr. Buchner stands deservedly high among the thinkers of Europe, and I was very glad to meet him and make his personal acquaintance.

An excellent letter was also read from Prof. Ernst Haeckel, of the University of Jena, which was received with rapturous applause. It was expected that Prof. Haeckel, who is an out-and-out Freethinker, besides being almost the first scientist in the world, would attend the Congress, but something prevented. I regard him as one of the ablest and soundest men living, or who ever has lived.

I will not detain you longer with any description of our Congress. If you will read Mr. Rawson's report, taken down as the meetings took place, you will obtain a much better idea of it than I will be able to give you from memory. Suffice it to say, every moment of the sessions was fully occupied, and many addresses were taken home again without being delivered, time being too short for all to be heard. The whole affair was a great success, and inaugurated, as I believe, a series of annual meetings of Freethinkers from all civilized nations, which will greatly aid in spreading the fraternal spirit among us, cause us to work more in unison of purpose, and do much to strengthen the cause in Europe and in America. I am satisfied that America's sending a delegation to meet with the first International Freethinkers' Congress has been duly appreciated, and will continue to be productive of good.

The closing moments of the Congress were continued till midnight, and were unusually interesting.

President Goffin made some very touching closing remarks, thanking all for their attendance and hoping for prosperity for all in the future, with many repetitions of their successful meeting.

Mrs. Besant also made some very appropriate remarks, and she was applauded to the very echo. She has become very popular with the Freethinkers on the continent, and she is certainly a very able woman.

I think the members of the Congress, after the general handshakings and adieus, left for their respective places of rest fully imbued with a feeling of gladness that they were Freethinkers and that they had attended this Brussels Congress.

I wish to acknowledge here the aid rendered to the American delegation by Mr. Gastineau. The French is his native language, and speaking English very fluently he was fully able to speak in both languages, to translate and explain for us, etc. Mrs. Foote also speaks French very well, and Mrs. Bristol some. She has learned considerable French since she came to Europe, six or eight weeks ago. As for myself, I am the most unfrenchified of any one of the American delegation. My knowledge of the language is of the most limited character imaginable.

The hall in which the Congress held its sessions is a pleasant one of medium size. A goodly number of ladies attended who were not delegates, and the room was in nearly every case comfortably full.

On Friday night of the 3d inst. the Resident Organizing Committee invited Mrs. Bristol, Mrs. Foote, and myself to attend a reception gotten up for our benefit (Mr. Rawson and Mr. Gastineau had started for America and Mrs. Pence for Berlin). The meeting lasted two or three hours and was very pleasant. Many little speeches were made and the most cordial, fraternal spirit exhibited. Presents of books, pictures, pamphlets, etc., were made us; and M. N. Goffin presented the ladies with each a beautiful gold bracelet as a souvenir of the pleasant meetings we here had had together. Mrs. Bristol and Mrs. Foote were in excellent spirits, as they could not help being thus surrounded by friends full of cordial sympathy and the true fraternal spirit. I will add that the wives of a portion of the gentlemen of the committee were also present with us. It was nearly twelve when we retired. Early the next morning the ladies took their departure, Mrs. Bristol for Guise, and Mrs. Foote for some watering place in the interior, but in a few weeks to meet in Paris. Thus I am left by myself to pursue the remainder of my journey alone, which is to proceed to Cologne, pass up the Rhine, stop at a few towns in Germany, then to Balse, Bern, Geneva, several other points in Switzerland, over the Alps into Italy, then to Milan, Venice, Florence, Rome, where I will tarry several days and if possible see the Pope and exchange blessings with him and inquire after the condition of his big toe. If I send him in my little card, letting him know I am the pious editor of The Truth Seeker, and that I am trying to do what is right for him and his cause so far as I understand it, he undoubtedly ought to give me a kind reception. But I have decided in advance, if he offers me a cardinalship, not to accept it, and assure him in the most impressive manner that I beg to be excused, as I am otherwise engaged. I will then extend my journey to Naples and old Mount Vesuvius, which, for years, I have been anxious to see, as one of the big things on this little planet of ours. When I look down into its crater I may possibly obtain a good smell of the infernal regions where all good Freethinkers are supposed to go, when Comstock, Colgate, and Benedict get through tormenting them above ground, while they take themselves off to Paradise, with a high wall all around it, a big iron gate and a ponderous lock, the key of which is held by St. Peter, there to sing the endless song of Moses and the Lamb, and bow eternally before the white throne, and he who sits thereon, and the beast, and the four and twenty elders. Oh, what a lovely time that will be, to be sure! Leaving Vesuvius I will turn my face homeward, via Turin, Mt. Cenis tunnel, Dijon, Paris, London, Edinburgh, Glasgow, Belfast, Dublin, Cork, Queenstown, and then by a Cunard steamer to New York. By that time I think I will be ready to pitch into hard work again and try to make up for lost time.

Before leaving the subject of this Congress altogether, I ought to say a word more about the number of editors who attended it. I have mentioned Mrs. Besant and Miss Bradlaugh of the National Reformer, Mr. Watts of the Secular Review, Mr. Standring of the Republican, and others, and there were also Dr. Edward Engler, editor of the Magazine of Foreign Literature in Berlin; Charles M. Limousin, Paris; M. La Pellatier, also of Paris; R. C. d'Ablaing Van Gastenburg of the Dageraad, Amsterdam; M. de Goey, of Amsterdam, and several others whose names I omitted getting. They are all Radicals of the most radical stamp, and among them appeared the very peaceful and non-combative editor of The Truth Seeker, in my opinion the greatest paper of them all. It certainly is the largest, and I trust the good Liberals of America will continue to regard it as the best. For that I toil, and that it may truly be the case I will continue to struggle.

Now I must tell you more about Brussels. There is a good deal to be said, and I fear I will not be able to be as minute with you in my narrations as the nature of the curiosities here demands. We arrived in the midst of a national fete, the fiftieth anniversary of the independent government of Belgium. The entire city was all ablaze with the flags. Almost every house had one or more flags floating in the breeze. It is a moderate estimate to say that there were not less than ten thousand flags out on duty. Every street was lined with them. It was flags on the right of us, flags on the left of us, flags before us, flags behind us, everywhere flags, flags, flags. Let me give you a recipe for making the flag of Belgium, of medium size. Take two and a half yards each of black, yellow, and red bunting, sew them together in the order named, and fasten the black portion to a flag-staff ten feet long with a golden spear head at the upper end, and you have the thing exactly. Hang out ten thousand of these in a city of 200,000 inhabitants and you will have some idea how Brussels looked when we first saw it. True their flag is not half so pretty as our American flag is, and perhaps it ought not to be. We have undoubtedly got the handsomest flag in the world, and probably it is all right that it is so.

I don't know how long this fete has lasted, but I think several weeks. It closed on Sunday, a week ago, with decidedly the finest pageant I ever witnessed. It was rich in the extreme, perfect and beautiful beyond description, and I fear I cannot remember it well enough to tell you all about it, but I can "make a stagger" at it, at any rate. It was chiefly a cavalcade with companies of footmen and musicians interspersed all through the procession. It was of a historical and allegorical character. The object was to represent this country as it climbed up through the last ten centuries. A company of cavalry and a company of footmen representing the uniforms, arms, musical instruments, etc., etc., of the different preceding centuries. The soldiers of the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries looked decidedly primitive and antique. The crossbows, spears, and javelins looked very different from the arms of to-day. The martial music of those days was altogether different from now. One band, representing a special era, all played the bagpipe, as they used to in olden times, which sounded rather curious. It was interesting to note the changes and evolutions that took place in the matter of soldiers and military warfare from century to century. A company of seventeen beautiful young ladies on horseback, and richly attired, represented the seventeen provinces of Belgium and Holland; ten other young ladies represented the provinces of Belgium as it is now. Then came persons representing the province of Belgium as it is to-day. Then two persons, very richly attired, represented the pure King Leopold III. and his queen. In the procession were several very grand and gorgeous cars of very large size, and costing a great deal of money. One represented, allegorically, Belgium as she was one hundred years ago, and one, the grandest of all, as she is to-day. One represented the artisans of Belgium producing all the wares and manufactures that can be thought of. One was devoted to printing. On this car men were setting type, and running a a printing press, and turning off circulars, and distributing them to the crowds through which they passed. These cars were drawn by eight horses each, save the agricultural car, which was drawn by twenty-four oxen, decked out in grand style. This was a large car, and had the products of the farm, the threshing of the grain, its conversion into flour, etc. I cannot tell all, for I did not understand all, and cannot now remember all that I then understood. I have seen many processions, some that were longer than this, but never one gotten up in such grand style, and never one that was manipulated with such precision and perfection. The dresses worn by the men and women, as well as the coverings of the horses, were gotten up in very rich style, no expense, seemingly, having been spared in making the display a grand success. The whole thing must have cost at least 50,000 francs.

Remember, this gorgeous pageant took place on Sunday, and in a very Christian country too. But Catholics care little more for Sunday than they do for the Bible; both are held to be of far less importance than the authority of the church and the dicta of the bishops and priests. Sunday, in Catholic countries, is a grand gala day. A few go to mass in the morning, and after that they can amuse themselves by card playing, drinking beer, going into the fields and woods, going hunting, riding about, or almost anything else they wish to. It is only the Puritan Protestants that make such a senseless fuss about the rigid observance of Sunday, and they have not the slightest authority for it. Neither Christ, the apostles, nor the early Fathers ever enjoined the keeping of the Sabbath. All that these Puritans find in the Bible to found their Sunday bigotry upon is, "Remember the Sabbath and keep it holy," but that referred to Saturday, and not Sunday, and no authority can be shown from any source worthy of any attention why Saturday was set aside and Sunday substituted in its place. If God did say keep Saturday holy, the Christian Puritan bigots had not the feeblest authority in the world for setting it aside and saying Sunday should be the holy day. I deny, and defy proofs to the contrary, that God or his son Jesus ever gave a command that Sunday should be kept holy. If any day is to be kept holy, it is the original Sabbath, Saturday, and none other. And even the observance of Saturday is an old Jewish commandment, and is more binding for us than to be circumcised and burn the blood and flesh of bulls and he-goats to make a sweet savor in the nostrils of Yahveh. This reminds me of what Mr. Le Lubez, of London, said in the Congress about Protestantism. He said, "Of all the religions in the world, Protestantism is the most stupid and senseless," and I think he was rect.

On the evening of the same Sunday was a gran display of fireworks to put the finishing touches t the grand fete. After the Congress was over man of us walked a mile or so to witness the further des ecration of this holy day. Hundreds of rockets wer sent up, thousands of Roman candles were shot, and some elegant pieces were presented. One was a grand temple of fire, which lasted several minutes and changed color several times while in view. It was indeed grand.

It occurred to me that this day's celebration was a very sensible one, and I could not help thinking how much more appropriate it was than our noisy Fourth of July celebrations in which firing cannons, guns, pistols, and ten million firecrackers is thought by the rising population to be the very acme of fun and jollity, but which is thoroughly to be dreaded by any person who has a spoonful of common sense. Connected with the early history of our country, the causes which led to the revolution for liberty, the warfare which grew out of it, and the series of events which subsequently took place, would all be proper subjects for historical and allegorical display and tableaux; and how much more pleasant and sensible it would be than all this insane and dangerous popping and firing, tearing of noses and fingers, which young America persists in keeping up. Cannot our young men and boys learn a little good sense?

Mr. Rawson and I went one evening to see the wild animals—a very good collection of lions, tigers, panthers, hyenas, etc. At a given time in the evening a large dinner bell rang, and it seemed the animals had all suddenly gone crazy. They jumped up and began to walk rapidly back and forth in their cages with the greatest impatience. The half a dozen lions or more had been lying very quietly and stupidly as though they were half asleep, but when the bell rang they were up as lively even as the hyenas, which acted as though they would jump out of their cages. What did all this turmoil and uproar mean? The hour had come for the animals to be fed. They knew what the ringing of the bell meant, and evidently meant not to be still another instant until they received a chunk of meat for their supper. Soon a large quantity of meat, from the size of a man's head down, was taken around in the sight of the animals. Their impatience and hurry for supper seemed to have no limits. The more they saw the pieces of meat the more they wanted to get hold of them. The keepers seem to delight in aggravating the animals just at this time, and in making them act their very worst. They would not give the animals their piece of meat until they jumped very high for it, howling and roaring in the most ferocious manner all the time. At length they were all fed their meat except the bears, to each of which a loaf of bread was given instead of meat. After supper the lions indulged in a terrible concert of awful roaring, feeling bad, I presume, because the meat did not last longer, but in a little while all became quiet, when one of the keepers entered the cages and put the animals through such a course of exercise as I never saw before. He was truly the master of all of them. He was in the cages with the tigers, the bears, the hyenas, the wolves, and three large he-lions at one time. The way he made them jump, leap, and roar was a caution. I saw Van Amburg and others enter the lions' cages many years ago, but never saw such perfectly trained animals before. The lions, though they roared ferociously and looked at times as though they would tear him to pieces, at his command became as docile as kittens. The large white Polar bear who looked as though he wanted to crush somebody to death, became very obedient to his master and went through all the performances required of him. The same with the grizzly bear. It was quite a sight. The giraffe or camelopard was the best specimen I ever saw; the elephant was young, and the camels rather below par. One lioness had young cubs.

On the first day here we went with Dr. de Paepe to the building where the International Congress of Education was being held. Several Englishmen and Americans were in attendance. Various subjects were being discussed. We went through the scientific and educational museum, where all the appliances for imparting information to students and scholars were arranged.

The Brusselians are justly proud of their picture gallery. I visited it twice, once Mr. Rawson and myself alone, and afterwards with the three ladies. It is fine, but not equal in extent to the galleries in London and Paris. The statuary is also good.

Of course we could not do less than call at the cathedral. We do not like to let one of the big cathed als escape our notice. We are too pious for that. This is a grand specimen of ecclesiastical architecture. It is called the finest building in Brussels, and is famous for its superb painted glass, considered by many the finest in the world. The choir dates from the 13th century, but the other parts of the edifice are a century younger. The statues of the twelve apostles, larger than life, and attached to the pillars of the main aisle, are fine, and by Duquesnay. The highly carved confessionals are by VanDelen, and so on. The chapel of the Holy Sacrament, on the right of the high altar, is rich in marble and stained glass. The five large windows were put up in 1546–7. They represent in the upper part the story of the miraculous wafers, and in the lower part the donors of the windows—Charles V. and Isabella, Ferdinand and Anne, Francis I. and Eleanor; Louis of Hungary, and Mary; John of Portugal, and Catherine. This is the way these grand old cathedrals obtained so many fine stained windows and expensive paintings. Some stupid king who had robbed his equally stupid subjects was made by the bishops to believe that his future escape from hell depended upon his giving a good share of his stolen wealth to the Lord Jesus in the shape of a fine stained window, or a 20,000 franc picture. Of course Jesus is very fond of stained windows and gorgeous paintings by the old masters, and, of course, also, they have to be forthcoming, as very likely Jesus would consign them headlong to the fiery lake which has no bottom, from which there is no getting out, and whose heat is so intense that no thermometer has ever been made able to test it.

The beautiful carved pulpit of this cathedral was begun in 1699 by Verbruggen, but the job was too much for him and had to be completed by Vanderhægen in 1786, allowing nearly a hundred years to make one pulpit. It represents the expulsion of Adam and Eve from the garden of Eden. The figures are life size. The Tree of Knowledge supports the pulpit, and that is supposed to be life size also. Oh, what a pretty story about the snake and the fall of Adam and Eve, to be sure! There have been millions in it, and there are still millions more in it. Men and women have paid untold sums of money to the priests to prevent that old snake from catching them, and millions more will be paid by fools equally as great.

The two towers of the cathedral are 228 feet high, and as the edifice stands upon high ground an extensive view is obtained from the top.

As we entered the holy sanctuary we saw a few dozen holy candles burning at the entrance of the chapel of the Holy Sacrament, and very soon perceived that a man of God, with a long black gown, with all the fixings in a lighter color over it, and a shaven spot on the crown of his head, was celebrating mass. He had an excellent voice, and he chanted the Latin phrases in the most beautiful style; and as his voice died away, the organ, at the front end of the nave, nearly an eighth of a mile away, caught up the sound, and its sonorous tones rolled and reverberated through those tall arches and stately pillars in the grandest possible manner; then the choir took up the refrain, and, in full and harmonious voice, just added perfection to the effort. It was indeed a grand musical display. I have not so fine an ear for music as some, but that filled it. I turned to Mr. Rawson, and said, "If that don't have a favorable effect on Yahveh I don't know what in the world will." I liked it so well that I remembered it this morning, and went over to hear mass performed again, and I was almost spellbound. You remember what the old quotation says, "Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast." Yes, mine was soothed. I liked the music far better than the flummery and utter nonsense that was used in connection with it. They had the Virgin Mary—about the size of an ordinary woman—dressed in the finest silk robes and dressed like a queen. She stood on a pedestal in the main aisle, and the simpletons gathered around this image and worshiped it as the mother of God. I could not help pitying their stupidity and ignorance. And then high up in the altar was another statue of the Virgin in a mystical niche, with light thrown upon it from an unseen gas jet, so as to produce almost a magical effect, looking as though the Virgin was bathed in brilliant glory. This, I believe, was to represent the immaculate conception, and here were more poor fools worshiping this senseless statue. I turned away sorrowfully, saying, in my heart, Verily, verily, this is idol-worship of the crudest kind. As well worship Isis, Ishtar, Saravasta, Diana, Juno, Ceres, or Venus. It is all the same idolatry—all the same absurd nonsense.

On my return to my hotel I was regaled with music that suited me almost as well, for it was accompanied by dancing. In the hall where the Congress was held is a piano. The hall is two stories high, and at one end is a gallery overlooking the hall. My room opens into this gallery, and all I had to do was to step out of my room and look down upon the thirty happy young couples waltzing round and round the room in the most animated and proper manner. I think it suited me better than the cathedral worship of images and stone and dry goods with no life in them.

There are eight or ten other fine churches in the city, where are holy paintings by Rubens, Plumier, Gerard, Vandyke, Dedrick, and others, with statues, carved pulpits, confessionals, more virgins, baby gods, dying gods, and all that. But I did not go to see them all, and would not advise anybody else to.

A curious and interesting place to go to is Wiertz' Muzeum. Wiertz was undoubtedly a great artist and was a Belgian. He died in 1865, perfectly insane. He was a man of wealth, and painted pictures just in keeping with his insane notions. Some of them are immensely large, immensely grand, and immensely non-understandable. He painted heaven and hell, and in the latter the eternal flames, devils, gorgons, serpents a hundred feet long, with flames of fire streaming from their throats; with devils dragging and pulling poor hapless beings down into the eternal flames, and God don't care anything about them.

There are over one hundred pieces in all. The most distinguished are Napoleon in hell, the flames streaming up around, and he looking as though he did not care a single d—n about it; the Greeks and Trojans contending for the body of Patroclus, which looks very bad for Patroclus; a Homeric combat, wherein is portrayed an immense great giant, through whose body another great giant has thrust an immense great spear, whereupon the stuck man looks quietly around as though it did not hurt him very much. Another of the huge pictures is called Polyphemus devouring the companions of Ulysses (oh, if it had only been Ulysses S. Grant!), in which Polyphemus is represented as nearly a hundred feet tall, and he is complacently bending over and picking up the companions of Ulysses, no bigger than his thumb, and eating them down as though they were strawberries. It looks as though it would take a hundred or two of them to make Polyphemus a good dinner. Another painting is called the Revolt of the Infernals against the Angels, but it is so mixed up, the legs, arms, and bodies engaged in the awful riot, that I will not undertake to explain it, but it is very huge. To be understood it must be seen—and then it will not be. I suppose all great painters are more or less crazy, but poor Wiertz was rather crazier than common.

"Golgotha" is another of those indescribable and non-understandable paintings. If you want to know all about it you must come and see it yourselves, for you cannot depend upon my giving you a correct description of it. The task is beyond my capacity. It is the same with the large piece called "The Triumph of Christ." There is a great deal of it, but you cannot prove what it means by me. Christ appears to be on a cross, but there is so much glory all around him that the cross can scarcely be seen, but away down below there appear to be lots of unhappy looking wretches who do not seem to have triumphed to any great extent. Perhaps the triumph of Christ consists in his getting so much the advantage over those other poor fellows.

The one entitled "Things of the Present before the Man of the Future," I thought I could understand, and that it had some considerable meaning. The man of the future is a very large, wise-looking person, with a monstrous large, expansive hand. In that hand he has crowns, castles, cannons, swords, miters, and all that sort of things. They must look pretty small to him, for they did to me as I stood looking at them. I hope the time will come when they will look small and undesirable to everybody to the extent that they will not want them any more.

Another picture called the "Last Cannon, or the End of War," I could partly understand. Some good female of very large proportions was twisting and breaking that last cannon right in two in the middle. I was glad to see it go, and hoped men would make no more.

Another set of Wiertz' pictures which I thought I could understand were his female figures. I must say I think they are the lovliest of any I have seen—so sweet, so beautiful, so pure and heavenly. They beat Rubens' and Rembrandt's away out of sight in my estimation. Wiertz may have been insane on gorgons, devils, and such monstrosities, but take my word for it, his "head was level" in painting beautiful women. I think I fell in love with some half a dozen of them, and I didn't half try. I can't tell you any more about Wiertz' Museum now, though I have not told you near half. I must scatter my attentions round sort 'o equally, you know.

THE LACE MANUFACTORIES.

A great amount of lace is manufactured in and around Brussels; in fact, the greater part that is made in the world. Everybody has heard of Brussels lace. I was desirous to visit a lace factory, and did so with Mesdames Bristol and Foote; and now I know more about lace than I ever did before. Lace is a big thing. We went to the fine establishment of Madame Boval de Beck's, No. 74 Rue Royal, one of the largest manufactories of that delicate and beautiful article in Brussels, and consequently in the world. The Madame speaks very good English, so even I could understand something of the mysteries of making lace. She showed us the different processes by which lace is made. She informed us that she had some four hundred and fifty women in her establishment, working twelve hours per day at this very confining, critical work. We did not see the whole four hundred and fifty women, but a fair sample, I presume. In Brussels and the surrounding towns there are over forty thousand lace makers who follow that business and little or nothing else! What do you think of that? All genuine lace is made by hand and of the fiber of flax or silk. The flax thread is spun extremely fine, a few degrees coarser than the spider's web. Some writers state that the flax has to be spun in cellars where the air is rather damp, so as not to act unfavorably on the delicate fiber, but the Madame rather disputed the correctness of that oft-repeated statement. She said it was spun in the country, by hand, but not in cellars.

There are numbers of varieties of lace. The first woman we came to was one making what is called Brussels lace. It is made with bobbins, a little spool of the finer white linen thread, with a handle to it, and the lace is made by weaving and braiding by dextrously and rapidly handling those bobbins. A marked pattern lies under the work, which is the guide the lace maker has to go by; and then the way she makes those bobbins fly, interchanging them and mixing them up, is indeed a miracle. This one had some seventy-five bobbins to manipulate. We saw another who had four hundred, and the Madame told us that sometimes more than two thousand bobbins were used on one piece of lace. With such high numbers of bobbins the lace-maker has to pay the strictest attention to what she is doing, often working for days together without speaking a word lest she make a mistake with some of the bobbins. As they work along they stick in a pen every few minutes to keep the lace made in its place. We saw at least two thousand bobbins stuck closely in one piece of work.

The point lace, which is the real, true lace, is made wholly with a needle, and no bobbins are used at all. This is the slowest to make, and the most critical, but it is valued the highest, and commands much the greatest price. Of this kind of lace it often takes a woman a week to make a piece two inches square. Every stitch or mesh, and every part of the leaf or flower, has to be placed with exquisite care; but it does look most beautiful and neat when done.

Another variety is the Brussels and point lace combined. I think this is called Duchess lace. Another kind is where the groundwork is woven in a delicate loom for the business, and the leaves, flowers, etc., of point lace and made with the needle, are skilfully attached to it. That kind looks beautiful. I believe that is called Venice lace, at least that is the name for one of the varieties. But oh, this work takes the life and soul of the women who follow that trade for a livelihood. They are indeed to be pitied. They have to begin when they are twelve or fourteen years of age and work several years before they are masters of the work and are capable of commanding wages. And when they receive full wages, what do you suppose they amount to? Why, from a franc and a half to two francs a day. This last sum is the highest; that is rather less than thirty or forty cents per day! And this for the simple privilege of breathing and living in this world. It is dreadful to think of indeed. Little do the gay butterflies of fashion think while they are fluttering in the sunlight or gaslight, what toil, what agony, what tears and wretchedness on the fairest part of God's creation, the articles of rich lace which they flaunt and flutter have cost. No! no! they little think how many hav toiled in sorrow and pain that they who have never really earned a cent in the world may dazzle and shine! But so the world goes. This is the justice which Christians tell us is "divine." Devils certainly could not make it much worse.

We saw several making the various kinds of lace of the white linen, and others again with black silk, and all of different figures and patterns. New patterns are constantly being devised, and these are all gotten up by men. We saw the pattern for a bed-spread that would require thirty-two women to work constantly for six months to complete, or one woman sixteen years. Some pieces are still more intricate and involve much more labor. Some of these goods command fabulous prices. The bed-spread I think cost 20,000 francs; a trail to a lady's dress 7,000 francs; a dress in point-lace 16,000 francs. Single pieces of goods hav been gotten up that have sold for 1,000,000 francs.

There is hardly any end to the variety of articles that are manufactured of lace for ladies' wear and use. Among them may be named skirts, trails, ruffles, trimmings, dresses, shawls, flounces, tippets, collars, head dresses, fans, parasols, handkerchiefs, etc., etc.

Of course, after so much kindness had been shown us by Madame de Beck we could not do less than patronize her to some extent. I purchased what is called a "knot," which ladies wear on their bosoms. Mrs. Bristol bought one of the same, and Mrs. Foote two or three similar articles. My purchase was for my good little wife at home. When the Madame learned that I should write and print something about her establishment in my paper she presented me with a pair of ends for a necktie for my wife also, so I trust that the patient, good, forbearing woman will look pretty when she is decked out with these lace fixings.

The Madame informed us that she had customers in nearly all civilized countries, and that she has heavy customers in Paris, London, New York, etc. In the latter city, A. T. Stewart & Co., Arnold, Constable & Co., and others. So much for lace.

The Museum of Antiquities occupies the ancient Porte de Hal, in the southern part of the city, erected in 1381. It is after the style of the old castle and towers of heavy stone. It was in this castle that the bloody Alva immured his helpless victims. It contains a highly interesting collection of arms, armor, and other warlike articles used in medieval and renaissance periods. Here are the queerest old firearms ever seen, and in great numbers. Some extremely clumsy, heavy, and awkward, and some inlaid in ivory and pearl, in the most elaborate manner, which must have required years of labor. Here were the old cross-guns, and any quantity of battle axes, battle knives, spears, pikes, swords in all styles, sabers, rapiers, bayonets, etc., in all conceivable shapes and styles. Here also the most intricate carvings in wood and the most extensive I ever saw—sideboards, bureaus, cabinets, bedsteads, tables, etc., made hundreds of years ago, and with a wonderful amount of artistic work upon them. Also wood sculpture of life size of saints and martyrs without number, and pulpits and confessionals, carved most curiously and laboriously, that absolutely defy description. Here were old ivory carvings of the most elaborate kinds, made several centuries ago, images, ships, and designs of scores of things. I cannot give you any adequate idea of it. The old locks and keys made hundreds of years ago were very odd. The pottery, cut glass, and metallic work were very antique, and worthy of a much better description than I can give. Three capacious floors were filled with these and all other conceivable old-fashioned manufactures. One floor is devoted to Egyptian antiquities, and those from other oriental nations. There were sarcophagii, mummies, coffins, pottery, idols, bronzes, glassware, and ever so much more which I will not undertake to name.

In this building is the cradle of Charles V., rood-screens, fonts, altarpieces, shrines, vases, cups, etc., without end. Here, too, are the bow and mantle of Montezuma, emperor of Mexico, and thousands of other curious objects too numerous and too tedious to mention, or even to think of. So we will let them pass.

THE NATIONAL EXHIBITION.

This interested me more than anything else I have seen in Brussels. Of course it does not equal in articles from foreign countries what was seen in our Philadelphia International Exposition, as it is designed to exhibit the productions and manufactures of Belgium alone; and it is wonderful how small a country—only fifty years a nation by itself—can do so much.

The grounds used for exhibition purposes must comprise nearly a hundred acres, and it seems that nearly a fourth part is covered with the Exhibition buildings. The halls, galleries, wings, etc., are gotten up in fine style, and the cases containing the manufactured articles are showy and splendid. Everything is extremely well arranged. Here are almost all kinds of goods manufactured in the world, and of excellent quality too. I cannot think of one-quarter of the beautiful goods I saw there, and have not the time to enumerate could I think of them. I will mention a few which occur to me just now.

First, then, there are acres covered with agricultural implements of all conceivable kinds, from the threshing machine, reaper, farm-wagons, to plows of all kinds, cultivators, hoes, etc.; mills of all kinds, and running and doing good word; hardware and cutlery of all conceivable varieties; wood work and woods in an endless variety; engines of all kinds, some of one thousand horse-power; one of these was pumping water and making a large and beautiful cascade more beautiful than many natural ones which people have traveled thousands of miles to witness. This water was pumped up and poured down into the great reservoir hundreds of times, and it occurred to me, while thus in constant motion, and used over and over again, it was water still. (Ahem!)

Locomotives and railroad cars are here in great numbers, of the European pattern; none like the American. Here were glassware, pottery, common and fine, window glass of the finest description, and cylinders of glass, not cut, ten and fifteen feet long. Here were woolen, cotton, and linen fabrics of all qualities and styles. And here is the greatest display of lace perhaps ever seen in the world. Here are lace goods single pieces of which are priced at tens of thousands of francs. Here were at work diamond cutters. I saw at least a thousand diamonds, cut and uncut, and of all sizes, the largest of which is valued at a million. Here are also fac similes of the Koh-i-noor and the "Big Mogul," or "Big Sultan," I forget which; but at all events the largest diamonds in the world, and the counterfeits did me just as well as though they had been genuine. Here also are workers in gold and silver ornaments, carrying on their work right before your eyes. And here also was the government mint. Here are lots of straps or bands of gold, silver, and copper, just the right width and thickness, and punching machines, dies, and presses were at work making them into money, with the figure-head of Leopold III. upon them. I wanted only a hatful, but they would not let me have a single piece. I would have been content with a brick or two of the gold in the cases, but they were not giving them out the day I was there. There are hundreds of dies, for making all denominations of money, and nearly every one had Leopold on it. After all, money has certain attractions that nothing else has. I presume that is the reason they are so careful in the exhibition to keep it out of reach of the vulgar and worldly minded. Spectacle makers were also plying their trade there.

Three paper mills were doing a lively business, grinding the rags up into pulp, and drawing it out into paper, drying it on heated cylinders, pressing it and cutting it up into sheets, right before your eyes, and all in the space of a very few minutes. And close by were ruling machines doing the ruling, and some twenty printing and lithographic presses doing printing of all conceivable kinds, with several compositors setting type. Close by was an extensive hatter's shop, turning out hats very rapidly, taking the crude material and working it up into hats, working them together in the kettle, blocking them, pressing them, and turning them out all completed about as quick as I am telling you about it. Many of these workmen are women. Candy makers were out in full numbers and making their sweet wares in quantities and selling them pretty rapidly also. Bakers' goods, especially the fruit cakes, were out in full show. The cases of perfumers' goods were very interesting and extensive. A great amount of perfumery is put up here. The cordials and fine liquors made a fine show, and many of them looked nice enough to taste of.

The knitting, sewing, and weaving machines should not be passed unnoticed. The chocolate manufacture seems to be quite a branch here, and a large show is made of chocolate in all forms, and especially in the image of Leopold III. Cast-iron wares were abundant and very respectable in quality and styles. Brass works the same. In fact I cannot tell you what is not there. There are over 600 contributors, but probaly not quite that many different kinds of goods, so if I do not mention one-tenth part of the kinds, I trust you will not blame me. Who could remember so much?

Art in all its branches was well represented, including painting, statuary, engravings, photographs, lithographs, etc. Chemical preparations must not be forgotten. They were there in large numbers and extremely creditable in appearance. The furniture, cabinet work, etc., is neat and artistic.

The department of Retrospective Art is extremely full and interesting. Here are tapestries hundreds of years old in great quantities; ancient plate of both gold and silver; hundreds and perhaps thousands of coins of all denominations and ages; seals ditto; carved furniture and woodwork, until one becomes weary of looking. Books of the early years of printing are in great numbers, and more fine volumes executed or ornamented by hand than I saw in the British Museum. I saw many of the oddest looking old watches every made; some were as thick through as across and look as though they might hav been made in the year 1. The same of lots of other things, but I may as well stop here as any where. You must guess at the rest, and I am sure if you guess all you want to, you will not overguess. It would be difficult to over-estimate this fine exhibition. It is a great credit to this little country to make such a fine display. One is lost in wonder how so small a country can do so much and so well. It will have to be admitted that the Belgians are a very artistic, ingenious people. When we were thoroughly wearied we returned to the fine garden of two acres of exotic plants, under cover, and listened to music by the band. Just outside of this is an elevator for taking people one or two hundred feet up into the air by steam. Rawson and I went up a trip, and I earnestly remarked to him that possibly that might be about as near heaven as he would ever get. At all events we had another good view of the city and its tile roofs.

After we left the main buildings we walked around among the smaller buildings where various coarse articles were exhibited, among the rest, a frame tower of bells of all sizes from the largest to the least. Among other curiosities was an electric railroad which ran a circuit of a third of a mile quite rapidly and without the use of steam I paid the requisite number of centimes and, with a dozen or two others, took my first ride on an electric railroad. I could not see but it was just as good as steam, nor why it should not come into general use. There would certainly be less danger of bursting boilers, or scalding with the hot steam in case of an accident. I shall wish well for the electric railroad.

ANTWERP.

On Thursday the 2d we went to Antwerp, or Antwerper, as the old Dutch name used to be, or Anvers, as the French call it (pronounced Onvairs). I suppose it is about twenty-five or thirty miles from Brussels, for it took us a little over an hour to get there, and is a flourishing city of 150,000 inhabitants. The country is a most beautiful garden the entire distance. We passed Malines and many other villages. In fact the farmhouses are so near together that it seems like a village almost all the way.

Antwerp is an old town, and being nearer Holland than this place is considerably more Dutchified. Many of the streets, which they calls canals, are narrow, crooked, and irregular, with many of the buildings standing gable-end to the street, like the pictures of Dutch towns I used to wonder at when a child. The buildings are not all of this kind, as many are modern and beautiful.

A plenty of dog carts and donkey-carts are seen in Antwerp. I noticed one dog-team working four abreast. The drays or trucks are of singular appearance, the body being a long flat bed hung within ten or twelve inches of the ground. This saves lifting the load very high. Monstrous loads are hauled by a single large horse with a single pole or tongue or shaft and not with two shafts as in our country.

Antwerp is the commercial capital of Belgium, and the largest seaport in the kingdom. Steamers and other vessels were lying at the docks, and much maritime business is transacted there. It is also said to enjoy a flourishing trade in all lines and to be far more prosperous now than in the times when its political troubles were so great.

It is intensely Catholic, and shrines on the houses at the corners of the streets are frequent. We saw numbers of these shrines, consisting of the Virgin and the baby God. I presume they are put up for protection; they keep away lightning, fires, etc. Rome is said not to contain more shrines, virgins, little gods, dying saviors, relics, holy things, and all that pious rubbish, than does Antwerp.

Antwerp is regarded as a city of art and artists. Here Rubens lived and died. It was the home of Vandyke, Rembrandt, Floris, Quentin, Veniers, Crayer, and lots of other artists. The cathedrals and churches are full of paintings by Rubens and others; full of shrines, statues, paintings, carved pulpits, carved saints in wood, stained windows, and all that kind of art work.

Of course we visited the cathedral. It is a grand old edifice, with a spire over four hundred feet in hight, and the sculptured tracery is so fine on it that Charles V. said it ought to be kept in a glass case. The famous carillon of sixty bells ring out every seven minutes. These bells were placed in the spire in 1483—four hundred years ago. The largest, named Carolus, after Charles V., weighs sixteen thousand pounds, and requires sixteen men to ring it. The cathedral dates from 1352.

In the two ends of the transept are Rubens' most celebrated paintings of Jesus's Descent from the Cross, The Elevation of the Cross, and two dozen more of a similar character. Somehow the subject don't seem new any more. It did very well until I had seen the representation of the dying God and the dead Christ five or six hundred times, but now it seems like an old worn-out tale hardly worth the telling.

Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John are here, carved in wood, as large as life and twice as natural, with twenty-four other wooden saints, of the same size, and looking as though they had the colic extremely bad. I will not undertake to say how many statues there are in this old cathedral, but their name is legion.

There is a very curiously carved old pulpit, with work enough on it to build a whole Western village. The chapels are also numerous, and the tombs of the saints and notables (with very quaint tops, cut four hundred years ago) who hav died, are plentiful. I notice there are no tombs built for the common poor people. It is only the saints, kings, and butchers that are deemed worthy of that honor.

The Church of St Jack, or St. Jacques, is still more remarkable, so far as statuary is concerned. The high altar, screen, and rood loft are very fine. The private chapels are numerous and very rich. Rubens' tomb is in one of them. Here also many of the big ones of the earth were buried and rich tombs erected to their memory. Here was another image of the Virgin, dressed in rich silks, like a large doll. Her worshipers were paying their devotions before her. There are many statues in this church, and it looks like a gallery of sculpture. But the people who worship there think it all a first-class article of religion, and nobody knows when they will learn any better.

(Continued on page 664)

Polemic.

Hegel's Philosophy.

BY VAN BUREN DENSLOW.

An abridged translation of Hegel's "Æsthetic" has recently appeared, by Wm. M. Bryant. Mr. Harris, of St. Louis, has translated and is publishing Hegel's logic in full. Those who combine a knowledge both of the language of Germany and of the dialect of metaphysics are giving much study to Hegel in the original. Here and there we are told of learned divines who are indebted to their trust in Hegel for their faith in Jesus. A summer school of philosophy at Concord identifies philosophy with Hegelianism. A journal of speeculativ philosophy at St. Louis has for twelve years done the same. Not merely to the unlearned, but to most of our acutest and most trained thinkers, Hegelianism is an unknown tongue. The intellectual descendants of Locke, Hume, Comte, and the students of Spencer will denounce it as jargon. Those who speak in it do not learn to translate it to others. Its minor apostles exceed Hegel in obscurity of utterance. The maxim that clear thought must find expression in clear speech is despised. Only the indistinct charms. Only the unintelligible reveals. One who does not read a line of Hegel five times, and a page twenty-five, before claiming to hav arrived at its full meaning, is no true Hegelian. He who cannot apprehend how two persons may equally delight in Hegel—one because he has proved that God exists, the other because he has identified God with nothing, and absolute being with not-being—is still in the alphabet.

Perhaps the Hegelian cloud resists penetration at its dissolution. The dissection of the flower or insect is its death. The evasiv spirit of life defies the anatomist's knife and the chemist's acid by taking flight. If the subtle spirit of Hegelianism demands this obscurity, we may not catch it, for at the penalty of being compelled to exhibit only the cage from which the bird has flown we shall be clear.

Hegel died fifty years ago. As Disraeli would say, "Many things hav happened since then." Many of the premises which scholars then reasoned upon they hav since ceased even to reason for.

Hegel's "Æsthetic" was a pioneer work in its effort to prove that the development of art was governed by principles or laws. It had been thought the product of inspiration in the artist. A pioneer never perfects.

Art is that which pleases while serving. It adapts means to ends so fitly that the soul thrills with the sense of harmony.

Hegel thought that art was the daughter of religion. He never dreamed that religion was one of the daughters of art. So there hav been beauxs who won the favor of the mother by politely mistaking her for the daughter, but in the elopement the daughters are always selected. So in the sequel Hegel ran away with religion only, leaving art, who is both older and younger than religion, in the lurch.

Art, said Hegel, must begin in the symbol, and the symbol must be the physical type which expresses a spiritual idea or supernatural cause for phenomena. A clay idol with seven arms may be grotesque, fantastic, but it is art because it is the soul or spirit struggling to express its idea of cause. But the beaver's dam, the oriole's swinging home on the tip of the elm bough, the bee's geometric cups for holding the essence of the flowers, the deer's flight to the water-course to elude the scent of the hounds, are not art, because, though they are cunning adaptations of means to ends that send the sense of music through the soul, yet they fail to reveal any myth or ghost; they are not types through which the divine or human spirit struggles to set forth some theory of causation.

"Art," says Hegel, "must be religious." The tattooed savage, however his skin may ape the peacock's tail, does not enter the domain of art until, by circumcision, baptism, processions, crucifixions, or other type or symbol, he sets forth some myth. Dress is not art, however fitly it may be adapted to the end of warmth and comfort; but if a bishop, in his surplice, wear a type of the ancient worship of the mysteries with which nature surrounds the transmission of life, that is art, because there is a symbol setting forth a myth. The bow of the savage is not art, but that of Cupid is. The Maoris' boat is not art, but that of Charon is. The wiles of amatory pursuit, however subtly and delicately passion concealed may respond to passion stalwartly expressed, are not art, until a classic deity is placed behind each lover, and Venus is made to struggle with Diana for the mastery of their souls. Hegel saw no art in the chase or in war except as Mercury or Mars presided over them; no art in him who first discovered fire, but much in him who pictured Vulcan hurled from heaven by Jove and bringing the sacred mystery with him; no art in gathering and cooking food, but much in the myth which out of the burial and resurrection of the seed-corn constructed the rape of Persephone by Pluto, and the consequent worship, in the mysteries of Ceres, of the holy doctrin of man's immortal life. To Hegel's mind, tilling the soil or rearing flocks and herds is not art, but the worship of bearded Pan with his goat's legs is.

In thus narrowing the domain of art to religious art only, Hegel makes it dawn simultaneously with superstition and set with German Protestantism, whereas its true dawn is coeval with that of mind, even in the lower animals, and it is yet too early to predict that it may not obtain its highest excellence wholly disassociated from theological conceptions.

Before there can be that symbol which Hegel thought the beginning of art, there must be the myth or theory of the supernatural which the symbol expresses. The belief in Zeus must precede Homer's poems and Phidias' statues, portraying him in feature or in action. The god precedes the revelation. Therefore myth-making, or the creation of the God idea, precedes symbolism, or the attempt to set forth the God idea to the senses.

If we inquire whence arises the God idea, there are two answers, that of the intuitionists, or religionists, and the historians, or philosophers. The former say it is innate. Of this class are Hegel, Berkeley, Plato. The latter say that the god idea, or spirit idea, is the result of the imagination supplying a person, as a means for accounting for phenomena of which it seeks but fails to perceive the cause. In short, it is bastard science, assuming where it does not know, and explaining where it has not investigated. Mr. Tylor, president of the British Ethnological Society, in his work on "Primitiv Culture," sets forth the historical theory of the genesis of the god idea, as follows:

"First and foremost among the causes which transfigure into myths the facts of daily experience, is the belief in the animation of all nature, rising at its highest pitch to personification. This, no occasional or hypothetical action of the mind, is inextricably bound in with that primitiv mental state where man recognizes in every detail of his world the operation of personal life and will. . . . To the lower tribes of man, sun and stars, trees and rivers, winds and clouds, become personal animate creatures, leading lives conformed to human or animal analogies, and performing their special functions in the universe with the aid of limbs like beasts or of artificial instruments like men; or what men's eyes behold is but the instrument to be used, or the material to be shaped, while behind it there stands some prodigious yet half human creature, who grasps it with his hands or blows it with his breath. The basis on which such ideas as these are built is not to be narrowed down to poetic fancy and transformed metaphor. They rest upon a broad philosophy of nature, early and crude, indeed, but thoughtful, consistent, and quite really and seriously meant."

The anger with which persons, savage or civilized, will vent their force upon inanimate objects which get in their way, and invest them with qualities of obstinacy, cruelty, etc., as seen in a man kicking or cursing the stool over which he stumbles, as if it were a responsible being, indicates the same capacity of clothing inanimate objects with personal attributes. Victor Hugo pictures the same instinct in Cosette, who having no doll used the first object she came to, quite indifferent whether it was a towel or a bootjack, and intent only for the time on loving, in it, those angelic qualities of cherubic infantil beauty and winning helplessness with which her own conscious fancy inspired it. Having idealized it thus, it would hav been a source of real grief to her to hav assured her that she was nursing a mere towel or bootjack, and, though she herself knew it, she would only be prevented by her fears from denying it. It was her doll, a person—her love had transfigured it—and only malice could seek to dissolve the transfiguration. Whoever has witnessed the sport of puppies and monkeys must hav observed that they exercise the same imaginativ quality.

The early Aryans, and indeed the later Jew or Roman, must put a personal spirit behind the lightning. Jove's hand hurled the bolt, and among the Jews Jah's voice was the thunder. Mythology was not intentional imposture, but bastard science. Its unscientific theory of causes seemed to those who invented it probable, to those who worshiped it true, and to all beautiful. The splitting open of the brow of Zeus (the sky) by the club of Hæphaestus (Vulcan or divine force), to let out Pallas-Athene (Dawn), was a truer explanation of sunrise, in the epoch of the belief in the personality of all causes, than it would hav been to say that the same weight or gravity which made the stone fall caused also that revolution of the earth on its axis which made the sun rise. Indeed the scientific statement, considered as a theory of causation, would hav been far more unintelligible to the mythical mind than the mythical statement is to the scientific mind. The mind must frame theories and then dart out for facts to support them. Beliefs scientifically false must precede observation. Faith can not wait for knowledge. Abstinence from belief until all the evidence is in is as rare and difficult an order of asceticism as abstinence from food and drink until we feast upon the nectar and ambrosia of the gods.

The myth-makers aimed to make the phenemena of nature comprehensible to the mind by satisfying the hunger of the soul for personal causes, a hunger which is of the essence of religion.

Hegel, in beginning the analysis of art with the symbol instead of with the myth, evidently assumes that the making of the myth itself is antecedent to art. This assumption satisfies the intuitionist, but not the historian, of the origin of religious belief. To him the myth is an attempt to giv a true explanation of phenomena. It is science in gestation, groping toward its birth. It is not a spirit struggling to embody in matter that which is within, but an observer struggling to formulate in his mind the facts which are without.

Hegel's assumption of the duality of the universe, of spirit as an independent entity struggling against matter, if not as the creativ First Being, originating matter by its fiat, had descended to him from Zoroaster and from Indra. The monistic theory of the universe, that spirit and matter are transverse and interchangeable manifestations of unity, just as the flame, heat, and light of the lamp are transverse and interchangeable manifestations of the phenomena of combustion, or of molecular attraction, and therefore are but new forms of the burning materials, had hardly yet arrested scientific attention.

Hegel overrides without noticing it. As in the case of thunder and lightning, so in the case of thought and passion, it greatly simplifies the process of accounting for it to say, Behind the phenomenon there is an eternal spirit, rather than to say, Before this phenomenon there was a molecular change. The former assumption is exalting, the latter depressing, and in religion whatever exalts is true, whatever pricks our inflation is false.

In making art the progressiv effort of the spirit to express its inner truth, Hegel labors under the difficulty of having made the divine verity responsible for all the false religions of the world, but as a compensation for this inconvenience he is permitted to trace in Lutheran Protestantism the absolute divine wisdom in its unintermittent effulgence. This is a great desideratum, obtained at great cost. But it cuts off the materialistic or historical tendency to deduce Hegel's own views from the struggle of his metaphysical genius against the German Protestantism of his age, German Protestantism from the struggle of German instincts against Romanism, Romanism from the struggle of Christism, Paulism, and Judaism against heathenism, and heathenism itself from the struggles of the human mind, in a period of the infancy of science, to explain more than it really apprehended of the causes of phenomena. This tracing of the faiths, on which our hopes are supposed to be pendent, back to sources of hope in which we could not be induced to hav faith, is depressing and unwelcome. Yet even Hegel suspects this mental operation, and says (Bryant's Translation, page 63): "As the ideal of classic art comes to be realized only by the transformation of preceding elements, the first point to develop consists in making manifest that it is truly sprung from the creativ activity of the spirits; that it has found its origin in the inmost and most personal thought of the poet and of the artist. This seems contradicted by the fact that Greek mythology rests upon ancient traditions, and is related to the religious doctrins of the peoples of the orient. If we admit all these foreign elements —Asiatic, Pelasgic, Dodonian, Indian, Egyptian, Orphic—how can we say that Hesiod and Homer gave to the Greek gods their names and their form? But these two things, tradition and poetic invention, may be very easily reconciled. Tradition furnishes the materials, but it does not bring with it the precise idea and the form which each god is to represent. This idea the great poets drew from their own genius, and they also discovered the actual forms appropriate to it. They were the creators of the mythology which we admire in Greek art."

As well say that the myths created Homer as that Homer created the myths. Neither in their present form could hav existed had not the other in plastic and proximate form preceded it.

Hegel's fundamental assumption that the myths and theologies were the outworkings of the spirit seeking to giv to its inner content an outward form, or to clothe its subjectivity in objectivity, was unfavorable to any exhaustiv study of the historic origin, comparativ anatomy, and geographical distribution of myths. He expressly disavows any intent to construct a philosophic theory or historic explanation of myths. Modern research, since the death of Hegel, has supplied more ample materials to this end than he possessed. Though his knowledge was minute for his period, it cannot compare in accuracy with that now derivable from Tylor's "Primitive Culture," Dupuis' "Origins of All the Religious Cultures," Michelet's "Bible of Humanity," Inman's "Ancient Faiths Embodied in Ancient Names," Sir John Lubbock's "Origin of Civilization and Primitive Condition of Man," to say nothing of the light incidentally thrown on these questions by Max Muller, Bunsen, Wilkinson, Richard Payne Knight in "Essays on Ancient Worship," Hargrave Jennings in "The Rosicrucians," and other sources.

Since Hegel studied, the origin of religious myths has been under a course of evolution into a new science, to be known as the science of religion, and to be based on history. It will be shown that all religions hav one origin and one definition, viz., the explanation that man invents for phenomena whose cause he does not know.

As the growth of any one of these myths is a sample, generically, of all the others, the elaborate presentation and careful study of one will aid us in judging of all. In so doing we may sit in judgment on Hegel's notion that they are all the creations, subordinately, of poets, and, ultimately, of God, both seeking to giv outward form and expression to the inner content of the spirit. It will show clearly that they are, on the contrary, the efforts of untrained observers to conform the tangled and not yet understood network of outward phenomena to supposed rules of harmony and logic which govern our inferior process of thought in their earliest struggles toward scientific conceptions of the universe.

Take, for instance, the moon myth, which appears finally in the Jewish scriptures, as the whale swallowing Jonah, and, through the power of prayer, casting him out alive after three days. In the Bible it aims to teach the harmless moral lesson that, while prayer will save a prophet who is swallowed by a fish, yet it will not induce the Almighty to destroy a whole city in which many thousand persons (children) "do not know their right hands from their left."

The Greeks, Hindoos, Maoris of New Zealand, Basutos, and Zulus of South Africa, North American Indians, and probably most primitiv races, hav a sun or moon myth, which describes either the daily descent of the sun into darkness, or an eclipse of the sun or moon, or the monthly waning of the moon, or finally the annual descent of nature into winter, though in the Greek mythology the last myth differentiates into a distinct one from the others.

Either of these events, involving the extinguishment and reproduction of life, or of one or the other of its two great emblems, the sun and moon, is typified among all these nations by a hero or maiden swallowed by a fish, whale, sea monster, or elephant, and cast out alive through some exercise of miraculous power.

In the legend of the Ojibway, the fish is called the "Sun-catcher," and the brave, after being swallowed, is cut out of the fish by his sister. According to the Ottawa form, embodied in "Hiawatha," Manabozho (the sun), angling for the king of fishes (dipping into the Western waves at sunset), is swallowed, canoe and all (night). Then he smites the monster's heart with his war club. When Manabozho's blows against the sun-catcher's heart disposed the fish to vomit him again into the lake, the brave set his canoe firmly across the fish's throat inside, and slew him. Then the dead monster drifted ashore, and the gulls (birds of the dawn) pecked an opening for Manabozho to come out. Among the Basutos the hero, like Minerva, was born of full size, but found that his mother (the universe) had been devoured by a monster (night). He attacked the monster, and was swallowed whole (sunset), but cutting his way out (sunrise), he set free (illumined) all the inhabitants of the world.

Among the Zulus an elephant swallows the world, including a mother and her children. She finds in its maw (the antipodes), forests, rivers, highlands, dogs, cattle, and villages of people. In this form the myth betrays a knowledge that the antipodes are inhabited, which did not pertain to its Greek or North American form.

Among the Greeks the myth is seen in the stories of Perseus and Andromeda and Herakles and Hesione.

In the latter, Laomedon, father of Hesione and king of the Ionians, offers her a sacrifice to Poseidon's (the ocean's) destroying monster. To descend from impersonations to metaphor, he fixes his affections on commerce and risks his wealth in ventures on the deep. He givs his heart or daughter, i. e., his wealth, to the waves. Herakles, impersonating Labor, to rescue Hesione, springs full armed into the fish's gaping throat, where he hacks for three days, and comes out hairless, but rescuing Hesione from the fish. This, however, is the secondary and practical application of the myth to a commercial nation. It has here developed out of a symbol impersonating the forces of nature into a legend identified with historical characters and dimly connected with industrial pursuits. We must go behind this form of the myth for its origin. This we find in the fact that the root Ion, or Io, in the names Hesione and Ionian, is the moon (Selene), and that the race of commercial Greeks who skirted Asia Minor at Ilion, or Troy, Tyre, Sidon, Joppa, and around to Egypt, were known as the Selenic, Ionic (moon-worshiping) races, as distinguished from the Pelasgi and other land races who worshiped the elder gods. The influence of the moon over the tides, which Pliny shows to hav been a principle as familiar to the ancients as to us, and the dependence of sailors on the tides, accounts for the fact that the maritim Greeks should be particularly styled the lunar, Selenic, Ionian, or moon-worshiping races.

During the change of the moon (Ion) from old to new it is extinguished for three days by its nearness to the sun. This is the original swallowing of Iona by the Great Fish. The name Ion (the moon) is preserved in the name of the Greek girl Hesione, who is rescued by toil (Hercules), and in that of the Hebrew prophet (Jonah), who is rescued by prayer, both of whom, however, are in the whale's belly three days. Joppa, where the Bible locates the Jonah story, is also the place where the Greek myth located the story of Hesione and Herakles. The Greek sculpture of the whale which swallowed Hesione was actually used in early Christian art as the model of and identical with the fish that swallowed Jonah. Moreover, the chains with which Hesione was bound to the rock to be sacrificed to the sea monster were exhibited in front of Joppa in Pliny's time, and from thence the bones of the whale were carried to Rome in verification of the story. We need not remind the reader that the name Jonah should be Iona, and that the sound of G soft, given to the letter J, is a western barbarism. Nor need we pause to show that the existence of the myth among the Greeks is much earlier in date than its appearance in the Hebrew scriptures, for which it was evidently borrowed from Ionian sources.

Given the Greek myth of Hesione, sacrificed to a whale, and rescued from its belly by a hero, who hacked therein for three days, and we need only substitute the Jewish idea of prayer to God for the Greek idea of the heroism of Hercules (or toil). Prayer was the Hebrew wrestler as Hercules was the Greek, and the legend, which begins among the savages of all nations as a symbolic impersonation of certain great forces of nature, stands improved among the Greeks into a classic impersonation of these forces into certain free beings having an independent personality, and is finally borrowed by the monotheistic Hebrews from the Greeks and formed into a chapter in the career of the invisible and absolute God.

It is impossible not to see in this evolution that a bastard science seeking to account for phenomena by putting a spirit or personal soul behind each act in nature's drama, exhibits itself first in animism, or the theory that each event has a soul and is alive, whether it be thunder, an eclipse, or a sunset. This is the period of myth formation which precedes the attempt to set forth the myth by a symbol, which, according to Hegel, is the beginning of art. The next phase is the mythological, in which the spirits or souls which stand for the leading forces of nature develop into free and independent persons having moral powers. This givs rise, according to Hegel, to classic art. Then follows the monotheistic phase in theology, accompanied by the sublime in art, in which all these independent personalities are merged into One, and whatever miracles inferior gods or men accomplish is done by prayer to this One and by his might. And here, according to Hegel, the advance ends. Hegel seems unconscious that the idea of one God has emerged out of the idea of many gods, as that of many gods did out of innumerable spirits, and as that of innumerable spirits emerged out of the observation of countless phenomena whose causes were unknown. He pictures the absolute One in such terms that while one wing of his disciples beholds in it a crucified man, the other sees in it an identification of Deity with non being. Nay, often in the same sentence there is mingled the two antagonistic doctrins that the spirit creates man, which is Theism, and that man evolves the spirit, which is Atheism. Thus, Hegel says, "For, as in the next place, God separates or distinguishes finite actuality from himself, so also finite man, who begins with himself as outside the divine kingdom, assumes the task of elevating himself to God, of freeing himself from the finale of doing away with nugatoriness (limitations), and of becoming through this sacrifice (deadness) of his immediate actuality that which God in his appearance as man has made objectiv as true actuality."

Nor does Hegel clearly define when speaking of certain theological conceptions whether the kinds of truth he is attributing to them is artistic truth; i. e., conformity to the principles of beauty, or whether it is actual truth; i. e., conformity to the events of history. Thus, in describing the transition from Egyptian to Greek art, as a transition from an unreflectiv symbol like the pyramid to a free personality like Chronos, to express duration, we clearly perceive that he does not wish us to regard Chronos as an actual person, but only the ideal personality whose use in setting forth the conception of time is artistically true. He says (Bryant, p. 8) the difficult point in our investigation is to distinguish whether what are represented as personages in mythology or art possess a real individuality or personality, or whether they contain but the empty semblance of it and are only mere personifications. As he here manifestly confounds the distinction between truth and the artist's conception that the person is real by describing as a real personality that which is merely the artist's conception of truth, we hav no clear guide by which to determin, when he comes to speak of the real individuality and personality of Jesus, whether he means to assume that the actual Jesus was all that is claimed for him, or only that the Jesus, as the evangelists hav described him, should, like the Jove, as the artists hav constructed him, conform to certain standards which, for artistic purposes, stand in the place of historic truth.

On the whole, however, it seems to us that Hegel really meant to accept the alleged supernaturalities connected with the story of Jesus as historically true and as deriving all their sublimity from their conceded truth, originality, and inspiration. He seems to assume to be competent to tell us (Bryant's Hegel on Art, p. 19) that the story of that God which is begotten, is born, dies, and is resuscitated, is a myth which presents a variety of meanings at once physical, historical, moral, and religious, or metaphysical, when the story is told of the Egyptian Osiris two thousand years before Christ, or of the Indian Krishna, or Christna, at least six hundred years before Christ, but is not at all mythical, and has only one meaning, and that the literal one, when it is repeated concerning Jesus. Now, if the story of a God being begotten, born, dying, and being resuscitated has power, when told in Judea, to create a new school of art called the sublime, and to overthrow the previous schools of art which Hegel styles respectivly the classic and the symbolic, how is it that the previous telling of the same story in Egypt concerning Osiris, and in India concerning Christna, though fully believed in by the people, created no such change in art? A sufficient cause must always produce the entire effect. If any revolution in art ever actually occurred in Europe solely by the preaching of the God-man Jesus, it ought to hav occurred in Egypt and Judea by the preaching of the incarnated gods Christna and Osiris.

If the fundamental idea of incarnation is common in the three cases, but the revolution in art followed in only one of them, then the revolution must hav been due to something else than this fundamental idea of incarnation. The relativ truth or falsehood of the idea in the three cases could make no difference, as any religious theory must produce its whole effect upon art when it is believed, quite irrespectiv of its truth or falsehood. If a revolution in art actually accompanied the belief in the story of an incarnate God in only one of three cases in which it was extensivly believed, then it must hav been due, not to that idea, but to some other cause, whether it was some accessory to the idea itself or some wholly independent cause.

In Hegel's theory of art the assumption of the truth of the story of the incarnation of God in Jesus is so fundamental that if the story itself is untrue the theory is gone. It is like the argument by which Hegel sought to prove that the immutable nature of abstract thought required that no planet could exist between Mars and Jupiter. When told that the asteroid Ceres had been discovered there he is said to hav remarked that the principles of pure thought rendered such a fact impossible, but to the altitude of pure thought, nature, in its accidental and phenomenal uncertainty, is simply unequal. So Hegel seems to hav determined that the necessities of the infinit spirit demanded that it should seek to express itself outwardly in the creature man; that it should find its "inner subjectivity" as God in serious warfare with its outward objectivity as man, and that the reconciliation between the two could be effected by revealing himself as the God-man, and thereby inducing on the part of men such a surrender of their own personalities and absorption of the divine personality revealed in Jesus as would transform them all into man-gods.

Hegel presents this doctrin of the incarnation of God in man under the new and seductiv aspect in which it had not before been presented, viz, that such an incarnation is necessary, not to the rescue of man from punishment, but to the rescue of art, which is the consummate flower of the human spirit, from the catastrophe of having nothing in history equal to its powers on which to expend its force, and to the rescue of Deity from the vacuity of being without functions. In short, the divine incarnation, according to Hegel, supplies art with its end and climax, history with its pivot, Deity with its toil, and nature with its interpretation.

The process by which Hegel works the mind up to this conclusion is ingenious, subtle, and in a certain sense powerful—so powerful that, attacked only by the same course of metaphysical arguments by which it is reared, it is impregnable.

Art, says Hegel, begins in a symbolic period, rises into a classic period, and culminates in the sublime period. These three periods correspond, the symbolic to nature-worship, the classic to art-worship, the sublime to spirit worship. The first finds its outcome in Persia, India, and Egypt; the second in Greece and Rome; the third in Judea and Christian civilization. In the first the symbol, as the pyramids, the sphinx, the centaur, the many-armed idols, the three-headed trimurti, strives to express the dignity, intent, or greatness of spirit through the simpler geometrical qualities of matter, viz., its mass, number, and form in its ruder aspects.

Thus, in the pyramids, the crystalline shape and enormous mass express duration—a difficult illustration, since the true meaning of the pyramids is not yet fully known. In the sphinx the lion and woman express the union of the male and female principles in nature. In this stage, also, mankind adore the phallus as the symbol of life, light as the symbol of knowledge, and make grandiose statues with many heads to express wisdom, with many arms to express power, with goats' feet to express fecundity, and with wings to express flight. But in all this the ascendancy of form over mass, and of harmony over number, has not yet asserted itself. Hence men never lose sight of that which the symbol represents, and for that reason the symbol is never erected into an independent personality and "subjectivity" of its own. Neither the Hindoos, Persians, nor Egyptians ever seem to hav lost sight of the fact that they made their gods, or fallen into the notion that their gods made them. The spirit, in groping for some material symbol in which to express the causes of phenomena, has not lost sight of its primary object, viz, to explain phenomena. It still knows that it is the exterior mysteries and solemn contradictions in nature which it is seeking to express.

But in Greek or classic art, according to Hegel, the symbol ceases at the moment when free subjectivity or personality is attributed to the supposed cause of phenomena, or when, as Hegel says, "free subjectivity, taking the place of vague and indeterminate conceptions, constitutes the basis of representation in art. Such is the character which Greek gods present to us. Greek art represents them as free individuals, independent in themselvs, genuin, moral persons. Hence we cannot consider them from the symbolic point of view. The acts, for example, of Jupiter, of Apollo, of Minerva, belong only to those divinities themselvs—represent only their powers and their passions. Should we abstract from these free individualities a general idea and set it up as an explanation, we should abandon and destroy in these figures just that which corresponds to the idea of art, whence artists hav never been satisfied with these symbolic or allegorical explanations applied to works of art and to mythology. If there remains a place for allegory or the symbol, it is in the accessories, in simple attributes, signs, as the eagle by the side of Jupiter, the ox by the side of St. Luke, while the Egyptians saw in the bull Apis a divinity itself."

We may here remark that Hegel seems to ignore the vast prevalence of the symbol in Christianity, as in the cross, the crown, the spire, the atoning blood, the harps of heaven, its pearly gates, golden streets, etc. He also overstates the extent of the self-deception of the pagan mind. The Egyptian saw in the bull Apis a divinity only because its body had become incarnated, by an entrance thereinto and abiding therein of the spirit of Osiris or the sun god, as the body of Jesus is, in the Christian theology, incarnated by the divine spirit. In the transition from symbolic to classic art Hegel fails to warn us that man is being led downward into idolatry by mistaking the symbol which he has adopted, to typify some fact in nature, for the cause of the fact, yet this is true when the serpent, out of whose form coiled into a circle he has made a symbol of self-renewing immortality, is mistaken for the cause or source of life, as by the Chinese when they giv serpent's flesh ground into powders to cure disease. So the women of ancient times, when they adored the phallus to produce pregnancy, mistook the symbol for the cause. So the modern Catholic, when he uses the bones of a saint as a charm against disease.

In classic art Hegel sees in the tendency, on the part of a race, to elevate the symbols of nature's great forces, the Jupiters who typify thunder and lightning, the Apollos who typify the sunlight, and the like, into independent personal causes, only an emancipation of spirit from matter. He seems to forget that this emancipation exists only in the artist's conception, and not in the history of nature. Hence if out of this process shall soon after emerge the theory of monotheism as the product of polytheism, then the philosopher will be called on logically to show no more politeness toward the resultant one-god than Hegel shows toward the causativ many-gods, which resulted from the elevation of symbols into gods. Hegel discusses every transition from symbolism to polytheism, as if there were behind it a spirit trying to express his idea in an ever-increasing freedom from matter, and as if, by the transition from the rude masses and numerical repetitions of Egypt and India to the graceful forms and paintings and poems of Greece, spirit were in some way actually freeing itself from matter. In the transition from the pyramid as the type of duration to the god Chronos, or time, who is a person born of heaven and earth, perpetually consuming all his offspring, until the divine Zeus leads a rebellion against him and wins immortality from him by imprisoning him under chains and darkness, we are introduced to a subtler and more intellectual conception of time. Yet we know the Cronos as a being does not exist, and the passage of the human mind from the use of his name as a symbol into the belief in his existence as a god is a passage from poetry into idolatry, i. e., from dreaming, into the belief in the truth and verity of the dream, not in any sense from matter to spirit. And when, probably by a crossing in Judea of the Græco-Roman idea

(Continued on page 666.)

(Continued from page 661.)

We visited the picture gallery and saw great numbers of Rubens' celebrated and highly-prized pictures, and again wondered how he could paint so much. Here were a few hundred more Virgins, Jesus on the cross, Jesus off the cross, in every conceivable shape and condition. The trouble with those old painters was that they could hardly make a picture without a Virgin, a little Jesus, a big Jesus, or something of the sort for a subject. Evidently they did not paint to suit my especial taste.

We visited the large statues of Rubens and Vandyke in the public squares. If the people had no Virgin and dead Jesus to worship, they would probably take Rubens and Vandyke into their pantheon. I am quite willing that they should make that change.

The curiosities in Antwerp that pleased and interested me the most were in the Museum Plantin. Plantin was a printer, a contemporary of Reubens. He spent a large portion of his life in getting together everything pertaining to the art of printing from its very incipiency, including the blocks first printed, the first presses that were used, the first metal types, the molds they were cast in, the very proofs that were taken, and marked for correction, hundreds of the first copper plates engraved for pictures (some of them crude enough), great numbers of early wood cuts, large numbers of the first books printed, etc., etc. These are arranged in a large but extremely antiquated Dutch building formerly used by Plantin. The largest panes of glass in the windows are about 3 by 4 inches with much smaller pieces in the same sash. The house has some forty rooms, some of them not large, but well filled with everything curious and old pertaining to the early age of printing. It interests me far more than do the images of the Virgin and her baby with an unknown father. Antwerp was one of the first towns that engaged in the art of printing, and hundreds of Bibles were printed there and taken to England and sold long before any were printed in England. The big bishops of the church did all they could to prevent this, and cast persons into prison for selling Bibles as much as now for selling "Cupid's Yokes." And some were put to death for it. It is only a matter of time, or probably they would execute now for selling "Cupid's Yokes." But the world moves a little, if it is slow. Antwerp has for centuries been noted for its expensive publishing houses, and for this reason I entertain much respect for the old town. Much good was thus done there.

We took dinner in Antwerp, but found the water so bad we had to take tea. I shall not make Antwerp my home on account of the bad quality of the water, if for nothing else. Oh, how glad I will be to take a good hearty drink of ice-water when I get home again! Europeans know very little about the luxury of having ice in hot weather. I have seen ice but a very few times since I have been here, and then it was distressingly scarce. They certainly can have it if they wish it, but I presume they do not. They prefer beer and wine to such a dangerous drink as ice-water. At the dinner table we met an intelligent sea captain from Massachusetts. It seems really good to meet an American; they certainly come a little nearer and are more home-like than people from any other country. This captain has been in Antwerp four weeks, and soon starts with a cargo for San Francisco, going round the Horn. Oh, what a long voyage he has before him! I will be home long before he reaches San Francisco.

It was at Antwerp that Mr. Rawson parted from us to return to America to attend the National Liberal League, see his wife and babies, etc., etc. He took cars for Ostend, then steamer for Harwich, England, and then cars to London and Liverpool. Before this he is doubtless on a Cunarder and plowing the Atlantic. It seemed a trifle cruel in him to leave a person of my limited experience in this strange country all by myself. But some, it is said, have trod the wine-press alone, and I must pursue my journey alone. At night the two sisters, Mrs. Bristol and Mrs. Foote, returned here to Brussels, and now they have gone, and I am more lonely than ever. I could get along far better if I could only get acquainted with people, but I cannot. They talk so queer I cannot understand them, and my talk is just as bad to them. If I speak to them just as plainly as possible, they look blank, shake their heads, and say, "Nose forstander," or something that means about the same thing. I daily sigh for that universal language to be spread all over Europe and all other countries. But that will not take place until after I have gone to be an angel.

On yesterday I went out eleven miles to the battle field of Waterloo, where Napoleon and Wellington took their grand trial match about fifty-six years ago, the time when Blucher came to Wellington's relief, but Grouchy did not come to little Nap's. I could not think of leaving this part of the country without seeing that memorable field where the blood of 32,000 men saturated the earth, and where the destinies of nations were decided for a hundred years in the future. I had seen an excellent, vivid panorama of the great battle here, and it was so good that it made me only the more anxious to see the ground itself. A high mound has been thrown up in the very center of the battle ground, and on the summit, on a huge pyramid of granite blocks, stands a monster Belgian lion, made of the cannon taken on the field. The lion's head is said to be two hundred feet from the ground, and when I toiled up the two hundred and twenty-five steps to reach the base of the monument, I was glad they did not make it any higher.

The different parts of the field were pointed out to me where Napoleon's headquarters were, where Marshal Ney charged eleven times on the little chateau of Hugomont without being able to take it. He was indeed a brave man, and then after that they shot him down in Paris like a dog.

I met on the Waterloo Mound a gentleman and lady by the name of Goodell, from near Chicago. They are a pleasant couple, and I had an agreeable chat with them. They have been away over a year, having visited Egypt, Palestine, and Eastern countries. We came in together. We chanced to meet again this morning at the cathedral. They are a little over-pious, and there is where they and I are not just alike. I have got just about piety enough for my use, but they have too much.

I shall have to leave much of Brussels untold. It has other museums and picture galleries that I have not mentioned, and some that I have not seen. It has monuments, fine buildings, markets, and fountains that I have not even named. It has fountains of various kinds, several with the water pouring from the mouths of brazen statues. One I remember, the statue of a man bending forward and a stream from his mouth pouring into the reservoir below. This was placed upon the corner of a building on a main street. There are other heads of a similar character in public fountains. There is also another little fountain here on the corner of two public streets of a somewhat different character. Perhaps I ought to mention it because it is very popular here, and the people think a great deal of it. (They call it the manikin-pis.) It is a rather small bronze statue of a little boy in a nude condition, and with no part deficient. There is a gentle stream of water coming not from the little boy's mouth, but from a place more natural. All who visit this town invariably go to see this little boy, and when they see it they smile.

There is a legend connected with this little fountain. Two or three hundred years ago a little boy strayed away from home, and was lost. The parents were greatly distressed and looked everywhere for their child, and finally found him on the very spot where this fountain now stands, and he was doing at that very moment what the little fountain is doing now. The father was so much pleased to find his little boy safe and sound that he erected this queer monument to commemorate the event. It is strongly asserted that the people of Brussels are so attached to this work of art that they would not have it removed on any consideration.

I have amused myself somewhat since I have been here at reading signs. A great deal can be learned from signs. One sign reads, "Exposition Permanent, Entree Libree." I translate that to mean permanent exhibition, entrance free. I have found out also that "Gros et detail," means that at those stores goods are sold both at wholesale and retail. Often signs are in windows, saying "English spoken." I have seen it capitalized in this way, "engLish spoken," but it is well to beware of such stores, for they charge two prices. On many stores I saw the words Prix Fixe. I was at a decided loss to know what the words meant and what kind of business could be conducted in those establishments. But at length my mind was relieved to learn that it simply means prices fixed, letting people know that haggling is not to be practiced there. In our country we would say, "a one-priced store," or something of that kind, but I find many things quite different from what they are in our model country.

One custom is men and women sitting on the sidewalk, out of doors and sometimes away out into the street, perhaps a hundred of them in one place, at all hours in the day or evening, especially in the evening, quaffing their beer and wine, just as happy and contented as good virtuous men and women know how to be. I presume it will be some little time before this custom is adopted by the bon ton in our cities.

With all these glorious privileges here, I am sorry to say I have not seen a soda fountain in the city, nor an ice cream saloon. A Yankee ought to make his fortune by coming over here and opening a nice ice cream establishment. But very likely if he did Brusselians would not patronize him; they prefer their national beer. In Paris it is all wine, but here it is nearly all beer. That is the Dutch of it.

But, indulgent friends, I have said quite enough about Brussels. I fear I wear you out with my chatter. Pardon me, I do wish to talk to somebody who can understand. I will, however, stop right here. In an hour I start for Cologne to see more virgins and dead Christs. Forgive me if I have said aught amiss. Au revoir, D. M. B.

A Letter from James Parton.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: You will of course print the inclosed noble letter from the biographer of Voltaire. But do not let your readers suppose that the approval or compliments that seem to be meant for me are personal. They belong to those noble men and nobler women who could not and cannot be driven by odium, abuse, or lying into the support of principles they know to be unconstitutional and dangerous in our government, to wit, the administration of criminal laws by church Comstock societies and the federal espionage and decoy system over the mails and post-offices under the same influence.

Let us rejoice that the spirit of Voltaire still lives to "crush the infamous"—Ecraser l'infame.

New York, Oct. 8, 1880. Yours as ever, T. B. W.

Newburyport, Mass., Oct. 6, 1880.

My Dear and Valiant Friend: I hav just read the report of the proceedings at Chicago, and of the withdrawal of Col. Ingersoll from the League. I deeply lament his course, as affording one more illustration of the difficulty of a large body acting together in this cause. I explain his withdrawal thus: Colonel Ingersoll is essentially a poet—as indeed all very great orators are and must be. What a poet was Chatham, Patrick Henry, Cicero, and even Webster in his great days! Having the qualities of a poet, he has the limitations that belong to the character, among which are an aversion to—no matter for that. Let us only think of his great qualities and magnificent endowments. Let him enjoy the poet's privilege of doing just as he likes. I think he lost a grand opportunity of acting in the spirit of his brother Cicero's immortal sentence: "Odium incurred in the cause of virtue is glory, not odium."

But he has done so much in that way, in other scenes, and occasions of great difficulty and risk, that we must not complain that on this one occasion he seems to hav injured the cause he has done so very much to promote.

Never mind. You and your supporters did nobly and bravely in not shrinking from the sublime odium of opposing in toto laws which are a standing menace to every independent inquirer. Your argument was not met nor recognized. The time may not be distant when those laws will be made the pretext for worse outrages than any yet inflicted by them. At the best they are needless. Who can define obscenity, even for a jury? You heard what those villagers at Watkins Glen thought of it, some of whom seemed still disposed to put pantalets on the piano. Imagin Rabelais before a jury! In France they hav just reared a monument to his memory; Watkins Glen would rush affrighted into Seneca Lake at the hearing of one page of him.

No more to-day, for my never-ending task still occupies me. I feel that you are greatly and gloriously in the right in this matter, and that you defended the right with all that courage, constancy, moderation, and wisdom which are peculiarly your own.

Very truly yours,

To T. B. Wakeman, Esq James Parton.

Massachusetts Comstockism.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Mr. W. S. Bush, in your number of Oct. 2d, chooses to say, "He [Wakeman] is not careful of his facts. He should hav given the date of those recent [Massachusetts] Comstock laws and the changes made in them." He then proceeds to intimate that no such laws hav been passed since Aug. 1, 1878, the date of my Faneuil Hall speech. He also quotes what I call an old and sufficient law of 1860 on the subject, which was a revision of former laws, and leaves the impression that there was no subsequent Comstock legislation in that state, and that I did not know what I was about.

I accordingly sent to our Nestor for a copy of the Comstock law of 1879 referred to. He sends it to me with a letter which may be information to Mr. Bush and a warning to any church "enslaved idiots" who may hereafter get elected to state legislatures. In addition to the anti-prevention clause pointed out by Mr. Wright, let the reader meditate upon the power of seizure and search to enforce it contained in § 2 of this act. The agents of the "Comstock Vice Society," organized to run this act may by warrant, without crime or cause, go into any private house, any lady's chamber, to search for and seize what the most enlightened physicians and philanthropists say every woman should possess. The "idiots" who passed this act certainly never heard of the common-law maxim, that "a man's house is his or her castle," at least until some crime has been committed. Note, too, the lovely union of church and state in this legislation. Mr. Comstock, I am reliably informed, occupied the seat of honor by the side of the speaker while the Legislature ratified the enactment of the basement meeting of the clergy in Park-street church.

Will the reader also note that I was careful about my facts, and that it is Mr. Bush who should "reck his own rede?"

T. B. W.

"Boston, Mass., Oct. 6, 1880.

"T. B. Wakeman, Dear Sir: In reply to your letter I inclose a copy of a statute passed in our state in 1879 at the instigation of Anthony Comstock (as I was informed), after consultation with a number of clergymen in the basement of Park-street church. It does not differ very materially from a law passed in 1862, which may be found in our 'General Statutes,' chapter 165, §§ 10 and 15, except in the line [in § 1] I hav underscored. But this is a very material exception, for it indicates that Comstock and the clergy who sustained him hav used our Legislature to enforce their edict that the production of paupers shall proceed without interruption.

But for that one line there was, and could be, no motiv to pass such a law at all. It is simply a priestly insult to every family in Massachusetts, and stamps our legislators as a set of church-enslaved idiots. Yours truly,

"ELIZUR WRIGHT."

ACTS OF 1879.

An act in addition to an act concerning offenses against chastity, morality, and decency.

Be it enacted, etc, as follows:

SEC. 1. Any person who shall within this commonwealth sell or lend, or giv away, or in any manner exhibit, or shall offer to sell, or to lend, or to giv away, any instrument or other article intended to be used for self-abuse, or any drug or medicin or any instrument or article whatever for the prevention of conception or for causing unlawful abortion, or shall advertise the same, or shall write or print or cause to be written or printed any card, circular, book, pamphlet, advertisement or notice of any kind stating when, where, how, or of whom, or by what means any of the articles in this section hereinbefore mentioned can be purchased or obtained, or shall manufacture or in any wise make any of such articles or things, shall on conviction thereof be imprisoned in the state prison for not more than five years, or in any jail or house of correction not more than three years, or fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars.

SEC. 2 All the articles and things described in section one of this Act, and all articles of raw materials found in the possession of any person or persons intending to manufacture the same into such articles and thing, and also all tools, machinery, implements, instruments, and personal property found in the place or building where the articles and things described in section one of this act are found or seized and used or intended to be used in the manufacture of such articles or things, may be seized and shall be forfeited. And any police, district, or municipal court, or trial justice, may issue a warrant, for the purpose of searching for any of the articles or things mentioned in section one, in the manner provided in chapter one hundred and seventy of the General Statutes, and all such things found by an officer in executing such warrant shall be safely kept so long as is necessary for the purpose of being used as evidence in any case, and as soon as may be afterward shall be destroyed by order of the court or justice before whom the same are brought. [Approved March 26, 1879.]

Oho!

CLEARFIELD, PA., Oct. 7, 1880.

T. C. Leland, Sec'y N. L. League, Dear Sir: Inclosed please find "confidential circular," which speaks for itself. Evidently the Secretary of every League has received a copy. It is hardly necessary for me to tell you that the three interrogatories it contains will receive a decided negativ from me. This League approves of the action of the Chicago Congress and echoes the sentiments of Bro. Wakeman in his reply to Col. Ingersoll. Ingersoll and Green are following in the footsteps of Abbot. As for Spencer, he got what he deserved.

Yours for repeal, Repeal, REPEAL, REPEAL!

HARRY HOOVER,
Sec'y Clearfield L. L.

CONFIDENTIAL CIRCULAR.

SALAMANCA, N. Y., Oct. 5, 1880.

Dear Sir: You hav learned before this that on account of certain objectionable proceedings at the National Liberal League Congress, recently held in Chicago, Col. Robert G. Ingersoll, Robert C. Spencer, and myself withdrew from said Congress, and nearly one-third of the members present expressed their dissent to the objectionable proceedings, and many of them favored the calling of the informal gathering hereinafter mentioned.

That before leaving Chicago the dissatisfied members decided to call an informal meeting, to be held at the Grand Pacific Hotel, in the city of Chicago, on the 15th of November next, to take steps to organize an association for the SPECIFIC object of secularizing the state on a basis BROAD enough to admit members regardless of their religious or non-religious opinions and NARROW enough to exclude all "hobbies" not germane to the question of state secularization.

To this conference is invited one delegate from each auxiliary Liberal League that before that time shall sever its connection with the National Liberal League, one delegate from any other society in sympathy with the proposed meeting, and other invited gentlemen who are supposed to be in accord with this movement and whose presence would giv the movement character.

We disclaim any intention of coming in conflict with the old League in any manner. We shall leave the old League to do its work in its own way, but we propose to organize an association that shall engage in the work of state secularization in a way that will draw to its membership hundreds, and we hope thousands, who cannot conscientiously work with the old League. To this conference you are cordially invited, and you are requested to bring with you such friends as you think will aid the movement.

So soon as you receive this circular you are requested to reply to it, and in your reply answer the following interrogatories:

1. Do you approve of the proposed informal meeting?
2. Will you attend the proposed conference?
3. If it is thought best, will you allow your name to be attached to a public call for this meeting—the number of names to the call not to be less than fifty of the leading Liberals of the United States? Fraternally yours,

H. L. GREEN,
Temporary Secretary.

Dear Harry: Much obliged for early news. But why these ways that are dark and movements that are "confidential?" What is there to fear in the bright sunlight of publicity? Let's "confide" this circular to the readers of THE TRUTH SEEKER—they won't any on 'em tell. They believe in every good word and work, want to know what is going on, and are willing to help.

Here are the great Colonel, the not so great R. C. Spencer, "and myself" going cahoot in Liberal housekeeping—setting up in a League by themselvs; and they go around to the back doors of the old League homestead, peep "confidentially" in the windows, and try to whisper out here and there a secretary. That is scarcely becoming to this great brace of "Bobs" and "myself." "Eternal vigilance" is mighty good policy, but you may bet your life there is not one of the "objectionable proceeders" from whom these high-toned gentlemen withdrew who is "vigilant as a cat—to steal cream" "Withdraw," too, is a good word. If the big Bob could hav seen the little one withdraw! Great gods, what a theme for the illustrious humorist and orator!

Why couldn't these surreptitious stalkers under "confidential" night come up bravely and honestly to the old League and ask or even demand a fair divide. Dad's rich and able to giv 'em all a farm. There are the neighbors too, perfectly willing to help. Here is Potter, of the Index, with a generosity altogether touching and, since the tender of Artemus's wife's relations, wholly unexampled, already offering all the old scratched, banged-up racket turned over to him in Abbot's "American" garret. This munificence shall not be outdone by the old mother League. Here she has over two hundred auxiliaries. Take any dozen of 'em you like. Take a score, or take two score. The young folks shall hav a good start. Nothing mean about us. And we'll get 'em to "sever their connection" too, so as to hav them duly qualified. When you get together at Chicago, fifty of you, and find the place so healthy—there is a live League there—that you may think of killing some Liberal to start a graveyard, don't do it. We will contribute at least a dozen Leagues that are already dead. There's Roberts's, in Philadelphia; you can hav him and his whole caboodle. There's Sellon in Buffalo, whom you hav bragged on so; you are perfectly welcome to him. And there's—well we will pick 'em out when you come for them. But you will find we will hav enough left to tucker you out in a go-as-you-please race.

But they "disclaim any intention of coming in conflict with the old League." We should think they would. Disclaim is another good word. When two bulls meet on a bridge and lock horns, the one that gets bucked off nearly always "disclaims intention" of further "conflict." But he stands and paws dirt at the other fellow's heifers "confidentially" on the safe bank over the creek. That's heroism, that is.

But to the three questions. 1st. We most certainly do "approve of the proposed informal meeting." That's why we publish this circular "confidentially" to our folks, so they shall all know it and approve of it.

2. Yes, if you ask us real pretty.

3. Well that is a poser. "Honor bright," is there no sell in that? What if we say yes? Then you and the Robert that resigned, and the Robert that "withdrew," think it over and if "it is thought" not "best," what will our remedy be then? How can we get in? We want to be in on bed rock—charter member if anything—no coming in next year on watered stock. We "allow" provided we can chip in, while the "thinking best" is going on, to vindicate our good name. Please rise and explain.

But look at this precious confidential document as a whole. What a ringing bugle call to arms it is! What stirring tones! Any Secretary receiving that summons must hav rushed impetuously for his "gran'thers" old Revolutionary musket. Didn't you, Harry? And such a clear statement of objects and issues! Well, well! Evidently Chicago and all Lake Michigan will be safe from conflagration on November 15th. Nothing will catch afire where this fulmination is "confidentially" circulated.

T. C. L.

Mr. Green's Hopeless Undertaking.

NEW YORK, Oct. 9, 1880.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: Mr. H. L. Green wrote to me a confidential letter under date of Oct. 5th, requesting me to co-operate with him in his new movement for state secularization. I wrote to him the following letter in reply, which I happened to show to Mr. T. B. Wakeman, a thing I felt at liberty to do, as what I say therein is merely in reference to general principles, involving no allusion to Mr. Green's confidential arguments.

Mr. Wakeman seemed to think my few words were so much to the point that he requested me to publish them, so here is the communication just as I indited it off-hand:

151 EAST 18TH ST., N. Y., Oct. 7, 1880.

DEAR MR. GREEN: Yours of Oct. 5th received. I can only say that while your friend and well-wisher, whatever course you may take, I can hav no part in your new movement. If there ever was a diabolical example of the union of church and state it is illustrated by Comstockism in our post-office, and if there is one issue more burning than another which the National Liberal League should by the true inwardness of its organic purpose boldly meet, it is this very one. If it (the National Liberal League) is only fit for a sort of dress-parade, free-thinking jubilation, and lacks the courage to face the enemy when he really presents himself, why, it had better die.

Prophecy don't amount to much since Jonah, Jeremiah & Co. passed in their checks, but I venture to predict for your new secession the fate of the old one. Already the National Liberal Leagues number over two hundred local associations, associations organized mostly under opposition to Comstockism.

If Abbot could not lead a new movement I doubt very strongly if good friend Green can, even with the eloquent Ingersoll for a backer. The simple fact is, truth is mighty and will prevail, and it seems to me the moment we allow the United States government to discriminate as to the morality of the printed matter it conveys through its post-office, we, in that same moment, depart from the principles of self-government and are in the drift towards a paternal despotism; we diverge from a government of the people, for the people, by the people, to a government relegated to a Cæsar and the church. Yours very truly,

C. PALMER.

I am so anxious to do anything I can to assist my dear friend Wakeman in the valiant fight he is making that I venture with some qualms to send you the above copy. Its perfectly general nature must, I think, prevent both the public and Mr. Green from judging it any breach of confidence. Respectfully, C. P.

The Report of Chicago.

I hav arranged with Mr. A. K. Butts to publish in one number of his Man the whole of the great debate on the Comstock laws between Col. Ingersoll and T. B. Wakeman in the Fourth Annual Congress of the Liberal League, together with the speeches of Messrs. Burnham, McCracken, Pillsbury, Lynn, Hall, Mendum, Green, Mrs. Colman, and Mrs. Lake. The Report is that of our official stenographer, verbatim, and will be nearly twice as long as that published in THE TRUTH SEEKER, with all errors corrected.

This number of Man will contain also a corrected list of the 112 auxiliary Leagues, list of officers for the year, the resolutions and platform, the Constitution, and instructions how to form Leagues. It will be a useful document to hand around and scatter broadcast. As it givs impartially what both sides hav to say, it is to the interest of both sides to circulate it.

Price, 5 cents per copy, 13 copies for 50 cents, 30 copies for $1, 100 copies for $3 The proceeds of the sales will go into the treasury of the National Liberal League.

Every Auxiliary League should send for at least a hundred copies. That would secure the circulation of twenty thousand copies, place a true statement before the country, help the treasury, and get the worth of their money returned to them. With so many good objects, we look confidently to see the local Leagues and Liberals everywhere respond promptly.

The Report will be ready on or before October 20th. Address T. C LELAND, Sec. N. L. L.,
201 East 71st street, New York.

(Will all Liberal papers please copy?)

Appointments.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Liberal League, held in New York, Oct. 4th, O. A. Phelps of Kansas City, Mo., was appointed Chairman of the Executiv Committee, vice H. L. Green, resigned; and Carl Doerflinger, of Milwaukee, was appointed Chairman of the Finance Committee, vice R. C. Spencer, expelled.

T. C. LELAND, Sec. N. L. L.

THE Spiritualists will hold a camp-meeting at Wells, Vt., beginning October 9th and continuing eight days. Eminent speakers from the cities will be present. Railroads will carry passengers at reduced rates. Ample hotel accommodations at $1 per day. People coming by rail should get off at Granville, New York. PAUL DILLINGHAM, Sec.

Book Notice.

MEDICAL AND HYGIENIC HINTS ON THE PROTECTION OF THE SINGING VOICE. By Lenox Browne, F. R. C. S.

This excellent book, which has had a great sale in England, is now published here at the low price of 25 cents, and to meet a demand for an intelligent and suggestiv treatis on the management and improvement of the singing voice.

It contains the most valuable information concerning the vocal organs, and some admirable hints to vocalists as to its proper training and culture. The author givs plain, simple, and common sense directions of hygiene to those who wish to exercise the voice as a musical instrument. The work givs in a small space a wonderful amount of information on the anatomy and phsiology of the vocal organs, conveyed in a simple and unaffected style. It is not a mere technical essay, but will be found of real service by all engaged in the teaching or study of vocal music. For sale at this office.

CONTINENTAL, AGRICULTURAL, AND INDUSTRIAL CO-OPERATIV COLONY.—Introduction and Constitution.

This is an argument for and constitution and by-laws of a co-operativ colony founded on the 1st inst. Its aim is to secure homes away from the crowded centers of population, giv air to the shop, society to the field; to combine manufacturing and farming in such a way that one may alternately work in the fields or the shops; to produce collectivly to consume freely; organize labor for the good of all, by creating permanent and healthful employment to obviate workingmen from being periodically made unable to obtain work; to put a stop to imposition; to proclaim everybody's right to work; to conquer independence by legally obtaining possession of the soil; to establish just dealing in the direct exchange of our goods, and to establish solidarity.

As soon as $20,000 are pledged, the colony will buy land, either in Tennessee, Georgia, or North Carolina, and proceed to establish industries. For particulars in regard to the plan, the secretary of the colony can be addressed at 207 West 41st street, New York city.

THE Academy of Music was overcrowded on Monday night last to hear Constantin Sternberg, the talented young Russian pianist and composer, it being his first appearance before an American audience. To say that he justified the flattering reports which preceded him from Europe is but simple justice, and many who came to coldly criticise remained to heartily applaud. Mr. Sternberg will make a professional tour of this country under the management of Mr. C. C. Colby, who was at one time identified with the Liberal movement in the West.

(Continued from page 663.)

of Saturn with the Egyptian myth of Set, as the evil principle, we hav as the resultant a Satan who combines with the saturnine functions of the accuser and the tempter the qualities of a rival and evil god, and the mythic and symbolic, as well as the divine, elements are lost sight of; the myth in this form not only does not aid in the emancipation of the human spirit from matter, but it may become the most potent agency in the intimidation, subjection, and idiocy of the more timid and honest human spirits, by scaring them into abject submission to the more presumptuous.

It is quite true that, from the mere standpoint of the poet and the painter, if that were the whole of art, the transition from the Egyptian and Indian symbol to the classic god is accompanied by a development from the use of matter in mass without much form or any expression, and without those graces which may be wrought out of mere form, into the highest possible utilization of the magic qualities of form for purposes of expression. Especially in statuary does this element of form make dead marble reveal every wonderful story of motion, energy, grace, beauty, power, swiftness, and intensity—all, in short, of life that can be got out of the individual man or god, disassociated, or nearly so, from his fellows. It is also true, as Hegel finely shows, that, in the transition from statuary and architecture, both of which alike are "frozen music," to painting, art accomplishes still more complex effects without the use of material forms at all, but by presenting merely their counterfeit illusion to the eye, than it could accomplish by the unrestricted use of matter, in all its elements of mass, form, and numbers. This Hegel seizes upon as a transition from matter to spirit, because, he says, we here part with both dimension and form, and retain only the illusion produced by color. But it can only be correctly defined as a transition from the harmonies incident to a single object (as, for instance, a Venus Aphrodite, or Apollo Belvedere, which, after all, can not get above an idealized human form of man or woman) to the harmonies incident to the surrounding of one object by many, or grouping many around some central unity.

A crucifixion scene might, at great cost, be made the subject of statue or bas relief. But a battle of Waterloo or a view from Mount Lebanon could not be represented by a statue at any cost, The rise from statuary and architecture to painting, therefore, is a rise from the solitary to the associated, from the unique to the complex, from the homogeneous to the heterogeneous. It illustrates Spencer's law of evolution rather than Hegel's chimera of the emancipation of the spirit from matter.

Poetry excels painting by being a succession of pictures.

So when we pass from the painting to poetry it is in order to get away from the stationary scene to the shifting and panoramic succession of scenes. Each particular scene might be best presented on canvas, as each particular figure on the canvas might be most perfectly exhibited in the statue. But we are willing to dispense with details in order to grasp diversities. In the painting we dispense with matter, both in form and in mass, and accept it in illusion only, in order the better to grasp not merely the Napoleon but his army, his artillery, the bridge he is storming, and the Alps or Danube in the background. So in the poem we wave the glory of the canvas in order to grasp the succession of events, the cause, fact, and consequence; the villain, crime, and denouement; the sin, the sacrifice, and the atonement.

In the drama both and all are presented, and hence its excellence as the mightier stream into which all the charms of statuary, painting, and poetry flow together. In the opera and oratorio, to all these are added music. All illustrate a transition from unity to diversity, a change from the homogeneous to the heterogeneous, not from matter to spirit.

Although Hegel assumes that every attempt of the spirit to giv form to its idea through symbolic art or classic art is mythical and human, he no sooner steps upon the domain of Christian art than all is inspirational and divine. It is no longer men constructing their gods to explain mysteries in nature, but it is the creativ spirit constructing men to explain mysteries in the divine mind. He says: "In place of plastic polytheism, art now knows but one God, one spirit, one absolute independence, which as absolute knowing and determining abides in free unity with itself, and no longer falls asunder into those special characters and functions whose sole bond of unity was the constraint of a mysterious necessity. Absolute subjectivity or personality as such, however, would escape from art and be accessible only to abstract thought, if in order to be an actual subjectivity commensurate with its idea it did not pass into eternal existence, and again collect itself out of this reality into itself." This is the metaphysical mode of saying that a god, like a man, cannot sit down and adore himself forever, unless he gets up and does something worthy of his own admiration. One of the modes in which Hegel thought the absolute or self-knowing spirit passes into externality is in the creation of matter out of its own fiat, another is in those forms of laws which, acting through inorganic matter, are manifested in the material forces of nature, such as gravity, light, heat, cohesion, momentum, resistance, etc., another is life organization, sensation, passion, and thought; another is truth, which is the abstract statement of the facts and principles according to which the manifestations of the spirit occur, and another is beauty, which he says "is a mode of utterance of the true."

In short, Hegel seems to recognize no scientific law or historic process whereby the human intelligence, or its evolution, has first located a spirit or ghost behind every phenomenon, such as Tylor, describes as "Animism," which causes every phenomenon to be alive in the conception of the observer; then collects the leading ghosts, anima, or spirits into a pantheon, leaving the minor phenomena of life, without a god, to human control or natural causes, then lifts that particular god of the pantheon (Zeus or Jove) which represents the sun or the heavens into supreme control, as the soul rises to the conception that the heavens are greater and control the earth, and thus arrives at a monotheistic god like the Jehovah of the Hebrews. Then divests its monotheistic god of the successiv elements of sex, size, weight, form, passion, personality, limitations, finitude, and of the successiv functions of providing food, transmitting life, effecting salvation, controling history, and inaugurating creation, redemption, or retribution, until at last he ceases to be thinkable, or to hav anything to do whose need could justify his being. Hegel's metaphysics, therefore, are the attorney of German Protestantism, ingenious in accounting for that conception of the universe which came to him by inheritance. To adapt this inherited faith to his personal ease required some metaphysical improvements, new names here and there for old things, new rustic seats and arbors of philosophic jargon to protect from too intense a light, new and hard definitions to keep out climbing intruders, but no investigation of the title, no analysis of the sun's ray. These he simply enjoyed without questioning.

Now if it has already appeared, or at any future time shall appear historically, that the theology of Christianity is a plagiarism from older faiths; that in all the leading outlines of the life of Jesus as narrated in the gospels we recognize features compiled from antecedent narrativs; that in a word it is not an original at all, but a copy, it will follow that Hegel's theory that in Christian art the absolute spirit is expressing itself for any purpose, or in any way in which it did not express itself through the previous faiths, would be as illogical as to assert, after discovering that of two alleged "Raphaels" the one was the original and the other the copy, yet that Raphael revealed himself more perfectly in the copy than in the original.

Christna or Krishna presents a biography so identical with that of Jesus that the question was raised by Sir Wm. Jones, the profound legist and learned orientalist, a century ago, whether such coincidence could be accounted for consistently with the truth of the reputed histories of Jesus, without assuming that the facts were stolen from the gospels and interpointed in the Indian narrativ. One Dr. Bentley afterward endeavored to show by certain astronomical calculations that Christna's avatar occurred six hundred years after the appearance of Jesus. The equally learned and pious Maurice, however, in his "Indian Antiquities," shows that no interpolations can cover the difficulty. Mythological sculptures of Hindostan, of an age undoubtedly anterior to the Christian era, "relate to the events in the avatar" which are of interest to the Christian world owing to their subsequent use in the Jewish and Christian scriptures. A sculptured figure copied by Gonnerat from one of the oldest pagodas represents Christna dancing on the crushed head of the serpent, while the enraged reptil is seen biting his foot. Dr. Bentley afterward retracted his statement and calculated the period of Christna as at least five hundred and seventy-five years anterior to that of Jesus, though the concurrent testimony of others places it earlier. The effort to show that Christna followed Jesus, in date, was abandoned long before Hegel made the theory that the life of Jesus was an incarnation of the absolute the key-stone of his philosophy of art, and styled it the crowning effort of the spirit to reconcile its outer self, man, to its inner self, God. The vital question is whether the Christian world can concede Christna to hav preceded Christ by six hundred years without admitting the latter to be a copy and therefore a plagiarism, the gospel not a biography, but a compilation, not a revelation of God, but an evolution of man.

Christna or Krishna was born of Brahma (or God) and a woman. His pedigree corresponds to that of Hermes (Mercury) in Greek and Roman mythology, who was born of Jupiter and Maia. In the case of Hermes this myth sets forth the idea that fecundity or breeding power, which was the source of wealth when all wealth lay in flocks, was due to the joint agency of bright skies (Jupiter) and moisture or waters or rain (Maia). Sun and rain are the authors of fruitfulness and fecundity. It is of the essence of a myth, however, that it shall express more than one idea. The harmony of different myths or mystical meanings converging into one narrativ produces an effect like the chords in music.

The learned Dupuis, in his "L'Origin de Tous les Cultes," a work in twelve volumes, and the most exhaustiv in tracing the astronomical or Sabian origin of most myths, states as follows the theory of Christna's birth: "At midwinter, or that period which now corresponds to December in the northern hemisphere, the constellations were supposed to correspond to a goat and a ram, surrounded on all sides by stars, which the oriental tendency to impersonate ideas, and image forth all things into natural forms, called the stable or manger of the goat Capricornus. About this constellation, also, were several minor groups, the most noted of which were termed the Virgin, being a reappearance of the summer group, so called from another aspect; Bootes, or Joseph, the herdsman, and Spica, or the ear of corn, which the fanciful mind of the ancient astronomer placed in the hand of the virgin, to signify her special attribute of fruitfulness.

"In summer the constellation Virgo appears at the marriage feast of the year, when the sun turns the weak water of earth into wine; when the earth is in the plenitude of her power, and unites all seasons with her marriage anthem of gladness. Her reappearance in mid-winter, in the stable of the goat, occasioned her to be called the 'Virgin about to bring forth,' and hence the winter Virgo represents the mother of the young, newly-born sun, she who brings forth in the stable of Capricornus" (Virginis Parturiæ).

In the "Anacalypsis" of Godfrey Higgins a condensed description is given of the mode in which the sun, which is the physical god of the physical world, became to the ancients the visible symbol of a supposed invisible principle of deific good, or invisible person of God, who was born in human form of a virgin, and whose attributed life was the metaphorical version of the sun's annual path through the zodiacal circle.

He says: "Commencing with the midwinter constellation of Capricorn, the sun is first introduced on the gorgeous theater of the starry universe as a new-born babe, conceived through the maternity of a pure virgin (the constellation of the wintry Virgo), because, says Dupuis, 'The virgin and child represented the vigor of nature in peopling the earth, of which perpetual virginity, not destroyed by procreation, affords a poetical idea; also, it suggests the resurrection of the dead, annually renewed in the return of midwinter each year, an acceptable and universal type among the ancients of God's best gift to man of immortality unquenched by death.' . . . The same figure sculptured for the heathen among the Hindoos, Egyptians, Syrians, Assyrians, and others has since served for the Virgin Mary in our Christian religion.

"The heathen or ancient virgin forms a prominent figure among the constellations, and in their beautiful fables was presumed to bring forth a son annually, as the season (Christmas) came round when the sun, awakening from the death of winter, first began to rise toward the spring solstice. This feast of the ancients—celebrated even as early as among the Aryans at midwinter—has been transferred to the Christian religion and adapted to Jesus by the Catholic and Episcopal churches; the Scotch and some dissenting parties to the above churches refuse the application, and do not keep Christmas day, repeating the allegation of Celsus and other Greek philosophers that it was held sacred only as the birth of the sun, and that Christians betrayed the origin of their legend only too surely when they adopted that day as the birthday of their God."

Before tracing in other incidents of the legend of Christna the original, of which so much use was made in preparing the gospels, it should be remarked that even Christna, as an embodiment of the sun myth, is comparativly modern, being the eighth avatar of Vishnu, or of the saving element in Deity. The first avatar or incarnation was that of Buddha, who was the child of the virgin Maia by Brahma (the child of moisture by the sun) by an immaculate conception produced by a ray of light. This Buddha is not to be confounded with the Buddha Sakia of Mr. Arnold's poem, who followed Christna as the ninth avatar of Vishnu. A period of two thousand one hundred and sixty years intervened between the avatar of Buddha, the first black and curly-haired savior, and the birth of Christna. This interval is an astronomical one, being the period of time in which, by reason of the "precession of the equinoxes," i.e., of the fact that the sun every year crosses the vernal equinox fifty-two seconds of a degree later than on the preceding year, the sun falls back on the plane of the ecliptic, or causes the stars through which his pathway lies to make an apparent advance, so that the sun receded out of the constellation Taurus (the bull) into the constellation Aries (the ram).

M. Creuzer, in "Religions de l'Antiquité," volume 1, says: "The name and character of Buddha are purely astronomical. His birth through the virgin Maia has direct reference to the sun's annual birth in the constellation of that name at midwinter. His royal descent, life, sufferings, miracles, death, and resurrection are all derived from the solar journey through the constellations of the zodiac."

Godfrey Higgins (Anacalypsis, book 5) says: "Boodha and Christna were only renewed incarnations of the same Being, and that Being the solar power, or a principle symbolized by the sun; Buddha being the name of the sun in Taurus, the bull, and Christna being the same solar power, when, by the precession of the equinoxes, the sun receded into the sign of Aries, the ram. . . . The earliest Buddhists were evidently worshipers of the sun in Taurus. They were the builders of the temple of Juggernaut, in front of which the bull projects, and were expelled from lower India, when, by the change of the signs from Taurus to Aries, the religion of Christna eclipsed that of Buddha."

It is impossible not to see in this incarnation of Vishnu; the life principle in Buddha, or the bull, the same sun myth which was worshiped in Egypt under the name of Osiris, who, like Vishnu, represented the procreativ or vivifying principle, whose soul transmigrated every twenty-five years into the body of a bull, which, after being worshiped for that period, was drowned in the sacred wells and a new bull found by certain signs and consecrated as "Apis." This worship of the bull appears in the Old Testament as an idolatry of Bel, Belus, Bael, Bael-peor, and of the golden calf, all of which were materialized offshoots of the more simple worship of Buddha, as the Lord of heaven, or the sun in the "bull." Whoever wrote the so-called books of Moses, which probably date in or after the period of David, intended to picture the struggle for the substitution of the vivific principle in the lamb (Aries) in place of the older and more idolatrous worship of the bull (or calf) as a contest of pure religion against idolatry, which is the universal attitude assumed by a new faith toward an old.

Mithra, the Persian form of the sun-god, was born in a grotto; Bacchus, or Iacchus, the Greek form, in a cavern; Jupiter, the Roman form of the same myth, in a cave; Christ, the Sun of Righteousness, in a stable; the New Zealanders represent the sun itself as emerging every morning from his cave.

Christna as soon as born was saluted with a chorus of angels. Regarding Christna as the sun-god, this would be a figurativ mode of describing the joyous songs with which the rising sun is welcomed by those winged songsters, the birds. Luke ii, 13, 14, copies the Christna story and applies it to Jesus. The other evangelists omit it.

The period assigned by the Christian church for the birth of Jesus, December 25th, is the same assigned by the Persians to Mithra, by the Greeks to Bacchus, by the Hindoos to Buddha and Christna, the annual birthday of the sun in the constellation Virgo. Christna was cradled among the shepherds. By an awkward anachronism, "Shepherds watched their flocks by night" when Jesus was born, though this in Judea could not hav occurred in midwinter. The astrological meaning of this feature of the myth is that the constellation Bootes, the herdsman, is in close relation to the wintry virgin. Soon after Christna's birth he is carried away by night to a remote place, for fear of a tyrant who had ordered all children to be slain, because it had been foretold that a child then about to be born would destroy him. This story is exactly copied by Matthew (chapter ii).

The decree that "all the world should be taxed," which is made the reason why Jesus is said to hav been born in Bethlehem instead of at Nazareth, was not passed until Jesus was nine years old, unless we accept the date of his birth from the Gospel of the Infancy. Had it been passed prior to his birth, it would not hav caused Joseph to go to Bethlehem, for the double reason, cited by Renan, that Jesus was not of the family of David, and, had he been, one thousand years had intervened since his ancestors dwelt at Bethlehem. So the journey into Egypt could not hav been made at his birth to avoid his being slain, since Herod issued no such decree, and the story probably arose out of the fact stated in the Talmud (Wise, Hist. Heb., p. 259), that Jesus spent part of his youth in Egypt, which, with the desire to follow the Christna story, led to the narration in Matthew ii, that he was taken away by night into Egypt to avoid being slain. Moreover, a Roman procurator like Herod, seventy five years old, would hav had neither the motiv nor power alleged to order a slaughter of babes. The astronomical source of this myth, as applied to Christna, is that the months of January and February are a struggle between the life and light on the one hand, as represented by the sun, and the death and darkness on the other, as represented by the clouds, tempests, and cold of winter, for the mastery. The death principle is symbolized by Aquarius, the water bearer, who pours out his wrath upon the earth, threatening to smite all its germs of life. Pisces (the fishes) represents the young children, innocents, germs, which the wintry tyrant is seeking to slay. In the Greek fancy, by a kind of reverse myth, Niobe (the snow) weeps for her children, slain by the darts of Apollo (the sun) and Artemis (the moon). A celebrated cave of Elephanta, in India, contains immense sculptures, far older than the Christian era, commemorating the flight of the virgin and her child to escape the slaughter of the innocents by Cansa, who is the Indian Herod. Astronomically the sun is concealed under clouds, but is guarded by the constellations Virgo and Bootes (Mary and Joseph).

Jesus, like Christna, is claimed as of royal descent, but the descent is traced by both Matthew and Luke through Joseph, to whom Jesus was in no way related, and the names between David and Joseph in the pedigree given by Matthew bear no resemblance to those given by Luke. Christna's face, as soon as born, illuminated the dungeon and lighted up the face of his mother. The same is told of Jesus in the Gospel of the Infancy, which, though now deemed apocryphal, is in fact older and more authentic than many of the New Testament writings. Probably the astrological sense of this passage is that the sun, rising as it does out of the sea and the clouds, makes glorious its mother, Maia, the divine goddess of moisture, by bathing both clouds and sea and every drop of dew in glory.

Christna spoke also as soon as he was born, and comforted his mother. In the Gospel of the Infancy the same fact is told of Jesus. Christna had a forerunner, Ram, who helped to purify the worst of monsters and demons. Jesus had a forerunner in John, whose name is mystical in a triple sense, as expressiv of the three related ideas of the feminin principle in nature, of a dove, and of the moon. A prophet pronounced Christna a celestial being. So did the wise men of the East and John pronounce Jesus, the dove meanwhile descending on him. Christna, like Jesus, cured a leper. A woman poured on his head a box of ointment. Christna washed the feet of the Brahmans; Jesus washed those of his disciples. Christna was carried to Matthura (Mattes), on the river Jumma, where many of his miracles were performed, and at which to this day he is held in higher veneration than in any other place. As if to place beyond doubt the proof that the narrativs of Christna were in the hands of the compilers of the gospels, the Arabic edition of the Gospel of the Infancy of Jesus borrows these very Hindoo names, and records that the infant Jesus resided at Matthura (Mattes) during his absence from Judea and until Herod died. At this place Jesus is reported to hav wrought many miracles, and among others to hav produced in that arid region a fountain of fresh water, the only one in Egypt. Thus we hav two saviors, one Christna and the other Christ, both fleeing from the same kind of a decree, both brought to the same spot, both performing there the same miracles, save that in the case of Christna of India the place referred to and the river both exist in India under the names given in the narrativ, whereas in Egypt, where these same things are attributed to Jesus, neither the place nor the river exists. When the state of Kansas, in adopting the constitution of the state of Missouri, forgot to change the boundaries, the case of plagiarism was thought to be clearly made out. And yet this Gospel of the Infancy was received as authentic by certain sects of Christians in the second century, and its relations were credited by Eusebius, Athanasius, Epiphanius, Chrysostom, etc. In this gospel Jesus is represented as turning certain of his companions into sheep, and at the request of their parents restoring them to their proper form, a narrativ taken from the Hindoo miracles of Christna. So in the Gospel of the Infancy Jesus has an adventure with a serpent which poisons one of his companions. Christna had done the same. In the "Infancy" Jesus astonishes his tutor Zaccheus with his learning. Christna had done the same. In the canonical gospels this story is modified by making Jesus astonish the "doctors" without specifying whom. Christna's followers declared him king. So did those of Jesus, though in a manner so halting and inconsistent as to compel mistrust.

Buddha was called an artificer, Jesus a carpenter. Christna asserted that he was the lord of all created things, but became evident by his own power, and that as often as there is a decline of virtue and an insurrection of vice and injustice in the world he mads himself evident. Jesus said that because of sin he came into the world. Christna declared that he appeared from age to age, Jesus once for all. Christna said, "Those who adore me devoutly are in me and I in them." Jesus prayed that as "Thou, Father, art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." Christna said: "He who has sinned, if he adore me only, is reputed virtuous. Hav faith in me. No one who worships me can perish." The reiteration of this doctrin of faith in Jesus as a personal savior constitutes the gospel. The Hindoos assumed as the basis of Christna's mission the same need of salvation, arising out of the same facts, viz., the placing of the first parents in a garden of Eden; the disobedience and fall of man; the former destruction of the earth by flood, and its prospectiv destruction by fire; the soul's immortality; a state of future rewards and punishments, and the necessity of the incarnation of deity in Godmen. This latter doctrin they held in an elaborate form, of which the teaching of Jesus is but a fragmentary relic. They taught that incarnations of the deity in man were due at certain astronomical intervals of about six hundred years. As these intervals, however, arose out of calculations too complex for so ignorant a people as the Jews to retain, they forgot this feature of Christnaism, and so far as they believed in any incarnations were content with one.

The most noted miracles which occurred to Jesus were old in the history of other nations—of India, Persia, and Egypt. The miracles of the transformation of five loaves and two fishes into food sufficient to feed many thousands, through the agency of Christ, typifies the fructifying power of the midsummer sun, which in the harvests of August and September converts into an abundance the five ears of corn which were planted under the wintry skies of February. The two fishes are the ancient sign of Pisces, or February, the waterman, in conjunction with whose early and latter rains the miracle is wrought. The same mystery was worshiped in the rites of Eleusis. The marriage supper at Cana, in Galilee, in which Christ turns the water into wine, is a repetition, under a new dress, of the marriage festival of the seasons, when the union of the miracle-working sun with the passiv feminin forces of nature, more particularly that of moisture, resulted in the grape harvest, with its rich burden of intoxicating delights. Finally Christna raised the dead, was crucified, descended into hell, and again ascended into heaven. Osiris, in Egypt, who is also an impersonation of the sun, had the same experience.

These myths reveal no scientific truth. In the light of a history thus briefly sketched, we find Christianity to be, not as Hegel assumes, the effort of the absolute to reveal itself to the finite, or of God in his subjectivity and without limitations to make himself known to God in his objectivity and surrounded by all the limitations which pertain to him as incarnated in man, and chiefly in the divine man, Jesus. All this would be very pretty as a consummate metaphysical theory were it not that each particular link in the chain of supposed facts, every brick in the grand edifice of assumed truth, is borrowed and derived from not merely human, but pagan, and not merely pagan, but poetic sources, so that he that follows the thread long enough traces the miracle everywhere into the myth, and he who analyzes the myth dissolves it into a mere effort to tickle the fancy or the vanity of mankind by some ingenious but unscientific statement of a phenomenon of nature.

If art were, as Hegel defines it, the vehicle for the conveyance of religion, it would be supremely important to know what religion is. Hegel assumes it to be the effort of an independent spirit to free itself from matter so as to giv expression to its thought.

All theology is bastard science. History, however, proves theology to be the persistent efforts of a bastard science to account for the phenomena of nature by the exercise of the imagination only. It is such an offspring as the hot fancy, overcome by a few imposing phenomena, would beget, if it must hav issue, without waiting until universal phenomena are married to pure reason. It first produces out of the sun and the savage the Manabozho, or sun-catcher of the Ojibwas, which after many improvements extending through many centuries and languages culminates in the Jonah, who is but an outward type of the Christ. Meanwhile it is developing in other nations a sun-god more subtle than Manabozho, who represented merely the sun's movements or mathematics. This improved type represented the sun as the generativ fructifying principle—the Vishnu, the Osiris, the Mithra, the Zeus, and other masculin gods of the conquering races, whose emblems were the bull, the eagle, the hawk, and the lion. But still in advance upon these comes the class of myths in which not the generation but the regeneration, not the initiation of life, but its resurrection out of death, is worshiped—as, rudely, in the Hindoo Siva, in the Greek Bacchus and Ceres, in the Egyptian Isis, again in the Hindoo Christna, and finally in Jesus Christ, in whom blend the conceptions of the Egyptian female Isis, with the Hindoo male Christna.

In all this course of development of the human mind there is a continual integration or assimilation of new facts, a rejection of old materials when they hav performed their work, and a growth up to and into a more heterogeneous and complex system of accounting for the phenomena of nature, and this heterogeneity and complexity men call spirituality. It is a constant approach toward pure philosophy, but irresistibly leading to a final consummation in the sublime orphanage of Atheism. When at last the gods all dissolve, the mind discerns that it is alone in the universe, that it has reached the end and explanation of all things, it no longer desires retribution upon others, or salvation for itself, but looks upon nature and man as a country which it has visited, suffered, and enjoyed throughout; upon mythology and theology as clouds that hav vanished; upon life as a day of labor, that interests and wearies, and upon death as the welcome close of a delightful entertainment, which would pall if it were prolonged, to one who has enjoyed, but which may still interest the myriads to be born. Whatever life may come after death, the universe is a conspiracy to conceal its true nature. It has been shown that the story of the divine incarnation, as for us it culminates in Jesus, is a myth of gradual historic and human growth, whose entire evolution, as an idea, extends over a period of several thousand years, and which is certainly as allegorical and poetic in its origin as the myths of Jonah, of Proserpine, or Hercules. It seems natural, therefore, to assume that Hegel, in treating of this myth as historic fact, and as the crowning fact wherein art, which had previously fed upon man-made fictions, now builds upon eternal and absolute verity, must hav distorted his philosophy of art itself by subordinating it to an idolatrous superstition.

The test as to whether Hegel had mistaken a temporary phase of superstition for an eternal verity of the universe might in part be found in the question whether the art representations of the so-called sublime epoch, having their topics in the supposed facts of Christian theology, are temporary or immortal in the standards of taste and beauty to which they conform. In the pictures of the Madonna and her child there is a certain immortality, but it is that of the human and not of the theological side of the idea. Motherhood and childhood are all that the picture really represents. These are immortal. Art has never attempted to represent the divine fatherhood of Jesus, or his immaculate conception, or the interview of the Holy Ghost with the virgin. So art represents only the human, not the divine part of the crucifixion of Jesus. The fact that his crucifixion redeems others from their guilt is not and can not be attempted by art; nor is his power to forgiv sins. Everywhere art utterly and inflexibly refuses to set forth what Hegel speaks of as the sublime in Christianity, i. e., its dogmas. The painting of the last judgment is a painting of physical suffering merely, but not of a suffering produced by want of faith in Jesus. Therefore it lacks the theological element. In the poems of Dante and Milton, as well as the paintings of Corregio and Raphael, all that is saved of the Christian element is its heathenism, its physical side. The torment is produced by flame, not by unbelief or heterodoxy. But everywhere these subjects hav ceased to be art as men's minds hav grown away from the theology on which they depended. Who now admires the last judgment except as a monstrosity of paganism; something that is to be relegated along with the rack and thumbscrew to the historic owls and bats who watch over the darkness of the middle ages? What were once called "Christian" works of art, whether in the line of poems, paintings, sculpture, or architecture, hav ceased to be produced, purchased, or admired; they are becoming like the classic gods, mere subjects for antiquarian research.

The "sublime" period of art has passed away already, and what is called the realistic epoch succeeds. At least an idealism which is free from dogma now contends with realism for supremacy. Landscape art is a form of realism. Victor Hugo's "Toilers of the Sea," and "Les Miserables" combine idealism with realism in romantic art. Hood's "Song of the Shirt," and Mrs. Browning's "Cry of the Children" are undogmatic exhibitions of real suffering. Zenobia, Eve, and the Greek Slave show that modern art emancipated wholly from theological dogma is for the first time becoming true art. Nobody now perceives any emotional power in Milton's or Dante's imagery. Why? Because the modern scientific taste regards the imagery itself as false to fact, to history, and to nature. But an ass with a wounded hoof, or a dog with a dead master, may form a painting over which millions will weep, because of its realism. From Protestant households the crucified Jesus as a work of art is excluded. A bastard chromo representing a modern blonde clinging to a cross of stone amidst the sea, typifies the sure and remorseless subsidence of struggling Christian faith beneath an ocean, not of doubt but of historic and scientific disproof, which is sure to submerge it instantly.

All this realism in art corresponds accurately to the growth of positivism in philosophy. The two are different manifestations of the same mental growth.

As Hegel's analysis of art fails to embrace its beginning, so it fails to continue to its close. Already the sublime or "Christian" in art has yielded to the realistic, scientific, or positiv; and most of the so-called sublime works of art now excite disgust and revolt. The "spirit" which Hegel thought the source of all art-effort has been analyzed into one of art's products, viz., the etherealized result of the unscientific efforts of the human mind to assign a "personal" cause to phenomena. Such an analysis necessarily preceded the idea that the relation of cause and effect applied only to the fact of one phenemenon producing another, and not to the assumption of all phenomena being produced by a cause that is not itself a phenomenon. In the latter sense no cause of anything is capable of being known or thought of. Every element in our conception of the idea must destroy some other element essential to its quality.

Grateful to Hegel, therefore, for his many suggestiv criticisms, and for outlines that giv promis of a future philosophy of art, yet to be elaborated on a broader basis than that on which he wrought, we lay down his work with the final verdict that it is the religion, not the philosophy, of art that he has conceived. Art must be so broadly defined as to include in its processes the graceful curving of a swallow's wing in flight, and the impartial sifting of a theology that has its sources in Sabianism, in astrology, and in the stars. In the light of this final analysis an arc of beauty and of hope still spans the clouds of the darkest superstition. History's descending sun lights them into flame with its departing glory. The lightnings which blazed and the thunders which rolled through them were but sparks and snaps of an electric current. But now scientific observation is daily struggling to uncoil from its mystical connection with this electric current the verities of spirit and the possibilities of another life. All faiths, sciences, and histories become steps in the evolution of art, and all life, human or celestial, culminates in the three superb arts which introduce us to the good, the beautiful, and the true. These must be love, taste, and logic. It is superb to study the art of kindness. But in doing so we discover that the highest element in kindness is criticism, though, to the heart that loves unwisely, criticism seems but slander; and out of the truest and kindest criticism rises the final art, logic, the demonstration of exact truth, an art which Hegel seems to hav thought beyond the reach of art.

Letters from Friends.

YREKA, CAL., Sept. 26, 1880.

MR. EDITOR: Some of your many intelligent readers might be tolerably entertained while perusing the following: On the fourth day of last February, being on the mountain slopes, my attention was drawn to a lot of birds flying around a dead pine tree, uttering fierce, threatening screams at every turn of the wing. I repaired to the spot to ascertain the cause. When in view I beheld a large grey mountain squirrel on the tree, which the birds were evidently trying to drive away. I now saw that the bark of the tree was literally filled with small holes, picked therein with the bills of those birds, and every one made just the size and shape to hold an acorn, many of which were not yet emptied of their contents. These acorns the squirrel was after, and the birds were intent on seeing that he didn't get them. Hence the muss.

I paused awhile to witness the contention, and was joyed to see the birds (black woodpeckers) fly circling around and over him, fitting down and giving him a peck with their long sharp bills every time they passed him, till the squirrel, growing tired of it, betook himself to a limb of the tree which he selected. The limb lay nearly horizontal, and on this limb he laid himself at full length, with his long bushy tail, with hairs erect, thrown over his back, the end of it reaching to his head and covering it, thus making his tail a substitute for the birds to peck, instead of his body, head, and eyes.

I watched the unsuccessful warfare of the birds for several minutes, and then left, hoping, however, that the birds had another set in reserve to take their places when they tired, that they could thus save their food, and make him retreat without an acorn. This squirrel reminded me of our own great moneyed powers robbing men, women, and children of their bread. T. M. KELLEY.

NORDHOFF, CAL., Sept. 12, 1880.

MR EDITOR: Inasmuch as you seem disposed to allow all sides a hearing on political matters, as well as others pertaining to human welfare, I would like to ventilate my own ideas as regards the political situation. As to the financial and labor questions, I indorse the principles that the government should control the currency or medium of exchange. Those who contend that the Constitution debars the government from issuing paper money, and at the same time believe that Congress has power to delegate the right to a syndicate of bankers, in my opinion, are fit subjects for a lunatic asylum.

As regards the religious and social questions, I am, heart and hand, with the Liberal League movement, though not belonging to any League. Notwithstanding I am in sympathy with the Greenback Labor party, and also with the Liberal League movement, I think the Greenbackers hav made a mistake in making nominations, and I think the Liberals will make a mistake should they either make nominations of their own, or join the Greenback party. I hav kept a careful watch on the movements of all parties for the last fifty years, without ever owning stock in any, and I find it an invariable rule that all the worst elements in the country drift into the dominant party. Probably there is not one of the old Abolition guard who know that your humble servant ever had an existence, yet I knew all the old Abolition guard, including the president of the National Liberal League, when the bloodhounds of ecclesiasticism were denouncing them as Infidels, and instigating their ignorant dupes to howl them down, pelt them with rotten eggs, and drag them through the streets with ropes around their necks for daring to speak against that "divine God-ordained institution," slavery, and notwithstanding the Republican party grew out of the old Abolition party, you will find but few, if any, of the old guard remaining in it, but instead you will find their places filled by the very men who were the loudest in denouncing them as Infidels and Atheists.

The Republican party has also drawn the largest portion of vice and corruption out of the old Democratic organization. Now, I understand very well that a man with neither a financial nor political standing need not expect his voice to hav any weight, nevertheless I will volunteer the advice to both Liberals and Greenbackers to vote for Hancock for President, and as to Congressmen, drop all party affiliations and elect the men with the most Liberal proclivities. Those who hav examined critically the report of the Cincinnati convention must hav noticed that Hancock was not, in fact, the nominee of the convention proper, but the nominee of the galleries. From all I hav been able to gather from his record I firmly believe that if Hancock is elected he will try his best to administer the government on the Jefferson-Paine principles.

As a matter of course the monopolies and ring thieves, backed by the Jesuits, both Protestant and Catholic, will try their level best to get control of the government which, of course, they will do should the honest men of the country stand aloof, or, still worse, put themselvs in hostil array against him.

I will venture a prophecy that if through the spirit of faction that concentrated essence of political fraud and venality should be hoisted to the presidential chair, with a majority in both houses of Congress to back him, the government will never be restored to constitutional, republican principles, except through a sea of blood. Those are my conclusions. There are but two chances in the coming contest. Garfield, backed by all the monopolies and frauds, with the ecclesiastical fraud on top, the ultimate outcome, anarchy, or Hancock with the chances rather in favor than otherwise, of a restoration of the government to original principles without any shock to law and order. Up to within a few days I had thought I would not take the trouble to vote, not having voted since 1868, when I cast a vote for Grant, whose administration so demoralized me that I thought I never would cast another ballot; but of late I hav been reading a Christian newspaper which, in its advocacy of Garfield, is urging all the little factions of the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus to unite in one solid phalanx, each with their distinctiv little banner raised aloft, in order to utterly destroy their opponents. It has stirred up my old blood to well-nigh boiling heat, and it would take but little more of that kind of medicin to send me out stumping for Hancock.

Yours truly, FRED. ROBINSON.

POTTSVILLE, PA. Oct 7, 1880

EDITOR OF THE TRUTH SEEKER. Dear Sir: I was much amused in the perusal of an article and an editorial reply thereto published in THE TRUTH SEEKER of Saturday, September 25th last, entitled, "Some Bible Facts." The matter discussed related to the servitude of the children of Israel in Egypt. As all matters connected with the early history of God's chosen people are involved in miracle, it would be a work of mere folly to try to measure any one incident in their national career by the standard of rational history. Accuracy of detail is seldom consistent with faith. All believers concede that the more improbable a biblical event may appear, the more conclusiv the evidence of the God's intervention in bringing it about. The Egyptian sojourn of the Jews is in itself a miracle. The startling multiplicity of their numbers under such depressing conditions, and in so brief a period, sets at defiance all theories of population based on human experience. Notwithstanding the king's command to the Jewish midwives to destroy all the male offspring of Jewish mothers, those very mothers whom the edict touched most directly, seemed, in consequence of it, to hav become more prolific in the production of male children than before its promulgation. And notwithstanding that God commands subjects to be obedient to their rulers, yet himself appears to hav built houses for those deceitful midwives in reward for their disloyalty to the ruling sovereign. Defeated in his first command, the king next orders his own officers to destroy all Jewish male children born within their respectiv jurisdictions by casting them into the river. It would be a fair inference to believe that a large number of the infants of the proscribed race had perished under this cruel decree. But dare we so conclude in face of the written record? Contrary to every rule of cause and effect these extreme measures of the king resulted in doubling and trebling the dangerous class they were intended to extirpate. Thus biblical history seems to work inversely to that which the Christian world calls profane. If the Jews, in Pharaoh's reign exceeded in number and might the nativ Egyptians, as we are told in Exodus i, 9, then the most astounding of all miracles is that God should hav led so vast a people beyond the Red Sea to perish in a barren desert instead of making them masters of a country in which they already constituted a majority of the population. I will pass the question of the magnitude, wealth, and power of the Egyptian kingdom at the period indicated. The record implies a sovereign with fewer subjects than those led by the Jewish emancipation out of the kingdom; and if we consider further that this meager nation had been shockingly reduced still more by famin, frogs, hail, pestilence, and the final death harvest reaped in the household of every Egyptian father in which was smitten the first-born, we may wonder whence was derived that grand host of warriors which perished so ignobly in the Red Sea.

JACOB A. HAZEN.

NEW BLOOMFIELD, MO., Oct. 4, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: A few more such Nova Scotian fits (Fitz) and a few more such Bible facts as you had last week will, I fear, knock the bottom out of the great plans of Liberal Freethought. Mr. Fitz asserts that the Israelites to the number of seventy emigrated to the land of Goshen and there increased to a great multitude, and were driven out in great haste under the leadership of Moses, and crossed the Red Sea, but the Egyptians were drowned; then he says, "We can no more deny these facts than the landing of our Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth Rock on Dec. 21, 1620." Can Mr Fitz furnish authentic history, giving day and date of the Israelites emigrating to Egypt, and when they left, when and where they crossed the Red Sea? Does any one dispute the landing of our Pilgrim Fathers? Is there any unreasonable stories told or on record about their landing? Do we claim that they were brought over the sea by supernatural agency, or that the sea opened and they came across on dry land? Does Mr. Fitz claim that because there is a race of people called Jews, now in existence, it proves their traditions and superstitions true? If so, then every nation or race of people upon the earth can claim that their traditions are true by the same argument.

Does our friend believe the Bible account of the children of Israel and Pharaoh? Would a just and merciful God choose Moses, a man whose hands were dyed with his fellow-man's blood, to be the leader of his chosen people? Would a just and merciful God send plagues of lice, flees, frogs, hail, and then wind up by slaying all the first-born of both man and beast in Egypt just because Pharaoh would not do that he would not let him do, for God said, "But Pharaoh shall not hearken unto you" (Ex. vii, 4)? What would we think of a God, man, or devil that would hav killed all the first-born in the United States just because Mr. Hayes would not pardon Mr. Bennett out of prison? Does any one believe that the Israelites would forget their God in three days after they had seen all these wonderful works, and begin to murmur. Does it look reasonable that they took the jewelry they had stolen from the Egyptians and made a calf and worshiped it within forty days? Did God forget his promis to Abraham, Isaac, & Co., and Moses hav to remind him of it, or he would hav slain the children of Israel in his anger? Can a just, omnipotent, and all-powerful God get angry or jealous and repent? If he does he cannot be happy. If it looks foolish for superstitious man to bow down to an idol, how does it look in a God that gets jealous of it? Did the children hav to liv forty years on quails and manna, then where did they get so many cattle and sheep to sacrifice to their God? It must hav taken thousands. And did God get angry because they asked for a little meat to grease their throats? Would a kind father get angry because his children asked for a piece of meat when he had plenty? Would a merciful God say to his people, "When thou goest into the country that I gave you, thou shalt utterly destroy every living thing; thou shalt not make any covenant with the people, neither shall you hav mercy or pity them?" And when his men had captured a few women and children, would he command them to "kill every male among the little ones and every woman that hath known man, but all the women-children keep for yourselvs" (Num. xxi, 17, 18)? Would a just God suffer himself or his son to be killed just to satisfy his own anger?

That Christ, if he ever lived, was a philosopher and reformer I will admit. He taught his people to shun the ignorant superstitions of the Jews, and when he was dead many centuries bigoted priests and bishops found that Freethought was leading the people from under their influence. They then fell upon the plan of mixing the teaching of Christ with the traditions of the Jews, so as to bind the mind of men to be humbugged by them just as they are now trying to blackguard the book of nature with their Bible. It won't be long till it will be the Old and New Testament, and the book of nature. So the Freethinkers had better take Time by the eyebrows and get up a Freethinker's Bible.

Mr. Fitz is right when he says that Catholics hav burned Protestants and Protestants hav returned the compliment with interest whenever a chance occurred. And since they hav been deprived of this great Christian pleasure they hav transferred their fires to hell, and with their infernal instruments of torture created an imaginary devil. With these they still hope to scare men and force them to think as they think and do as they do. Of what use is a man to society if he has to be scared with the devil and hell to make him be a peaceful neighbor.

Mr. Editor, I hav made this letter longer than I intended to, and am not quite through yet, but as I am just inimy A B C's in Freethought, I hope you will excuse my tediousness. Here is a plan I hav thought of for circulating THE TRUTH SEEKER; that is, every week when I hav read it through to mail it to some one else, each week sending to a different person. In this way, if every subscriber would do the same with his fifty-two papers a year, you would soon hav a large list. It was some time before I could make up my mind to do this, for I want THE TRUTH SEEKER to make a book of, but if I can be the means of saving one of my fellow-men from a slavery of the mind, I can readily make the sacrifice. Yours most truly, RIP VAN WINKLE.

BAXTER SPRINGS, KAN., Sept. 30, 1880.

DEAR TRUTH SEEKER: Any one who can be satisfied with the Republican party is an illustration of a perverted human nature most unaccountable to me. In the first place, it never was the party of the people nor for the people; it never was an Abolition, not even a reform party. It only abolished slavery because it had to at the point of the bayonet, and kept the Fugitiv Slave law enforced for nearly two years after the rebellion broke out. When they were forced by a military necessity, instead of a moral necessity, to abolish slavery by proclamation, it was more like a bribe held out to slaveholders for ninety days to lay down their arms and return to the Union, where they could enjoy the delectable institution of slavery for all time to come. When they enfranchised the freedmen they insulted our wives, sisters, and mothers who pay taxes by allowing the whole combined force of ignorance and squalor to enact laws oppressiv to their welfare.

Although one of the fathers of the Republican party was compelled to abandon it, many of us belonging to the radical wing of the party clung to it in hope they would do something for the people; but, alas, vain was our hope for the consummation!

Grantites held the situation, and I will ask, in the name of humanity, what good act hav the Republicans in power ever done for the people? Absolutely nothing. All their legislation was class and against the people. Notwithstanding the great barriers they hav thrown in the way of progression, the nation has prospered in spite of this presumptuous party.

Now, how are we to vote under these trying circumstances? Shall we vote the Democratic or Greenback ticket? Is there a possible hope of drawing enough votes from the two old parties to make the new one successful? I think not, because the new one is too much of a one-idea party. I do not like the name Greenback for perpetuation. We might as well take the name Bluebelly. Now the term Democracy, in its broad significance, means everything that is good and honorable between man and man. It is the government of all over each, and of each over all. It is the right of doing as we would be done by.

If a corrupt class of politicians hav stolen the livery of heaven to serve the devil in, we want to storm their fort and purge out the corruptions. We hav all heard the fable of Truth and Falsehood bathing, when Falsehood, not being particular about the cleanliness of his body, got out of the bath and put on Truth's clothes; and poor Truth, although clean, had to ever afterwards go naked. We propose to return Truth his clothes by voting the Democratic ticket, and expose the ugly nakedness of Falsehood by depriving the Republican corruptionists of their sheep's clothing, that their wolfishness may be exposed.

Hence let us never giv up the ship of Democracy to pirates. This is called a Democratic Republican form of government, and let us be true to that name. One is the theory while the other is the practice. Let us, then, vote Democracy and practice Republicanism, not in name, but in truth and sincerity, which will conduct us to the end, the great desideratum of human existence—happiness of the whole race. Very respectfully yours,

J. D. MCCLURE.

EXIRA, IOWA, Sept. 30, 1880.

D. M. BENNETT, Dear Sir: I send herewith $3, to pay you what I owe you on my paper. I expect to take Liberal papers as long as I am able to pay for them, and I expect to find in them many things I do not enjoy and many things I do enjoy; at least I find it so with yours.

I am an enemy to superstition, and I do not believe that I hav one particle of it in my make-up. I hate the idea of teaching mythology for truth, whether it be found in the literature of the Egyptians, the Greeks, the Romans, the Jews, the Christians, the Mohammedans, the Mormons, or the hundreds of other places or people where such literature is found. I am willing and anxious to strike hands with any man or organization of men and work shoulder to shoulder with them, whose purpose it is to destroy the delusions that dark and dire superstition and blinded ignorance hav, and are now enveloping, the mind of man in; but I am decidedly opposed to the course THE TRUTH SEEKER is taking in regard to the political parties and the political issues. The advice its editor is giving Liberals to vote for Hancock and the Democratic ticket the editor must certainly know cannot be complied with by a majority of those who would like to see your paper and the Liberal cause prosper, if the Liberal strength is as generally in the Republican party as it is in this locality.

Why, Mr. Editor, the Democratic party is the fossil party in American politics, and to its petrified carcass hangs the Pandora of all political and religious evils. It championed the cause of human slavery, and quoted the barbarous laws of Moses as infallible proof of its justness; it opposes the general diffusion of knowledge, and prefers ignorance and darkness to knowledge and light; it has no word of encouragement for the cause of woman; it has no resolution to offer for the cause of prohibition and the good work of temperance; it lends its aid to the bulldozer, the negro killer, the ballot-box stuffer, and has a passage of the sacred scriptures to justify its every act of violence.

We certainly can hope for nothing if we place Democracy at the helm of state. In all the states where Democracy is the most absolute, where Republicans hav never held the reins, a free school is not known. Democracy champions mental and physical slavery, while Republicanism champions light, knowledge, and liberty. Where Democracy is the strongest, Freethought and Liberalism are the weakest, and Liberal Leagues are unknown. But where Republicans count their majorities by the tens of thousands, as in Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, and Kansas, Liberal Leagues are most numerous and Liberal men are most energetic. There are religious bigots in both parties, and the only question for us to decide before casting our votes is which party is the most progressiv, taking their records and the tendencies of their doctrins into consideration.

If Hancock is elected, every Catholic bishop, every priest, every fossil monk in his dreary convent, and the old Pope himself, will rejoice with unspeakable joy. Put the administration of the government of this country into the hands of Hancock and you are giving power to a man too inconsistent to practice the religion he professes to believe or too devoid of principle to denounce a religion that he will not or cannot practice.

Not so with Mr. Garfield. He has the honor and consistency to practice what he professes and defend by his every action the faith he has in his religion. From him, therefore we can certainly hope for more charity, more justice for our adverse opinions on unknowable questions, than from Hancock, backed and spurred on against us, as he will be, by the wealth of the solid Catholic influence, and the no less unrelenting bigots of a solid South. I tell you, Mr. Editor, with due deference for the opinions of Messrs. Leland, Wakeman & Co., our cause is safer in the hands of progressiv, intelligent Republicans than it is in the hands of fossil Democracy, whipped into the old ruts by such backing. If our cause is so much safer with Democrats than it is with Republicans, why don't they manifest their sense of justice toward us and their charity for those who honestly differ with them on unknowable questions, by repealing the laws in those states where they hav absolute control, which would debar you and me, Mr Editor, from holding any office of trust, or testifying on the witness-stand, unless we would take the Christian oath and kiss the mythological old book that we deem no more divine or sacred than Dr. Ayer's last year's almanac? On the other hand, every state, or nearly so, where the Republicans hav held control for any length of time, the more intolerant and obnoxious religious laws of a century ago and less hav been repealed. Let us hold fast to the old Republican ship. She has run down some of the relics of barbarism held sacred by ignorance, superstition, and inhumanity, and fastened by Democracy.

Every Mormon in Utah, or nearly so, and every Catholic in New Mexico, is a Democrat, and the laws establishing public schools in those territories hav been twice voted down, which is decidedly against our cause, as we cannot hope to break the cloud of superstitious darkness that befogs the minds of men unless we can hav a general diffusion of knowledge, and our public schools are the means by which this necessity must be accomplished. Do not giv the government into the hands of those who will not educate.

I started out to tell you why I read your paper with mingled joy and sorrow. I like its religion, but I detest its politics, and I wish here to enter my protest against its being converted into a Democratic organ, for as I love my country and mental and physical liberty, I hate Democracy, for it raised a parricidal hand against the former and enslaved both the minds and bodies of men. As I love a pure ballot-box and a fair count, I hate Democracy, for it defiled the former and defrauded the latter. Yea, I hate the very name of Democracy, for with it is associated every crime known to man—infection, murder, assassination, treason. I cannot and will not vote for Hancock!

Yours for Garfield and the Liberal cause,

J. A. Hallock.

---

SILVER WEDDING OF MR. SANFORD WARD SMITH AND WIFE, MRS. MATILDA SMITH.

Monmouth, Ill., 1880.

Editor Truth Seeker: A large company assembled and "surprised" the couple, took temporary possession of their home in this town, illuminated the garden with Chinese lanterns, lighting up the dwelling and surroundings until they resembled a palace of the gods.

Prof. W. F. Jamieson, of Chicago, was called upon to deliver the wedding address, and to make the presentation of what appeared to be a Bible, the gift of the many friends of host and hostess, which was found to contain several texts of scripture and forty-three silver dollars, of date "1880," and one silver half dollar.

For more than a generation Mr. and Mrs. Smith hav been uncompromising Liberals. Mrs. Smith, especially, is not an ardent lover of the Bible (which she considers inimical to her sex), hence the significance of presenting her with a volume for which she had little respect—the surprise was complete, made so by the allusions in the address by Prof. Jamieson, given amid the trees of the garden, in the still night air:

WEDDING ADDRESS.

In this book which I hold in my hand Mr. and Mrs. Smith will discover this text: "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned" (Matt. xii, 37).

Let this be my text. It proves that there are some good things in the book. The conviction is too general that words are trifles, but the fact is they are the most important things in this world. Such is the power of words that we more easily forgiv a mean act than a mean word. Ask the wife if there is any value in kind, encouraging, appreciativ words. In this respect Mrs. Smith's life has been blessed for a quarter of a century. Her happy look has baffled time, and almost defied the neuralgia [great laughter in which the bride heartily joined] bleak as a Russian winter, and while she struggled with the malady our sympathies were with her then, as our joy is with her to-night; and we see, instead of pain, the peaceful, glad expression!

Mr. and Mrs. Smith, your friends present you with this book. Upon the back of it I read the letters, B-I-B-L-E. We all know how you love the volume. We are told by our dear Christian friends that by searching you will find in it treasures of which you hav not dreamed. True there are some texts which bear hard upon women. Heretofore our hostess has managed to skip them. Permit us to again call your attention to them in order that you may the more emphatically reject them:

1. "He shall rule over thee" (Genesis iii. 16).

2. "Wives, submit yourselvs unto your husbands as unto the Lord. For the husband is the head of the wife, even as Christ is the head of the church; and he is the savior of the body. Therefore, as the church is subject unto Christ, so let the wives be to their own husbands in everything" Eph. v, 22. 23).

What is the meaning of these strange words addressed to this liberal-minded lady and gentleman, who hav journeyed through life on the silvery stream of time, hand in hand, to the twenty-fifth mile-post? To-night we meet to celebrate their silver wedding. Let the silvery words of our joy ring out and be borne afar on these gentle breezes which kiss the leaves.

By the power of words we paint a picture of nature. The sun becomes brighter, the sky more blue, the vallies and hills lovelier, all through the magical use of words There are those beautiful words by which the poet raises us to the highest heaven, leads us by the laughing, rippling rivulets, and bids us listen to all nature resonant with rhythm, harmony, and sweet cadences. The astronomer, with gorgeous golden-fringed words, opens our eyes to the gems of the sky, and thrills us with the poetry of millions of whirling suns and planets. It is words that make or unmake the happiness of millions of the married.

Here too is woman's chosen field, the arena of words. However weak she may be physically, she can always exercise a strong and eloquent tongue, although every peace-loving husband prefers it on a low key. He dreads nothing in all nature so much as the high-water mark of his wife's tongue. You can afford to laugh now, for we hav a calm, but you married gentlemen hav your spring tides. Ah, yes! you know how significant these terms are. A single word will sometimes upset gravity itself, like that young clergyman who agreed to supply the pulpit of an older brother absent from home. The young clergyman escorted the daughter of the pastor to the church, and after seeing her safely in the father's pew, ascended to the pulpit, unconscious that this natural attention to the young lady was sufficient to excite lively imaginations and inquiries in the audience.

Upon reading the hymn to be sung, the young clergyman was surprised to perceive evident efforts in the congregation to suppress laughter. The daughter of the old clergyman possessed the mellifluous name of Grace, and, all unsuspicious of that fact, he had chosen the hymn beginning with the words, "Amazing Grace!" As he proceeded the poetry thickened:

"'Twas grace that taught my heart to fear,
And grace my fears relieved,
How precious did that grace appear
The hour I first believed!"

"Through many dangers, toils, and snares,
I hav already come;
'Tis grace has brought me safe thus far,
And grace will lead me home!"

A silver wedding is an easy, graceful subject. It is upon a due apreciation of the value of words that connubial felicity largely depends. The vicious husband and the cross wife acquire a habit that makes slaves of them. Harsh words fan the hot temper to red heat. Habit becomes sometimes stronger than our first nature, and by permitting ourselves to fall victims to the habit of using harsh expressions we sink ourselvs in the esteem of our friends and in our good opinion. In old age we bear the marks of our habits as the prisoner does those of his chains. A husband and father who employs ugly, boisterous words, and then excuses himself on the ground that he does not mean anything by them, sows a crop of weedy words that will grow to plague him. Words hav wings, and as soon as their cage, the mouth, is open, out they fly, and mount beyond our reach, past recovery. The habit of acquiring good, beautiful words is just as easy as to say rude things. Dr. Samuel Johnson said a man had no more right to say a rude thing to another than to knock him down.

We must all acknowledge that one look into the smooth, placid face of Bro. Smith satisfies us that Mrs. Smith has used him with the tenderness of a mother toward her babe—when she is not mad!

The first words I ever wrote for the press—nearly twenty-five years ago—were printed in the Illuminati, published in Cleveland, Ohio, by our host. His was a free and independent paper, which could at that time, even, admit an uncompromising article, and my maiden effort, was "Principle against Policy." And now I stand before my brother and sister to congratulate them on their pleasant sail adown the stream of earthly existence. Doubtless they, like the rest of us, hav had their shadows; but shadows in the sky hav their uses—why not the shadows of the mind as well? We need not banish them. They help us better to appreciate the sunshine.

Mr. and Mrs. Smith, permit me to bear to you the good will, the respect, the good speed of your friends and neighbors who hav known you long as two people devoted to principles; do what you think is right; following your highest convictions of truth; daring to dissent from the narrow interpretations of those who do not know the bliss of simple love of truth for its own sake.

I present you this book as a slight token of the esteem of your many friends on this twenty fifth anniversary of your wedding-day—a slight token, I say, for did it fully express the love your friends bear you, its treasures would be apples of gold in pictures of silver. There would be "millions in it."

Mr. Smith, in behalf of himself and wife, responded in a feeling manner, expressing his surprise and appreciation of the respect shown them.

Then the friends repaired to the supper room and did ample justice to the grand repast furnished by the ladies of the gathering.

The enjoyment of that evening will long be remembered by the participants.

Ella B. Wilson.

---

Pacific, Oct. 2, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: Hewing to the line and not minding where the chips "fall" may do very well, but if one does not take care, while they are under one's feet, one may step and slip and cut oneself, and stop the act. My hewing to the line in the sense as taken has pretty near disabled me. I am without business. My opinions are pretty well known. I am not much contradicted, either as to Spiritualism as a law, nor religion as no law.

This is a curious kind of a town. There are some that are non-religious, that do not believe in Christianity, but yet refuse my paper, The Truth Seeker, and even the Investigator.

A very queer or rather strange freak in the clerical ranks took place here a short time ago. A certain Mr. John Elving came here about a year or so ago to preside over the (Presbyterian) church, but coming in contact with an Infidel like myself and one or two others, he fell out with his flock and preaches no more, but turned to and became a wiper of engines; but that was too hard, too much, and he has now got a place at the depot as an assistant to the night-watchman. Thus act the powers of the mind on poor human beings. Yours sincerely, A. H. Krueger.

---

Bristol, Wis., Oct. 9, 1880.

D. M. Bennett, Dear Sir: Will you allow me in a few words to giv you a new and novel mode in the coming presidential election of the Liberals voting and showing their strength. It is evidently impossible to bring all, or even a great majority, to the support of Greenbackers, Republicans, or Democrats. Probably the Liberal vote between Hancock and Garfield will be nearly evenly divided, although the great majority of Liberal voters hav heretofore been Republican.

Let me make a proposition. Let every Liberal Republican erase the first elector from the head of his Republican ticket and substitute the name of Robert G. Ingersoll. That is what I shall do. Let every Liberal Democrat and Greenbacker do the same, and see how large a vote we can poll.

It will add greatly to the vote to hav the tickets thus printed, Liberal Democratic ticket, and Republicans and Greenbackers with the same heading, and send them to the readers in every voting precinct. It would cost but little to print them, and surely every Liberal deserving of the name, be he ever so strong a Republican or Democrat, could afford to vote for this foremost champion of free thought and free speech, besides tens of thousands that read and admire his speeches that hav not yet enrolled under the Liberal banner. Respectfully suggested, R F. Mills.

---

Monroe, Utah, Sept. 30, 1880

Mr. Editor, Dear Sir: I hav been listening to the great Liberal clock, "its life's seconds numbering tick, tick." I counted its tickings up to two hundred, then it "stopped short." What is the matter? Is the old man dead? No; his enemies hav only set a trap for him, and succeeded in alluring him away from home by telling him that the trap—the separation of church and state—is for the good of both. Will the old man be caught in the trap? No, I think not; he will come back and giv the pendulum a vigorous push, and the old clock will not stop at two hundred, but will keep on, tick, tick, faster and louder, until its vibrating sound shall be heard in every house, proclaiming liberty and freedom throughout the entire length and breadth of our great country.

What I wish to illustrate is this: It takes a certain amount of energy to a proportional amount of force. A short time ago the Liberals throughout the country used their energy toward organizing, and great was the progress they made, but in proportion as their energy has been diverted into other channels, just in that proportion has the progress of the organization ceased. Some will say, "Let the chatter go on," but are we not neglecting that which is most important for something that will do but very little good? If any think that they can turn the Liberals from one set of intolerant bigots to sustain and support another, such, I think, will find themselvs disappointed in the end. No creed-bound party will ever accede to the wishes or demands of the Liberals; that would be to commit suicide out and out.

Suppose we hav one hundred earnest and qualified workers in the field of liberty, all working like beavers toward organizing Liberal Leagues, to proclaim truth and liberty to all, they could accomplish a great amount. But, suppose, on the other hand, that each one gets up a pet theory of his own, and goes to work to convince all the rest of the human race, each for his own peculiar idol; for instance, some will take up entirely the cause of the Democrats; another the Republicans; another the Greenbackers; another intemperance in relation to the sexes; another the same in relation to eating; another to drinking, and so on to the end of the chapter, while each will, of course, hav some special admirers who will stand clapping their hands, saying, Go on; well done. I will admit it is sometimes amusing, and often instructiv, but after all how much real good is accomplished thereby? Does it unite us and increase our number? Does it organize Liberal Leagues? Not as much as if all were working to the one and needful end and purpose. M. J.

---

"Outlines of the French Revolution."

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: A few weeks ago I received a copy of friend Bell's "Outlines of the French Revolution," and I purposed expressing a few words regarding its merits as soon as read, and would hav done so had not my more pressing duties occupied all my spare time. While riding on the cars to fill my appointments, the "Outlines" occupied the time between stations. The work, though small, is a very satisfactory condensation of the causes and effects that produced and ultimated that great epoch in human history. It is also a very valuable contribution and aid to those who hav hitherto been conversant with what has been the cause of more controversy, political and religious, than any other social and political upheaval the world has ever known. This little work brings to mind in all their freshness the stirring events of that period, and vindicates the superior equity and justice of those who were eminent advocates of Liberal thought.

Friend Bell brushes away quite a number of the remaining cobwebs of superstition; and those whose manifold labors will not allow the time for extended reading in that direction may find in these few well-stored pages food for honest thought, and an unbiased presentation of the causes for this human revolt against political and priestly misrule and despotism. The work should hav a very wide circulation, which I trust and feel confident it will. Friend Bell has my sincere thanks for this well-directed effort in the general work, and also for his personal kindness in forwarding me a copy. George Lynn.

Lockport, Oct. 3, 1889.

---

A Challenge to Theologians.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: I challenge the clergy, Spiritualists, or Materialists of the world prove that the biblical history teaches the real personal existence of a God, a devil, or a Jesus Christ.

Leslie, Mich. Elijah Woodwo[illegible]

Church Taxation.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker,

Sir: Will you allow me to say a word through your columns to your New York state readers? I hav got printed and will furnish on application blank petitions to the New York Legislature for the taxation of church property, clergymen, and priests. A very good time to get signatures to these petitions will be presidential election day. There should be some one present with one of these petitions at every polling-place in the state. In this way we can hav a number of thousand names to send into the Legislature the first days of its session.

And allow me to request the vice-presidents of the New York State Freethinkers' Association of the various counties of the state to see to it that on election day a suitable person is on hand in each election district to attend to this business.

Salamanca, N. Y. H. L. Green,
Sec. N. Y. F. A.

What is Thought?

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker,

Sir: In your issue of Sept. 25th I find an article from the pen of S. D. Moore, of Adrian, criticising the ideas of E A. Chapman upon the subject, What is Thought? I find it essier for people to indulge in criticism respecting the opinions advanced by others than for each to express his or her opinion upon any subject, leaving it for the reader to decide upon the merit or demerit of the arguments adduced.

I respectfully demur from the reasons presented by either of the gentlemen in proof of what constitutes thought, and with your kind permission will giv the intelligent readers of The Truth Seeker my opinion upon the above interesting subject-question. In the first place, I deny the existence of anything in nature which is not composed of substance or matter, from the most stupendous world down to the infinitesimal atom. There is nothing in the broad universe which can act upon or come from any organized being that is not matter in some degree of refinement, as coarse, coarser, coarsest, fine, finer, finest. The five senses of man cannot in the least degree comprehend anything which is not substance.

To say that the brain of man, which is wholly composed of matter, can beget a thought that friends Chapman and Moore say is not matter, is, to me, the very climax of absurdity. Man is just as much a spirit and immortal to-day as he ever will be. Every particle of matter composing the highest being down to the atom has indelibly stamped upon it eternal life in some form. All things commenced to develop from the atom, which is the soul of all entities, and each entity or soul-germ primarily existed in the great sea of atoms; and every atom thus existing was surrounded by an atmosphere entirely its own, and within the atom and atmosphere were all kinds of possibilities waiting for the master-hand of progression to awaken into eternal life and use. The impartial law of nature has placed no more god-power in one atom above another, but established them all as parts of an infinit whole, whose outward or physical body is subject to change, as well as the inner or more ethereal one which covers the soul, which soul remains from everlasting to everlasting the same unchangeable substance.

For Mr. Chapman, a Spiritualist, and Mr. Moore, a Materialist, to say that a single particle from the infinit whole can be destroyed only shows their profound ignorance upon the grand subject. All matter which the five senses of man can comprehend is a part and parcel of nature; and if either of the above gentlemen can destroy one of the least of all particles, or can find a place wherein to place something and then call it nothing, in my opinion, they hav infringed upon the infinit whole and opened a door through which all nature can finally emerge into the locality of nothing and be eternally lost.

Thomas Paine, in his "Age of Reason," says his best thoughts came to him from outward sources. How often we hear men speak after this fashion, "A thought struck me which I never thought before!" Thoughts come and go. You can send your thoughts to any locality of which your mind is cognizant, and they will return bringing new ones for consideration. We say great thoughts, little thoughts, wise thoughts, or foolish thoughts, and by such comparison refer to the substance composing them.

Chapman informs us that light and ...y are not composed of substance. Mr. ...he Christian philosopher, informs us in his writings that light is a coarse substance in comparison to electricity, magnetism, aurs, and the seven colors; he says they are gradations of matter. The spirits dictating the gospel of nature say thought is the finest of all substance. But I do not expect my friend Moore to take much stock in Spiritualism, for in his article he says he was a student in the spirit school for ten years, but, failing to realize any benefit in it, he dropped it. So we perceive that ten years of his precious life was entirely thrown away without the least good derived to self or the public generally. He has with one bound overleaped Spiritualism, and believes with Mr. Chapman that thoughts are not composed of substance.

Well, gentlemen, with regard to many of your thoughts in your articles, I think you hav hit the nail squarely on the head, for they do not seem to contain any real substance, and approach as near the point of nothing as any sane man can get without total annihilation. I trust, friend Moore, that ten years more of hard study in the Materialistic ranks will carry you beyond the minimum of Christianity to a higher appreciation of a continued existence after the dissolution or change called death; and learn this fact, that an immaterial something has no existence, only in the imagination of a deluded brain. I am a Spiritual Materialist from the crown of my head to the soles of my feet, but I can see no propriety in trying to alter or destroy anything which is in nature, for however low you may reduce matter it still remains in nature.

Is there anything in nature which should not exist? When we look into the mirror, is the form we see upon the plate substance, or do we see nothing? In sitting before the daguerrian camers, do we throw anything from ourselvs upon the plate that is material?

Will some of the readers of your valuable paper reply to and answer the above questions, and oblige your humble servant?

With due respect, I await a reply,
M. L. Sherman.

Adrian, Mich., Sept. 2, 1880.

National Liberal League.

NEW AUXILIARY LEAGUES.

184 Battle Creek, Mich., Abner Hitchcock, Sec.
185 Findlay, Ohio, W J Taylor, Sec.
186 Byron, Mich., Jas A Burgess, Sec.
187 Scandia, Kan., A B Wilder, Sec.
188 Mason City, Iowa, Dr S Harris, Sec.
189 Union Flat, Wash. Ter., J M Harper, Sec.
190 San Francisco, Cal., Byron Adonis, Sec.
191 Detour, Mich., Cecelia Hill, Sec.
192 Middleton, N. Y., C W Niver.
193 Walla Walla, Wash. Ter., W S Gilliam, Sec.
194 Flint, Mich., Geo G Bennett, Sec.
195 Elgin, Ill., J W Archibald, Sec.
196 Prairie City, Or., Jules Le Bret, Sec.
197 Kansas State League, Lawrence, Kan., C N Robinson, Sec.
198 Upper Mattole, Cal., A A Hadley, Sec.
199 Rockford, Ill., G W Brown, Sec.
200 Maple Rapids, Mich., S J Dunstall, Sec.
201 Angola, Ind. G B Fleming, Sec.
202 Portland, Or., Fred Metzer, Sec.
203 Milton, Or., D W McDonald, Sec.
204 Lookout, Kan., G M Blowers, Sec.
205 Cobden, Ill. O Richardson, Sec.
206 Galesburg, Ill., A S Cunningham, Sec.
207 Alliance, Ohio, C W Noland, Sec.
208 Iowa State League, Norway, Iowa, E C Walker, Sec.
209 Streator, Ill., Wm M Bronson, Sec.
210 Sandwich, Ill., J A Freeman, Sec.
211 Harts Mills, Kan, W L Zearing, Sec.
212 Chicago, Ill., Henry J Woodhouse, Sec.

T. C. Leland, Sec. N. L. L.
201 E. 71st street, N. Y.

George Chainey's

FOUNDATION STONES

OF THE

CHURCH OF THE UNITY,

EVANSVILLE, INDIANA.

And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones.—Rev. xxi, 19.

For modes of faith let graceless bigots fight;
His can't be wrong whose life is in the right;
In faith and hope the world will disagree,
But all mankind's concern is charity;
All must be false that thwart this one great end;
And all of God that bless mankind, or mend.
—Pope.

Price 75 cents, Cloth.

For sale at Truth Seeker office, 141 Eighth street, New York.

NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

Washington, D. C., July 19, 1880.

I wish to notify the public that a Mr. Baldwin, of Chicago, also Rhodes & McClure, of the same place, are publishing pamphlet editions of my lectures. All the lectures published by them are grossly inaccurate—filled with mistakes, horribly printed, and outrageously unjust to me. These men are simple literary thieves and pirates, and are obtaining money from the public under false pretenses. I take this course to warn the public that these publications are fraudulent. The only correct copies of my lectures are published by C. P. Farrell. All others are published by people who are willing to steal from me and defraud the public vender. These wretches hav published one lecture under four titles, and several others under two or three.

3m31 R. G. INGERSOLL.

All of C. P. Farrell's editions of Col. Ingersoll's works, and none others, are sold at this office. D. M. BENNETT.

WHY DON'T GOD KILL

THE DEVIL?

A series of Essays dedicated to the St. Johns (Mich.) School Board.

BY M. BABCOCK.

Price. 25 cents. For sale at this office.

SUPERSTITION;

THE RELIGION OF

"Believe or be Damned."

OPEN LETTER TO THE

ST. JOHNS SCHOOL BOARD.

BY

M. BABCOCK.

This book contains an inspired PHOTOGRAPH of the GOD that's being worshiped at the expense of the district in our public schools; the God that "overshadowed" Mary; the God that's wanted in the Constitution; the gentleman that owns some three billion dollars' worth of untaxed church property; the "so-help-me" God that makes a lie the truth in court; the God that governors besought to stop the yellow fever, which he didn't do. The picture is worth the price of the book. Price, 25 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT,
141 Eighth street, New York.

LADIES!!

"Salem, Or., July 17, 1880.

"S. H. Preston, Dear Sir: Please send me by express, C. O. D., to Portland, Or., $100.00 (one hundred dollars) worth of that "Comstock" Syringe. I mean business.

"Dr. Mary Solander."

Only sixteen had been sold when

COMSTOCK

set out to suppress it. Now orders come as above. Grand jurymen buy it for their wives. It is Simple; Safe. Infallibly Reliable, necessary to Health and personal purity, and is pronounced by patients and physicians to be the greatest

GODSEND TO THE SEX

gotten up in this generation. Sent securely boxed, with private instructions for special use. Confidential terms to agents. Price $5.00; improved, $10.00. Address SAM. H. PRESTON.
t32 209 West 34th st., New York.

"SOME MISTAKES OF MOSES"

BY

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

This volume is printed on toned paper, in clear, bold type, and handsomely bound in muslin, containing 275 pages, 12mo. Price, $1.25.

This book contains the principal points that Mr. Ingersoll has made against the Pentateuch in all his lectures on that subject. The pamphlets that hav been surreptitiously issued are incorrect, filled with mistakes, and consist of only about fourteen or fifteen pages, while there are two hundred and seventy-five pages in the book just issued. The book is unanswerable in its facts and logic, inimitable in its style, and filled with wit, satire, eloquence, and pathos.

Busts of R. G. Ingersoll,

By the celebrated sculptor, Clark Mills,

Cabinet size, price $2.50.
Small Busts, on Pedestal (mantel ornament), price $1.25. Neatly packed and boxed ready for shipment. Every admirer of this great Apostle of Liberty should hav at least one.

Photographs of Mr. Ingersoll.

By Sarony, the celebrated artist of New York, at the following prices:

| | |
|---|---|
| Imperial or large size . . . . | 40 cents |
| Photo or card size . . . . | 20 " |
| Life-size Lithograph, 21x27 . . . | 50 " |

Postage paid.

D. M. BENNETT.
141 Eighth St., New York.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Stinson & Co., Portland, Me

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. Hallett & Co., Portland, Me.

$72 A WEEK. $12 a day at home easily made. Costly outfit free. True & Co., Augusta, Me.

THE

Anonymous Hypothesis

OF

Creation.

A brief Review of the so-called Mosaic Account.

BY JAMES J. FURNISS.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by
D. M. BENNETT. 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

Nathaniel Vaughan.

A NOVEL.

By FREDERIKA MACDONALD,

Author of "The Iliad of the East," "Xavier and I," etc., etc. Three volumes in one; extra cloth, beveled; black and gold back and side stamps; 12mo, 404 pp., $1.25.

The characters are set before us by a few graphic and able touches, not as puppets, but as living beings.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterize "Nathaniel Vaughan" to a degree very unusual among modern novels.—Illustrated London News.

An independent and respectable study of character in the law of circumstance such as even George Eliot might not hav been ashamed to own. It is really an artistic composition, with a sound moral expressed, though not obtruded, on the canvas.—Westminster Review.

D. M. BENNETT, Publisher, 141 Eighth St., N.Y

KNOW THYSELF!

THE untold miseries that result from indiscretion in early life may be alleviated and cured. Those who doubt this assertion should purchase the new medical work published by the PEABODY MEDICAL INSTITUTE, Boston, entitled The Science of Life; or, Self Preservation. Exhausted vitality; nervous and physical debility, or vitality impaired by the errors of youth or too close application to business, may be restored and manhood regained.

Two hundredth edition, revised and enlarged, just published. It is a standard medical work, the best in the English language, written by a physician of great experience, to whom was awarded a gold and jeweled medal by the National Medical Association. It contains beautiful and very expensive engravings. Three hundred pages, more than fifty valuable prescriptions for all forms of prevailing disease, the result of many years of extensive and successful practice, either one of which is worth ten times the price of the book. Bound in French cloth: price only $1, sent by mail post-paid.

The London Lancet says: "No person should be without this valuable book. The author is a noble benefactor."

An illustrated sample sent to all on receipt of 6 cents for postage.

The author refers by permission to Hon. P. A. BISSELL, M.D., President of the National Medical Association.

Address Dr. W. H. PARKER, No. 4 Bulfinch street, Boston, Mass. The author may be consulted on all diseases requiring skill and experience.

HEAL THYSELF

Superstition in all Ages.

By JOHN MESLIER.

A Roman Catholic Priest,

Who, after a pastoral service of thirty years at Etrepigny and But in Champagne, France, wholly abjured religious dogmas, and left as his "Last Will and Testament" to his parishioners, and to the world, to be published after his death, the above-named work, entitled "Common Sense."

This is a powerful work, and is attracting much attention from the Liberal public. No more scathing arraignment of the Christian system has ever been made, not even by Voltaire, as he himself confesses. The following is the opinion of a distinguished Liberal concerning the book:

Newburyport Mass., Sept. 23, 1878.

To Miss Anna Knoop, Dear Madam:

The work of the honest pastor, Jean Meslier, is the most curious and the most powerful thing of the kind which the last century produced. Thomas Paine's "Age of Reason" is mere milk and water to it, and Voltaire's "Philosophical Dictionary" is a basket of champagne compared with a cask of fourth-proof brandy. You hav done a virtuous and humane act in translating his book so well.

James Parton.

Price, cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00.
D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

MACHINERY.

Hand, Foot and Power Presses. Die Work of all kinds.
Perforating Dies a Specialty.

E. B. STIMPSON, 31 Spruce St., N.Y.
†Jan81.

MODERN THINKERS:

What They Think and Why.

By V. B. Denslow, LL.D.

With an Introduction by

ROBERT G. INGERSOLL.

The work contains critical essays upon Emanuel Swedenborg, and the origin of the Christian ideas of heaven, hell, and virtue; Adam Smith, founder of the school of Economists; Jeremy Bentham, the apostle of law reform and of utilitarianism in morals; Thomas Paine and his relations to the Declaration of Independence and democracy in America; Charles Fourier, the philosopher of passional harmony and co-operativ association; Herbert Spencer, a review of his theories of evolution and of morals; Earnst Haeckel, the demonstrator of the doctrin of evolution; Auguste Comte, founder of the Positive philosophy and pontiff of the "Religion of Humanity;" and an essay on the authorship of Junius as a sequel to the critique on Thomas Paine.

This volume consists of 384 pp., 12 mo, and is illustrated by portraits of each of the eight great thinkers, and opens with an introduction from the pen of Col. Robert G. Ingersoll.

Cloth, $1.50. Sold at this office.

The Real Issue.

BY

MOSES HULL.

A National Greenback Pamphlet.

For campaign purposes it is just the thing. Contains unanswerable arguments in favor of scientific money.

The Commoner says:

"Nothing has been written which will do as good work as this. It is worth its weight in gold."

Price 10 cents. Sold by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., New York.

A FREE BOOK FOR THE SICK.

Containing nearly 100 pages, in pamphlet form; shows how Chronic Diseases can be positively cured by an original system of practice. It contains valuable and suggestive notes on nearly all the chronic ills to which the human family is subject, besides illustrative cases, and will be sent by mail to any one sending their address and a three-cent stamp to pay cost of mailing.

MURRAY HILL PUBLISHING CO.,
129 East 28th Street, N. Y.

Self-Contradictions of the Bible

144 Propositions Proved Affirmatively and Negatively without Comment.

Revised and Enlarged Edition.

72 pages. Price, 25 cents.

D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth St., N. Y.

☞ The Religio-Philosophical Journal publishes and sells an imperfect, disordered, and mangled edition, with all the typographical errors of the edition of 1860, from which it was pirated by the late S. S. Jones.

VINELAND, NEW JERSEY.

A regularly educated and legally qualified physician, and the most successful, as his practice will prove.

Cures all forms of Private, Chronic, and Sexual Diseases, Spermatorrhœa, and Impotency, as the result of self abuse in youth, sexual excess in maturer years, and other causes, producing some of the following effects: Nervousness, Seminal Emissions (night emissions, by dreams), Dimness of Sight, Defective memory, Physical Decay, Pimples on Face, Aversion to Society of Females, Confusion of Ideas, Loss of Sexual Power, etc., etc., rendering marriage improper or unhappy, are thoroughly and permanently cured by an External Application, which is the Doctor's latest and greatest medical discovery, and which he has so far prescribed for this baneful complaint in all its stages without a failure to cure in a single case, and some of them were in a terribly shattered condition; had been in the Insane asylums, many had Falling Sickness—Fits; others upon the verge of consumption; while others again had become Foolish and hardly able to take care of themselves.

Syphilis positively cured and entirely eradicated from the system. Gonorrhœa, Gleet, Stricture, Hernia (or Rupture), Piles, and other private diseases quickly cured. All diseases of women such as Prolapsus Uteri, Leucorrhœa, etc., treated with equal success.

DR. R. P. FELLOWS has within the last fifteen years treated thousands of cases of all diseases, many of which were looked on as past recovery, and in fact had been given up by their physicians to die; but by the aid of Dr. Fellows' valuable discoveries in medicine were restored to health, and are now living monuments to his skill. There are few physicians that hav attained the same eminence, or rather the same high position, in the art of healing as that of Dr. Fellows. His clear perception of disease and his great knowledge in preparing his medicines to reach the cause of the complaint intended, and at last subdue it, place the Doctor at the head of his profession.

PRIVATE MEDICAL COUNSELOR

Sent to any address, treating on the cause, effects, and cure of Spermatorrhœa, and containing cures sworn to before a magistrate, which is positive and convincing testimony to the Doctor's great skill.

Consultations by letter free and invited. Charges reasonable, and correspondence strictly confidential. Inclose two three cent stamps, and address as above.

[From the Western Reformer.]

"DR. R. P. FELLOWS
is a highly educated and scientific physician. He has an original system of practice, and is perfectly reliable and trustworthy. We hav heard many flattering reports of his successful cures of diseases incident to humanity."

THE

Philosophy of Spiritualism,

AND THE

Pathology and Treatment of Mediomania.

TWO LECTURES.

BY

FREDERIC R. MARVIN, MD.,

Professor of Psychological Medicine and Medical Jurisprudence in the New York Free Medical College for Women.

Read before the New York Liberal Club, March 20 and 27, 1874.

Cloth; price 50 cents. For sale by D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

WHAT IS MONEY?

A DEBATE

BETWEEN

COL. ROBERT G. INGERSOLL

AND

DR. T. A. BLAND.

Pamphlet form. Price 3 cents. For sale at this office.

Issues of the Age.

CONSEQUENCES INVOLVED IN MODERN THOUGHT.

BY HENRY C. PEDDER.

Extra cloth, beveled, black and gold back and side stamps, 12mo, 185 pp., price, $1.00.

Everything that we now deem of antiquity was at one time new; and what we now defend by examples will at a future period stand as precedents.—Tacitus.

An admirably written, scholarly volume.—N. Y. Graphic.

He presents a safe guide through the bewildering labyrinth of scientific, philosophical, and theological speculations, and evinces a thorough familiarity with most of the modern theories advanced.—Jewish Times.

The author of this volume has evidently kept company with many of the finer spirits of the age, until his mind has become imbued with the fragrance of their thought. He has excellent tendencies, elevated tastes, and sound aspirations.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE ESSENCE OF RELIGION.

BY L. FEUERBACH,

Author of "The Essence of Christianity," etc

Translated from the German.

Cloth, 12mo, 75pp., 50 cts. (Formerly 75 cts.)

The spirit of the time is show, not substance. Our politics, our ethics, our religion, our science, is a sham. The truth-teller is ill-mannered, therefore immoral. Truthfulness is the immorality of our age!—Extract.

THE POCASSET TRAGEDY THE LEGITIMATE FRUITS OF CHRISTIANITY.

A Discourse by

WILLIAM DENTON.

This is the masterly lecture reprinted in THE TRUTH SEEKER. It is the best on the subject, and shows in the clearest manner that that sad tragedy was but the to-be-looked-for outcome of the teaching of the Bible.

Price 10 cents. D. M. BENNETT, 141 Eighth Street, N. Y. City

JUST OUT!

Another Extraordinary Book!

Sixteen Saviors or None;

OR,

The Explosion of a Great Theological Gun.

By KERSEY GRAVES, of Richmond, Ind.

Being a reply to JOHN T. PERRY'S "Sixteen Saviors or One." Two hundred and twenty-four errors are pointed out and thoroughly exposed.

Second Edition.

Mr. Perry, who is the literary editor of the Cincinnati Gazette, is one of the most learned and able critics, and one of the best historical scholars of the age in the orthodox ranks. His work is a review of Kersey Graves' "Sixteen Crucified Saviors." He claims not only to have refuted that work, but to hav answered and overthrown all the leading arguments of the Infidel world against Christianity and the Bible. And Mr. Graves claims to hav met and answered and thoroughly demolished all of Mr. Perry's arguments and positions against Infidelity and in support of orthodoxy. The most interesting and amusing feature of this work of Mr. Graves is his "Ecclesiastical Court," in which he examines all of Mr. Perry's witnesses and authorities, one by one, and arrays them against each other and sometimes against Mr. Perry himself. The witnesses in their cross-examination not only contradict each other and sometimes themselves, but condemn each other, showing some of them are not qualified to act as witnesses in the case. This feature of the work is really laughable. It shows not only the utter failure of Mr. Perry to prove what he designed, but that some of his witnesses seem to turn "state's evidence" against him and testify for Mr. Graves. And in addition to all this, Mr. Graves has cited from many of the ablest authorities of the world an amount of historical testimony against Mr. Perry that is absolutely overwhelming. The work is enlivened by numerous anecdotes illustrative of Mr. Perry's absurdities. One reader pronounces it, "A thunder-blast against Mr. Perry, and a dead shot on orthodoxy, which leaves not a grease spot of either." In the two works will be found the ablest arguments both for orthodoxy and Infidelity. The work comprises about 200 pages.

Price, paper, 75 cents; cloth $1.

For sale by D. M. BENNETT.

THE

CAUSE OF HUMANITY,

OR THE

Rising and the Waning Faith.

An INTRODUCTION to the STUDY OF THE POSITIVE PHILOSOPHY and the RELIGION of HUMANITY. By COURTLANDT PALMER.

Price, 25 cents.

NEW BOOKS ON SALE.

The following valuable Liberal works hav been placed on sale, wholesale and retail, with "The Truth Seeker:"

Antiquity of Christianity.

BY JOHN ALBERGER.

12mo, 61 pp. Paper, 25 cts; cloth, 50 cts.

This book fully demonstrates the shadowy character of the origin of the religion of Christ.

ESSAYS ON

Mind, Matter, Forces, Theology, etc.

BY CHAS. E. TOWNSEND.

Extra cloth, 12mo., 404 pp., $1.50.

This is a collection of Essays reprinted from various journals. They are chiefly intended to uphold the theory of the stability of matter and forces and the perpetuity of mind.

SEQUEL TO ESSAYS. Same author. 75 cents.

SCRIPTURE SPECULATIONS,

With an Introduction on the

Creation, Stars, Earth, Primitive Man, Judaism, Etc.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 419 pp., $1.50.

Faith and Reason;

Heart, Soul, and Hand Work.

A concise account of the Christian religion, and all the prominent religions before and since Christianity.

BY HALSEY R. STEVENS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 441 pp., $1.50.

Positivist Primer:

Being a series of familiar conversations on the Religion of Humanity.

BY C. G. DAVID.

Price, 75 cents.

THE ETHICS OF POSITIVISM:

A critical study. By GIACOMO BARZELLOTTI, Professor of Philosophy at the Liceo Dante, Florence. Extra cloth, 12mo, 327 pp. $2.00.

Through Rome On.

A Memoir of Christian and Antichristian Experience.

BY NATHANIEL RAMSEY WATERS.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 352 pp. . . $1.75.

CHRIST OF PAUL.

BY GEORGE REBER.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 400 pages, price $2 00.

Mr. Reber gives an interesting account of the various sects and creeds which antedated the formation of the Christian church.

Cultivation of Art, and Its Relation to Religious Puritanism and Money Getting.

BY A. R. COOPER.

12mo, 48 pp; paper, 20 cts.; flexible cloth, 35 cts.

THE HISTORICAL JESUS OF NAZARETH.

BY M. SCHLESINGER, PH.D.,

Rabbi of the Congregation Anshe Emeth, Albany, N. Y.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price 75 cents.

THE

CASE AGAINST THE CHURCH.

A Summary of the Arguments Against Christianity

This is a very valuable and concise work, and states in plain and unmistakable language the reasons why Christianity is a failure. Price, 50 cents.

PERSONAL IMMORTALITY, AND OTHER PAPERS.

BY JOSIE OPPENHEIM.

Extra cloth, 12mo, 98 pages; price, 75 cents.

SOUL PROBLEMS,

With Papers on the Theological Amendment and the State Personality Idea.

BY JOSEPH E. PECK.

Paper, 12mo, 63 pages; price, 25 cents.

POCKET THEOLOGY.

BY

VOLTAIRE.

Translated from the French by Miss Ellen Carroll. The first time ever published in English. The pamphlet contains nearly 500 of Voltaire's sharp, terse, sarcastic, scathing definitions of theological and ecclesiastical subjects, terms, and dogmas. There is nothing in the world like it. Everybody ought to hav a copy. 120 pages. Price, only 35 cents.

The Rights of Man. By THOMAS PAINE. Written in defense of his fellowman. A work almost without a peer in the world. Large type. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

Life of Thomas Paine. By CALVIN BLANCHARD. 12mo. Large type, with a fine steel portrait of Paine. Paper, 40 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Heathens of the Heath. By WM. MCDONNELL, author of Exeter Hall. A radical romance. Paper, $1.00; cloth, $1.50.

Career of Religious Ideas: Their Ultimate the Religion of Science. By HUDSON TUTTLE. An able examination of the sources of the past religions of the world. 140 pp. 12mo. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

Thirty Discussions, Bible Stories, Essays, and Lectures. By D. M. BENNETT. Embracing a variety of subjects, the whole making nearly seven hundred pages. The subjects treated can hardly prove uninteresting to the reader. Paper, 75 cents; cloth, $1.00.

The Humphrey-Bennett Discussion. A debate between Rev. G. H. HUMPHREY, Presbyterian clergyman, and D. M. BENNETT, Editor of "The Truth Seeker." Three propositions were discussed, viz: 1. Did unbelievers in the Bible do as much for American independence as believers in it? 2. Has Infidelity done as much as Christianity to promote learning and science? 3. Is there a stronger probability that Infidelity is true than that the Bible is divine? Bennett affirming; Humphrey denying. Cloth (550 pp.). $1.00.

The Burgess-Underwood Debate. Between Prof. O. A. BURGESS, President of the Northwestern Christian University at Indianapolis, Ind., and B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, Mass. Held during four days at Aylmer, Ont., commencing June 29, 1875. Reported by John T. Hawke. FIRST PROPOSITION: "The Christian Religion, as set forth in the New Testament, is true in fact, and of divine origin." Burgess in the affirmative; Underwood in the negative. SECOND PROPOSITION: "The Bible is erroneous in many of its teachings regarding science and morals, and is of human origin." Underwood in the affirmative; Burgess in the negative. 12mo. 188 pp. Price, paper, 50 cents; cloth, 80 cents.

The Creed of Christendom: Its Foundation Contrasted with its Superstructure. By W. R. GREG, author of "Enigmas of Life," "Literary and Social Judgments," etc. F. W. Newman, in speaking of this work in the "Fortnightly Review," says: "Some twelve years ago, in a London drawing-room, one of our most eminent men of science asked, 'Why do not the bishops answer Mr. Greg's Creed of Christendom? They are bound to answer it—if they can.' In the lifetime of the present generation the earliest work at all similar was that of Mr. Charles Hennell, which, in various respects, had great merit; but Mr. Greg, coming later, had the advantage of access to many able German researches, and his work continues the most complete on all sides; to it one may most confidently appeal when assailed by eager Christians with the current commonplaces of their warfare. Since bishops, deans, learned canons, and academic divines do not reply formally to so thorough, clear, and learned a treatise, which has been so long before the public, we have the best of proof attainable that this historical argument—occupying precisely the ground which English academicians have chosen as their own—is unanswerable."

One volume, crown octavo, with complete index. The London edition sold for $5. Price of American edition, cloth, $1.50.

The Underwood-Marples Debate. Between B. F. UNDERWOOD, of Boston, and the Rev. JOHN MARPLES, of Toronto, Ont. Held at Napanee, Ont., in July, 1875. Two propositions discussed: FIRST: "That Atheism, Naturalism, and Modern Skepticism are Illogical and contrary to Reason." SECOND: "The Bible, consisting of the Old and New Testaments, evidences beyond all other books its divine origin." Marples affirms; Underwood denies. Reported in full, and revised by the debaters. 111 pp. Paper, 35 cents; cloth, 60 cents.

Interrogatories to Jehovah. By D. M. BENNETT. A series of close questions upon a great variety of subjects, from the origin of Deity and the universe, the creation of the earth, man, and woman, the flood, the Bible, the old patriarchs and prophets, down to the doctrinal points embraced by the Church. With a full-length portrait of Jehovah according to the Bible. A bold and radical work. 12mo, 250 pp. Paper, 50 cents; cloth, 75 cents.

The Pro and Con of Supernatural Religion; or, An Answer to the Question, Have we a Supernaturally-Revealed, Infallibly-Inspired, and Miraculously-Attested Religion in the World? By E. E. GUILD, ex-Universalist clergyman; together with a sketch of the author. In four parts. Paper, 30 cents; cloth, 50 cents.

Truth Seeker Leaflets, of two pages each. Thirty-two in number; 4 cents per dozen; 8 cents for the set; 25 cents per hundred; $2.00 per thousand.

Adventures of Elder Triptolemus Tub. Comprises important and startling disclosures concerning hell, its magnitude, morals, employments, climate, etc. By Rev. GEORGE ROGERS. A rich, interesting little work. Paper, 15 cents.

Gems of Thought.

THE sun is the best God. The glorious orb of day is better than a thought-god. He is the source of all light, life, and motion on earth.—Elmina D. Slenker.

THE flower is drawn forth by the sun, but it is drawn out from the plant. Even the sun can kindle the flower of no rose upon the brambles stalk.—C. C. Everett.

WHATSOEVER thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might: for there is no work nor device nor knowledge nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest.—Ecclesiastes ix. 10.

THE sire of gods and men, with hard decrees,
Forbids our plenty to be bought with ease;
And wills that mortal men, inured to toil,
Should exercise, with pains, the grudging soil.
—Dryden's Virgil.

IT is not my duty to prove to myself the immortality of the soul. That knowledge is hidden very cunningly. Perhaps the archangels cannot find the secret of their existence, as the eye cannot see itself; but, ending or endless, to liv whilst I liv.—Emerson.

IF there be something that a man can get for himself, his first step should not be to ask anything in heaven or earth to giv it to him. His next step should be to procure it. "As the plow follows words so God rewards prayers." This proverb of Wm. Blake reminds us of Hesiod's direction to the farmer to pray to Jove and Ceres, but with his hand upon the plow-tail.—John Weiss.

ALL the great steps in the advancement of science hav been made by just those men who hav not hesitated to doubt the "principles established in the sciences by competent persons" (Comte); and the great teaching of science—the great use of it as an instrument of mental disciplin—is its constant inculcation of the maxim that the sole ground on which any statement has a right to be believed is the impossibility of refuting it.—Huxley's Lay Sermons.

LET every one fearlessly take as his motto the words of the Nazarene, "I must work the works of him [i. e., "the power, not ourselvs, that makes for righteousness," as Matthew Arnold phrases it] that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh when do man can work." Agnostics, like ourselvs, hav every motiv, and are bound in honor to work, here and now, because we don't feel quite so sure as the saints profess to do that we shall hav a second opportunity.—Hylax.

EPITAPH ON A FRIEND.

An honest man lies here at rest
As e'er God with his image blest;
The friend of man, the friend of truth,
The friend of age, and guide to youth;
Few hearts like his with virtue warmed,
Few heads with knowledge so informed;
If there's anoth r world, he liv s in bliss,
If there is none, he made the best of this.
—Burns.

AND never yet was growth, save when it broke
The letter of the dead scholastic form,
The bark drops off, and leaves the expanding oak
To stretch with giant arms through sun and storm,
The idols that upon his breast lay warm,
The sage throws down, and breaks their hollow shrine,
And follows the great hand that points to light divine. —C. P. Crauch.

WHEN Harvey's book on the circulation of the blood came out he fell mightily in his practice. It was believed by the vulgar that he was crack-brained; and all the physicians were against him. After describing how much abuse he had suffered, Harvey adds: "But I think it a thing unworthy of a philosopher and searcher of the truth to return bad words for bad words; and I thi k I shall do better and more advised, if, with the light of true and evident observations, I shall wipe away these symptoms of incivility.—W. R. Alger.

IF you believe what the men of science, the philosophers, the poets, and critics believe, you cannot believe, except in a general way, in what the creeds and churches generally profess. Accordingly, the professors in colleges the physicians, the teachers, the scientists, the reformers, the politicians, the newspaper men, the reviewers, the authors, are seldom professing Christians or even churchgoers; and if they do go to church from motivs of interest or example, they are free enough to confess in private that they do not much believe what they hear.—Rev. H. W. Bellows.

I DO not profess to be a chemist, but those who are so tell us in plain words, "The energy of affinity, like that of gravity, is nothing but transmuted sunshine," and the whole s ience of chemistry is built up out of affinities! The light produced by electrical instruments is only a form of mechanical energy. A steam engine converts heat into mechanical energy, and this energy may be transmuted, but not destroyed. The sun's heat is really the source of all energy as well as all light, and all energy is ultimately converted into heat, and heat will develop electricity. Now as light originates in the vibrations of the particles of a luminous body, and the sun's heat is the source of all energy, how is thee going to get around my former assertion, or how can thee prove that the light produced by electric instruments and combustion of metallic substances is not hoarded sunshine. Light is propagated by means of the ether, and light-waves thus pass through space, and the number of the waves in a second seems to determine the color of the objects we see. Red has the least number of waves. It has 459,000,000,000,000 in a second, and violet the most, 727,000,000,000,000, and all these waves are produced by sunlight, if we go to their real primary origin. —Elmina D. Slenker.

Odds and Ends.

HERE is a sort of a canned obituary:

A little peach in the orchard grew—
A little peach of emerald hue.
A little boy he climbed the fence.
And took that peach from hence to thence.

They met, they smiled, they wept, they loved.
He called her Jane, she called him Thomas—
A richer man rode down the lane.
And Tom brought suit for breach of promis.

A HIGHLAND minister who found his congregation going to sleep one Sunday before he had fairly commenced, suddenly stopped, and exclaimed, "Brethren, it's nae fair; gie a mon half a chance. Wait till I get alang, and then if I'm no worth listening to, gang to sleep: but don't before I get commenced: gie a mon a chance."

STANLEY HUNTLEY in Brooklyn Eagle:

"Now, my dear," said Mr. Spoopendyke, "if you'll bring me the pen and ink I'll look over your accounts and straighten 'em out for you. I think your idea of keeping an account of the daily expenses is the best thing you ever did. It's business-like, and I want to encourage you in it."

"Here's the ink," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, growing radiant at the compliment. "I had the pen day before yesterday. Let me think," and she dove into her work-basket, and then glanced nervously under the bureau.

"Well, do you suppose I'm going to split up my finger and write with that?" demanded Mr. Spoopendyke. "Where's the pen? I want the pen."

"I put it somewhere," said Mrs. Spoopendyke. "Ah! here, I hav it. Now, you see," she continued, "I put what money I spend down here. This is your account here, and this is the joint account. You know——"

"What's this?" asked Mr. Spoopendyke.

"That's your account. This——"

"No, no; I mean this marine sketch in the second line."

"That? Oh, that's a 7."

"S'pose I ever spent seven dollars with a tail like that to it? If you're going to make figures, why don't you make figures? What d'ye want to make a picture of a prize-fight in a column of accounts for? What is this elephant doing here?"

"I think that's a 2," replied Mrs. Spoopendyke, dubiously. "Maybe it's a 4. I can tell by adding it up."

"What are you going to add up? D'ye count in this corner-lot, and that rose-bush, and this pair of suspenders? D'ye add them in?"

"That's a 6, and that is a 5, and the last is an 8. They come out all right; and during the last month you hav spent more money than I and the joint account together."

"Havn't, either. When did I spend this broken-down gunboat?"

"That ain't a boat. It's forty-two dollars for your suit."

"Well, this tramp fishing off a rock, when did I spend him?"

"It ain't a tramp. It's fifty dollars cash you took, and I don't know what you spent it for. Look at my account, now——"

"What's the man pulling a gig for?"

"It's nothing of the sort. That ain't a gig; it's one dollar for Wiggin. You see, I've only spent twenty-two dollars in a month, and you've spent a hundred and eighty-four."

"You can't tell by this what I've done," growled Mr. Spoopendyke. "What's this rat-trap doing in the joint account?"

"That's fourteen cents for fruit when you were sick."

"And this measly-looking old hen, what's she got to do with it?"

"That's no hen. That's a 2. It means two dollars for having your chair mended."

"What hav you charged me with this old graveyard for?"

"That's fifteen cents for sleeve elastics. The fifteen ain't plain, but that's what it is."

"How do you make out I hav spent so much? Where's the vouchers? Show me the vouchers."

"I don't know what you mean," said Mrs. Spoopendyke, "but you spent all I put down."

"Havn't done anything of the sort. Show me some vouchers. Your account's a humbug. You don't know how to keep an account."

"Yes, I do," pleaded Mrs. Spoopendyke, "and I think it's all right."

"No, you don't. What do you mean by getting up engravings of a second-hand furniture store and claiming that it's my account? You're a great bookkeeper, you are. All you want is a sign hung between you and the other side of the street to be a commercial college. If I ever fail in business I'm going to fill you up with benches and start a night-school. Giv me that pen," and Mr. Spoopendyke commenced running up the columns. "Two two's four and eight twelve and four sixteen and carry one to the next and three is four. Here, this is wrong. You've got an eighteen for a twenty here."

"Eh?" jerked out Mrs. Spoopendyke.

"This is two hundred and four dollars, not one hundred and eighty-four. I knew you couldn't keep accounts. You can't even add up."

"That makes your account even bigger," responded Mrs. Spoopendyke. "I didn't think it was so much."

Slam went the book across the room, followed by the pen, and the ink would hav gone, too, but Mrs. Spoopendyke cautiously placed it out of harm's way.

"Dod gast it!" howled Mr. Spoopendyke, as he tore off his clothes and prepared for bed; "you ain't fit to hav a pen and ink. Next time I want my accounts kept I'll keep 'em chained up in the yard; and don't you go near 'em; hear me?"

"Yes, dear," sighed Mrs. Spoopendyke, as she slipped the obnoxious book into the drawer.

Truth Seeker Tracts

| No. | Revised List. | Cts |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Discussion on Prayer. D. M. Bennett and two Clergymen. | 8 |
| 7. | The Story of Creation. Bennett. | 5 |
| 8. | The Old Snake Story. " | 2 |
| 9. | The Story of the Flood. " | 5 |
| 10. | The Plagues of Egypt. " | 2 |
| 11. | Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Bennett. | 2 |
| 12. | Balaam and his Ass. " | 2 |
| 13. | Arraignment of Priestcraft. " | 8 |
| 14. | Old Abe and Little Ike. Syphers. | 3 |
| 15. | Come to Dinner. " | 2 |
| 16. | Fog Horn Documents. " | 2 |
| 17. | The Devil Still Ahead. " | 2 |
| 18. | Slipped Up Again. " | 2 |
| 19. | Joshua Stopping the Sun and Moon. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 20. | Samson and his Exploits. Bennett. | 2 |
| 21. | The Great Wrestling Match. " | 2 |
| 22. | Discussion with Elder Shelton. " | 10 |
| 23. | Reply to Elder Shelton's Fourth Letter. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 24. | Christians at Work. Wm. McDonnell. | 5 |
| 25. | Discussion with Geo. Snode. Bennett. | 5 |
| 26. | Underwood's Prayer. | 1 |
| 27. | Honest Questions and Honest Answers. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 28. | Alessandro di Cagliostro. C. Sotheran. | 10 |
| 29. | Paine Hall Dedication Address. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 30. | Woman's Rights & Man's Wrongs. Syphers. | 2 |
| 31. | Gods and God-houses. " | 2 |
| 32. | The Gods of Superstition and the God of the Universe. D. M. Bennett. | 8 |
| 33. | What has Christianity Done? Preston. | 3 |
| 34. | Tribute to Thomas Paine. " | 2 |
| 35. | Moving the Ark. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 36. | Bennett's Prayer to the Devil. | 2 |
| 37. | Short Sermon. Rev. Theologicus. D.D. | 1 |
| 38. | Christianity not a Moral System. X. Y. Z. | 3 |
| 39. | The True Saint. S. P. Putnam. | 3 |
| 40. | Bible of Nature vs. The Bible of Men. J. Syphers. | 1 |
| 41. | Our Ecclesiastical Gentry. Bennett. | 3 |
| 42. | Elijah the Tishbite. " | 3 |
| 43. | Christianity a Borrowed System. " | 3 |
| 44. | Design Argument Refuted. Underwood. | 3 |
| 45. | Elisha the Prophet. Bennett. | 2 |
| 46. | Did Jesus Really Exist? " | 2 |
| 47. | Cruelty and Credulity of the Human Race. Dr. Daniel Arter. | 5 |
| 48. | Freethought in the West. G. L. Henderson. | 5 |
| 49. | Sensible Conclusions. E. E. Guild. | 3 |
| 50. | Jonah and the Big Fish. D. M. Bennett. | 1 |
| 51. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets. No. 1. | 5 |
| 52. | Marples-Underwood Debate. Underwood. | 8 |
| 53. | Questions for Bible Worshipers. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 54. | An Open Letter to Jesus Christ. Bennett. | 5 |
| 55. | The Bible God Disproved by Nature. W. E. Coleman. | 3 |
| 56. | Bible Contradictions. | 1 |
| 57. | Jesus Not a Perfect Character. Underwood. | 2 |
| 58. | Prophecies. | 2 |
| 59. | Bible Prophecies Concerning Babylon. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 60. | Ezekiel's Prophecies Concerning Tyre. B. F. Underwood. | 2 |
| 61. | History of the Devil. Isaac Paden. | 5 |
| 62. | The Jews and their God. " | 10 |
| 63. | The Devils Due-Bills. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 64. | The Ills we Endure—their Cause and Cure. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 65. | Short Sermon No. 2. Rev. Theologicus. D.D. | 2 |
| 66. | God Idea in History. H. B. Brown. | 2 |
| 67. | Sixteen Truth Seeker Leaflets No. 2. | 5 |
| 68. | Ruth's Idea of Heaven and Mine. Susan H. Wixon. | 2 |
| 69. | Missionaries. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 70. | Vicarious Atonement. J. S. Lyon. | 3 |
| 71. | Paine's Anniversary. C. A. Codman. | 3 |
| 72. | Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. D. M. Bennett. | 2 |
| 73. | Foundations. John Syphers. | 3 |
| 74. | Daniel in the Lion's Den. Bennett. | 2 |
| 75. | An Hour with the Devil. " | 10 |
| 76. | Reply to Erastus F. Brown. D. M. Bennett. | 3 |
| 77. | The Fear of Death. D. M. Bennett. | 5 |
| 78. | Christmas and Christianity. D.M.Bennett. | 5 |
| 79. | The Relationship of Jesus, Jehovah, and the Virgin Mary. W. E. Coleman. | 5 |
| 80. | Address on Paine's 139th Birthday. Bennett. | 5 |
| 81. | Hereafter, or the Half-way House. John Syphers. | 1 |
| 82. | Christian Courtesy. Bennett. | 2 |
| 83. | Revivalism Examined. Dr. A. G. Humphrey. | 5 |
| 84. | Moody's Sermon on Hell. Rev. J. P. Hopps, London. | 2 |
| 85. | Matter, Motion, Life and Mind. Bennett. | 10 |
| 86. | An Enquiry about God's Sons. " | 2 |
| 87. | Freethought Judged by its Fruits. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 88. | David, God's Peculiar Favorite. Mrs. E. D. Slenker. | 3 |
| 89. | Logic of Prayer. Charles Stephenson. | 3 |
| 90. | Bible-Mania. Otter Cordates. | 2 |
| 91. | Our Ideas of God. B. F. Underwood. | 1 |
| 92. | The Bible; is it Divinely Inspired? Dr. D. Arter. | 5 |
| 93. | Obtaining Pardon for Sins. Hudson Tuttle. | 1 |
| 94. | The New Raven. Will Cooper. | 5 |
| 95. | Jesus Christ. D. M. Bennett. | 10 |
| 96. | Ichabod Crane Papers. | 10 |
| 97. | Special Providences. W. S. Bell. | 2 |
| 98. | Snakes. Mrs. Elmina D. Slenker. | 2 |
| 99. | Do the Works of Nature prove a Creator? Scieta. | 5 |
| 100. | 10th Anniversary of Thomas Paine's Birthday. Bennett et als. | 5 |
| 102. | The Old Religion and the New. W. S. Bell. | 1 |
| 103. | Does the Bible Teach us all we Know? Bennett. | 2 |
| 104. | Evolution of Israel's God. A. L. Rawson. | 10 |
| 105. | Decadence of Christianity. Capphro. | 2 |
| 106. | Franklin, Washington and Jefferson Unbelievers. Bennett. | 2 |
| 107. | The Safe Side. H. B. Brown. | 5 |
| 108. | The Holy Bible a Historical Humbug. S. H. Preston. | 2 |
| 110. | Invocation to the Universe. Bennett | 1 |
| 111. | Reply to Scientific American. " | 1 |
| 112. | Sensible Sermon. Rev. M. J. Savage | 2 |
| 113. | Come to Jesus. Bennett | 2 |
| 114. | Where was Jesus born? Preston | 1 |
| 115. | The Wonders of Prayer. Bennett | 2 |
| 116. | The Sunday Question. " | 2 |
| 117 | Constantine the Great. Preston | 3 |
| 118. | The Irrepressible Conflict between Christianity and Civilization. Bell | 5 |
| 119. | The New Faith. Stoddard | 3 |
| 120. | The New age. Bell | 10 |
| 121 | Ingersoll's Review of his Reviewers | 2 |
| 122. | The Great Religions of the World. Bennett | 10 |
| 123. | Paine Vindicated. Ingersoll's Reply to the New York Observer | 10 |
| 124. | Sinful Saints. Bennett | 10 |
| 125. | German Liberalism. Clara Neymann | 2 |
| 126. | Crimes and Cruelties of Christianity. Underwood | 10 |
| 127. | Tyndall on Man's Soul | 5 |
| 129. | Who was Jesus Christ? Coleman | 2 |
| 130. | The Ethics of Religion. Clifford | 5 |
| 131. | Paine was Junius. W. H. Burr | 3 |
| 132. | My Religious Belief. Ella E. Gibson | 1 |
| 133. | The Authority of the Bible. Underwood | 5 |
| 134. | Talks with the Evangelists | 5 |
| 135. | Is there a Future Life? | 3 |
| 136. | Torquemada and the Inquisition. Bennett | 3 |
| 137. | Christian Love. C. L. James | 2 |
| 138. | Science of the Bible. John Jasper. | 2 |
| 139 | Massacre of St. Bartholemew. Preston | 2 |
| 140. | Astro-Theology | 5 |
| 141. | Infidelity. H. W. Beecher | 2 |
| 142 | Synopsis of All Religions. E. L. Saxon | 10 |
| 143. | Chang Wau Ho. Elf Perkins | 1 |
| 144. | The Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 145. | If you take away my Religion, what will you giv me instead? Martin. | 10 |
| 146. | Seymour Times's Prayer | 2 |
| 147. | Reply to The Index on Comstock Laws | 10 |
| 148. | When did Paul Liv? Scholasticus | 2 |
| 149. | Age of Shams | 3 |
| 150. | The Liberty of Printing and Reply. Hurlbut and Wakeman | 10 |
| 151. | What is the Bible? M. W. H. | 6 |
| 152. | A Remarkable Book. R. W. Douglas | 2 |
| 153. | Liberty and Morality. M. D. Conway | 5 |
| 154. | Reminiscences of Thomas Paine. David Bruce | 5 |

SCIENTIFIC SERIES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| 1. | Hereditary Transmission. Prof. Louis Elsberg, M.D. | 5 |
| 2. | Evolution; from the Homogeneous to the Heterogeneous. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 3. | Darwinism. B. F. Underwood. | 3 |
| 4. | Literature of the Insane. F. R. Marvin. | 5 |
| 5. | Responsibility of Sex. Mrs. Chase, M.D. | 3 |
| 6. | Graduated Atmospheres. J. McCarroll. | 2 |
| 7. | Death. Frederic R. Marvin, M.D. | 3 |
| 8. | How do Marsupial Animals Propagate their kind? A. B. Bradford. | 5 |
| 9. | The Unseen World. Prof. John Fiske. | 2 |
| 10. | The Evolution Theory — Huxley's Three Lectures. | 10 |
| 11. | Is America the New World? L. L. Dawson. | 8 |
| 12. | Evolution Teaches neither Atheism nor Materialism. R. S. Brigham, M.D. | 5 |
| 13. | Nibble at Mr. John Fiske's Crumb for the Modern Symposium. | 7 |

Discount on one dollar's worth 10 per cent off, on two dollars' worth, 20 off: on five dollars' worth, 40 off; on ten dollars' worth, 50 off.

As few or as many of any given kind may be ordered as desired.

$100 PER MONTH and a $2 outfit free. Agents wanted in every state to collect small pictures to copy and enlarge to a beautiful Oil Painting. The biggest thing out. PHOTO COPYING COMPANY. Address CHIDESTER & CO. 139 EIGHTH STREET, NEW YORK. 4 41

THE

Cause and Remedy of the Present Financial Condition of the Country.

A lecture delivered at the Courthouse, Albion, New York.

BY MRS. A. H. COLBY.

Price 10 cents. For sale, wholesale and retail, by D. M. BENNETT 141 Eighth st., N. Y.

BULLION IN THE CAMPAIGN OF 1880;

OR,

SHYLOCK IN VERSE.

A Pamphlet on the Issues in Finance.

It will be sent to any address on receipt of fifteen cents, or in lots of 10 or more, at the rate of six cents each. Address, A. B. BROWN, Worcester, Mass.

Mrs. Besant's Tracts.

Prices Reduced.

| | PRICE. |
|---|---|
| Natural Religion vs. Revealed Religion, | 5 |
| The Fruits of Christianity, | 5 |
| Constructiv Rationalism, | 5 |
| On Eternal Torture, | 5 |
| On Prayer, | 5 |
| The True Basis of Morality, | 5 |
| The Gospel of Christianity and the Gospel of Freethought, | 5 |
| Is the Bible Indictable? | 5 |

ALSO

| | |
|---|---|
| The Law of Population; Its Consequences and its Bearings Upon Human Conduct and Morals, | 40 |
| Marriage; As it Was, As it Is, and As it Should Be, | 40 |

The last two contain a fine steel-plate engraving of Mrs. Besant.

There is no clearer, better writer in the English language.

IN ADDITION.

| | |
|---|---|
| The Church and Education, | 5 |
| On the Religious Education of Children, | 5 |
| Government. An Essay. By Charles Moran. | 10 |

Sold at this office.

Fewer Children and Better.
Hints for Taking Care of Children.
Girls of the Period, and Marriage.
The Prevention of Conception.
A Miserable Mother.
Enlightened Parentage.
To Parents.
Abortion.

See October number (now ready) of

THE PHYSIOLOGIST.

It also gives an account of a

DASTARDLY ATTEMPT to prevent the current issue.

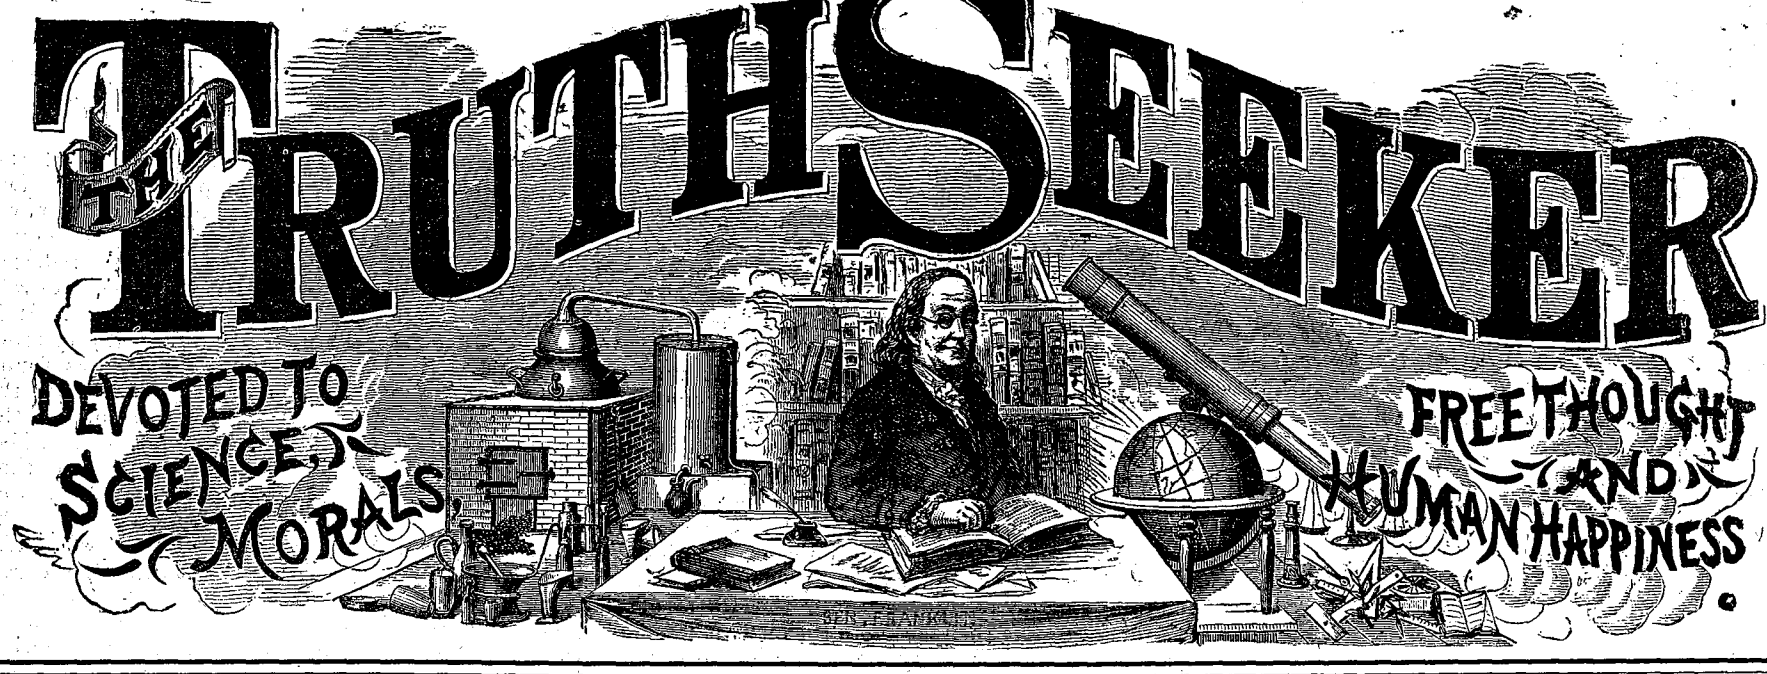
Editor.—SARA B. CHASE, A.M., M.D.
Associate Editor.—ELMINA D. SLENKER.

$1.50 per annum. Sample copies 15 cts. Address S. H. PRESTON, Business Manager. 41tf 209 West 34th st., N. Y.

Revelations of Antichrist



CONCERNING

Christ and Christianity.

"ANTICHRIST" proves from history that James, Kepha (Cephas, alias Peter), and Paul, all lived before the Christian era, and so did Jesus Christ—indeed, many Christs and many by the name of Jesus.

The book contains 446 pages, with a full Index and table of contents. Price, $2.00.

THE TRUTHSEEKER

Vol. 7. No. 43. {PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY D. M. BENNETT.} New York, Saturday, October 23, 1880. {SCIENCE HALL, 141 8th St., NEAR BROADWAY.} $3 per Year.

Notes and Clippings.

THE Rev. John A. Perry, Baptist, is under arrest in Rhode Island on a charge of burning his property to obtain the excessiv insurance.

THE Elgin Courant says that, as usual after a good herring season, the matrimonial business is extraordinarily activ on the coast of Scotland.

THE Spanish government is disposed to conciliate the Cubans, and will exercise clemency toward all those transported for political offenses.

TWO Roman Catholic colleges are to be established, by direction of the Pope, in the island of Malta under the control of the bishop of Algiers. They are to educate missionaries for Africa.

LORD BEACONSFIELD'S agents at High Wycombe hav, by his lordsnip's instructions, returned twenty per cent of the half year's rent just paid to all his tenants on the Hughenden Manor estate.

GEN. GARIBALDI says his former friend, Premier Cairoli, now wears the livery of King Humbert. "When monarchy dresses a man up in livery," writes the General, "it changes him, even were he God Almighty. Yours, G. Garibaldi."

THE Suffolk West Association is a Congregational body in eastern Massachusetts. It has, by resolution, decided that belief in the endlessness of future punishment is not necessary for admission into the Congregational ministry. The case which was acted on was that of the Rev. L. L. Briggs, who had been a Universalist.

IT is said that China now spends $1,000,000 annually for idol worship. This seems a small amount when it is remembered that the population of the Chinese empire is estimated at 400,000,000. Possibly the missionary who furnished the figures has left out a cipher or two. If the statement is correct, some of the idols rnd their priests must get along on very short rations.

THE latest politico-religious sensation in Seneca Falls is the spectacle of a preacher who is not even a citizen of the United States, who notified his congregation that the weekly prayer meeting would be held one evening in advance, in order to giv them a chance to attend a Republican demonstration that was to be held on the evening of the regular meeting—all for Christ.

THE French government on October 16th ordered four members of the order of St. Bargabas to leave France within twenty-four hours. The police, after turning out the men, sealed the doors of their chapel. The Carmelites were also expelled at the same time. The police forced the doors of their house, the Carmelites entering a solemn protest against it as an act of unwarranted violence.

IT is stated on the authority of the Liverpool papers that the bishop of Liverpool, upon driving away from the church of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Liverpool, recently, was mobbed by a crowd of roughs, several of whom threw stones at the carriage. The bishop's coachman was struck by one of the missiles. The papers ascribe the discreditable conduct to the Roman Catholic inhabitants of the populous district of St. Martin's.

THE French minister of public instruction has ordered a special edition of Herbert Spencer's work on education to be published, and all scholastic libraries and associations are to receive a copy of it gratis on application. Disparaging remarks on classical learning hav been omitted from this edition with the author's sanction. The minister of war has ordered a collection of patriotic military stories to be compiled for the use of the primary schools.

MANY clergymen in this country hav lately received a circular from a London dealer in second-hand sermons. He offers sermons "lithographed in a bold, round hand," so that those who happened to see them would suppose they were manuscript, for 25 cents each, or $20 a hundred. He has a line of cheaper sermons in print, at ten cents apiece, warranted orthodox; and others—a little more expensiv—which hav "a pleasantness, yet an awful solemnity, about them."

AMONG the suits commenced in the Justices' Court of San Francisco is one by M. Krug against J. Christ to recover $100 on a promissory note. So it seems that among his delinquencies, social and political, J. Christ does not pay his note. As in "my father's house are many mansions," and the cattle on a thousand hills are his, it ought not to trouble him much to raise a paltry hundred dollars. But perhaps this is not the original J. Christ. Come to think it over, we guess it isn't.

BISHOP COLENSO, of Natal, well known by his advanced views on the Pentateuch, livs very quietly at his residence near Maritzburg, where he is not often seen except on Sunday, when he conducts services in the church. He is described as elephantin in appearance, being almost seven feet high and of massiv frame. He wears a wide-brimmed stovepipe beaver hat of the old-fashioned cut and a long coat of thin black material. He is regarded with awe and reverence by the nativs, who salute him as supreme or great chief. The Bishop is now sixty years old, but retains his vigor of mind. One of his daughters acts as his amanuensis, and Kafirs are his printers.

AFTER Henry Ward Beecher had talked about politics for half an hour at his prayer-meeting recently a stranger arose and began to discuss the kingdom of heaven. He spoke in a cracked voice, and Mr. Beecher at once began to frown upon him. After listening to him for two minutes, Mr. Beecher interrupted him, saying, "Well, my young friend, I guess you had better wind up. As they say in Congress, we will giv you leave to print the rest of your remarks." The young man dropped into his seat, much discomfited. Henry Ward Beecher's brother Edward said that he believed that God guided the Chicago Convention to select James A. Garfield, and that God's influence ruled in Indiana to elect Governor Porter.

OCEAN soundings made with what is known as Sir William Thompson's steel wire show that along the entire coast of California a depth of fifteen hundred fathoms or more is reached as near as within a distance of from twenty to seventy miles westward from the shores, the greater part of this sudden fall occurring in the last ten to fifty miles. At one hundred miles west of San Francisco the water is found to be over 2,500 fathoms deep. The bed of the ocean continues of a uniform depth greater than 1,500 fathoms until the Sandwich Islands are reached, the greatest depth being 3,000 fathoms, at a distance of about four hundred miles east of Honolulu, which great depth is maintained until within ninety miles of Honolulu; at fifty miles from that place the depth is 1,500 fathoms.

COMMISSIONER RAILSTON of the Salvation Army presents a report of the doings of that body of evangelists which contains some remarkable figures. The Army has been at work in this country for about a year, having commenced operations with a few of its members who landed in Philadelphia, and subsequently continued them with the company which made its debut on the stage of a noted dance house in this city. The Commissioner says that this corporal's guard has been the means of the conversion of over 1,500 persons, many of whom at first came to scoff and make sport. The Commissioner does not say whether this is the net number of converts now on the rolls, or whether a deduction must be made for backsliders. To convert 1,500 persons with such limited facilities as those enjoyed by the Salvation Army is a very large work. There are some expensiv churches with talented pastors and full benches of elders or deacons or vestrymen who do not bring in as many persons as that in twenty years. There are mission stations manned by educated men where there has been no such ingathering in half a century. If the Commissioner's report is correct, it looks as if the Salvation Army had been much more wide awake than some of the churches and other eminently respectable organizations. On the other hand, it may be that some of these organizations would hardly accept the Commissioner's views of the evidences of conversion, and would cut his figures down considerably.

THE Paris Temps givs the following account of Dulcigno: "The town is composed of two parts—separated from each other by the port—the old town, containing the citadel, and the new town, in which the town is almost entirely concentrated, and which comprises about four hundred houses. It is evident that if the squadron had opened fire it would hav directed it solely against the citadel, where there are not eighty houses. The inhabitants would not hav had to suffer from the bombardment. The certainty of not being in danger, even in case of military action, has, perhaps, had something to do with the obstinate resistance the inhabitants of Dulcigno hav made to the cession of their town to the Montenegrins. The chief reason, however, is that they are nearly all Mussulmans; they number from 2,800 to 3,000; and it is said that till 1858 no Christian was allowed to choose his residence at Dulcigno. Lastly, it is said that the Mussulmans are a race of pirates, who hav only given up piracy since 1815; that is, since Austria has had possession of Dalmatia and has created a navy."

THE following is said to be an authentic copy of a bill presented in 1753 by an artisan who repaired the cathedral of Milan. The money is modernized.

| | |
|---|---|
| Embellished Pontius Pilate and put new ribbons on his bonnet | $3 02 |
| Correcting Ten Commandments | 5 12 |
| Washed the servant of the high priest and put carmine on his cheek | 4 18 |
| Renewed heaven, adjusted stars, and cleaned the moon | 5 12 |
| Re-animated the flames of purgatory and restored souls | 3 06 |
| Revived the flames of hell, put a new tail on the devil, mended his left hoof, and did several jobs for the damned | 7 17 |
| Re-bordered the robe of Herod and adjusted his wig | 4 00 |
| Put new spotted dashes on the son of Tobias and dressing on his sack | 2 00 |
| Washed the ears of Balaam's ass and shod him | 3 02 |
| Put earrings on the ears of Sarah | 2 04 |
| Put new stones in David's sling, enlarged the head of Goliath, and extended his legs | 3 00 |
| Decorated Noah's ark | 3 00 |
| Mended the shirt of the prodigal son and cleaned his ears | 4 00 |
| Total | $48 73 |

THE leading article in the North American Review for November is by the Hon. William Beach Lawrence, and is devoted to an exposition of the monarchical principle in the United States Constitution. It is shown that under our Constitution the Executiv is vested with powers far greater than those possessed by the king in a limited monarchy. The amplitude of the president's constitutional powers is best seen from the history of the war of secession, as when Mr. Lincoln, without waiting for the assembling of Congress, declared the blockade of the Southern ports, and called into service for three years a volunteer army of upward of 42,000 men. The author foresees danger to the permanence of our republican institutions, resulting both from the vastness of these powers and from the existing methods of choosing presidents, and thinks that a radical change in the Constitution is imperativly demanded. In the same number of the Review Bishop W. C. Doane points out the advantages of free religious discussion. The Hon. Montgomery Blair writes of "The Republican party as it was and is." Upon the suppression of the rebellion and of slavery, the mission of that party was accomplished, and since the death of Lincoln its career has been one of usurpation, corruption, and centralization. M. Desire Charnay contributes the third of his valuable illustrated papers on "The Ruins of Central America." The other articles in this number of the Review are "The Nicaragua Route to the Pacific," by Rear-Admiral Daniel Ammen; "The Coming Revision of the Bible," by the Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby; "Recent European Publications," by Prof. T. F. Crane; and finally a paper entitled, "The Political Situation from a Financial Standpoint," designed to show how the business interests of the country would be compromised by a change from a Republican to a Democratic administration of the general government. This document is signed by over twenty of the heaviest capitalists of New York.

Events of the Week.

THE women voted pretty generally in this state at the recent school elections.

A LARGE fire in Charleston, S. C., on the 17th, destroyed $200,000 worth of property.

THE Cologne Cathedral, which was begun six hundred years ago, was completed last week.

A RECENT land slide in British Columbia has dammed the Thompson River to a hight of 120 feet.

THE cashier of the Treasury Department of Boston has disappeared with $82,000 of the city funds.

A PRIEST in Tampa, Florida, was recently fined ten dollars for shooting at a party of young serenaders.

THE Dead Letter office received nearly three and a half million letters and packages during the past year.

A BALTIMORE man recently shot his wife because the month-old baby in her arms would not stop crying.

SEVERAL men were killed by an accident in a Nova Scotia coal mine a few days ago. They were buried by a cave.

A SEVERE storm swept over Lake Michigan a few days ago. Two steamers are missing, and a serious loss of life is feared.

AN extensiv fire occurred in San Francisco on the 17th. Many houses, several lumber yards, and two schooners were destroyed.

A LITTLE German boy in Trenton, N. J., was recently shot for cheering for Hancock. The political feeling is growing very bitter.

MOODY and Sankey are on their way to California. They think that the most profitable field in which to labor for the Almighty—dollar.

SNOW storms are raging in Minnesota and Dakota. On the 16th, trains on the Southern Minnesota Railroad were blockaded by snow drifts ten feet deep.

THE Episcopalians of this country, following the lead of the Catholics, hav commenced to denounce the "godless public schools," and are about to establish parochial schools.

A MORMON elder with thirty missionaries in charge sailed from this port on Tuesday last to convert the benighted Europeans to the true faith as found in the book of Mormon.

REPORTS from South America state that a Chilian army thirty thousand strong is marching on Lima. The attempted mediation by the American minister to Peru was a failure.

INDIANA and Ohio went Republican in the recent state elections. It is said by the Democrats that Republican money flowed like water, and that repeaters were imported by the thousand.

A REPUBLICAN negro club in Wilmington, Del., recently attacked with shotguns, razors, and stones a peaceable Democratic procession, wounding twelve Democrats, a policeman, and a reporter.

SEVEN hundred thousand salmon eggs were recently shipped to Europe from this country. The Fish Commissioners are doing good service for mankind by stocking the lakes and rivers of the world with good food fish.

THE Czar has offered to the heir-apparent the co-regency of Russia, transferring to him the reins of government. The Czar will retire permanently to his palace at Livadia. The Nihilists hav frightened him out of his throne.

A UNITED STATES revenue cutter brings the intelligence from Alaska that on the island of St. Lawrence, out of a population of seven hundred, five hundred hav starved to death. The nativs had become demoralized by rum, which had been introduced by fur traders, the only persons that visited the island.

A MIRACLE mongery has been started in this country. The Passionist Fathers in Hoboken N. J., hav imported the bones of some old saint, and after putting them in good working order they hav commenced operations on the ills and tills of the faithful. The miracles already reported, though unverifiable, are being used as advertisements.

THE TRUTH SEEKER.

D. M. BENNETT, Editor.

PUBLISHED EVERY SATURDAY, AT $3.00 PER YEAR.

The largest and cheapest Radical Journal published in Europe or America, containing nearly seven hundred square inches more of reading matter than any other journal of its kind.

Entered at the Post-Office at New York, N. Y., as Second-Class Matter.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1880.

Letter from Europe.—No. 10.

UP THE RHINE.

OFT-REMEMBERED FRIENDS: I left Brussels on Tuesday morning, and before it is out of mind I will mention the splendid Hall of Justice being erected there. Of course, it is for the courts and the officials and appliances for obtaining justice. It is an observable feature, however, that the quality and purity of justice is not always in proportion to the expense of the edifice in which it is dispensed; it is to be feared, rather, that the reverse is more likely to be true. True justice is not partial to gilded palaces or marble walls. The Brussels Hall of Justice covers eight acres of ground, and has already cost 50,000,000 francs, or $10,000,000. May the citizens of Belgique obtain in return a good article of justice and in due proportion to the amount thus expended! I fear, however, that Belgique justice is too much like what it is in other countries—against the poor man. I was informed that a man has to pay forty francs, or eight dollars, before he can have the privilege to vote for his legislators and other officials for whom voting is allowed. The Belgian laborers and mechanics have the privilege of toiling for low wages and paying pretty high prices for the necessaries of life. They also have the privilege of contributing freely to keep up the show of royalty and majesty so dear to the privileged class.

I think there are fewer idlers in Belgium than in any country I ever visited. They toil steadily, and the women are not laggards or mere playthings. I have often seen them working in the fields, running milk carts, carrying heavy burdens, and doing much that women in America do not do. I do not like to see this. While women have the same right to be industrious that men have, there are many kinds of hard labor that seem improper for them to work at. A larger proportion of them are shopkeepers than with us. I noticed that the tobacco and cigar stores, the book stores, the shoe stores, groceries, bars, etc., are largely tended by women. They are decidedly a business, useful class.

The women of Brussels look healthy and robust. They are fully developed, and tend to embonpoint or fleshiness. While they are very fair and bright looking, a very small proportion are really beautiful. Their features, as a rule, cannot be called fine.

There are far fewer brunettes among them than with the Parisian women. There is far more of the Dutch and German element perceptible among them than with the French, with less of the ultra politeness, smoothness, and grace. In a word, the Belgians are industrious, cheerful, virtuous, and happy; but far too much the slaves of the priests, the rule of whom is imperative and universal. There is not much Puritanism in the Catholic church, which has the entire country under its dominion; but its power is absolute, and must be acknowledged and very generously sustained. I fear the people are too willing to ever jog along in the deep ruts of superstition and old customs rather than to be self-reliant, enterprising, and independent. The old way suits them very well, and they are not anxious to try new experiments.

The tramways or street railroads of Brussels seem more like ours than any I have met with. The cars are about the size of ours, and are but one story high. The fares are low, and vary in price according to distance. You tell the conductor how far you wish to go and he tells you the number of centimes you have to pay and gives you a billet as a receipt that you have paid.

It had rained heavily the day and night before, and the ground in the country seemed thoroughly soaked with water, and much of the hay still out in the fields looked very black. Cologne is about six hours' ride from Brussels. The country up to the Prussian frontier is of the same even, fertile, lovely character that I hav before described. Every square rod of the ground is under the highest state of cultivation. I noticed several large, old fashioned windmills at work, of the same character that Don Quixote and Sancho Panza attacked so vigorously. They remind one of the middle ages.

We passed through many thrifty-looking villages and towns; first, Louvain, an old town of 33,000 inhabitants. Next, Liege, with 116,000 inhabitants, a great manufacturing place, and called the Birmingham of Belgium. Its manufactures are largely iron, fire-arms, broadcloths, woolen goods, carriages, jewelry, tobacco, soap, hats, leather, etc. Railways, canals, and rivers aid the development of the commercial prosperity of the town. It was founded in the sixth century. It suffered greatly from the Normans in the ninth; in the tenth its bishops were made sovereign princes, it was surrounded by walls, and became one of the most wonderful cities of Europe, but the bishops made a great deal of trouble, as they always do, and fierce dissensions arose between them and the people. Sir Walter Scott gives a very graphic description of all this in his "Quentin Durward." To repress the ardor of the liberty-loving citizens, Charles the Bold devastated the city in 1468, slew 52,000 inhabitants, and drove the rest into the forest of the Ardennes. He then set fire to the city; it was burning seven weeks; every house was destroyed save the convents and churches—the least useful of all. It was rebuilt and became a handsome, populous city. It was bombarded five days by Boufiers in 1649, and in 1702 it was taken by the Duke of Marlborough of England. In 1789 its inhabitants rebelled against their bishops for the last time. For a time it was the capital of a French department. After the peace it belonged to the Netherlands till it took an active part in helping Belgium to shake off the Dutch yoke, in 1830, since which it has prospered more than ever before.

It boasts a cathedral with fine paintings by great artists, among which are The Assumption of the Virgin; The Four Doctors; Baptism of Christ; A splendid Dead Jesus; numerous unhappy looking saints painted in the most approved doleful style, with an elaborately carved pulpit. Among the relics, which it is expected no one of the faithful will distrust, is some wood of the true cross; embroidered vestments belonging to some of the old saints; a silver rosary of Elizabeth, sister of Louis XVI.; a Byzantine painting, Virgin and Child—a rare subject—a silver bust of St. Lambert, which is said to have cost 500,000 francs; also a statuette of St. George and the dragon, presented by the pious and very religious Charles the Bold to make some amends for the damage he did to the cathedral, when he murdered 52,000, drove the rest to the forest, and burnt their city. That present to the bishop is supposed to have set him all right with the Virgin and Jesus, and he may almost be considered as a canonized saint himself. There are twenty-nine churches in Liege; there were once forty, which shows a gain. The pious tourist by visiting them will find virgins, baby gods, crucified gods, agonizing saints, etc., to his heart's content.

We changed cars at Verviers, a town of 34,000 inhabitants, and the seat of the cloth trade of Belgium. Dolhain, a suburb of Limburg, once the capital of the duchy, is a thriving place, while the latter is little more than a heap of ruins, a sad memorial of the desolations of war, having been sacked, besieged, and burnt at different times. From Liege, and even before, the country is much more broken and uneven. We passed through numerous tunnels. The road must have been very expensive in this locality. But it seemed almost a relief to look once more on hills, ridges, and piles of rocks. It was interesting as we passed, by tunnel, through ridge after ridge, with the narrow, thrifty valleys between, and the cosy, quaint old villages nestling down between the hills, and the streams which meandered charmingly along as best they could, when it would seem they must be dammed.

Herbesthal is the first little village we stopped at after crossing the Prussian frontier. We were now in Germany. The examination of baggage was very slight. One official came to the compartment where six of us were, looked at our satchels, saw a paper parcel attached to one; thinking it might be tobacco or cigars, he opened it, but finding it only a dirty shirt he looked no further and left us.

After crossing into Germany the soil seemed much poorer, heavier, and more clayey than in Belgium, consequently the crops were light and scanty. In some places it seemed hardly worth working. The little villages and the buildings looked old, grim, and cheerless. But these appearances improved as we rode along; the country became more level, the land and the crops grew better. The large fields of cabbages we passed told us we had entered the land where the people loved sauer kraut. The men looked different, more stolid and immovable. The uniforms worn by the station-men and soldiers is different from the French and Belgian. I fancied I did not like it so well. The men did not seem so lively and cheerful.

Aix-la-Chapelle, called by the Germans, Aachen, is the first considerable German town we reached. It contains 80,000 inhabitants. It has the honor of being the birthplace of that great Christian butcher, Charlemagne. He also died there. Within the seven centuries after his death forty-eight of his successors were crowned there, and many imperial diets and ecclesiastical councils held. The cathedral is said to be the oldest in Germany, part of it being the octagonal Byzantine "chapel" from which the city is named, erected by Charlemagne, 796–804, and consecrated with extraordinary pomp by Pope Leo III. The octagonal "chapel," now called the nave, is surrounded by columns of granite and porphyry. Under the brazen chandelier, presented by Frederick Barbarossa, is a slab of marble inscribed "Carolo Magna," denoting the tomb of Charlemagne. It is claimed that three centuries after his death his tomb was opened by Otho III. and the body was found crowned and seated on a marble throne with all the insignia of royalty about him, and a copy of the gospels before him. All have the privilege of believing this pious tale who want to; but if they found a marble throne, with Charlemagne seated upon it, it is singular they did not preserve the entire lot, and add the same to the wonderful relics which they now have. That copy of the gospels might have been more reliable and harmonious than those which the church handed down to us, and might have saved some of the intense quarrels that have arisen over the current version, and perhaps have saved the great expense of getting up a new translation with the thousands of changes, as has been done in London within the last ten years.

East of the octagon is the choir, 114 feet in hight. It was building from 1353 to 1412. There are five stained glass windows of modern execution, some statues, and a wonderful pulpit, with elaborate and fine ivory carving, precious stones, and gold. The gospel dispensed from that pulpit ought to be a little superior to the common article, especially as they charge a mark and a half, or thirty-seven and a half cents, to see it. The sacristy, or treasury, of this old cathedral contains the lesser and greater relics, which the faithful worshipers regard with great reverence. Among the lesser relics, for which one thaler is required to see, are shown the leathern girdle of Christ, portions of the true cross upon which he was crucified, the girdle of the Virgin, the sponge that was filled with vinegar, a lock of the Virgin's hair, some bits of Aaron's wonderful rod, besides other remarkable objects, among them the skull of Charlemagne and his arm bone and hunting-horn.

What are called the greater relics are shown to the faithful but once in seven years. The seven years will expire in 1881. So I am one year too early to see the cotton robe of Mary, worn the night Jesus was born (Could they show the shirt worn by the Holy Ghost it would be worth waiting a year to see), the wrappings and swaddling-clothes placed around Jesus when he was first born, the cloth on which John the Baptist's head was laid, the scarf worn by Jesus when he was crucified, etc. It is very easy for those of much faith to believe that these things are the veritable articles they are claimed to be, because it is asserted that Charlemagne received them from the patriarch of Jerusalem and Haroun al-Raschid, as though that Mohammedan ruler would take any special interest in preserving the swaddling clothes of Jesus, even could it have been possible for them to have been transmitted from the time of his birth, through all the changes, wars, sieges, sackings, burnings, and destruction which took place at Jerusalem and through Palestine. If it was claimed they had the shirt worn by the Holy Ghost it would be just as true as all the rest of it. The precious metals, precious stones, etc., treasured up in the sacristy are doubtless genuine, and were probably obtained by the priests from some parties who had stolen them or obtained them without giving value for them, perhaps for pardoning sin or insuring them or their friends safe egress from purgatory. The other churches in Aix-la-Chapelle have old and valuable paintings, but it is unnecessary to name them.

At Cologne, on the Rhine, is a very celebrated cathedral. We had four or five hours in the town. I say we, for in the cars I fell in with two gentlemen from the north of Ireland (Belfast) on a trip up the Rhine, and as we found it easier and pleasanter to converse together than with the natives we remained together. These gentlemen are not Catholics, and I was agreeably surprised to learn they had no more faith in the shams of the church than I have.

Cologne is an ancient and well-fortified city—the largest in the Rhenish province of Prussia. It is built in the form of a crescent, and is inclosed with walls nearly seven miles in circuit and surrounded with ramparts and deep ditches. It is very irregularly built, and many of the streets are narrow and ill paved. Great improvements are said to have been made within the past few years. It contains 325 streets, 33 squares, and about 150,000 inhabitants, of whom about 15,000 are Protestants. It was originally a Roman settlement, called Colonia Agrippina by the Emperor Claudius in honor of his wife Agrippina. Here Vilellius was crowned and Trajan assumed the purple. In 330 it was taken by the Franks, who twenty-five years after were ejected by Julian, and they did not regain possession of it till the fifth century. In 870 it was annexed to the German empire. In the thirteenth century it was one of the richest cities in the Hanseatic League and had an army of 30,000 men. It had a large commercial trade, especially with England. Subsequently it was subject to many vicissitudes, both civil and religious. Within the last fifty years it has gradually become prosperous. It is connected, by an iron bridge, nearly 1,400 feet long, over the Rhine, with Deutz, a town of 15,000 inhabitants. On the bridge are equestrian statues of Frederick William IV. and William I. There is also another bridge connecting the two cities by boats, which is something of a novelty.

The cathedral is considered one of the wonders of the world, and is a magnificent specimen of Gothic architecture. It was commenced in 1248, and proceeded slowly till the sixteenth century, when it was left in an incomplete state till 1816. In that year Frederick William III. had the work minutely surveyed, and an enormous sum of money was expended on its restoration. In 1842 Frederick William IV. continued the restoration, and since that time, we were told by the guide, 1,000,000 marks have been annually expended upon it, and the magnificent and enormous tower is not completed yet; the scaffolding is still up and skilled stonecutters are at work upon it cutting and carving. When done, the towers will be 500 feet high, with much open work in the spires. The entire edifice is an enormous structure, and it is quite a journey to walk around it. It is a perfect marvel to view the exquisite artistic work done around its various entrances, which are tall Gothic arches. The facades over the entrances are most rich in carvings of statues, large and small. The guide told us that on the outside and inside of the cathedral are 500 life-size statues and 5,000 small ones. I was not disposed to doubt him, and took his word rather than to count them. I cannot give an adequate idea of the amount of work done in the carving of stone on the exterior alone.

The interior of the cathedral is cruciform in shape, with double aisles in the nave and single in the transept, and the whole is studded with one hundred and four magnificent stone columns, many of them very large and compound, several in one, or so cut as to look like clusters of columns. One of those columns alone cost more to make than a good ordinary house. The length of the cathedral is 400 feet, the nave is 50 feet wide and 150 feet in hight; the aisles are 30 feet wide and 60 feet high.

The stained glass windows are a marvel in their way and cost fortunes of money. In the south aisle the subjects are John the Baptist, the Nativity, Last Supper, Death of Christ, Pentecost, Martyrdom of St. Stephen. Lower down are the four great prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel; also the four evangelists and the four doctors of the church. The gorgeous coloring and splendid workmanship of all these windows are remarkable. They were presented by King Lewis I., of Bavaria, in 1848. On the other side the stained windows date from the fifteenth century. The subjects are of the same pious character, and need not be repeated. The execution is considered to be most excellent. One on the left is very curious, representing the genealogy of Christ. Adam, in the costume of an emperor, is seen on his back; the green fields of Paradise are shown. The human race is represented by a huge tree, and the branches show the supposed crowned ancestors of the Virgin Mary. On one branch is David with a harp. If he had been represented making love to the fair Bathsheba perhaps it would have been quite as appropriate. Solomon appears enthroned, but his seven hundred wives and three hundred concubines are not presented. In the top of the tree is an open flower disclosing the Virgin Mary and child, which was a favorite way the Egyptians had of picturing Isis and child, which is undoubtedly one of the principal sources whence the Christians borrowed the idea.

In looking at these expensive pictures, and remembering what a gross falsehood the whole thing perpetuates, we at once realize the gross imposition that is played upon the credulous beholder and the great waste of money in handing such lies down to posterity.

This vast cathedral, with its works of art of great expense, cost enough in labor and treasure to build a thousand comfortable homes and five hundred good schoolhouses and furnish competent teachers for a thousand years. How much more sensibly the money would thus have been expended rather than in perpetuating such bald-faced and ridiculous falsehoods! And all this expense and cost thus thrown away came at last from the working classes, who toil laboriously, feed on the commonest food, and live in the most uncomfortable homes. The dukes and princes who have given much toward the stained windows, fine paintings, and other parts of this cathedral, earned not a dollar of the money themselves, but by oppression ground it out of their toiling subjects and robbed them of the money unjustly wrung from them. The wealth of this world has been produced by the labor of the toiling millions.

Thus have the rich cathedrals of Europe been built. Much, doubtless, has been contributed by the devout members of the churches, and often, too, the means they could ill spare, as the fine cathedrals and churches in our own country are built with the forced contributions from the Mickies and Biddies, which they grudgingly shell out to meet the demands of the priest and save their sculs from purgatory, or obtain pardon for sins committed. This very simple thing of securing absolution for evil deeds has materially helped to build many churches and to support many fat bishops and priests in ease and luxury. Well, if people will continue to be fools, perhaps they ought to pay for the privilege.

The third window represents the Adoration of the Shepherds; the south transept, the Conversion of St. Paul—in my humble but honest opinion, two most arrant falsehoods. If Jesus was born in the cave or stable at Bethlehem, on a certain night a little over 1880 years ago, I do not believe that the shepherds who were watching their flocks on the hills of the surrounding country knew anything about it, or cared anything about it, or that the angels made it their business to give them information upon the subject. All that affair was an afterthought, made up undoubtedly by some priest with a fertile imagination, who knew how to embellish a tale and make it attractive to the ignorant dupes who were asked to believe it. As to the conversion of St. Paul I exercise the liberty of believing that it did not come about by any such direct or compulsory interposition and command of heaven. Had it been so, the story would have been told twice alike in the nearly half a doz n ways it is narrated; besides, that is not the way in which heaven does its business.

The choir is embellished with statues of Christ, the Virgin, the twelve apostles, and eight fresco mosaics admirably executed by Steinle. On the walls are tapestries, kept covered with screens. They represent the seven sacraments, and are the work of the ladies of Cologne. The stalls and confessionals are elaborately carved, and are the work of the fifteenth century. The chapels of the choir contain many memorials interesting to the credulous and pious.

In the south transept is a huge statue of St. Christopher bearing the child; but there is not the slightest probability that St. Christopher ever bore the child, or had the least knowledge of him when he was a child. What earthly use can there be in representing those old falsehoods thousands of times over. No. 1 is the chapel of the Virgin, with rich stained glass windows and Overbeck's "Assumption." It is indeed assumption for any painter, or any priest, or anybody else to undertake to tell how the Virgin looked when she held an interview with the angel Gabriel or with the Holy Ghost, if such an improbable event ever took place. No. 2 is the chapel of St. Stephen, and probably is about as much use to him as half a dozen such in the moon would be to "old Mother Hubbard, who went to the cupboard." No. 3 is the chapel of St. Michael, with rich carving of the fifteenth century. Perhaps it is very proper for St. Michael to have a chapel, if anybody knows who he was. No. 4 is the chapel of St. Agnes, who, let it be hoped, was a good little girl. This is held to be ornamented by the artistic work of Stephan, who lived about 1400, representing both the "Assumption," and the "Adoration." Possibly Stephan knew all about it. No. 5 is the chapel of the Three Kings, and contains nothing remarkable. No. 6 is the chapel of St. John, and contains the tomb of Conrad Hochstellen, the founder of the cathedral, also paintings by artists who have been dead hundreds of years. No. 7 is the Maternus chapel, and contains an old tomb and some rare old paintings. No. 8 is Engelbert chapel, and formerly contained the bones of Archbishop Engelbert, who first proposed the building of the cathedral, but who was assassinated in 1225. His bones were removed to the Treasury.

The Treasury is especially rich. It is said to contain the skulls of the three wise men of the East, who are said to have paid their respects to the infant Jesus, when he was first born; though it is not stated how long after that visit to Jesus they died, who buried them, or who, hundreds of years after, knew which their skulls were or where to find them. That the Treasury has three skulls which pass for the skulls of the three wise men, cannot be denied. For all anybody knows, however, they may be the skulls of robbers or murderers. Only the backs of these skulls are exposed to view, and are covered with precious stones. A high price was formerly charged to see these skulls, but it has been reduced. It still, however, requires a price to see them. I cannot tell you about all there is in this old Cologne cathedral. It would take too long, if even I knew it all. I have told enough. I will state, however, that I saw a crucified savior, life-size, suspended away up in the nave, nearly a hundred feet from the floor. It struck me they ought to let him down. It seems cruel to keep on crucifying their God in that way and keep him suspended in the air year after year, and century after century.

But it was in the church of St. Ursula, about five minutes walk from the cathedral, that we saw the greatest wonders of all. St. Ursula, according to the story they tell of her, was a very remarkable young woman. She is said to have been born on the British Isle, a long time ago, in three hundred and something, or early in the next century, and was allied to the royal family then reigning over that then barbarous country. She was a very excellent young woman and very religious. She did not do anything bad. She was a virgin. There were a great number of virgins in those days—more probably than now. She gathered together eleven thousand virgins, and brave captain that she was, led them at that savage and warlike era of Europe all the way to Rome on a holy mission to the Pope, and to show the good vicegerent how many virgins she had. She performed the journey in the most pious manner and had got back on her return as far as Cologne, where she stopped to get a bottle of Cologne water, or for something else, when the wicked Huns, under their wicked chief Attila, who had no proper respect for virgins, put them all to death in the most cruel manner, and just because they were Christian virgins. That was extremely hard on the virgins, and the question rises right here whether it would not have been better for them to have given up the virgin business and taken honest husbands and gone to housekeeping and raising families, as good, worthy women have done in all ages of the world. But they did not do it, and they have their reward. The bodies of these unfortunate eleven thousand virgins were buried right there where the wicked Huns killed them, and on the very spot where the church of St. Ursula now stands. I tell you this just as the pious man told me; if you disbelieve me you must disbelieve him also. I have proof that he told me so—the two men from Belfast. They, too, listened to the story, but I noticed they entertained some doubts about all those eleven thousand girls being virgins, and how it was decided that they were all virgins, and more especially after those savage, wicked Huns paid them a visit. These two men from Belfast even went so far as to say that they did not believe it would be possible at this age of the world to find eleven thousand virgins, unless Irish virgins were taken, and even then they had doubts. They seemed decidedly of the opinion that Ireland is the best country for virgins of any in Europe, and the only one capable of turning out eleven thousand. I ventured the suggestion that possibly the other countries might be able to do something in that line if virgins of a very young age were counted.

But, my friends, let me remind you that you must not doubt this remarkable virgin story, for I saw the skulls and I saw the bones, and will here give my testimony that I could see no indication in the skulls or the bones but what they were the skulls and bones of veritable virgins, and this I will stick to to my dying day. The first skull to which my attention was called was that of St. Ursula herself, though how, after eleven thousand virgins had been slain all in a heap, could her skull be identified and kept separate from all the rest? Possibly it was done by inspiration, the same as many otherwise impossible incidents and strange occurrences which have been transmitted to the world. The finger of St. Ursula, in a costly little casket, was pointed out to me, also her arm bone in another receptacle. I had no grounds upon which I could say that these bones were not the skull, the finger, and the arm of St. Ursula the virgin, and I was not reckless enough to make the charge, no matter what I believed. Then the skulls, the arm bones, the rib bones, and thousands of other bones were shown me. How could I possibly doubt with the bones right there before my eyes, and when I could and did lay my hands right upon them? The bones were just as real, and perhaps in as great numbers, as those I had seen in the anatomical museum in Paris. That they were real bones in both instances I have not the least doubt, though I will not undertake to say what cemeteries were robbed to procure them.

The skulls of these virgins are kept in cases against the wall of the sacristy of the church, a room perhaps fifty by twenty-five feet. These cases are divided into compartments, one for each skull, and a glass door before each. And on the walls where no cases are, the bones of those unfortunate virgins are ingeniously arranged compactly in curious designs and conceits, also in words and sentences. It was the first display of the kind I ever saw made with human bones. I marveled as I beheld them. The room is high and the bones are fastened to the walls all the way up. It is the bony part of the church, and thus is the hard fate of those poor virgins commemorated.

Strange as all this was to behold, my friends, they were not all the strange things I saw in that strange room. It is called the "Golden Chamber" from being so plentifully gilt on the cases and wherever there were no bones to prevent. The pious man, who, for the sum of three marks, showed us these sacred things, pointed out to us the shrine of St. Ursula. It contains more of her bones and the remains of her undergarment, which she wore at the time of her sorrowful massacre. This shrine was erected in the twelfth century, and was plentifully adorned with beaten silver, emeralds, and gems. Also the shrine of St. Actherius and St. Valerius, two of the very worthy virgin companions of St. Ursula. It contains the bones of these two saints, which were probably pointed out six hundred years after they had been buried in the same mysterious manner in which the bones of St. Ursula had been designated. Here, too, is the shrine of St. Hippolytus, who was converted to Christianity about the year 250.

You can hardly tell how much good it does me to see the shrines and statues of these dear old "saints." If I should change into a devout, believing Christian, I shall attribute it to these statues, these shrines, these saints, and these bones. The change has not commenced yet.

We also saw what we were told is the head of St. Artimia, a very youthful virgin, on whose skull traces of the club-blows of Attila's vile horde are still to be perceived. Again, the head of Cordula, who, it is claimed, had arrived at mature age. Possibly she was not a virgin. Still, again, the head of St. Benedicta, split by dreadful blows of the sword. Still more, we were shown a large cylinder of crystal, the foot and cover being of gilt metal, which, we were assured, contains earth mixed with blood, which was taken from the sepulchers of the virgins, saints, and martyrs when the bones of these virgins were exhumed in 1155, seven hundred years after they were slain and buried. We were also shown the hair-net of St. Ursula, which, tradition says—and tradition ought not to lie—was found in her sepulcher near her head. It is kept in an ivory casket. Who can doubt? We were likewise shown a foot of St. Ursula, placed in a beautiful casket of ivory. Had they shown us three of her feet, I presume I would have looked on in silent wonder. The iron point of the arrow is also preserved by which the dear saint was killed. Who preserved it during all these seven hundred years was not explained. Pieces of garments and underclothes in which the body of St. Ursula was wrapped are carefully preserved in a cylinder. How they could be seven hundred years in the earth and not decompose is a little mysterious; but remember, "all things are possible with God." A large, square, polished rock-crystal, encased in silver gilt, contains the hair of one of the virgins, clotted with blood. Just think of it. Many other relics were shown us in this Golden Chamber, very remarkable of course, but I will not detain you to listen to a description of them.

I must not, however, fail to call your attention to some still more remarkable things I have not yet mentioned, and I know you will agree with me as to how wonderful it is that these things have been so miraculously preserved. These things were pointed out to us with much solemnity, and the German who did so point them out evidently believed every word about these holy relics. We were shown some of the wood of the identical cross upon which Jesus was crucified. We were shown a portion of the whips with which he was scourged. We were shown two thorns from the crown which was placed on Jesus' head. And what is equally remarkable, we were shown one of the identical six alabaster pots used at the wedding in Cana of Galilee, and one in which Jesus performed his first miracle by turning water into wine for a lot of people already drunk, and which Matthew, Mark, and Luke knew nothing about. Just realize it, dear friends. I have been permitted to see one of the very water pots which Jesus used when engaged in the wine business—when those evangelists named were not permitted to know anything whatever about it! I trust I duly appreciate my great privilege, and that you duly appreciate it also. How can I doubt, how can you doubt any longer? Here I have seen some of the whips Jesus was scourged with. I have seen some of the thorns that were taken from his crown. I have seen some of the wood of the cross upon which he was crucified. I have seen one of the water pots in which he turned water into wine. Yes, I have seen all these things, and can you expect me to doubt any longer? But ye of little faith, you may ask me how I know all these things are surely so. Verily, verily, I say unto you, you know it precisely as we know all that the Bible contains, because somebody says it is so. Have not the bishops and priests who have presided over the church of Ursula for seven hundred years said these things were so? Did not that German man who took three marks from us also say it was so? Is not that precisely the same kind of evidence we have of the stories that are in the Bible, and that that book is the word of God. Now you may go on doubting as long as you please, but as for me I shall believe what these holy men have said about these thorns, whips, pieces of the cross, and the wine pots as equally as true as the big stories in the Bible. Are they not handed down to us by the same class of holy men and priests? Is not one class of stories just as probable as the other? Then what more do you want? What more can you ask for? Cannot one set of men tell the truth just as well as another, and is not one set just as likely to tell a falsehood as another? You ought to think of these things before it is too late. Be like the wise virgins, but not like the foolish ones who got their heads knocked off by the Huns.

As for myself, I must say the sight of these holy relics and the statements which the pious German gave me had an effect upon me. They whetted my appetite for more marvelous things. I inquired of him, confidentially, if he had not a pint or so of the wine that came out of that water pot, that I might judge its quality. He said not, and he presumed it was all drank up on the spot. I wished to know if he had not some others of those holy souvenirs of the far distant past. I inquired if he would oblige me by showing me some of the aprons which Adam and Eve made after they partook of that fruit from the tree of knowledge. He said no. I asked if he had a specimen of that fruit or a piece of the wood of the tree upon which it grew. He answered, "Nein," the German word for no. If he could let me see the serpent's head which was later on bruised by the heel of the woman's seed? Nein. If he had any part of the sword with which the angel guarded the gate to the Garden of Eden? Nein. Any of the sweat of Adam's and Eve's brows, with which they ate their bread? Nein. Any of the wood of Noah's ark, or even a pint of the water which helped make his flood? Nein. A piece of the rainbow which he saw when the flood was over? Nein. Any of the manna which the children of Israel ate? Nein. A spoke of Pharaoh's chariot wheel lost in the Red Sea? Nein. Any pieces of the ram's horns which blew down the walls of Jericho? Nein. The letter which David wrote to Joab about putting Uriah to death after he had betrayed Uriah's beautiful wife? Nein. Any of the paws of the two she bears which tore up the forty-two children? Nein. A few stray hairs from the crown of Elisha's head? Nein. Any remnants of Elijah's mantle which he left behind when he went up in the fiery chariot? Nein. A small piece, only, of the fish's tail which swallowed Jonah? Nein. A shred or two of the clothes worn by the three holy children when they were cast into the fiery furnace? Nein. Some of the hair of the manes of the lions which would not eat Daniel? Nein. There were several other things I would gladly have inquired for and seen had his replies encouraged me. But his continuous nein, nein, threw a damper over my laudable spirit of investigation, and incidentally reminded me of the answers of the German woman who had once traveled in England. She could speak very little English, but an elderly gentleman, wishing to make himself sociable, asked her if she was married or had a husband. She answered, "Nein." "What," said he, "nine husbands! What a singular woman you must be! Have you children?" "Nein." "O my God in heaven! What a woman! Nine children—one by each husband! Oh dear, oh dear, what a woman to be sure!"

When this pious German in the church of St. Ursula was unable to show me the relics of Jewish antiquity I wished to look upon, he seemed desirous to serve me in some way, and, with brightening eyes, looked at me and said he could show me more bones, and then led me into the body of the church and pointed to several stone tombs full of virgins' bones, and to some thousands more of virgins' skulls in similar cases attached to the walls of the church. He also opened doors into the very walls of the church, which he assured me were four feet thick, and showed me virgins' bones till I was fully satisfied, and which he asserted were two feet in breadth, six feet in hight, and how many in length I will not pretend to say. I did not count these bones nor the skulls to see if the eleven thousand virgins were honestly represented, for I had no time, and besides it is probable I would not have found them all there had I counted, for it is stated that considerable numbers of these virgins' bones were sent round to bless other churches and cathedrals in other parts of the Lord's vineyard. There seems to have been a plenty of those bones to go around and bountifully supply the home demand besides.

It may by some be regarded as a pity that there is no history to corroborate this remarkable story of the virgins' bones; but what need has a person of faith with such trivial affairs as proofs? If one has faith enough to be saved by it, he has no need of proofs. He can believe anything that his priest tells him to.

I need not say more about the church of St. Ursula. It is rather plain and old-looking, but contains statues, paintings, etc. It was built in the eleventh century, when, in digging for the foundation for the church, all those virgins' bones were found. It was called "The Church of the Holy Virgins" for several centuries, but the name was finally changed to that of their captain, St. Ursula.

After all this viewing of the old bones and holy relics I felt that I needed sweetening up a little, and went to what purported on the sign to be the "real, genuine, original store of the Johannes Farina," who made cologne water hundreds of years ago, and purchased a bottle, so I could feel sure that for once in my life I had had a bottle of genuine cologne. But afterward I noticed a sign on another store, which emphatically said, "The only genuine Johannes Farina." And then I feared I had been swindled, after all. On looking around I saw there were several who sold the only genuine Farina cologne, and I dared not buy any more, feeling certain that the article I bought is no better than I have many times prepared myself. Possibly the religious relics and the perfumery of the ancient city of Cologne are equally reliable.

After viewing the city as much as we wished we took cars for Bonn, an old town of 28,000 inhabitants, some twenty-five miles up the Rhine, where we remained over night. It is an old Roman town, and has seen its share of troubles and vicissitudes in the wars that for hundreds of years devastated all this country. In the morning we went out into the Market Square, immediately in front of our hotel, and got acquainted with the market women who stand there on the pavement from 6 A. M till 1 P. M., with the baskets of fruit, vegetables, potatoes, etc., which they bring on their heads and sell from without tables or a roof over them. When it rains some of them raise a tent, and some of them go without covering. We purchased some plums, pears, apples, and grapes, which were better than I have seen in some places, but so far as I have gone I cannot see that European fruit equals American. Plums do pretty well; apples are very indifferent; peaches almost non est. What they have hereabouts are raised under glass or in very warm, sheltered locations. Melons are seldom seen. I have not seen a watermelon since I saw one on the steamer coming from New York. I cannot help thinking that just at this season New York is literally overrun with melons and peaches. Grapes are good here, but they are dear, quite as much so as with us at home. I did not expect that in this land of vines where hundreds of thousands of acres are devoted to the grape culture. I have seen no grapes that cost less than ten cents a pound of our money, and some double that. I presume it is rather early for grapes in this locality to be ripe yet, and that the beautiful white ones we find here are brought from the south. I am told that the poor peasants who raise grapes for wine-making for a livlihood realize only about one cent a pound for their crop.

I find another difficulty in a change of money since entering Germany. I was getting rather familiar with francs and centimes, but now they are put aside, they will not even pass here; it is now all marks and pennings. A mark contains 100 pennings, and three marks make a thaler. A mark equals a franc and twenty-five centimes and is very nearly the value of twenty-five cents American money. I am rather amused to see how persistently the fruit-dealers refuse to take Belgian francs, sous, and centimes. The change of language is also a little bit troublesome. I had not got to be a good French scholar but had picked up a few words and learned to understand a little; now that is all thrown aside, and Ich Spreche Deutch. I know a few words of German and might have known many more had I improved my opportunities in years gone by when brought in contact with German people. But I never tried to learn it, thinking I would have no particular use for it, and now regret it; for I cannot help seeing how difficult it is for the natives here to understand my Dutch, though I speak slowly and in a loud voice; they look blank, shake their heads and say nix fur sta. With all respect for my German friends, and for the German nation generally, I must say I do not like the German as well as the French. The latter is soft and euphonious, while the former is harsh, guttural, and jaw-breaking; it sounds as though it must almost hurt to speak it. The difference between the two languages is very well exemplified in the words for yes. The French oui (we) is soft and sweet, but the German ja (yar) is coarse and homely. Just think of a beautiful young lady saying "yar," every half minute in conversation; but the we, we is decidedly pleasant. But the Germans do pronounce their words to some degree as they are spelt, while the French do not pronounce a single word as it is spelt. The rule seems to be to get just as far from the spelling as possible. Just think of oui being pronounced we and centimes, sonteems. The Germans have a very reprehensible custom of trying to get the whole alphabet into a single word; I have seen several words that contain between twenty and thirty letters. I invariably skip such hard words; they are of no use to me.

I need not tell you that the French are infinitely more polite and polished than the Germans, but perhaps not so honest or good-hearted. The French are admirably fitted for dancing-masters, while the Germans go in for the solid things of life, like packing away sauer kraut and drinking lager.

The soil of Germany does not, so far as I have gone, appear to be equal to that of England, France, or Belgium. It seems more thin and heavy, and in some places light and sandy, though I have seen much good land in Germany, and highly cultivated. I have seen here more mountains and long ranges of hills than in any other parts of Europe I have visited, and sometimes the landscapes remind me much of America.

Bonn is a quiet, solid old town, and has been made the residence of many English and Americans who wished to pass a few months in Germany. Most of the streets are narrow and irregular, but it has beautiful promenades with shade trees and lovely flowers.

It is here we took the steamer for "up the Rhine," one of the most pleasing and lovely rides I ever enjoyed. It was a pleasant day, we had a plenty of company aboard (a good percentage of English), and we had a fine view of the magnificent scenery which like a panorama spread before us as we glided pleasantly up the beautiful Rhine, which has its source in the Alps (St. Gothard), runs through the country of the Grisons, enters the Lake of Constance (1,344 feet above the level of the sea), and thence flows 870 miles through one of the most lovely and variegated valleys in the world, and is navigable 570 miles from its mouth in Holland. This valley is famous in history, and is noted for deeds of valor and blood in the centuries that have passed away. It is, however, for its picturesque beauty, for its castles, and fortresses, and old cathedrals, for its historic and legendary associations, that the Rhine has become so familiar and dear to travelers and readers. Said Lord Lytton, "As the Rhine flows so flows the national genius, by mountain and valley, the wildest solitude, the sudden spires of ancient cities, the moldered castle, the stately monastery, the humble cot, grandeur and homeliness, history and superstition, truth and fable, succeeding one another so as to blend into a whole."

Many names well known in history are associated with this noted river, Petrarch, Huss, Charlemagne, Luther, Pepin, Charles V., Napoleon I. and III., these and many others, with their genius, their learning, their good intents and bad intents, their ambition and power, have indeed rendered the Rhineland memorable. From the time when the great Cæsar first looked upon this noble river with wonder and admiration travelers have never ceased to extol its charms and "poet after poet has joined in a chorus of praise." No poet, probably, has excelled what Byron said of this lovely stream, as he drank in fresh inspiration from contemplating it in all its loveliness. He describes it as "A blending of all beauties, streams and dells,

Fruit, foliage, crag, wood, cornfield, mountain, vine,
And chiefless castles breaking stern farewells,
From gray but leafy walls where ruin dwells."

The most striking beauties of the Rhine in going up the river commence at Bonn. The first view is the Seven Mountains, Oelberg: 1,530 feet; Löwenburg, 1,500 feet; Lohrberg, 1,444 feet; Nonnenstromberg, 1,106 feet; Petersburg, 1,096 feet; Walkenburg, 1,076 feet; Drachenfels, 1,066 feet; and all of volcanic origin. Some of them have ruins of old castles. The Jews who were banished from Cologne early in the twelfth century found refuge in a castle which once stood on Walkenburg. They all look fine from the river. I will remark here by way of parenthesis that on the little Rhine steamer I became acquainted with an estimable gentleman and lady, Mr. and Mrs. George Henry Green, of Melbourne, Australia. He is a government commissioner, or examiner of banks, and is taking a furlough of twelve months. They sailed from Melbourne to San Francisco, and were three months in America, with which country they were very much pleased. He told me much of Australia. Sheep-raising is an immense business there, and he very much regrets that Congress has placed so much duty on foreign wool. He has twenty thousand sheep, but he is but a small sheep owner. Some of his neighbors have 250,000 head. He and his lady are English, and are much more genial and social than some of the haughty, imperious Englishmen I meet with. I occasionally mistake them for Americans, though really there is not much necessity for it, for the English have the Johnny Bull airs that an American ought to be ashamed to exhibit. Of one Englishman, in whom I was mistaken, I asked:

"Are you an American?"

"No," said he, "thank God I am not."

"I thought," said I, "that you were about good-looking enough to be an American."

"By that very pretty compliment," said he, "I take it you are an American."

"Yes," replied I, "you may set that down for a fact every time. I proudly own myself an American."

Without wishing to reflect upon our English cousins, I must say I find Americans the more genial and companionable, and to speak much the best English. This last remark has been verified by several Germans whom I have conversed with. They say the Americans speak much the plainer. I have heard English people talking togther, and I had to listen some little time before I could make out what foreign language they were speaking. The greatest complaint to be made of them is the conspicuous conceit with them that there is no country like England and no people like the English people.

But let us return to the beautiful scenery of the Rhine. I will not undertake, however, to give you anything like a detailed description of all the beauty and grandeur to be seen as the steamer plows its way up the vigorous stream, as that would be too lengthy and tedious for both you and myself. I will only call attention to some of the more conspicuous points. The picturesque scenery consists of elevated hills, which line both sides of the river on the highest prominences of which stand the ruins and remains of old castles which were once the homes of gallant knights and valiant warriors.

On the right is Godesberg, a beautiful village about a mile from the river, with a handsome castle plainly in view, built in the thirteenth century. Only the tower remains, the rest having been destroyed by the Bavarians in 1583.

On the left is Dollendorf, at the entrance to the Heisterbach valley, one of the most picturesque valleys in the Siebengebirge. The ruins of the Cistercian Abbey are very beautiful. Here is the scene of the charming legend of the monk Felix, told by Longfellow in the "Golden Legend," who ". . . . . heard

The sudden singing of a bird—
A snow-white bird that from a cloud
Dropped down,
And among the breakers brown
Sat singing."

And so enamored became the monk with the sweet music, and into such elysian fields did the following of the songster lead him, that when he awoke, a century after, to the lot of ordinary life and returned a stranger to the convent in the Siebengebirge.

". . . Such had been the power
Of that celestial and immortal song
A hundred years had passed,
And had not seemed so long
As a single hour."

On the left again is Königswenter, a charming little town at the foot of the Drachenfels. The ascent is said to take an hour and a half, but is gradual. The castle which crowns the summit was built by Arnold I., archbishop of Cologne, in the twelfth century. It was taken by the Swedes in the Thirty Years' War, but was taken from them and destroyed through inability to garrison it effectively. Several legends attach to the old castle and the mountain, one being that a dragon dwelt in the cavern in the face of the hill (seen from the steamer). A Christian maiden was thrown to the monster, who of course retired before the sign of the cross, and Seigfried, a Low-Country hero, came to her rescue and slew the dragon. He bathed in its blood, and so became invulnerable. The wine produced on the slopes of the mountains is called Drachenblut, i. e., dragon's blood. The view from the summit is said to be most beautiful. Touching on this delightful locality, Byron penned these lines:

"The castled crag of Drachenfels
Frowns o'er the wide and winding Rhine,
Whose breast of waters proudly swells
Between the banks which bear the vine,
And hills all rich with blossomed trees,
And fields which promise corn and wine,
And scattered cities crowning these,
Whose fair white walls along them shine,
Have shewed a scene which I should see
With double joy wert thou with me.
. . . . . .
The river nobly foams and flows,
The charm of this enchanted ground,
And all its thousand turns disclose
Some fresher beauty varying round;
The haughtiest breast its wish might bound
Through life to dwell delighted here;
Nor could on earth a spot be found
To nature and to me so dear,
Could thy dear eyes in following mine
Still sweeten more these banks of Rhine."

On the right is Mehlem, birthplace of John Mehlem, the artist. In a few minutes after passing the Drachenfels one of the most charming parts of the whole length of the river is entered. The island of Nonnenwerth, rich in vegetation, is seen ahead, and conspicuous upon it is a school for girls, managed by Franciscan nuns. Formerly a nunnery was here, dating from the twelfth century, but it was destroyed in 1802.

On the right is Rolandseck, a very pretty little place with exquisite views, as it embraces quite a stretch of the river, including Nonnenwerth and Drachenfels. A ruined arch shows itself on the hill back of the town, and is all that remains of the Castle of Rolandseck. A legend connected with this locality runs as follows:

"The Knight Roland of Angers, nephew of Charlemagne, traveling on the Rhine for the sake of adventure and amusement, claimed one night the hospitality of the Knight Heribut, who lived in the Castle of Drachenburg. Next day his host introduced him to his only daughter, Hildegunde, and Roland, captivated by her beauty, ceased his wanderings and remained at Drachenburg the acknowledged lover of Hildegunde. But news came of the Moors devastating northern Spain and even threatening France. Roland was obliged to leave, and the separation was full of fear and anxiety to Hildegunde. In the battle of Ronceval he was smitten down by an Arab and left on the field as dead. News flew soon to Drachenburg; Hildegunde was hopeless and agonized, and in her grief she took refuge in the Convent of Nonnenwerth, and was soon allowed to take the irrevocable vow. But Roland was not dead, only wounded, and as soon as it was possible he returned to the Rhine to claim the hand of his bride. But Hildegunde had become the bride of heaven [?] and was lost to him forever. In his despair and grief he reached the castle of which that single ruined arch remains, and day by day he gazed down into the gardens of the nunnery, where he saw her form and perchance sometimes her face. But one day he saw her not, and the next day a funeral procession passed along among the trees of the island to the burying-place. Hildegunde was dead! Roland never spoke or smiled again—but every day he gazed wistfully at the burying-place among the trees, and one day when his squire came to him he found him sitting in his usual position, but Roland was dead, and in death his half-closed eyes were still directed to the last resting-place of Hildegunde."

Now, is not that a touching legend? Poor Roland and poor Hildegunde!

Lord Lytton says: "From the Drachenfels commences the true glory of the Rhine. . . . The Rhine widens like a broad lake between the Drachenfels and Unkel; villages are scattered over the plain on the left; on the right is the Isle of Werth and the houses of Oberwinter; the hills are covered with vines, and still we turn with lingering gaze to the lofty crest of the seven mountains."

On the right is Remagen, a small town of no remarkable pretensions, but with a history stretching away back to Roman times. A short distance from it is the celebrated Apolinaris spring. Some idea of the immense business carried on by the company owning it may be estimated by the array of boats, carts, and piled up bottles at the pier at the landing.

On the left is Espel, with basaltic cliffs and quarries. Soon come Linzerhausen with Ockenfels, and a ruined castle above it. After passing some unimportant places, we come to the new castle of Arenfels, the property of Count Westerholt.

On the right we passed the Castle of Rhinebeck, which suffered much at the hands of the French in 1689 and was utterly destroyed in 1780, just one hundred years ago. Only a square tower now remains of the old building; the modern was built in 1832. Further on came the castle of Schweppenbourg. Of this locality Lytton says: "There is something weird and preternatural about the aspect of this place. Its soil betrays signs that in the former ages (from which tradition, even, is fast fading away), some volcano here exhausted its fires. The stratum of the earth is black and pitchy, and the springs beneath it are of a dark and graveolent water. Here the stream of the Brohlbach falls into the Rhine, and in a valley rich with oak and pine, and full of caverns which are not without their traditionary inmates, stands the Castle of Schweppenbourg, which our party failed not to visit."

On the left is the castle of Hammerstein. On the right is the village of Leutesdorf with extensive vineyards, and next Andernach, a handsome old town which occupies the site where the Roman town Antunacum once stood. Tradition says Julius Cæsar constructed a wooden bridge across the Rhine at this point. The ancient Watch Tower, partly destroyed by the French in 1668, is among the most interesting remains of this locality, which in the past centuries saw so much of the vicissitudes of war.

A pretty legend of Andernach is thus told by Longfellow in his "Hyperion:"

"There was once a poor old woman in Andernach whose name was Frau Martha, and she lived all alone in a house by herself, and loved all the saints and the Blessed Virgin, and was as good as an angel, and sold tarts down the Rheinkrahn. But her house was very old, and the roof tiles were broken, and she was too poor to get new ones, and the rain kept coming in, and no Christian soul in Andernach would help her. But the Frau Martha was a good woman, and never did any harm, but went to mass every morning, and sold tarts by the Rheinkrahn. Now, one dark windy night, when all the good Christians in Andernach were asleep in the feathers, Frau Martha, who lay under the roof, heard a great noise over her head and in her chamber. Drip, drip, drip, as if the rain was dropping down through the broken tiles. Dear soul; and sure enough it was. And then there was a pounding and hammering overhead, as if somebody was at work on the roof, and she thought it was Pelz-Nickel tearing the tiles off because she had not been to confession often enough. So she began to pray; and the faster she said her Paternoster and her Ave Maria the faster Pelz-Nickel pounded and pulled, and drip, drip, drip it went all around her in the dark chamber, till the poor woman was frightened out of her wits, and ran to the window to call for help. Then in a moment all was still—death still. But she saw a light streaming through the mist and rain, and a great shadow on the house opposite. And then somebody came down from the top of her house by a ladder, and had a lantern in his hand, and he took the ladder on his shoulder and passed down the street. But she could not see clearly because the window was streaked with rain. And in the morning the old broken tiles were found scattered about the street, and there were new ones on the roof, and the old house has never leaked to this blessed day.

"As soon as the mass was over Frau Martha told the priest what had happened, and he said it was not

(Continued on page 680.)

Communications.

Christian Morality.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: The photographer who attempts to catch through his camera a picture of a railroad train in motion can do so but imperfectly. And our description of morality must likewise, and for similar reasons, be scarcely more than an incomplete sketch of it, as what we call morals have a movement as well as railroad trains. What was once moral law is not recognized as such now, and what passes for pure ethics to-day may tomorrow be rejected as immoral.

Let us note a few illustrations of this progressiv characteristic of morals in the evolution of Christianity. Among other rules of conduct, our eye lights upon this, "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long in the land." It is certainly of the highest order of morality to teach children filial affection, but to set before them such a motiv is to make their obedience positivly immoral. The child which is incited to honor its parents by the hope of a prolonged life has the fountain of its natural affections poisoned with intense selfishness. The hope of the Hebrew was temporal prosperity. He worshiped Jehovah, because it was chiefly by this means that he hoped for success in acquiring cattle, begetting children, and achieving victory over his enemies. The morality of the Christian is much the same; he suffers and toils, not because it is right to suffer and toil, but because of the promis, "Great is thy reward in heaven." In each of these cases the moral nature is corrupted with a bribe. The child is paid for loving its parents with long life. The Hebrew was rewarded with prosperity because he exclaimed, "There is none like unto the Lord our God," and the Christian who is poor in purse shall hav treasures in heaven."

"Take therefore no thought for the morrow" is a sentiment which no intelligent person accepts. Contentment and resignation are likewise obsolete virtues, and submission to wrong and to tyranny is also rapidly fading out of sight.

"Resist not evil, but whosoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other also," is inspired morality, but it is infinitly below the ordinary sense of manliness.

"Why do ye not rather take wrong? Why do ye not rather suffer yourselvs to be defrauded?" Common notions of justice and right imply the duty of resisting wrong and of preventing frauds of all sorts. What kind of a world would this be if society were governed by the practical morality of suffering wrong, outrage, and imposture? But this negativ morality, as it is sometimes called, does not stop here; it teaches us to yield obedience to tyrants. "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers, for there is no power but of God. Whosoever, therefore, resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God, and they that resist shall receive to themselvs damnation." If society had implicitly obeyed this teaching the world would never hav had a single reform—every one would hav been afraid to resist a gigantic wrong for fear he might receive to himself damnation. What a splendid thing for the world that some men were not afraid of damnation, and came forth royally and fought and conquered many times the dragoons of superstition and despotism, thus opening the way for progress! Such doctrins as the above would consign to endless torment such men as Washington, Jefferson, Franklin, and Paine for their part in establishing the free government under which we liv.

The doctrin of special providence is a bane to the moral nature of man. No Providence, no All-Seeing Eye, can serve to release man from his responsibility—from his manhood. Of what benefit is it to the sparrow that some one sees it fall to the ground? Had some hand extended itself and caught it in its fall, and thereby saved its life, then there would be good reasons for trusting in Providence, at least so far as the sparrows are concerned. And what avail is it that the hairs of our heads are all numbered? It does not save some people from becoming bald-headed, and even addle-headed.

We giv the following as a most touching instance in illustration of the mysterious and effectiv hand of Providence:

"Not long ago a young man died very suddenly in Boston. There was a post-mortem examination by regular physicians and a coroner's jury, who mutually deliberated over the body as to the cause of its death. The doctors found the young man's stomach somewhat irritated. On close inspection the contents of the stomach were found to be a mixture of bread and butter, mince pie and coffee, ham and eggs, buckwheat cakes, oyster stew, plum pudding, pound cake, corned beef, ice cream, more mince pie, and baked beans. The jury gave the case most grave and deliberate consideration, and in accordance therewith rendered the verdict, 'Came to his death by a mysterious dispensation of the affl ctiv hand of Providence.'"

Prayer is another element of Christian ethics. We recollect the fact that a few years ago the yellow fever swept off thousands of our countrymen, for whom everything was done that human skill and love could do, but in vain, and that the religious people of the whole country united Sunday after Sunday in calling upon Providence to lend a hand where it was most needed, but no answer to prayer was granted. If at such a time, and with such united and earnest prayers by all the praying people of the country, no answer was given, under what circumstances would it be likely that answers to prayers would be granted? Thought and labor are the prayers which unlock the mysteries and treasuries of the universe.

And what kind of morality is that which discounts itself and insists that there is no saving morality except in faith; that man may be damned for the sins of some one who lived thousands of years ago; that morality is no passport to heaven; that a wretch in the very last moments of his life, may, if he only gasp the name of Jesus, enter into everlasting happiness?

Between the saddle and the ground,
Was mercy asked and pardon found.

The Chicago Tribune, in noticing a hanging occasion, spoke of the exit of one of these latter-day saints, not exactly coming up to time "between the saddle and the ground," but between the gallows and glory, gave these alliterativ and rythmical head lines, "John Jones Jerked to Jesus!" Of course in all such cases if the spectator accepts the situation he will not be much afraid of hanging, if he should under any possible exigency be called upon himself to swing for the good of his country, for thereby he can find godliness a great gain in climbing the golden stair with the assistance of a rope round his neck. One of the most sympathetic aspects of this kind of morality which asks man to do right and get his reward, is the incentiv that he will hav the joy of seeing his own friends who failed to get baptized "lie and fry and scorch and broil and burn forevermore."

So Bunyan wrote. Now listen to the words of the sainted Jonathan Edwards, "They will not be sorry for the damned; it will cause no uneasiness or dissatisfaction to them, but on the contrary when they see this sight it will occasion rejoicing and excite them to joyful praises. Oh! the Modocs!" What a hell of a heaven such a place would be, where mothers laughed in glee at every shriek of anguish and agony that came to their ears from their own children. In the language of the uninspired penman I would say, Let me die and be buried in Texas, rather than liv eternally in such a heaven.

Christian morality, at the command of science and humanity, has had to giv up these savage notions and move up to higher grounds. It has had again and again to abandon its outposts. It has given up slavery, polygamy, witchcraft, infant damnation, and is releasing its grasp on damnation in general. The sentiment in Dr. Brown's motto at the Hornellsville Convention is the underlying sentiment of society in general: "Damn others as you would like to be damned yourself." This is nothing more nor less than the Golden Rule.

We notice then that (1) Christianity has no permanant standard of morality, and that (2) it has no definit test of right conduct, and (3) that its progress is constrained by science and humanity.

In another paper I will giv a brief outline of rational morality.

W. S. Bell.

"These Signs."

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: A correspondent in your paper of July 27th requests the Spiritualists to giv to the world some grand proof of the truth of their claims, "to get their debaters ready, hold meetings, etc." So regardless are men of the past that were some evidence given that no one living can doubt, next year proof would be generally called for. Would it convince us more to listen to speakers than if we read books? Spiritualism has piled up more testimony in its favor than can be adduced for any other subject. Within thirty years past the testimony of over fifteen thousand credible witnesses, every one of national, state, or county reputation of the highest character, has been given in books or records over their own signatures to facts inexplicable on any other theory than this: "that invisible intelligences, akin to human, do exist and can communicate with us and move physical substances without any apparent contact." Such was the report of that London Dialectical Society committee. Just think of a committee of thirty-six men of learning who began sneeringly and contemptuously to investigate the despised phenomena, and yet ere six months, without having had any communication with outside mediums, becoming convinced solely through the power generated amongst themselvs. Look at the book of Dr. Hare, the American Faraday, who investigated scientifically, beginning it reluctantly, contemptuously, and treating the strongest tests as humbugs, yet by scientific methods getting information that proved beyond a doubt that some intelligence outside of visible mortality was at work. Examin the testimony in Howitt's "History of the Supernatural," in Owen's "Footfall's" and Epes Sargent's works. Also that in Mr. Harding's "History of Spiritualism." In the archives of Congress is a paper signed by several thousand well-known citizens who testify to facts, any one of which, if true, proves the Spiritual hypothesis. There are thousands of living witnesses whose testimony is recorded. They can be written to and will reply. Yet here is the curiosity of human nature. We are surrounded by thousands of citizens of average intelligence who declare they believe similar Spiritual phenomena occurred 1,800 years ago, which they find recorded in a book, written by whom no one knows, who believe God begat a son in a Jewish virgin, on the sole testimony of an old man's dream, reported as hearsay, and that the said son and his disciples raised the dead and made the blind to see miraculously, and yet who refuse to believe the phenomena of Spiritualism though tempted to by thousands of their contemporaries. Truly age givs a miracle respectability. The cast-off rags of Jewry hav become holy relics with those who would spit on the Jews who wore them. And the followers of him who told his disciples that these signs shall follow them that believe (see last verses of Mark), denounce these whom the signs follow as "devil-worshipers." I was never so forcibly struck with this as when reading "Travels in Tartary and Thibet," by Fathers Huc and Gabet, two missionaries of the order of St. Lazarus, good, pious, sincere, honest, educated men, and close observers of humanity, if ever such there were. Although every page, almost, acknowledges the extraordinary kindness, hospitality, virtue, and excellence of the Mongols and Tartars, yet these poor priests cannot but pity them as ignorant, wicked devil-worshipers. But the most extraordinary fact of all is that these priests of Buddha are declared by these missionaries over and over again as possessed, in many cases, of miraculous powers. And instances are adduced by these missionaries that cannot be accounted for on any other hypothesis than that of spiritual aid. Take the cases of inflicting horrible wounds upon the body, of walking over burning red-hot metal, barefoot and unharmed, and the wonderful intelligence of the babes who are claimed to be the new grand lamas, the souls of the lately deceased being put into the bodies of the infants and others, that are as common as the wonders of Slade's, Home's, or Foster's, et al's. mediumship. Yet these missionaries, shrewd and hostil, break forth in ejaculations of wonder, and declare that it is the devil who helps these pagans. "These signs shall follow them that believe."

And can you do these wonders? No. Can any one? Yes, the Thibetan lamas of Buddha do them, but 'tis the devil's work. Then these signs follow those who preach and believe the wrong. Strange torsion of a text! But there is the standing miracle recorded by these missionaries. Here it is in their own language, as translated by Hazlitt: Tsong-Kaba a holy lama, an incarnation of God [in fact the Jesus Christ of two-thirds of the Buddhists—those who wear the yellow robe] was born several hundred years ago. "His mother shaved his head, and where she threw the hair sprang up a marvelous tree, the wood of which dispenses a delightful perfume, and each leaf on it bears engraved on its surface a letter in the sacred language of Thibet. . . . He withdrew in retirement, fasting and suffering. He respected the life of even the humblest insect." And so do all his followers to-day. Finally the doctrins of this savior superseded those of all other Buddhist sects, on account of their excellence and truth. In fact, his doctrins are but a reformation peacefully accomplished. But to quote again:

"It will naturally be expected that we say something about the tree itself. Does it exist? Hav we seen it, etc, . . Yes, this tree does exist. At the foot of a mountain where the lamasery stands, and near the Buddhist temple, is a great square inclosure, formed by brick walls. Upon entering this, our eyes were first directed with earnest curiosity to the leaves, and we were filled with an absolute consternation of astonishment at finding that in fact there were upon each of the leaves well-formed Thibetan letters, all of a green color, some darker, some lighter, than the leaf itself. Our first impression was a suspicion of fraud on the part of the lamas; but after minute examination of every detail, we could not discover the least deception. The characters all appeared to us portions of the leaf itself equally with its veins and nerves. The position was not the same in all. In one leaf they would be at the top, in another in the middle. The younger leaves represented only partially formed letters. The bark is also covered with letters. When you remove the old bark the young bark under it shows indistinct outlines of letters; and what is more singular, these characters are different from those they replace.

"We examined everything with the closest attention, to detect some trace of trickery, but could not find any, and the perspiration absolutely trickled down our faces under the influence of our sensations in sight of this most amazing spectacle. More profound intellects than ours may perhaps be able to supply a satisfactory explanation of these mysteries, but we altogether giv it up. Our readers may possibly smile at our ignorance, but we care not so that the sincerity of our statement is not suspected."

They also add that the tree is very old, always green, has beautiful red flowers in summer, and wood of delightful odor. There is no other tree in the world like it, so far as known, and all attempts to graft and bud from it hav failed. Here then is the greatest wonder of the world. It is attested positivly by two educated gentlemen of a religion hostil to Buddhism. There is no miracle like this, none equal to it.

It is well known what reply the Delphian oracle gave to Crœsus. No fact in ancient history is better established than that he sent messengers to all the distant oracles to test them. On the same hour all the oracles were asked what Crœsus, king of Lydia, was then doing. Meanwhile Crœsus had within his own mind arranged a plan. He went out and put a tortoise and a bit of mutton in a brass kettle covered with bran and was boiling it. The oracle of Delphi was the only one that truly disclosed this unlikely act of a mighty ruler. Crœsus henceforth regarded it as the true oracle. But how does St. Augustine, how does the pious Rollin, how do all the Christian writers, dispose of these wonders and signs? "God, to punish the heathen for their hardness of heart and errors, purposely allowed the devil to blind them with wonders." So says the saint and so the truly pious Rollin. If priestcraft had no other crime to answer for, this alone should condemn it everlastingly—that it so idiotizes minds that they can thus try to reason, dwarfing and blinding the human intellect. "These signs shall follow them that believe" (Christ). "These signs are a proof that the devil is leader" (Christian priestcraft).

Clarke Irvine.

Socialistic Labor Party, Tenth Assembly District. No soldier, lawyer, priest, or capitalist can represent labor. For Assembly, John Chaefer. No compromise or fusion with any other political party.

The above is the motto upon the banner of the Socialistic-Labor Party. The position is now assured. Hereafter only labor is to be represented in the councils of the nation, although there are a few other people than laborers who hav a legal right to life, liberty, etc. Lincoln Hall, corner Houston street and First avenue, is the center of a new social world that is to be—when we grow to it.

R. A. L.

Garfield's Indorsement of Hamilton.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: In The Truth Seeker of October 2d it is stated: "The indorsement by Garfield of the Hamiltonian theory that senators should hold their office for life, and that the governors of the states should be appointed by the president, shows whither the party is tending."

What Garfield said in his speech in New York was this: "This is New York, and yonder toward the Battery, more than a hundred years ago, a young student of Columbia College was arguing the ideas of the American Revolution and American union against the un-American loyalty to monarchy of his college president and professors. By and by he went into the patriot army, was placed on the staff of Washington to fight the battles of his country, and while in camp, before he was twenty-one years old, upon a drum-head, he wrote a letter which contained every germ of the Constitution of the United States. That student, soldier, statesman, and great leader of thought, Alexander Hamilton, of New York, made this republic glorious by his thinking, and left his lasting impress upon New York, the foremost state of this union. And here, on this island, the scene of his early triumphs, we gather to-night, soldiers of the new war, representing the same ideas of union and glory, and adding to the column of the monument that Hamilton and Washington and the heroes of the Revolution reared."

Gen. Garfield referred to the letter which Hamilton wrote, as containing the germs of the present Constitution, and to the idea of union contained in that instrument. He did not refer to the proposed plan of a constitution submitted by Hamilton to the Constitutional Convention, which contained the features objected to by The Truth Seeker.

Washington and Madison both opposed Hamilton's plan; but Hamilton's final opinion was against an executiv during good behavior, on account of the increased danger to the public tranquility incident to the election of a magistrate of this degree of permanency.

Hamilton's proposed constitution had many commendable features. Representativs in Congress were to be elected by the adult "free male citizens and inhabitants of the several states." Article VII. provided: "Nor shall any religious sect or denomination, or religious test for any office or place, be ever established by law."

In the Constitutional Convention Hamilton voted in favor of choosing presidential electors by the people in electoral districts, each state having as many districts as it had senators and representativs.

He also held that "a share in the sovereignty of the state, which is exercised by the citizens at large in voting at elections, is one of the most important rights of the subject, and in a republic ought to stand foremost in the estimation of the law. It is that right by which we exist a free people."

The letter indorsed by General Garfield is probably that written by him at the age of seventeen when defending the measures of Congress in a paper entitled "A Full Vindication." In that he wrote of the natural rights of mankind: "All men hav one common original; they participate in one common nature, and consequently hav one common right. No reason can be assigned why one man should exercise any power over his fellow-creatures more than another, unless they hav voluntarily vested him with it.

"I consider civil liberty, in a genuin, unadultered sense, as the greatest of terrestrial blessings. I am convinced that the whole human race is entitled to it, and that it cannot be wrested from them without the blackest and most aggravated guilt."

On the question of national and state sovereignty, Hamilton held: "I am at a loss to discover what temptation the persons intrusted with the administration of the general government could ever feel to divest the state of the authorities of that description. The regulation of the mere domestic police of a state appears to me to hold out slender inducements to ambition. Commerce, finance, negotiation, and war seem to comprehend all the objects which hav charms for minds governed by that passion; and all the powers necessary to these objects ought in the first instance to be lodged in the national depository. The administration of private justice between the citizens of the same state, the supervision of agriculture, and of other concerns of a similar nature, all those things, in short, which are proper to be provided for by local legislation, can never be desirable cases of a general jurisdiction. It is, therefore, improbable that there should exist a disposition in the federal councils to usurp the powers with which they are connected; because the attempt to exercise them would be as troublesome as it would be nugatory; and the possession of them, for that reason, would contribute nothing to the dignity, to the importance, or to the splendor of the national government."

On the clause of the Constitution for guaranteeing a republican form of government, he said: "Without a guaranty, the assistance to be derived from the Union in repelling those domestic dangers which may sometimes threaten the existence of the state constitutions, must be renounced. Usurpation may rear its crest in each state and trample upon the liberties of the people, while the national government could legally do nothing more than behold its encroachments with indignation and regret. A successful faction may erect a tyranny on the ruins of order and law, while no succor could constitutionally be afforded by the Union to the friends and supporters of the government."

"In a free government," said Hamilton, "the security for civil rights must be the same as that for religious rights. It consists in the one case in the multiplicity of interests, and in the other in the multiplicity of sects."

"Justice is the end of government; it is the end of civil society."

On the qualifications for office, he held: "Who are to be the objects of popular desire? Every citizen whose merit may recommend him to the esteem and confidence of his country. No qualification of wealth, of birth, of religious faith, or of civil profession is permitted to fetter the judgment or disappoint the inclination of the people."

It is shown by these quotations from Hamilton's speeches that the protection of the rights of the people against usurpation on the part of the state or national government was a cardinal point of his faith. He held that the guarantee to the citizens of each state that the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the several states could only be maintained by giving the United States courts jurisdiction throughout the several states, saying, "And if it be a just principle that every government ought to possess the means of executing its own provisions by its own authority, it will follow that in order to the inviolate maintenance of that equality of privileges and immunities, to which the citizens of the Union will be entitled, the national judiciary ought to punish in all cases in which one state or its citizens are opposed to another state or its citizens."

It seems to me that your criticism is based on an error which does injustice to Gen. Garfield. W. S. Bush.

Forward, not Backward.

BY E. C. WALKER.

It is the duty of all progressiv men and women to go forward in the path of reform, not backward, by devious ways of indirection seeking to reach a goal which will bless the eyes of him alone who goes straight ahead in the path of duty.

No reform is possible within the ranks of an old party any more than within the pale of an old church. "New party or no party" should be our slogan. Unite with the new Greenback-Labor party, or form a new Liberal party. Any union with either of the old and corrupt parties is death to principle and death to us as a moral power.

Mr. Leland should remember that there was an earnest protest against any union with the Democrats in Ohio last year against the Republicans. The Liberals were counseled to vote with the Greenbackers. Within the ranks of that party are three-fourths of the working Liberals of the country. Four-fifths of them are in Iowa.

Do you suppose that either the Republicans or the Democrats will do anything for us so long as we vote with them? No person who knows the motivs which govern politicians will for a moment suppose that they will. When we become a power against them they will begin to examin our demands and accede to them as fast as their cowardly souls will let them.

But the Labor party we can take hold of in its youth and control. Are we wise enough to do this? Can we take hold and control either of the old parties? We cannot. Then what does common sense say that we shall do? Join hands with the only reform party in existence and carry its banner and ours to victory. This is what we shall do if we are wise.

Mr. Leland seems to think because the Republicans are in power in the state of New York, and are doing no better than did the Democrats, that my citation of the fact that the Democrats, when in power in that state, gave millions of dollars of public money to the Catholic church, is not to the point, or its effect nullified. But I was not, and am not, talking for the Republican party. What it is doing does not in the least affect my position that the Democratic party is not the party of progress, and that the Liberal who votes for that fossil simply throws away his vote and makes no protest for a principle.

"Use the two great parties as clubs to beat out each other's brains." Those heads, or "brains," are nothing but two great organs of acquisitivness, and they will combine and beat the small expediency man or party every time.

Where are your million voters, Mr. Leland, who will vote for either of the old parties at the behest of the League Congress? What is the aggregate circulation of the Liberal papers? I will venture to say that you cannot get half of them (subscribers of Liberal papers) to vote for either of the old putrescences when they prefer the other or a younger rival. Our friends must not forget that there are some other questions at issue than those for which the League contests. You cannot get free-thinking men to vote for the candidates of a party whose principles they abhor, just because that party may possibly be induced to favor some other one principle which they accept. Both of the old parties hav taken certain positions upon some of the gravest problems of the age, positions directly antagonistic to those occupied by tens of thousands of clear-seeing reformers. Do you suppose that these serious men will vote with these old parties under the circumstances? Do you suppose that for a chance they will throw a certainty away? Do you suppose that because there is a faint, a very faint, possibility that the Democratic party will favor a larger liberty of press and mails, the earnest reformer is going to giv his vote to the party, every plank of whose platform is, to his perception, rotten? No, sir, never.

Mr. Leland intimates that I am playing the unfair sports. man in this affair. This is unfair of him. There is no dishonesty where fair notice is given of the player's intention.

Now for a few words in reference to things said by some of the correspondents in The Truth Seeker of Sept. 4th.

Bro. Bell, do you suppose that we shall ever succeed in achieving monetary reform so long as we vote with the parties directly opposed to such reform? Your advice to vote with the Democrats, if followed, is the death of all monetary reform, or any other reform for that matter. Fusion in Maine has done more to kill the Greenback party than all the lies of the Democratic and Republican press and stump speakers.

Where is Gare, last year's chairman of the Greenback Central Committee? Working with the Republicans. You never know where to find a man who is "anything to beat" the opposition. You need not take this to yourself, Bro. Bell, for I know you, but then you are very wild when you talk of fusion.

General Weaver never did an act more to his credit than when he refused to speak from the same platform with Benjamin F. Butler. There is your fusionist, par excellence, gone back to the flesh-pots of the Democratic Egypt.

Straight ahead, comrades, under the flag of right. No fusion, no compromises, no bargains for monetary success!

Our friend Peck seems inclined to take to the Garfield pond. Terribly stagnant, brother! Awful miasma! I am dead set against the Democratic party, but old Republican as I am, I can only think of the present Republican party with a cold shiver of horror and a feeling of unutterable loathing, and were there no choice between the two, should certainly take to the Democratic torrent.

Let us keep our heads. Just because a man hits you last, as one of your correspondents expresses it, is no good reason why you should spend all your strength trying to punish him when another man is doing all he can to set fire to your house. Both the old parties are bad, and we must let them severely alone.

The discussion between Mr. Wakeman and Mr. Bush brings out into the clear light of day the fundamental truth that all laws presuming to regulate the private action of the individual, or to prescribe what the citizen shall or shall not sell, buy, or read, are unconstitutional and invasiv and must go.

Letters to Mr. Leland.

Chicago, Sept. 29, 1880.

T. C. Leland, Sec N. L. L: I herewith send the application and money for a charter for the first League in this city. The prospects are good for building up a strong League and becoming thoroughly organized here.

Mrs. H. S. Lake delivered her lecture, "Infidel Integrity vs. Christian Creed," last Sunday evening, at the West End Opera House, to a good sized audience. She is an eloquent speaker and was warmly applauded throughout the discourse.

At the close of her lecture she announced that steps were being taken to form a League, and those who wished to join would now hav an opportunity to do so. Your correspondent was selected to act as temporary Secretary, and, for a short time, was kept very busy putting down the names and taking in the money of those who pressed forward to join.

The Liberals of this city hav heretofore been apparently indifferent in regard to organizing, but now they are being aroused to a sense of its importance, and are taking hold with a will. They are enthusiastic over the action of the Congress in passing the repeal resolutions. They say it means business, and they are ready to back it with all the forces at their command. It has infused a new life into them, and they are ready for action. They had become tired of the temporizing policy, but now they see a clean-cut demand for repeal and they hav gained fresh courage. They realize that the church has been served with notice that it must take its hands from off the mail bags of the people.

Let those who hanker after the flesh-pots of popularity, and all who are in bondage to the fear of public opinion, fall out of the ranks before the last final charge. We shall be all the stronger for it. There will then be left only the true and tried soldiers upon whom we can depend.

Word has been passed along the line to close up the ranks, and from this time on there will be no faltering.

Yours for victory, Henry J. Woodhouse.

Maple Rapids, Mich., Oct. 4, 1880.

Mr. T. C. Leland, Dear Sir: Herewith we hand you draft for $5.00 in reply to your suggestion that each auxiliary Liberal League forward that amount. We wish to be one of the first to send in our cash to start the work for the new year. Although we are a thousand miles away, yet by our prompt remittance we think not many will go ahead of us. Yours, etc., Seth N. Allen, Cor. Sec.

There is a live League. The 200th is the banner auxiliary. We wish the 199 before it were animated with the same spirit. How many others will rise and send $5.00 to the League Treasury? If but 100 others will do it, it will start the League work into efficient activity. T. C. L.

The Mystery Solved.

To the Editor of The Truth Seeker, Sir: Astronomy and geology are alike adverse to the Christian religion, for the system of the world, by Sir Isaac Newton, was not created by the God of Moses. If the educated clergy will take this hint it furnishes an argument in proof that our renowned astronomers and geologists are simpletons, which is a diversion from their charge that the prophets and apostles on science were simpletons.

Defining the error in which Atheists and scientific Liberals are walking, science teaches that a body of gold at a given distance from the earth's center will, by the force of terrestrial attraction, be reduced to the specific gravity of cork, and the body will hav the density of gold and the weight of cork, which absurdity is accepted as scientific truth. No wonder the Liberals hav concluded that the personality of the everlasting Father is a fraud. Such consummate wanderings from natural truth as are found in Newton's "Principia" constitute a monument more wonderful in romance than was the geocentric hypothesis; and the knowledge of it is the weapon by which the assaults of Infidelity on the Christian religion can be proved to be as ethereal as a dream. (Rev.) W. Isaacs Loomis.

Martindale Depot, N. Y.

We hav received some photographs of R. P. Wilcox, the boy Liberal editor, which we shall keep on sale. Price ten cents.

(Continued from page 677.)

Pelz-Nickel, but without doubt St. Castor or St. Florian. Then she went to the market and told Frau Bridget all about it, and Frau Bridget said that two nights before Hans Claus, the cooper, had heard a great pounding in his shop, and in the morning found new hoops on all his hogsheads, and that a man with a lantern and a ladder had been seen riding out of town at midnight on a donkey; and that the same night the old windmill at Kloster St. Thomas had been mended, and the old gate of the churchyard at Feldkirche made as good as new, though nobody knew how the man got across the river. Then Frau Martha went down to the Rheinkrahn and told all these stories over again; and the old ferryman of Fahr said he could tell something about it, for the very night the churchyard gate was mended he was lying awake in his bed because he could not sleep, and he heard a loud knocking at the door and somebody calling him to get up, and set him over the river. And when he got up he saw a man down by the river with a lantern and a ladder; but as he was going down to him the man blew out the light, and it was so dark he could not see who he was; and his boat was old and leaky; and he was afraid to set him over in the dark; but the man said he must be in Andernach that night, and so he set him over. And after they had crossed the river he watched the man until he came to an image of the holy Virgin, and he saw him put his ladder against the wall and light his lamp and then walk along the street. And in the morning he found his old boat all caulked and tight and painted red, and he could not tell for his blessed life who did it unless it were the man with the lantern. Dear soul; how strange it was! And so it went on for some time; and whenever the man with the lantern had been seen walking through the street at night, so sure as the morning came, some work had been done for the sake of some good soul, and everybody knew he did it, and yet nobody could find out who he was, nor where he lived, for when anybody came near him he blew out his light and turned down another street, and suddenly disappeared, nobody could tell how. And some said it was Rubezahl, and some Pelz-Nickel, and some St. Anthony-on-the-Heath.

"Now, one stormy night a poor sinful creature was wandering about the streets with her babe in her arms, and she was hungry and cold, and no soul in Andernach would take her in. And when she came to the church where the great crucifix stands she saw no light in the little chapel at the corner, but she sat down on a stone at the foot of the cross and began to pray, and prayed till she fell asleep with her little babe on her bosom. But she did not sleep long, for a bright light shown full in her face, and when she opened her eyes she saw a pale man with a lantern standing right before her. He was almost naked, and there was blood upon his hands and body, and great tears in his beautiful eyes, and his face was like the face of the Savior on the cross. Not a single word did he say to the poor woman, but looked at her compassionately, and gave her a loaf of bread, and took the little babe in his arms and kissed it. Then the mother looked up to the great crucifix, but there was no image there, and she shrieked and fell down as though she were dead. And there she was found with her child; and a few days after they both died and were buried together in one grave. And nobody would have believed her story if a woman who lived at the corner had not gone to the window when she heard the scream and seen the figure hang the lantern up in its place and then set the ladder against the wall and go up and nail itself to the cross. Since that night it has never moved again. Ach Herr Je!"

Now, friends, is not that a pretty legend—a real pious story? And oh how true! I believe one part of it is true, and that is the sentence which says that the figure on the cross has since that night never moved again. And who can doubt the rest of it? What! Can you not believe that the image got down from the cross, lighted his lantern, took his ladder, and went and mended Frau Martha's tile roof, the churchyard gate, the ferryman's boat, put all those hoops on Hans Claus's hogsheads, rode out of town on a donkey, and finally woke up the poor woman who had sinned and gave her a loaf of bread and kissed her baby and after all this climbed up on the cross again and spiked himself to it? Will you doubt all this when the woman at the corner—no matter what her name was, or which corner she lived on—saw it with her own eyes, or at least somebody said she did? Why, my friends, the whole story is just as probable and is just as well authenticated as the original one about this figure, or the man whom it represents, riding into a town on a donkey, and finally being nailed up on a cross, all to make his daddy good natured. One legend is just as true as the other, and if you believe one you ought to believe both. It may be you do as much as I do. I am not sure but I saw the identical cross and the identical figure on it which did all these wonderful things, for I saw several such crosses all along the Rhine with such figures upon them, with very little clothes, as large as life and looking extremely sad, as though very sorry that his kind-hearted father had decreed that he should thus hang on the cross month after month and year after year. I also saw this man's mother, neatly dressed and placed in shrines and niches in the rocks, as we passed along up the river. I think that woman must be the queen of all this country for I see her figure and her portrait even oftener than I do Kaiser William's, or than I did Leopold III. in Belgium, Napoleon's in France, and Vic's and the Duke of Wellington's in England. They evidently think very highly of this little Jewess. It is also intimated that a very distinguished personage once thought very much of her, and paid her a most extraordinary visit, and that the image on the cross is what came of it. It is not so pretty a legend as the one I have just quoted for you, but is just as true.

After passing Andernach the hills recede, leaving more breadth of valley near the river. Here is located several little villages of no special importance. Neuwied, however, is interesting from the fact that there is an important settlement of the people known as Moravian Brethren, a kind of community, very moral, industrious, and thrifty. Their wares, deerskins, gloves, etc., are much sought after, and many people visit them.

Coblentz is an important Rhine town, containing 29,000 inhabitants and beautifully situated at the conflux of the Moselle and Rhine, whence it obtained its ancient name of Confluentes. This place has also tasted the bitter fruits of war. It was here that the grandsons of Charlemagne met to settle as to dividing his vast dominions with Italy, France, and Germany. In the Thirty Years' War it suffered severely. In 1794 it was taken by the French and was held by them twenty years, since which time it has belonged to Prussia.

The church of St. Castor is conspicuous for its four towers and its great age, having been founded in 830, though the present structure dates from 1208. It contains highly interesting monuments and fine frescoes, both ancient and modern, but all of the same pious, saintly, churchly style, with several baby gods, virgin mothers, and dying and dead gods.

Near this church is a specimen of the arroganee and mistaken calculation of the First Napoleon. He passed through this town with his army on his march to Russia, and caused to be erected here a fountain with an inscription commemorative of the event, as though victory were secured to him. In a few months he was forced to retrace his steps to Paris, humbled and defeated, and pursued by the Russians under General St. Priest, who on seeing the inscription on the fountain would not have it erased, but merely added a line to the effect that he had, as commandant of the town, seen and approved it. Napoleon had not calculated upon the patriotic and determined Russians burning their own proud city of Moscow to drive him to desperation and destroy his army.

A fine bridge crosses the Moselle having fourteen arches. The adjacent buildings and promenades are imposing and picturesque. There are also many additional works of interest, including more churches. The city is strongly fortified. The scenery up the Moselle, which meanders and crosses around among the vine-clad hills and rocks, is said to be even more beautiful than that of the Rhine, but I did not feel that I had time to make a trip up its winding way.

Leaving Coblentz, we passed Ehrenbreitstein, one of the strongest fortresses in Europe. It stands on a rock 390 feet above the Rhine, and was originally a Roman camp. Much money has been expended upon it in modern times to make it still more impregnable. At the summit is a platform which serves as a parade ground, and covers cisterns, it is said, capable of supplying the garrison with water for three years. The views from this point are not surpassed by any on the Rhine.

Not far above is Arenburg. Its most attractive feature is its Pilgrimage church, which is indeed a great curiosity. It stands in the middle of very prettily laid-out grounds, and is visited by pilgrims from all parts of the world. The exterior presents no remarkable appearance, but on entering, the visitor at once perceives that he is in a kind of grotto composed of tens of thousands of pieces of stone, glass, marble, lava, and curious minerals and shells, the greater part of which were brought from the mines at Ems. The altar is a grotto of stonework and lava. Above it on a stage, and presenting somewhat of a theatrical appearance, are colored figures representing Christ between the two thieves and seven saints kneeling round the cross. The ornaments round the altar are set in a framework of glass crystals, and the walls are a mass of curious shell work. The pulpit is composed of thousands of pieces of copper, silver, and lead ores. In the nave are ten full-length colored statues over the pillars and a series of beautifully executed frescoes. An old chapel connected with the church is in the same style and with a more remarkable exterior, namely, a representation of the noted Tree of Life and of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, with the victory of Christ over the dragon. There are also two sets, one ancient and the other modern, of the twelve vicissitudes Jesus met with while bearing the cross to Calvary, but which the four evangelists omitted to describe. There are twenty-eight of these curious representations, and as the visitor winds in and out among them he finds himself in beautiful gardens, beside fantastic grottoes and dripping wells, or else gazing on the almost unparalleled landscape of the Rhine valley.

As the journey is continued up the river the island of Oberwerth is passed; behind it is Dr. Schuller's great and noted hydropathic establishment. Also Horeheim, with many fruitful vineyards. On the right is the castle of Stolzenfels, back of the village of Capellons. The castle was built in 1250, and was destroyed by the French in 1688. It was presented to the king of Prussia when he was crown prince, and he had it restored. In 1845 the king of Prussia entertained Queen Victoria here. On the left is passed the village of Oberlahnstein, and a red watch tower, with the castle of Lahneck finely situated in the background.

